3. Bound thus by the divine order as Ezekiel was, ſo ſhould the Chaldean army be, nor ſtir from the place till they had carried it; and the three hundred and ninety days, during which the prophet lay on his ſide, may ſignify the duration of the ſiege; for though it continued ſeventeen months in all, 2 Kings xxv. 1—4. yet if the interruption given to it by the Egyptians, Jer. xxxvii. 5. be deducted, the cloſe ſiege might not laſt more than thoſe days.

4. In this way Ezekiel muſt propheſy, v. 7. not in words but by works, which ſpeak ſtrongeſt, and would leave them inexcuſable if they refuſed to pay attention to them.

9. ¶ Take thou alſo unto thee, wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches, and put them in one veſſel, and make thee bread thereof, according to the number of the days that thou ſhalt lie upon thy ſide: three hundred and ninety days ſhalt thou eat thereof. 10. And thy meat which thou ſhalt eat ſhall be by weight twenty ſhekels a day: from time to time ſhalt thou eat it. 11. Thou ſhalt drink alſo water by meaſure, the ſixth part of an hin: from time to time ſhalt thou drink. 12. And thou ſhalt eat it as barley-cakes, and thou ſhalt bake it with dung that cometh out of man in their ſight. 13. And the LORD ſaid, Even thus [d] ſhall the children of Iſrael eat their defiled bread among the Gentiles, whither I will drive them. 14. Then ſaid I, Ah LORD God, behold, [e] my ſoul hath not been polluted: for from my youth up even till now, have I not eaten of [f] that which dieth of itſelf, or is torn in pieces, neither came there abominable fleſh into my mouth. 15. Then he ſaid unto me, Lo, I have given given thee cows dung for mans dung, and thou ſhalt prepare thy bread therewith. 16. Moreover, he ſaid unto me, Son of man, behold, I will break [g] the ſtaff of bread in Jeruſalem, and they ſhall eat bread by weight, and with care, and they ſhall drink water by meaſure, and with aſtoniſhment. 17. That they may [h] want bread and water, and be aſtoniſhed one with another, and [i] conſumed away for their iniquity.

v. 9—17. To affect their minds with the terribleneſs of the famine, which would be the conſequence of the ſiege, the prophet, during the three hundred and ninety days, muſt uſe the moſt wretched proviſion, and in the moſt ſcanty meaſure.

1. His bread is ordered him of the vileſt ſort, beans, lentils, millet, fitches, mixed with wheat and barley. To ſuch diſtreſs would they be reduced, that the very provender for their cattle would be greedily devoured. They who now live daintily, know not what ſtraits they may be driven to ere they die.

2. He is to be very ſparing of this vile food, eating his bread by weight, and drinking water by meaſure, allowed but ten ounces of the former, and a pint of the latter each day, barely a ſufficiency to keep him alive; a token of their great ſtraits, and their obſtinacy to hold out to the very laſt morſel, Jer. xxxvii. 21. Note, When God's glory requires it of us, we muſt not heſitate to endure any hardneſs, and deny ourſelves the lawful comforts of life.

3. He is to bake his bread with human ordure dried, in the ſight of the people, that they might be affected with the grievouſneſs of the famine, where fuel as well as food would be wanting, and no diſtinction be made between clean and unclean. The prophet makes no objection to the wretchedneſs of the food, but apprehending ceremonial defilement would thence accrue to him, which, as a prieſt, he had ever carefully abſtained from of every kind, v. 14. he prays, if God pleaſes, for ſome mitigation in this point, and the Lord permits him to uſe cow's dung inſtead of man's. Note, (1.) The fear of ſin affects the gracious ſoul more than any thing beſide. (2.) God's condeſcenſion to the ſcruples of Ezekiel ſhould teach us to uſe the like tenderneſs towards our brethren, and not to grieve their weak conſciences.

4. The intention of God's orders to Ezekiel is explained. He is a ſign unto them. So ſore ſhall be the famine during the ſiege of Jeruſalem, that the little bread which remained ſhould be uſed with the ſtricteſt care, in order to enable them the longer to hold out; yet, with aſtoniſhment they will find all their meaſures broken, their reſiſtance fruitleſs, and their affairs growing each day more deſperate, pining away in their iniquities, and aſtoniſhed one with another, unable to relieve or help each other, and ſhocked to behold the dire effects of famine, fatigue, and ſickneſs, which made the beſieged appear rather as ſpectres than men. And at laſt delivered into the hands of the heathen, they ſhould be compelled to eat the defiled bread of the Gentiles, as loathſome as the cakes the prophet baked. Such are the ſad effects of ſin, and abuſed plenty thus juſtly ends in pining want.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter we have a farther and no leſs terrible denunciation of the judgments of God upon the Jewiſh nation, 1. Repreſented by cutting, burning, and ſcattering of hair, ver. 1—4. 2. That ſign is expounded and applied to Jeruſalem, (1.) Sin is charged upon her as the cauſe of this deſolation, contempt of God's law, ver. 5—7. and profanation of his ſanctuary, ver. 11. (2.) Wrath is threatned, great wrath, ver. 8, 9, 10. a variety of miſeries, ver. 12, 16, 17. ſuch as ſhould be their reproach and ruin, ver. 13—15.

1. AND thou, ſon of man, take thee a ſharp knife, take thee a barbers raſor, and [a] cauſe it to paſs upon thine head, and upon thy beard, then take thee balances to weigh, and divide the hair. 2. [b] Thou ſhalt burn with fire a third part in the midſt of the city, when [c] the days of the ſiege are fulfilled; and thou ſhalt take a third part, and ſmite about it with a knife; and a third part [d] thou ſhalt ſcatter in the wind, and I will draw out a ſword after them. 3. Thou ſhalt alſo take thereof [e] a few in number, and bind them in thy † ſkirts. 4. Then take of them again, and caſt them into the midſt of the fire, and burn them in the fire: for [f] thereof ſhall a fire come forth into all the houſe of Iſrael.

v. 1—4. Jeruſalem's ruin is here repreſented by another ſign.

1. The prophet muſt ſhave his head and beard, and carefully weigh and divide the hair into three parcels; one third muſt be burnt, another be cut in pieces, the other ſcattered in the wind, a few hairs excepted, which he muſt bind in his ſkirts, and then quickly take them thence, and burn them in the fire.

2. The meaning of this is, that Jeruſalem, which had been the head of the nation, and full of inhabitants, numerous as theſe hairs, muſt undergo the fouleſt diſgrace, and be covered with bittereſt grief; weighed in the balances of God's juſtice, the puniſhment ſuitable to their guilt is determined. The city muſt be taken and burnt; one third of the inhabitants conſumed in the flames, or by the famine; another ſlain with the ſword during the ſiege, or attempting to eſcape; the other be diſperſed into all the neighbouring countries, not only led captive into Chaldea, but flying for refuge to Egypt, Moab, and Ammon, whither the ſword of the king of Babylon would purſue them. A few under Gedaliah ſeemed reſerved for mercy, but even among them the fire kindles, their ruler is ſlain, and this remnant miſerably conſumed; thus will God overcome when he judgeth. If ſinners will obſtinately perſiſt in their wickedneſs, utter deſtruction will infallibly overtake them.

5. ¶ Thus ſaith the LORD God, This is Jeruſalem: I have ſet it in the midſt of the nations and countries that are round about her. 6. And ſhe hath changed my judgments [g] into wickedneſs [h] more than the nations, and my ſtatutes more than the countries that are round about her: for they have refuſed my judgments and my ſtatutes, they have not walked in them. 7. Therefore thus ſaith the LORD God, Becauſe ye multiplied more than the nations that are round about you, and have not walked in my ſtatutes, neither have kept my judgments, [i] neither have done according to the judgments of the nations that are round about you: 8. Therefore thus ſaith the LORD God, Behold, [k] I, even I am againſt thee, and will execute judgments in the midſt of thee, in the ſight of the nations. 9. And I will do in thee [l] that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like; becauſe of all thine abominations. 10. Therefore the fathers ſhall eat the ſons in the midſt of thee, and the ſons [m] ſhall eat their fathers; and I will execute judgments in thee, and the whole remnant of thee will I ſcatter into all the winds. 11. Wherefore, as I live, ſaith the LORD God, Surely becauſe thou haſt defiled my ſanctuary with all thy deteſtable things, and with all thine abominations, therefore will I alſo diminiſh thee, [n] neither ſhall mine eye ſpare, neither will I have any pity. 12. ¶ [o] A third part of thee ſhall die with the peſtilence, and with famine ſhall they be conſumed in the midſt of thee; and a third part ſhall fall by the ſword round about thee; and [p] I will ſcatter a third part into all the winds, [q] and I will draw out a ſword after them. 13. [r] Thus ſhall mine anger be accompliſhed, and I will cauſe my fury to reſt upon them, and [s] I will be comforted: and [t] they ſhall know that I the LORD have ſpoken it in my zeal, when I have accompliſhed my fury in them. 14. Moreover, I will make thee waſte, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee, in the ſight of all that paſs by. 15. So [u] it ſhall be a reproach and a taunt, [x] an inſtruction and an aſtoniſhment unto the nations that are round about thee, when I ſhall execute judgments in thee in anger and in fury, and in furious rebukes: I the LORD have ſpoken it. 16. When I ſhall [y] ſend upon them the evil arrows of famine, which ſhall be for their deſtruction, and which I will ſend to deſtroy you; and I will increaſe the famine upon you, and will break [z] your ſtaff of bread. 17. So will I ſend upon you famine and [a] evil beaſts, and they ſhall bereave thee; and peſtilence and blood ſhall paſs through thee, and I will bring the ſword upon thee: I the LORD have ſpoken it.

v. 5—17. The reddition of the foregoing ſign is here given at large, This is Jeruſalem; the name of the thing ſignified being given to the ſign, as this is my body.

1. Jeruſalem was highly honoured, v. 5. ſet in the midſt of the nations, and exalted in privileges above them all, as a beacon on a hill, deſigned to diffuſe the light of thoſe divine oracles, which were entruſted to her. For when God hath given diſtinguiſhed mercies, he juſtly expects a ſuitable return.

2. Her provocations were multiplied, great and aggravated. She hath changed my judgments into wickedneſs; not only neglecting God's commands, and ſlighting his inſtitutions, but introducing the idolatries and abomination of the heathen; and as if it was not enough to be like them, the profaneneſs and impiety of Iſrael were more than the nations round about them; yea, they did not according to the judgments of the nations round about them; they were more abandoned in wickedneſs, and ſhewed none of that reſpect for the true God which they paid to their idol deities. And to ſuch a pitch of hardened inſolence and impudence in ſin were they grown, that in the very houſe erected for God's honour and worſhip, there did they ſet up their hated idols, and offered their deteſtable ſacrifices before them. Note, (1.) Many a comparatively virtuous heathen will riſe up and condemn the immoral lives of profeſſing chriſtians. (2.) When they who have been God's people by profeſſion, turn apoſtates, they uſually grow moſt abandoned.

3. Her puniſhment ſhall be according to her ſins; terrible beyond what any nation before ever did, or ever ſhall again ſuffer, v. 9. and public, in the midſt of thee, ver. 8. that all around might behold God's righteous judgment, and be warned by her plagues.

(1.) God himſelf makes bare his holy arm. I, even I am againſt thee; whatever inſtruments he employed, the deſtruction was from the Lord: in anger and fury, and furious rebukes, as a man exaſperated with the moſt atrocious provocations; yea, all the fierceneſs of his wrath ſhall be accompliſhed, ver. 13. ſo entire ſhall be their ruin, and his fury ſhall reſt upon them for a long ſeaſon; they ſhall lie under the marks of his fearful vengeance, and this without mercy or pity, v. 11. Yea, ſo far from it, he will delight in their miſery, I will be comforted, ver. 13. in thus eaſing himſelf of his enemies, under whom the very earth groaned, and in glorifying his juſtice and truth by the execution of theſe moſt righteous judgments. And then at laſt when they feel, they will know the truth of his threatnings, and his jealouſy in vindicating his own glory, and the honour of his government. Note, (1.) Wo to the ſinner that provokes a jealous God. When his wrath is kindled, yea, but for a moment, who may abide it? (2.) The miſery of the damned ſhall reſult to God's glory, and he will, without the leaſt impeachment of his mercy, delight in their torment, ſeeing it is the juſt reward of their deeds.

(2.) The particular judgments threatned are many and grievous. (1.) Famine, ſharp and deadly as a poiſoned arrow, v. 16. ſo raging, that all natural affection ſhould be extinguiſhed thereby, and fathers eat their ſons, and ſons feed upon their murdered fathers. (2.) Diſperſion; the remnant which ſurvived the ſiege, ſhould be miſerably ſcattered in all lands, like Cain under a curſe, and vagabonds in the earth. (3.) Peſtilence; which ſhould devour a third part, v. 12. the uſual conſequence of famine. (4.) The ſword, which ſhould not only deſtroy a third part during the ſiege, but purſue the fugitives, and bring them at laſt to a miſerable end, v. 12. (5.) Evil beaſts, ver. 17. not merely enemies, as ſavage as lions, but every furious beaſt of prey that ſhould break in upon them in herds, bereave them of their deareſt relatives, and devour thoſe who fled into the mountains and deſerts for ſhelter. For as vain is it to fly from God's vengeance, as to reſiſt it.

(3.) Neighbouring nations would inſult their fall, reproach them for their wickedneſs, ridicule their vain confidence; and whilſt they were amazed and aſtoniſhed at the terribleneſs of the judgment, would receive inſtruction, and be warned of the dreadful danger of provoking ſuch a jealous God. Note, When the judgments of God are ſeen in the earth, the inhabitants thereof ſhould learn righteouſneſs, and repent of thoſe ſins which they ſee productive of ſuch unutterable miſery in others.

4. The veracity of God is engaged for executing the words of his threatnings. I, the Lord, have ſpoken it, able to perform it, and who cannot lie, or repent, therefore the judgment is infallibly ſure to come. And however, whilſt the threatned vengeance is diſtant, ſinners are apt to deſpiſe it, when it is accompliſhed, they ſhall know and feel the truth of thoſe threatnings, which they would not believe from the mouth of the prophet.

CHAP. VI.

In this chapter we have, 1. The deſtruction of Iſrael and of their idols threatned, ver. 1—7. 2. A promiſe of the gracious return of a remnant of them to God by true repentance, ver. 8—10. 3. Directions given to the prophet and other the Lord's ſervants, to lament both the iniquities and the calamities of Iſrael, ver. 11—14.

1. AND the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, ſet thy face towards [a] the mountains of Iſrael, and propheſy againſt them. 3. And ſay, [b] Ye mountains of Iſrael, hear the word of the LORD God, Thus ſaith the LORD God to the mountains and to the hills, to the rivers and to the valleys, Behold, I, even I will bring a ſword upon you, and [c] I will deſtroy your high places. 4. And your altars ſhall be deſolate, and your † images ſhall be broken; and [d] I will caſt down your ſlain men before your ‡ idols. 5. And I will ‖ lay the dead carcaſes of the children of Iſrael before their idols, and [e] I will ſcatter your bones round about your altars. 6. v. 1—7. We have here repeated denunciations of vengeance againſt a rebellious people.

1. The prophet is commanded to ſet his face towards the mountains of Iſrael, and prophecy againſt them, againſt the whole land, and the inhabitants thereof; againſt the greateſt among them, particularly thoſe who had been the ringleaders in wickedneſs: or the mountains are addreſſed, as if the rocks thereon were leſs obdurate, and the inanimate earth more ready to hear, than that ſtupid people; and againſt the hills, the rivers, and the vallies alſo, the eſpecial ſcenes of their idolatry; or as deſcriptive of the whole country againſt which judgment is denounced.

2. Utter deſtruction is threatned both againſt the idols and their worſhippers, from God; for though the executioners of his wrath were the Chaldeans, the ſword in their hands was his. So far from being able to protect their votaries, theſe mock deities would be unable to defend themſelves; their high places ſhould be deſtroyed, their altars deſolate, their images broken, and theſe dunghill gods (as the word for idols, ver. 4. ſignifies) caſt into the duſt; their worſhippers ſhould ſhare their fate, ſlain before their idols, their dead corpſes ſhould be laid at their feet, and their bones ſcattered around theſe hateful altars; univerſal deſolation ſhould ſpread through the land, the cities be deſtroyed, every dwelling-place ruined, and thoſe high places and altars defiled by their abominations, be now more defiled with the blood and carcaſes of the ſlain, and ye ſhall know that I am the Lord; by terrible experience convinced of the difference between thoſe ſenſeleſs idols they ſerved, and that only living and true God whom they had ſlighted.

8. ¶ [h] Yet will I leave a remnant, that ye may have ſome that ſhall eſcape the ſword among the nations, when ye ſhall be ſcattered through the countries. 9. And they that eſcape of you ſhall remember me among the nations, whither they ſhall be carried captives, becauſe [i] I am broken with their whoriſh heart which hath departed from me, [k] and with their eyes which go a whoring after their idols: and [l] they ſhall lothe themſelves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations. 10. And they ſhall know that I am the LORD, and that I have not ſaid [m] in vain that I would do this evil unto them.

v. 8—10. When God executes judgment, he ſtill remembers mercy. Though none ſhould be ſpared in Jeruſalem, a remnant of the diſperſed ſhall yet be reſcued from the devouring ſword.

1. They ſhall remember me. Either, [1.] The wrath of God, viſible now in their ſufferings among the nations whither they ſhall be carried captives, would drive them to him, afflictions being often the moſt ſalutary means of recovering theb ackſliding ſoul: or, [2.] They would be drawn by the tender mercies of God they had ſlighted, who ſtill yearned over them, though ſo highly provoked by their ungrateful departures from him, and who was broken with their whoriſh heart, grieved to behold their ſpiritual adulteries, and attachment to their idols. Note, Nothing wounds the awakened ſinner's conſcience more deeply, than a ſenſe of his baſe ingratitude, and his grieving the holy ſpirit of God.

2. This will produce ſelf-loathing and genuine repentance. They ſhall lothe themſelves for the evils they have committed in all their abominations; they will be brought, by remembring God, to a knowledge of their own abominations, will diſcover the malignity of their ſins, and the multitude of evils they had overlooked; and this will produce ſelf-abhorrence and ſelf-loathing; even though God hath forgiven them, they never can forgive themſelves.

3. They will then give glory to God. They ſhall know that I am the Lord, acknowledging the truth of his word, the juſtice of their puniſhment, and the wonders of his grace; and this will be the caſe with every truly penitent ſoul.

11. ¶ Thus ſaith the LORD God, [n] Smite with thine hand, and ſtamp with thy foot, and ſay, [o] Alas, for all the evil abominations of the houſe of Iſrael: for they ſhall fall by the ſword, by the famine, and by the peſtilence. 12. He that is far off ſhall die of the peſtilence, and he that is near ſhall fall by the ſword, and he that remaineth and is beſieged ſhall die by the famine: thus will I accompliſh my fury upon them. 13. Then [p] ſhall ye know that I am the LORD, when their ſlain men ſhall be among their idols round about their altars, [q] upon every high high hill in all the tops of the mountains, and under every green tree, and under every thick oak, the place where they did offer ſweet ſavour to all their idols. 14. So will [r] I ſtretch out my hand upon them, and make the land deſolate; yea, † more deſolate than the wilderneſs towards Diblath, in all their habitations, and they ſhall know that I am the LORD.

v. 11—14. Since the Jews in general were too unaffected both with their ſufferings and ſins, the prophet is ordered,

1. To expreſs the ſtrongeſt ſenſations of grief and anguiſh for them, if it might contribute to awaken them from their inſenſibility, when they ſaw him ſo deeply affected on their account. Smite with thine hand, and ſtamp with thy foot, and ſay, Alas! for all the evil abominations of the houſe of Iſrael; their ſins were grievous, and their judgment would be terrible, devoted to famine, peſtilence, and the ſword. Note, God's faithful miniſters have the tendereſt ſenſibility towards miſerable ſinners, and often weep over thoſe who never ſhed a tear for themſelves.

2. To repeat the ſame awful warnings as he had done before, that they may have line upon line, and be aſſured of the certainty of the impending judgments: in vain is flight when God purſues, he that is far off ſhall die by the peſtilence; in vain is reſiſtance, when the war is of the Lord: he that is near, and ſtands on his defence, ſhall fall by the ſword, or periſh by the famine in the ſtraitneſs of the ſiege. Since God's fury is provoked, he will accompliſh their deſtruction. Before thoſe hated idols, in every place where they had offered incenſe unto them, ſhall their putrid corpſes lie unburied, a manifeſt token of God's righteous vengeance, v. 13. More deſolate than the howling and barren wilderneſs towards Diblath, Deut. viii. 15. ſhall the whole land be made. And ſince they refuſe to fly to him, and prove his mercy, God will force them to know him as the ſin-avenging God, in the terrible judgments he will inflict upon them.

CHAP. VII.

In this chapter the approaching ruin of the land of Iſrael is moſt particularly foretold, in affecting expreſſions often repeated, that if poſſible they might be awakned by repentance to prevent it. The prophet muſt tell them, 1. That it will be a complete deſtruction, ver. 1—6. 2. That it is near, even at the door, ver. 7—10. 3. That it is unavoidable, ver. 10—15. 4. That their ſtrength and wealth ſhould be no fence againſt it, ver. 16—19. 5. That the temple, in which they truſted, ſhould itſelf be ruined, ver. 20—22. 6. That it ſhould be an univerſal ruin, the ſin that brought it having been univerſal, ver. 23—27.

1. MOreover the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Alſo thou ſon of man, thus ſaith the LORD God unto the land of Iſrael, [a] An end, the end is come upon the four corners of the land. 3. Now is the end come upon thee, and I will ſend mine anger upon thee, and [b] will judge thee according to thy ways, and will † recompenſe upon thee all thine abominations. 4. And [c] mine eye ſhall not ſpare thee, neither will I have pity: but I will recompenſe thy ways upon thee, and thine abominations ſhall be in the midſt of thee, and [d] ye ſhall know that I am the LORD. 5. Thus ſaith the LORD God, An evil, an only evil, behold, is come. 6. An end is come, the end is come; it ‡ watcheth for thee, behold, it is come. 7. [e] The morning is come upon thee, O thou that dwelleſt in the land: [f] the time is come, the day of trouble is near, and not the ‖ ſounding again of the mountains. 8. Now will I ſhortly [g] pour out my fury upon thee, and accompliſh mine anger upon thee: and I will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompenſe thee for all thine abominations. 9. [h] And mine eye ſhall not ſpare, neither will I have pity: I will recompenſe thee according to thy ways, and thine abominations that are in the midſt of thee, and ye ſhall know that I am the LORD that ſmiteth. 10. Behold the day, behold, it is come, the morning is gone forth, the rod hath bloſſomed, pride hath budded. 11. [i] Violence is riſen up into a rod of wickedneſs: none of them ſhall remain, nor of their multitude, nor of any § of theirs, [k] neither ſhall there be wailing for them. 12. The time is come, the day draweth near, [l] let not the buyer rejoice, nor the ſeller mourn: for wrath is upon all the multitude thereof. 13. For [m] the ſeller ſhall not return to that which is ſold, although † they were yet alive: for the viſion is touching the whole multitude thereof, which ſhall not return: neither ſhall any ſtrengthen himſelf ‡ in the iniquity of his life. 14. They have blown the trumpet, even to make all ready, but none goeth to the battle: for my wrath is upon all the multitude thereof. 15. [n] The ſword is without, and the peſtilence and the famine within: he that is in the field ſhall die with the ſword; and he that is in the city, famine and peſtilence ſhall devour him.

v. 1—15. Fair warning is here given to a careleſs people; and with great earneſtneſs the prophet ſpeaks, if ſo be he might awaken them from their lethargy.

1. Their time of judgment is come, their end at hand, their deſtruction impending; and this is urged with a great variety of expreſſions, to ſhew the certainty, nearneſs, and terribleneſs of the calamity. The whole land is doomed to ruin, v. 2. An evil, ſuch as was never heard of before approached, v. 5. Their deſolations watched for them, v. 6. The dawn of their calamity was already broke upon them, the day of trouble ſwiftly advanced; not a mere ſound, like the diſtant echo of a man's voice between the mountains, but a terrible ſhout of the Chaldean hoſts already at the walls of the city, v. 7. Note, (1.) The end of all things is at hand, Are we ready? (2.) Tho' God's patience bears long with ſinners, he will ſurely viſit them at the appointed time, and the evil of eternal vengeance will overtake them.

2. Their deſtruction is from God's wrath, v. 3. Their provocations had awakened his fury, and now in full vials he will pour it out on their devoted heads, and accompliſh his anger, giving it full ſcope, v. 8. and no pity or mercy ſhall mitigate the judgment, v. 4, 9. and wo to thoſe againſt whom God thus riſeth up as an enemy.

3. God herein acts with ſtricteſt juſtice. The ſentence paſſed on them would be in conſequence of an impartial trial, and the righteous recompenſe of their great abominations, v. 3. Theſe being found in the midſt of them unrepented of, wrath to the uttermoſt comes upon them, v. 4. The rod hath bloſſomed, the rod of univerſal wickedneſs, and they gloried in it; pride hath budded, that ſin peculiarly hateful to God, and violence is riſen up, a ſcene of oppreſſion and injuſtice appears, and the rod of upright government is turned into a rod of wickedneſs, to ſmite the innocent. Though ſome underſtand theſe expreſſions as ſignifying the Chaldean monarch, the rod of God's anger ſwelling with pride, and ready to break in violently upon them as a flood, to puniſh them for their iniquities.

4. The ruin coming upon them would be univerſal. None of them ſhall remain, the whole nation utterly waſted by famine, peſtilence, and the ſword; princes and people ſhall fall together unlamented, none ſurviving to bemoan them, or the few who were left, wholly engroſſed with care about themſelves, v. 11. The buyer ſhould not rejoice, nor the ſeller mourn, becauſe both now would be on a level, alike captives, and removed from their own land, v. 12. and no year of jubilee cauſe the poſſeſſions to revert to their former owners, though they were yet alive, ver. 13. the whole multitude being doomed to a ſeventy years ſervitude in Babylon. In vain on the approach of the enemy they blew the trumpet to oppoſe them, but none goeth to the battle; their courage is loſt, the wrath of God upon them diſpirits the braveſt, and they fall an eaſy prey, v. 14. The ſword conſumes without, the famine and peſtilence within, and neither the city nor country can afford the leaſt protection from theſe deſolating judgments, v. 15. and they who thought to ſtrengthen themſelves in their iniquity, and outbrave the threatned vengeance, now find themſelves terribly diſappointed, v. 15. Note, (1.) Multitudes are no protection from the wrath of God; ſinners ſhall no more eſcape becauſe they are many, than becauſe they are mighty. (2.) They who ſtrengthen themſelves in wickedneſs, will find their rebel arm impotent and broken when God awakes to judgment.

5. God's hand will be viſible in their ſufferings. And ye ſhall know that I am the Lord that ſmiteth. Though the Chaldean army be employed, they ſhall be convinced God's arm is made bare againſt them, and in their ſufferings read his fearful indignation.

16. ¶ But they that eſcape of them, ſhall eſcape, and ſhall be on the mountains like doves of the valleys, all of them [o] mourning, every one for his iniquity. 17. [p] All hands ſhall be feeble, and all knees ſhall † be weak as water. 18. They ſhall alſo [q] gird themſelves with ſackcloth, and horror ſhall cover them, and ſhame ſhall be upon all faces, and baldneſs upon all their heads. 19. v. 16—22. We have here the miſerable condition of the few who ſurvive the ruin of their country.

1. They are men of ſorrows, and vagabonds in the earth. On the ſolitary mountains, whither they have fled for refuge, like doves of the valley, they mourn every one for his iniquity; either for the puniſhment of it only, or with deep anguiſh bewailing their ſins, which were the cauſe of their ſufferings, v. 16. weak as water to reſiſt their enemies, v. 17. and abandoning themſelves to deſpair, in horrors of conſcience, or terrified with continual fear; covered with ſhame and confuſion becauſe of their tranſgreſſions, or of their preſent wretched ſtate; girt with ſackcloth, and baldneſs on their heads, the expreſſive ſigns of deep unutterable anguiſh. Note, (1.) Sin and ſorrow are inſeparable. (2.) Our afflictions are then gracious, when they lead us to mourn for our iniquity. (3.) The ſinner's confidence will end in deſpair and fruitleſs everlaſting wailings.

2. Their riches profit not in this day of wrath. They had idolized the ſhining mammon, and it had been the ſtumbling-block of their iniquity, whilſt they placed that affection and dependance upon their gold which they withdrew from God; but now they are made to know their folly and their ſin, compelled to caſt away their gold and ſilver as what would retard their flight, and unable with theſe to ſatisfy the cravings of hunger, or purchaſe a moment's reſt or eaſe to their ſouls. Some underſtand by the gold and ſilver their idols made of theſe precious metals, on which they truſted, but found their expectations from them terribly deceived. Note, (1.) Money is a dangerous ſnare; the inordinate love of it hath been the ruin of thouſands. (2.) The greateſt wealth can profit us nothing in a day of wrath; it cannot ſtay the arreſts of death, or procure in hell a drop of water to cool a flaming tongue.

3. Their temple is deſtroyed, magnificent and adorned as it had been, not merely by the immenſe profuſion of gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones, beſtowed on it, but infinitely more by the reſidence of the king of glory. They had polluted it, and dared within theſe ſacred walls to erect their deteſted idols; therefore have I ſet it far from them, removing them as captives into a diſtant land, and giving up the ſanctuary to be trodden under foot by the heathen, to be polluted, profaned, plundered, and burnt, by the Chaldeans firſt, and afterwards by the Romans. My face alſo will I turn from them, deſerting the Jews in their diſtreſs; or not diſpleaſed with the ravages of their wicked enemies, but ſuffering them uncontrouled to ſpread havock and deſolation on every ſide. Note, They who forſake God may expect that he will forſake them in the day of their calamity.

23. ¶ Make a chain: for the land is full of [u] bloody crimes, and the city is full of violence. 24. Wherefore I will bring the worſt of the heathen, and they ſhall poſſeſs their houſes: I will alſo make the pomp of the ſtrong to ceaſe, and † their holy places ſhall be defiled. 25. ‡ Deſtruction cometh, and they ſhall ſeek peace, and there ſhall be none. 26. [x] Miſchief ſhall come upon miſchief, and rumour ſhall be upon rumour; then [y] ſhall they ſeek a viſion of the prophet: but the law ſhall periſh from the prieſt, and counſel from the ancients. 27. The king ſhall mourn, and the prince ſhall be cloathed with deſolation, and the hands of the people of the land ſhall be troubled: I will do unto them after their way, [z] and § according to their deſerts will I judge them, and they ſhall know that I am the LORD.

v. 23—27. We have here,

1. The charge laid againſt the Jewiſh people, for which they are brought to God's bar. Make a chain to bind the priſoner, and bring him before the judge; or to lead them into an ignominious captivity; for their land is full of bloody crimes, or judgments of blood, ſuch crimes as by the law were capital, and called for the blood of the criminal; the city is full of violence, a ſcene of oppreſſion, rapine, and injuſtice. And when ſin in a nation is thus triumphant, her deſtruction cannot be far diſtant.

2. The ſentence pronounced. God threatens to bring upon them the worſt of the heathen, the moſt ſavage and barbarous of the human ſpecies. The noble, the rich, the proud oppreſſors, with all their pomp, muſt bow before them, and the fruits of their injuſtice be for a prey; their holy places ſhall be defiled, or they that ſanctify them, their prieſts and Levites, ſlain, and lying in their blood. Repeated rumours of the approaching enemy ſhall terrify them; miſchief upon miſchief ſhall overwhelm them, and deſtruction without remedy ſeize them at laſt: no peace will be granted them by their exaſperated foes, v. 25. They ſhall, in their diſtreſs, ſeek a viſion of the prophet, whom they before deſpiſed and rejected; but none ſhall be vouchſafed them; for the law ſhall periſh from the prieſt, he ſhall neither be able to adviſe or comfort them; and counſel ſhall periſh from the ancients, given up to infatuation, and become fooliſh in their imaginations: ſo that they would be without reſource. Their king ſhall mourn a priſoner, cloathed with deſolation, blind and in chains; the hands of the people be troubled, weak and unable to reſiſt; God viſiting now upon them their iniquities, and making them know his almighty power and vindictive wrath: for God will make himſelf known, either in mercy to his people, or in vengeance to his enemies.

CHAP. VIII.

The prophet here is brought in a viſion to Jeruſalem, that he might behold the ſins which provoked theſe threatned judgments, ver. 1—4. and there he ſees, 1. The image of jealouſy ſet up at the gate of the temple, ver. 5, 6. 2. The elders of Iſrael worſhipping all manner of images in a ſecret chamber, ver. 7—12. 3. The women weeping for Tammuz, ver. 13, 14. 4. The men worſhipping the ſun, ver. 15, 16. And then appeals to him whether ſuch a provoking people ſhould have any pity ſhewed them, ver. 17, 18.

1. AND it came to paſs in the ſixth year, in the ſixth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I ſat in mine houſe, and the elders of Judah [a] ſat before me, that [b] the hand of the LORD God fell there upon me. 2. Then I beheld, and lo, a likeneſs [c] as the appearance of fire: from the appearance of his loins even downward, fire: and from his loins even upwards, as the appearance of brightneſs, [d] as the colour of amber. 3. And [e] he put forth the form of an hand, and took me by a lock of mine head, and the ſpirit lift me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the viſions of God to Jeruſalem, to the door of the inner gate, that looketh toward the north, where was the ſeat of [f] the image of jealouſy, which provoketh to jealouſy. 4. And behold the glory of the God of Iſrael was there, according to the viſion that [g] I ſaw in the plain. 5. ¶ Then ſaid he unto me, Son of man, lift up thine eyes now the way towards the north: ſo I lift up mine eyes the way towards the north, and behold, northward at the gate of the altar, this image of jealouſy in the entry. 6. He ſaid furthermore unto me, Son of man, ſeeſt thou what they do? even the great abominations that the houſe of Iſrael committeth here, that I ſhould go far off from my ſanctuary; but turn thee yet again, and thou ſhalt ſee greater abominations.

v. 1—6. The days ſeem now to have been expired during which the prophet was to lie on his ſide, and a new viſion is revealed to him, dated in the ſixth year of Jehoiakin's captivity, about fourteen, or, if we ſuppoſe an intercalated month, about fifteen months after the former.

1. He ſat in his houſe, and the elders of Judah before him. Probably it was a ſabbath, and they were now aſſembled for the worſhip of God, or to conſult the prophet in their preſent diſtreſſed circumſtances; for affliction will often drive thoſe to God's prophets who in their proſperity deſpiſed their admonitions.

2. Then ſuddenly a divine extacy ſeized him, in the preſence of the elders, and a glorious perſonage appeared, as fire from the loins downwards, and upwards bright and gliſtering. The ſame probably as chap. i. 26, 27. even the Lord Jeſus, clothed with majeſty and glory, burning with love towards his people, and a conſuming fire to his enemies.

3. The prophet is caught away in viſion to Jeruſalem. Swift as thought he paſſes through the air, and at the inner gate of the temple is let down to obſerve what is there tranſacted. This ſeems to have been entirely viſionary, and not any real or local removal of the prophet from Chaldea.

4. He records what he ſaw there. [1.] He beheld the ſame glorious viſion which had appeared to him before in the plain, chap. ii. 22, 23. God had not yet deſerted his temple; though he was now about to do it, provoked by their daring profaneneſs, impiety, and baſe ingratitude. [2.] He beheld the image of jealouſy ſet up cloſe by the northern gate of the inner court, where ſtood the altar of burnt-offering. What this image was we are not told: probably the idol Baal, 2 Kings xxi. 7. But nothing could be conceived more affronting to God, nor could they have contrived a more effectual method to provoke the eyes of his jealouſy. Well therefore may he bid the prophet with wonder and deteſtation to behold theſe abominations! and urges the juſtice of his departure from a people ſo deſperately wicked: and greater abominations yet remained. Note, (1.) When we ſet up the idols of pride, luſt, and covetouſneſs in our hearts, which ſhould be the temple of the Holy Ghoſt, we become equally criminal with thoſe who bowed to Baal. (2.) They who provoke God by their ſins to depart from them, have only themſelves to blame for the ruin which enſues.

7. ¶ And he brought me to the door of the court; and when I looked, behold, a hole in the wall. 8.
Then ſaid he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall: and when I had digged in the wall, behold a door.
9. And he ſaid unto me, Go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here. 10. So I went in and ſaw, and behold, every form of creeping things, and abominable beaſts, and all the † idols of the houſe of Iſrael pourtrayed upon the wall round about. 11. And there ſtood before them ſeventy men of the ancients of the houſe of Iſrael, and in the midſt of them ſtood Jaazaniah the ſon of Shaphan, with every man his cenſer in his hand, and a thick cloud of incenſe went up. 12.

Then ſaid he unto me, Son of man, haſt thou ſeen what every man in the chambers of his imagery, for they ſay, i Pſ. x. 11. Chap. ix. 9.

[i] The LORD ſeeth us not, the LORD hath forſaken the earth.

v. 7—12. The farther the prophet goes the more his indignation is moved.

1. He is led to the court of the prieſts, and behold a hole in the wall of one of their chambers, which he is commanded to enlarge, that he might ſee more diſtinctly what was done there; and when he had opened a paſſage he came to a door, at which he is bid to enter, and obſerve what paſſed within. Note, (1.) They who would know the myſtery of iniquity within muſt dig deep into the hidden corners of their hearts. (2.) Hypocrites think often to hide their iniquities; but ſome unguarded place betrays their wickedneſs, and expoſes their ſhame. (3.) Many make a fair ſhew in God's houſe in public, who, if followed to the ſecret chambers, would be found ſunk in abominations.

2. A ſcene of ſhocking wickedneſs is here laid open. Behold every form of creeping things, and abominable beaſts: ſo immerſed were they in idolatry, that even to the vileſt reptiles, and the moſt odious and impure animals, they paid their adorations. On the walls around were pourtrayed all the idols of Iſrael; and ſeventy elders, the whole great ſanhedrim, and in the midſt of them Jaazaniah the ſon of Shaphan, each with his cenſer, offered a cloud of incenſe to theſe hated deities; intimating how entirely the whole nation was infected with idolatry, when the great men, princes and prieſts together, were ſo devoted thereunto, and ſo liberal in their oblations. Note, When they who ſhould be examples to reſtrain others are themſelves ringleaders in iniquity, the corruption of a nation muſt needs become general.

3. God bids him obſerve theſe abominations, done indeed in the dark; but what darkneſs or ſhadow of death can hide the workers of wickedneſs from his all-ſeeing eye? And they ſay, the Lord ſeeth not, the Lord hath forſaken the earth; as if he had deſerted them, would pay no regard to them in their diſtreſs, and therefore they had recourſe to the gods of the nations for help. Note, (1.) The heart of man is like theſe chambers of imagery; abominations paſs there the ſun would bluſh to behold. (2.) The day will come when the ſecrets of all hearts ſhall be revealed. What a day of terror and confuſion to the impenitent and unpardoned! (3.) All ſin is at bottom practical atheiſm. (4.) They who embolden themſelves in iniquity by the flattering hope that the Lord hath forſaken the earth, ſhall find, by the judgments he will inflict, how near he is to vindicate his injured honour.

13. ¶ He ſaid alſo unto me, Turn thee yet again, k 2 Tim. iii. 13.
and thou ſhalt ſee [k] greater abominations that they do.
14. Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the LORD's houſe, which was towards the north, and behold, there ſat women weeping for Tammuz. 15. ¶ Then ſaid he unto me, Haſt thou ſeen this, O ſon of man? turn thee yet again, and thou ſhalt ſee greater abominations than theſe. 16. And he brought me into the inner court of the LORD's houſe, and behold, at their backs toward the temple of the LORD, and their which they commit here? for [n] they have filled the land neither will I have pity: and [p] though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them.

v. 13—18. Farther abominations paſs in review before the prophet.

1. At the north gate of the temple ſat women weeping for Tammuz. Probably the Adonis of the Grecians, beloved of Venus, according to the heathen fable, and ſlain by a wild boar. In honour therefore of this goddeſs they obſerved the anniverſary of his death with mourning and tears, and dared even in the gate of the Lord's houſe to appear celebrating the ſhameful ſervice.

2. In the inner court, the moſt ſacred incloſure between the porch and the altar, where the prieſts miniſtred, there ſtood about five and twenty men, their backs turned to the temple, their faces to the eaſt, adoring the riſing ſun.

3. God bids the prophet obſerve with wonder what he ſaw, and appeals to him concerning the aggravated guilt of this abandoned people. They made light of their dreadful provocations, and even there, in God's own houſe, performed their idolatrous rites. They filled the land alſo with violence, and then returned to provoke God to anger; for, whilſt ſuch wickedneſs was committed, their very ſacrifices muſt needs be an abomination: and lo they put the branch to their noſe, ſome noſegay perhaps of flowers, at which they ſmelled in honour of their idols; or, as ſome read the words, they put the branch to their wrath, or his wrath, adding freſh fuel to the fierceneſs of the divine wrath which burns againſt them. Therefore will I alſo deal in fury, pouring on them the vengeance due to their iniquities, and judgment without mercy, which all their prayers and tears ſhall not be able to avert. When ſinners have turned their backs on God, it is but juſt for him to turn his back on them, and be deaf to their cries in the day of their calamity.

v. 1—7. We have heard the provocations of this people, and we ſee here their judgment lingreth not.

1. A charge is given to the deſtroyers to approach; and inſtantly ſix warriors appear armed. Their buſineſs is, as miniſters of wrath, to deſtroy the city. They come from the north, where the image of jealouſy ſtood, from which quarter alſo their deſtruction advanced; and they went in and ſtood beſide the brazen altar, waiting for orders, or intimating that judgment would begin at the houſe of God, where the prieſts miniſtred whoſe hand had been chief in the tranſgreſſion. A ſeventh perſonage, differently clad, appears among them, arrayed not as a warrior, but as a prieſt, with a writer's inkhorn by his ſide; and this ſeems to be no other than the great high-prieſt of our profeſſion Chriſt Jeſus, who, amidſt all the judgments he ſends on the earth, writes his own people in his book of life, and preſerves them amidſt the general deſolations. Note, (1.) God never wants miniſters of wrath, when he hath vengeance to execute againſt ſinners. (2.) They who have profaned the altar by their wickedneſs, juſtly fall as ſacrifices before it. (3.) The people of God need not fear, whatever judgments are in the earth; their Lord and Saviour directs the ſword, and will protect them from evil.

2. God's glory, the Shechinah, removed from between the cherubims to the threſhold of the houſe, as ready now to depart from the devoted temple, when he had given the laſt directions to ſeparate the few precious from the vile. And,

[1.] He called to the man cloathed with linnen, &c. God's firſt care is for his own people; they were but few, yet precious in his ſight. They could not behold theſe abominations practiſed by their countrymen without the bittereſt concern and anguiſh, which they teſtified publicly, and lamented before God in private. On them therefore God commands a diſtinguiſhing mark to be ſet on the foreheads, that they might be known to belong to God, See Rev. vii. 3. in alluſion to the marks on ſervants, or to the blood on the lintels of the Iſraelites in Egypt, to guard them from the deſtroying angel. Note, (1.) God's people cannot without the deepeſt concern behold a world lying in wickedneſs: they remonſtrate againſt the evil, and with tears before God and man lament over periſhing ſouls. (2.) They who diſtinguiſh themſelves by a concern for God's glory, he will diſtinguiſh them by a care for their ſafety. (3.) If we are ſealed unto the day of redemption, we ſhall have nothing to fear in the day of calamity. (4.) The Lord Jeſus knoweth thoſe that are his, and not one of them ſhall be loſt.

[2.] To the others he ſaid, to the ſix deſtroyers, Go ye after him through the city, and ſlay with unrelenting ſeverity both young and old, all of every age and ſex, beginning at the ſanctuary; the prieſts, who were chief in iniquity, muſt be the firſt and chief ſufferers; and none muſt be ſpared, but thoſe on whom is God's mark; theſe they may not touch, nor come near. No ſooner is the command iſſued, than the deſtroyers obey, beginning with thoſe antients, the five and twenty, or the ſeventy which were before mentioned, profaning God's temple with their idolatries. Nor need they fear to defile God's houſe with the blood of the ſlain, ſince they have his commiſſion. Becauſe theſe antients have polluted it with their abominations, God will more pollute it with their dead carcaſes: and when they have begun their bloody work in the ſanctuary, they muſt finiſh it in the city by a general maſſacre; and it is done, v. 7. Note, (1.) They who perſiſt in their impenitence, will die without mercy. (2.) The ſoul that hath God's mark of life can never periſh. (3.) None in a judgment-day will meet ſo terrible a doom, as thoſe who being appointed to admoniſh others, have ſeduced and deſtroyed the ſouls to whom they were ordained to miniſter.

8. ¶ And it came to paſs while they were ſlaying them, and I was left, that I fell upon my face, and cried, and ſaid, [l] Ah, LORD God, wilt thou deſtroy all the reſidue of Iſrael, in thy pouring out of thy fury upon Jeruſalem? 9. Then ſaid he unto me, The iniquity of the houſe of Iſrael and Judah is [m] exceeding great, and the land is [n] full of blood, and the city full of † perverſeneſs: for they ſay, [o] The LORD hath forſaken the earth, and the LORD ſeeth not. 10. And as for me alſo, [p] mine eye ſhall not ſpare, neither will I have pity, but I will recompenſe their way upon their head. 11. And behold, the man cloathed with linen, which had the inkhorn by his ſide, ‡ reported the matter, ſaying, I have done as thou haſt commanded me.

v. 8—11. We have here,

1. The prophet an interceſſor in behalf of this miſerable people. Whilſt the execution was performing, and the prophet alone in the temple, all who were there beſides being ſlain, he fell upon his face in great humility, and cried, and ſaid, Ah, Lord God, wilt thou deſtroy all the reſidue of Iſrael, in thy pouring out of thy fury upon Jeruſalem? he dreaded a total exciſion, and fain would ſtay the avenging arm. Note, A gracious ſoul cannot unmoved behold the miſeries coming on the wicked, and fain would avert the dreadful ſtorm by his prayers.

2. God cannot grant his requeſt; their iniquities are ſuch as admit of neither pardon nor reprieve: their ſins are moſt aggravated; their land full of blood; murders the moſt inhuman, and every atrocious crime prevailing; the city is full of perverſeneſs; no juſtice or truth is regarded; and, atheiſtical in principles as practice, they blaſphemouſly dared to deny the government of his providence, and flattered themſelves with impunity in their iniquity: therefore God threatens with unſparing hand to puniſh them, to ſhut up his compaſſions, and to refuſe to be intreated by them or for them, bringing upon them the wrath they had ſo highly provoked and deſerved. Note, Though we may never ceaſe to cry to God, there is a time when ſinners are paſt the efficacy of prayer.

3. The man cloathed with linnen, &c. reports, that the divine orders were accompliſhed; the people of God marked for life; the wicked deſtroyed. The Lord Jeſus hath thus finiſhed the work God hath given him to do; his redeemed ones are ſecured from the power of the deſtroyer; their ſalvation is perfect and compleat; and wrath to the uttermoſt ready to be poured on the world of the ungodly.

CHAP. X.

The ſame viſion the prophet had ſeen, chap. 1. is here repeated, with a particular reference to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem ſignified by 1. The ſcattering of the coals of fire upon the city, which were taken from between the cherubims, ver. 1—7. 2. The removal of the glory of God from the temple, and its being upon the wing to be gone, ver. 8—22. When God goes out from a people, all judgments break in upon them.

1. THEN I looked, and behold, in [a] the firmament that was above the head of the cherubims, there appeared over them, as it were a ſapphire-ſtone, as the appearance of the likeneſs of a throne. 2. And he ſpake unto [b] the man cloathed with the linen, and ſaid, Go in between the wheels, even under the cherub, and fill † thine hand with coals of fire from between the cherubims, and [c] ſcatter them over the city. And he went in in my ſight. 3. Now the cherubims ſtood on the right ſide of the houſe, when the man went in, and the cloud filled the inner court. 4. [d] Then the glory of the LORD ‡ went up from the cherub, and ſtood over the threſhold of the houſe, and the houſe was filled with the cloud, and the court was full of the brightneſs of the LORD's glory. 5. And [e] the ſound of the cherubims wings was heard, even to the utter court, as the voice of the almighty God when he ſpeaketh. 6. And it came to paſs, that [f] when he had commanded the man cloathed with linen, ſaying, Take fire from between the wheels, from between the cherubims; then he went in, and ſtood beſide the wheels. 7. And one cherub § ſtretched forth his hand from between the cherubims unto the fire that was between the cherubims, and took thereof, and put it into the hands of him that was cloathed with linen: who took it, and went out.

v. 1—7. We have here a glorious appearance of the Divine Majeſty, like that which the prophet ſaw, chap. i. A throne of dazzling brightneſs is ſet in the firmament above the cherubim, and God's attendant miniſters ſtand ranged on the right ſide of the houſe, as expreſſive of their abhorrence of the image of jealouſy that ſtood on the left.

1. God departs from his holy place, from the cherub, where the Shechinah, the ſymbol of the divine preſence, reſted, and ſtood over the threſhold of the houſe, as ready to depart; and the houſe was filled with the cloud, and the court was full of the brightneſs of the Lord's glory, ſee 1 Kings viii. 11. The temple was in darkneſs, an emblem of the blindneſs of the Jews; and the court of the Gentiles illuminated, God having reſolved to ſend to theſe the light of his goſpel. And the ſound of the cherubims wings was heard even to the utter court, loud as the voice of mighty thunderings; intimating their departure thence, or ſignifying the glorious voice of goſpel grace, which, by the preaching of the apoſtles, ſhould ſound forth to the moſt diſtant nations.

2. The city of Jeruſalem is doomed to be burnt with fire, ſignified by the command to the man clad in linnen, &c to go in between the wheels under the cherub, and take thence burning coals, and ſcatter them on the city; and he immediately went in, v. 2. when one of the cherubs took off the coals, chap. i. 13. and put them in his hand, and he went forth ſtrait to execute his commiſſion; which intimates, (1.) That the wrath of God againſt ſin is moſt holy: it is fire from between the cherubims. (2.) The Lord Jeſus hath all judgment committed to him, and at his ſecond coming to judge the world, ſhall burn up the earth, as then Jeruſalem, with fire. (3.) The great quarrel of God againſt Jeruſalem was eſpecially their perſecution of thoſe miniſters the cherubim repreſented.

8. ¶ [g] And there appeared in the cherubims, the form of a man's hand [h] under their wings. 9. [i] And when I looked, behold, the four wheels by the cherubims, one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub: and the appearance of the wheels was [k] as the colour colour of a beryl-ſtone. 10. And as for their appearances they four had one likeneſs, as if a wheel had been in the midſt of a wheel. 11. [l] When they went, they went upon their four ſides; they turned not as they went, but to the place whither the head looked, they followed it; they turned not as they went. 12. And their whole body, and their backs, and their hands, and their wings, and [m] the wheels were full of eyes round about, even the wheels that they four had. 13. As for the wheels, † it was cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel. 14. [n] And every one had four faces: the firſt face was the face of a cherub, and the ſecond face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle. 15. And the cherubims were lifted up: this is [o] the living creature that I ſaw by the river of Chebar. 16. [p] And when the cherubims went, the wheels went by them: and when the cherubims lift up their wings, to mount up from the earth, the ſame wheels alſo turned not from beſide them. 17. [q] When they ſtood, theſe ſtood; and when they were lifted up, theſe lift up themſelves alſo: for the ſpirit ‡ of the living creature was in them. 18. Then [r] the glory of the LORD departed from off the threſhold of the houſe, and ſtood over the cherubims. 19. And [s] the cherubims lift up their wings, and mounted up from the earth in my ſight: when they went out, the wheels alſo were beſides them, and every one ſtood at the door of the eaſt-gate of the LORD's houſe, and the glory of the God of Iſrael was over them above. 20. [t] This is the living creature that I ſaw under the God of Iſrael, by the river of Chebar, and I knew that they were the cherubims. 21. Every one had four faces apiece, and every one four wings, and the likeneſs of the hands of a man was under their wings. 22. And the likeneſs of their faces was the ſame faces which I ſaw by the river of Chebar, their appearances and themſelves: they went every one ſtraight forward.

v. 6—22. The particulars here recorded of this glorious viſion were before obſerved, chap. i. and with very little variation, except that the face of an ox there, is here called, v. 14. the face of a cherub, which ſeems to intimate they were the ſame.

They who interpret the cherubim of the angels, and the wheels of the divine providence, obſerve,

1. That this world, like theſe wheels, is in a ſtate of conſtant revolution; and though the diſpenſations of providence appear ſometimes intricate, as wheel within wheel, they all exactly correſpond, and tend to one great end, the glory of God.

2. Nothing can interrupt the decrees of God: whatever difficulties are in the way, the wheels go forward, and every obſtruction is born down, or removed.

3. The angels are the miniſtring ſpirits, whoſe ſervice God is pleaſed to employ in his providential government of the world.

4. Whatever inſtruments he employs, the work is God's, whoſe Spirit is in the cherubim and the wheels, guides all their motions, and directs their ſteps. There is no ſuch thing as chance or fortune in the world; the leaſt as well as the greateſt event is fixed by a divine unalterable decree, and brought to paſs by an irreſiſtible energy.

The deſign of repeating this tranſcendently magnificent appearance here, ſeems to be in order to upbraid their wickedneſs and folly, who provoked this glorious God to depart from them, as he was now about to do. He departs from the threſhold, aſcends his cherubic chariot, v. 18. and upwards they mount, removing firſt to the outer gate of the Lord's houſe, then to a mountain on the eaſt, chap. xi. 23. and at laſt he utterly abandons the land. Thus God at firſt cauſed his word to be preached to the Jews, and when they rejected his goſpel, he departed from them, and ſent his miniſters far off to the Gentiles.

CHAP. XI.

This chapter concludes the prophet's viſion, in which he receives two meſſages: 1. One of wrath againſt thoſe who continued ſtill at Jeruſalem, and were there in the height of preſumption, ver. 1—13. 2. Another of comfort to thoſe who were carried captives into Babylon, and were there in the depth of deſpondency. And as the former are aſſured that God has judgments in ſtore for them, notwithſtanding their preſent ſecurity; ſo the latter are aſſured, that God has mercy in ſtore for them, notwithſtanding their preſent diſtreſs, ver. 14—21. And ſo the glory of God removes farther, ver. 22, 23. The viſion diſappears, ver. 24. and Ezekiel faithfully gives his hearers an account of it, ver. 25.

1. MOreover, the ſpirit lift me up, and brought me unto the eaſt-gate of the LORD's houſe, which looketh eaſtward: and behold, at the door of the gate [a] five and twenty men: among whom I ſaw Jaazaniah the ſon of Azur, and Pelatiah the ſon of Benaiah, princes of the people. 2. Then ſaid he unto me, Son of man, theſe are the men that [b] deviſe † miſchief, and give wicked counſel in this city: 3. Which ſay, [c] It is not near, let us build houſes! v. 1—13. The abominations which were done in the temple we have ſeen; and as great, it ſeems, prevailed in the courts of juſtice, as in the worſhip of the ſanctuary.

1. Under the Spirit's conduct the prophet is led to the eaſt-gate of the Lord's houſe, where five-and-twenty of the princes ſat, two of whom are mentioned by name; and theſe, though the ſame in number as thoſe, chap. viii. 16. are different, thoſe being prieſts between the porch and the altar; theſe, judges, or princes, ſitting in council, or preſiding in the courts of judicature, where they were chargeable with great abuſes. They were abettors of wickedneſs: Theſe are the men that deviſe miſchief, or vanity; contrived ſchemes for the defence of the city, and encouraged the people to rebel, in defiance of God's threatnings: and give wicked counſel in this city; adviſing the perſecution of the prophets, and promiſing their countrymen all ſucceſs and ſecurity in their evil ways; denying the truth of God's warnings, and impiouſly declaring, It is not near; there was no danger from the Chaldean army; but that they may ſafely build houſes, and dwell in them peaceably; for this city is the caldron, and we are the fleſh; ridiculing what the prophet Jeremiah had ſpoken, chap. i. 13. or intimating, that no enemy would dare approach them, any more than a perſon would take with his hands the fleſh out of a boiling caldron. Note, (1.) The higher men are in office, the more criminal is their unfaithfulneſs. (2.) Wicked counſellors hurry a deluded people to the precipice of ruin. (3.) They who put far from them the evil day, will find it terribly ſurprize them ere they are aware. (4.) Mockery at God's word will ſhortly end in miſery.

2. He is commanded, and ſtrengthned by the Spirit of the Lord, to deliver with fidelity God's warnings to theſe wicked rulers. Propheſy againſt them, propheſy, O ſon of man: with boldneſs and zeal; for the greateſt are not too high or above divine rebuke: nor can we do a greater act of kindneſs to ſinners, who are flattering themſelves to their ruin, than to undeceive them, and ſhew them the guilt and danger of their ſtate. And the Spirit of the Lord fell upon me, and ſaid unto me, Speak; enabling him to open his mouth with undaunted courage, and not to fear the faces of the many or the mighty. He muſt tell them,

[1.] That God is privy to their devices, v. 5. However ſecret their contrivances, or deep-laid their ſchemes, he ſearcheth the heart, and nothing is hid from his all-ſeeing eye.

[2.] Ye have multiplied the ſlain in the city; by many inhuman murders, by the death of innocents, and the prophets of the Lord; and at their door lay all the blood which ſhould be ſhed during the ſiege. In a ſenſe they little ſuſpected, that city ſhould be the caldron, and theſe dead corpſes the fleſh, the only inhabitants who ſhould remain in it, buried under the ruins.

[3.] God will carry the ſurvivors into captivity. Far from dwelling as they flattered themſelves there ſafe as fleſh in a caldron, v. 11. the Lord will drag them forth, and deliver them into the hands of the Chaldeans. Note, Every ſinner is a ſelf-deceiver: he cries peace to his ſoul, but it will ſhortly be found there is a lie in his right hand.

[5.] God will terribly make himſelf known to them by the judgments he executes. They would not acknowledge him as their Lord by obedience to his holy will, but caſt off his government, and copied the manners of the heathen around them; therefore in the ſufferings he will inflict they ſhall know him to be a jealous God, and prove the truth of his threatnings, the power of his wrath, and the ſeverity of his juſtice.

3. An alarming providence confirms this awful warning. Pelatiah, the ſon of Benaiah, one of the five-and-twenty whom he ſaw at the gate, v. 1. dropped down dead as he uttered theſe words; an earneſt of the fulfilment of this fearful prophecy. This ſeems to have been done in viſion here, but no doubt happened at this very time, or when this prophecy was publiſhed. Note, God is pleaſed to make ſome preſent monuments of his judgments, when ſudden death arreſts the daring ſinner in the midſt of his profaneneſs and impiety.

4. The prophet, affected with this fearful ſtroke, deprecates the vengeance he ſaw ready to fall on the remnant of Iſrael. Though he denounced their doom, he did not deſire the dreadful day, but wept, and prayed, and intreated, if ſo be the wrath might yet paſs away.

14. Again the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 15. Son of man, thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy † kindred, and all the houſe of † Or redemption.

v. 14—21. We have here,

1. The inſults caſt on the poor captives in Babylon by their proud brethren, who ſtill continued in their own land. They ſaid, Get ye far from the Lord; ſuggeſting that as ſinners above the reſt they deſerved to be cut off from the communion of the faithful, and to loſe all their intereſt in the inheritance of the Lord, as forfeited; for unto us is this land given for a poſſeſſion. The prophet therefore need not be affected for the deſtruction he ſaw coming on thoſe who thus treated his brethren, the men of his kindred, or redemption; his neareſt relations, who were captives with him, to whom the right of redemption of his lands belonged; and theſe in God's account, though ſlighted and trampled upon, are the whole houſe of Iſrael, the good figs, who for their benefit were ſent into Babylon; whilſt their revilers were the reprobate, the evil figs, to whom God diſowned any relation. Note, They are often the ſevereſt cenſurers of others, whoſe own conduct will leaſt bear examination.

2. The comfortable words the prophet is commanded to ſpeak to them. God hath the moſt gracious deſigns towards them, and when their revilers are ruined, they ſhall be redeemed and ſaved.

[1.] Though they want the temple, God will himſelf by his preſence and love be a little ſanctuary unto them, v. 16. and though he hath indeed diſperſed them in the land of the heathen, where their condition ſeemed to be deſperate, yet there he would viſit them, and make them ſafe as under the horns of the altar, and happy in communion with him, as if they were in the courts of the Lord's houſe: or, a ſanctuary of a few, the little remnant according to the election of grace: or, for a little while, during the ſeventy years captivity. Note, (1.) Whatever outward means of grace we are excluded from, God can abundantly make them up in divine communications. (2.) The way to the throne of God is in every place alike open; and we may aſſuredly find him near, whenever in fervent prayer we ſeek his face.

[2.] God promiſes to bring them again to their own land, to collect them from their diſperſion, and reſtore them to the poſſeſſion of their loſt inheritance, when the preſent occupants ſhould utterly be conſumed, v. 17.

[3.] They ſhall not only be reſtored to their land, but, what is infinitely better, recovered from their backſlidings, and renewed in the ſpirit of their minds. Their former deteſtable idolatries ſhall be wholly rooted out from amongſt them; and the Lord in his rich grace aſſures them, he will give them one heart, ſingle in its attachment to him and his worſhip, and faithfully devoted to his glory; and put a new ſpirit within them, giving them new affections, new deſires, new purpoſes, new delights, new principles, new ends; that God may be glorified in them and by them. And he will take away the ſtony heart out of their fleſh, the corrupt, hard, impenitent heart, that had before been ſtubborn and obſtinate againſt God's word and warnings; and will give them an heart of fleſh; tender, ſuſceptible of the deepeſt impreſſions of ſhame and remorſe for former unfaithfulneſs, and of love to God for his boundleſs mercies, now ſeen and felt with the moſt lively ſenſibility. Thus they ſhall be enabled for the practice of that obedience God enjoins, and in this way enjoy the comfort of that moſt bleſſed and endeared relation, God their God, and they his people, v. 20. And what is here ſpoken of them is true of all God's redeemed ones, whoſe hearts by nature are hard and ſtupid, but by the powerful energy of his Spirit are ſoftened, and effectually converted to God, the whole man renewed after the image of Jeſus, and the love of ſin, of every idol, mortified within them. Where ſuch a bleſſed change is wrought, it is the ſure evidence of our relation to God, and the earneſt of our return to the heavenly Canaan; whilſt without it to hope for heaven would be the greateſt deluſion: there muſt be a meetneſs for it, ere we can truly expect an entrance into the inheritance among the ſaints in light.

3. A denunciation of wrath is pronounced on thoſe who ſtill dwelt in Jeruſalem, and lived in their abominable idolatries: God will viſit them according to their deeds, v. 22. By famine, peſtilence, and the ſword, they ſhall miſerably periſh. Note, Whilſt the heart continues apoſtate from God, hell muſt be the ſinner's doom.

22. ¶ [z] Then did the cherubims lift up their wings, [z] Chap. x. 19. and the wheels beſides them; and the glory of the God of Iſrael was over them above. 23. And [a] the glory of [a] Chap. viii. 3. and brought me in viſion by the ſpirit of God into Chaldea, to them of the captivity: ſo the viſion that I had ſhewed me.

v. 22—25. The meſſage being delivered to the prophet,

1. God departs, and abandons the city and temple to deſtruction. He went up in his cherubic chariot, and ſtood upon the mountain at the eaſt of the city, ſuppoſed to be the Mount of Olives; either looking back with grief on thoſe devoted walls, as in the days of his fleſh he there wept over Jeruſalem; or on that mount which had been the ſeat of idolatry and corruption, 2 Kings xxiii. 13. triumphing in the view of the deſtruction he was about to bring on the city. Note, Vengeance is God's ſtrange work: he appears loth to ſtrike; but when his abuſed patience is at an end, and the meaſure of the ſinner's iniquity is full, God will delight in his torment.

2. The prophet is by the Spirit re-conveyed in viſion to Chaldea, and thereupon the divine glory went up from him, and diſappeared. He awaked from his exſtacy, and found himſelf in his own houſe among the captivity, and probably the elders of Judah ſtill before him. Note, The ſaints of God, if at times favoured with ſome bright views of the divine glory, may expect them here below to be of no long continuance; but it is reſerved for them as the happineſs of the glorious world above, there to enjoy without interruption the beatific viſion of God.

3. He immediately communicated to thoſe of the captivity all the things he had ſeen and heard, as an encouragement to the poor captives to be thankful for their lot; and moſt probably notice was conveyed alſo to Jeruſalem of the judgments threatned as a warning, which, if it led them not to return from their ſins, might leave them inexcuſable in their impenitence.

CHAP. XII.

The ruin of Jeruſalem is the burden of this chapter. 1. The prophet, by removing his ſtuff, and quitting his lodgings, muſt be a ſign to ſet forth Zedekiah's flight out of Jeruſalem in the utmoſt confuſion, when the Chaldeans took the city, ver. 1—16. 2. The prophet, by eating his meat with trembling, muſt be a ſign to ſet forth the famine in the city during the ſiege, and the conſternation that the inhabitants ſhould be in, ver. 17—20. 3. A meſſage is ſent from God to aſſure the people that all theſe predictions ſhould ſhortly be accompliſhed, and not be deferred, as they vainly hoped, ver. 21—28.

594. 1. THE word of the LORD alſo came unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, thou dwelleſt in the midſt of [a] a rebellious houſe, which [b] have eyes to ſee, and ſee not; they have ears to hear, and hear not: [c] for they are a rebellious houſe. 3. Therefore thou ſon of man, prepare thee † ſtuff for removing, and remove by day in their ſight, and thou ſhalt remove from thy place to another place in their ſight; it may be they will conſider, though they be a rebellious houſe. 4. Then ſhalt thou bring forth thy ſtuff by day in their ſight, as ſtuff for removing: and thou ſhalt go forth [d] at even in their ſight, as ‡ they that go forth into captivity. 5. Dig thou through the wall in their ſight, and carry out thereby. 6. In their ſight ſhalt thou bear it upon thy ſhoulders, and carry it forth in the twilight: thou ſhalt cover thy face that thou ſee not the ground: for I have ſet [e] thee for a ſign unto the houſe of Iſrael. 7. And I did ſo as I was commanded: I brought forth my ſtuff by day, as ſtuff for captivity, and in the even I § digged through the wall with mine hand, I brought it forth in the twilight, and I bare it upon my ſhoulder in their ſight. 8. ¶ And in the morning came the word of the LORD unto me, ſaying, 9. Son of man, hath not the houſe of Iſrael, the rebellious houſe, ſaid unto thee, What doſt thou? 10. Say thou unto them, Thus ſaith the LORD God, This burden concerneth the prince in Jeruſalem, and all the houſe of Iſrael that are among them. 11. Say, [f] I am your ſign: like as I have done, ſo ſhall it be done unto them: they ſhall ‖ remove and go into captivity. 12. And [g] the prince that is among them ſhall bear upon his ſhoulder in the twilight, and ſhall go forth: they ſhall dig through the wall to carry out thereby: he ſhall cover his face that he ſee not the ground with his eyes. 13. My [h] net alſo will I ſpread upon him, and he ſhall be taken in my ſnare; [i] and I will bring him to Babylon to the land of the Chaldeans, yet ſhall he not ſee it, though he ſhall die there. 14. And I will [k] ſcatter toward every wind all that are round about him to help him, and all his bands, [l] and I will draw out the ſword after them. 15. And [m] they ſhall know that I am the LORD, when I ſhall ſcatter them among the nations, and diſperſe them in the countries. 16. But I will leave † a few men of them from the ſword, from the famine, and from the peſtilence, that they may declare all their abominations among the heathen whither they come, and they ſhall know that I am the LORD.

v. 1—16. Though many among the captives in Babylon profited under the viſitation, yet multitudes were ſtill hardened; flattered by their falſe prophets with hope of a ſpeedy return to Jeruſalem; and deaf to the admonitions of God's meſſengers, warning them to repent of their ſins, and patiently ſubmit to his will in bearing their appointed ſeventy years captivity. They were a rebellious houſe, and would not ſee nor hear; and who ſo blind as thoſe? To affect them therefore, not only by warnings but by the moſt expreſſive ſigns of the certain and terrible deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the prophet is enjoined,

1. To prepare his ſtuff for removing, his veſſels of captivity, as if going into a far country; and this openly in the ſight of the people, removing from place to place as one unſettled, and ſeeking an abode: in the twilight he muſt dig through the wall of his houſe, and carry out thereby his ſtuff, bearing it upon his own ſhoulders in a mournful habit, and with a dejected look, as one going into captivity; covering his face and ſtealing off in the dark, as one aſhamed and afraid of diſcovery. Thus he muſt be a ſign to that rebellious houſe. It may be they will conſider, and, though not moved with what they heard, be affected with what they ſaw, though they be a rebellious houſe. God thus tries every method with ſinners, and miniſters muſt not deſpair of repeating their labours with the moſt hardened and obſtinate: it may be they will repent: and the moſt diſtant hope ſhould encourage our perſeverance in our work.

2. The prophet inſtantly obeys, v. 7. however laborious the work, or ſtrange it might appear. They who have God's commands muſt never heſitate. We muſt be ready to do or ſuffer any thing for his glory and the good of men's ſouls; and count all our worldly ſtuff not worth a thought, if he calls us at any time to remove, knowing that we have in heaven a better and a more abiding ſubſtance.

3. The Lord the next morning gives the prophet the explication of what he had enjoined, which he is to communicate to the people, who would naturally be inquiſitive what he meant by this conduct; or perhaps they ridiculed him at his work, and, bantering, cried, What doſt thou? What is this ſtrange fellow about? He muſt tell them, this burden of the prophetic word reſpected the prince Zedekiah and all the houſe of Iſrael: Ezekiel is their ſign herein; as he hath done, ſo ſhall they. Their king, in whom they truſted, and by whoſe influence they hoped to be ſet at liberty and reſtored to their own country, ſo far from helping them, ſhould be enſlaved himſelf, and follow them to Babylon. Preſſed by the beſiegers, and the city no longer tenable, by night he ſhall attempt to eſcape, breaking through the wall of the city for privacy, and carrying a bundle of his moſt valuable effects or proviſion with him; his face covered with ſhame at his miſerable plight, or with a maſk to prevent his being known: but vain the attempt; God's net, the Chaldean army, ſhould be ſpread over him, and he taken as a bird in a ſnare, led captive into Babylon, and dying there; yet doomed never to ſee the place, his eyes being put out, in juſt puniſhment of his perfidy, by the conqueror, Jer. xxxix. 7. His guards ſcattered, his forces fled, yet purſued by the ſword, few ſhall be ſuffered to eſcape, and theſe diſperſed in heathen lands, living monuments of divine vengeance; or perhaps there brought to repentance, acknowledging their abominations, and juſtifying God in his judgments. Thus, ſaith he, they ſhall know that I am the Lord, omniſcient, juſt, and almighty. Note, God will make himſelf known, either in the terrors of his wrath to the impenitent, or in the riches of his grace to the humble.

17. ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came to me, ſaying, 18. Son of man, [n] eat thy bread with quaking, and drink thy water with trembling and with carefulneſs, 19. And ſay unto the people of the land, Thus ſaith the LORD God, of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and of the land of Iſrael, They ſhall eat their bread with carefulneſs, and drink their water with aſtoniſhment, [o] that her land may be deſolate from † all that is therein, becauſe of the violence of all them that dwell therein. 20. And the cities that are inhabited ſhall be laid waſte, and the land ſhall be deſolate, and ye ſhall know that I am the LORD.

† Heb. The fulneſs thereof.

v. 17—20. Ezekiel is ſtill herein a ſign unto them.

He muſt eat his bread with trembling, and drink his water with fear and carefulneſs, as if he was in danger of want, or expected it would be ſnatched from him; intimating the diſtreſs to which the inhabitants of Jeruſalem ſhould be reduced during the ſiege, terrified by their enemies without, dreading the ravages of famine within, and expecting ſhortly that both their bread and water would fail, and they miſerably periſh for want; the land being doomed to deſolation univerſal, the cities waſted, the country ravaged, uncultivated, and deſtitute of man and beaſt; and this becauſe of the violence therein, the bloodſhed, oppreſſion, and injuſtice exerciſed among them. And theſe judgments would teach them that knowledge of God which in their proſperity they refuſed to learn. Note, (1.) They who abuſe fulneſs of bread juſtly are puniſhed with pining want. (2.) Thoſe afflictions, on ourſelves or others, are ſingular bleſſings to us, which lead us to a deeper knowledge of and acquaintance with God.

21. ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 22. Son of man, what is that proverb, that ye have in the land of Iſrael, ſaying, [p] The days are prolonged, and every viſion faileth? 23. Tell them therefore, Thus ſaith the LORD God, I will make this proverb to ceaſe, and they ſhall no more uſe it as a proverb in Iſrael: but ſay unto them, The days are at hand, and the effect of every viſion. 24. For [q] there ſhall be no more any vain viſion, nor flattering divination within the houſe of Iſrael. 25. For I am the LORD: I will ſpeak, and [r] the word that I ſhall ſpeak ſhall come to paſs: it ſhall be no more prolonged: for in your days, O rebellious houſe, will I ſay the word, and will perform it, ſaith the LORD God. 26. ¶ Again the word of the LORD came to me, ſaying, 27. [s] Son of man, behold, they of the houſe of Iſrael ſay, The viſion that he ſeeth [t] is for many days to come, and he

v. 21—28. The awful warnings the prophet gave were too plain to be miſtaken, and the ſigns too forcible not to make ſome impreſſion. Here we are told what methods they took to evade the conviction. They affirmed that the time for the threatned judgments was prolonged, and would not yet arrive; ſo that they might hope for peace in their days, v. 22. and that the prophetic viſion looked forward to ſome very diſtant ſeaſon, ſo that they need not diſturb themſelves about the event: nay, ſome dared aſſert the evil never would come, every viſion faileth, or periſheth: ſo apt are ſinners to abuſe God's patience, to harden their hearts becauſe judgment is not ſpeedily executed, and to flatter themſelves that the terrors of God are mere bugbears. Nor did the falſe prophets fail to encourage the deluſion, v. 24. ſo that the ſayings were induſtriouſly propagated, and became proverbial: by frequent repetitions they began to believe their own lie. Againſt this deceit the prophet ſets his face, and from God aſſures them their neglect of his judgments ſhall but haſten them.

1. He will ſilence their falſe hopes, by bringing on them the threatned puniſhment, when every viſion ſhould take effect, their lying prophets be abaſhed, and their deluſive proverbs confounded, v. 23, 24. Note, They who will not believe the warnings of God, will too late be terribly convinced by the infliction of his judgments.

2. God will do this certainly and ſuddenly. I am the Lord, whoſe truth is inviolable, his power almighty, his juſtice inexorable, and he will execute all his threatnings. Since he hath ſpoken, it ſhall be done. No longer reſpite ſhall be granted, but wrath to the uttermoſt come on the rebellious houſe of Iſrael, and that quickly; the days are at hand, even in your days, their eyes ſhould ſee the deſtruction: within five or ſix years the whole ſhould be accompliſhed. And the ſame aſſurance is repeated, v. 28. to cut off all doubt of the event, ſince heaven and earth ſhall ſooner paſs away than one jot or tittle fail of God's word. Note, It is the folly of ſinners, when they hear of death and judgment, to put far from them the evil day, and defer the great work of preparing for eternity to a more convenient ſeaſon: when lo! their hour arrives, they bow, they fall, the grave receives them, a warning to others of the madneſs of procraſtination, and a loud call to-day, whilſt it is called to-day, to work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling.

C H A P. XIII.

None are more ſharply treated in Scripture than the falſe prophets. They were the chief cauſes of the people's ruin. The prophet here ſhews the ſin and puniſhment, 1. Of the falſe prophets, ver. 1—16. 2. Of the falſe propheteſſes, ver. 17—23.

1. AND the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. [e] They have ſeen vanity, and lying divination, ſaying, The LORD ſaith; and the LORD hath not ſent them; and they have made others to hope that they would confirm the word. 7. Have ye not ſeen a vain viſion, and have ye not ſpoken a lying divination, whereas ye ſay, The LORD ſaith it, albeit I have not ſpoken? 8. Therefore thus ſaith the LORD God, Becauſe ye have ſpoken vanity, and ſeen lies, therefore behold I am againſt you, ſaith the LORD God. 9. v. 1—9. The falſe prophets abounded, both in Judea and among the captives in Babylon, and by their flattering ſpeeches the hearts of the unwary people were beguiled: againſt them therefore the prophet is ordered to direct his word. They are called the prophets of Iſrael: probably they arrogated that title to themſelves, and perſecuted the few faithful prophets becauſe they remonſtrated againſt and contradicted their falſehood and lies.

Before Chriſt 594.

1. A heavy charge is laid againſt them. They were daring impoſtors, pretended a miſſion and inſtruction from God, when he never ſent them, forging viſions which they never ſaw, the mere contrivances of their own brain: inſtead of being guided by the ſpirit of truth, they followed their own deceived hearts; and dared to advance that as the dictates of inſpiration which they knew to be a lie: crafty and ravenous as the foxes of the deſert, they preyed on the deluded people; yet, wiſe as they accounted themſelves in their deceits, they were in fact fooliſh prophets, ſunk in ſpiritual ignorance and ſin; they uſed no efforts to prevent the impending judgments, v. 5. nor ever ſtood up in the breach againſt the overflowings of ungodlineſs, with ſharp and faithful rebukes againſt the wicked, or fervent and importunate prayer to God, in order to avert his wrath, when he aroſe as an enemy againſt them. Nay, they widened the gap they ſhould have made up, by baſely betraying men's ſouls, flattering them to their ruin, promiſing them peace, and with their ſolemn pretenſions and aſſeverations emboldening the people to hope that the event would correſpond with their predictions; hardening them in ſin, and haſtening their deſtruction. Note, (1.) To pretend a miſſion from the Holy Ghoſt, when men are conſcious they never were inwardly moved by him, is daring blaſphemy and impiety. (2.) They who run, though God never ſent them, will ſhortly be ſtopped in their career, and periſh in their lie. (3.) A fooliſh prophet had never yet a miſſion from God: they cannot be called who are not qualified. (4.) A greedy prophet ſhews who ſent him, not God but Mammon. (5.) They who ſtudy to pleaſe men's ears, inſtead of faithfully addreſſing their conſciences, are juſtly to be ſuſpected as deceivers.

2. Vengeance is denounced againſt them, v. 9. God is their enemy; and wo unto thoſe againſt whom he riſes up in anger. As they have juſtly forfeited them, they are for ever excluded from all the privileges of God's Iſrael; they ſhall either be cut off by death, or be excommunicated from the church, or, when the iſſue hath proved the falſehood of their predictions, they ſhall be confounded, and aſhamed to look thoſe in the face whom they have deluded: they ſhall be no more conſulted, but abhorred as deceivers; ſhall die in a miſerable exile, and never be enrolled with the other captives when they return to their own land, excluded from their mercy, an earneſt of eternal excluſion from the heavenly Canaan. And in theſe judgments, inflicted on the falſe prophets, God will make known the glory of his juſtice, holineſs, and truth.

10. ¶ Becauſe, [h] even becauſe they have ſeduced my people, ſaying, [i] Peace, and there was no peace; and one built up † a wall, and lo, others [k] daubed it with untempered morter. 11. Say unto them which daub it with untempered morter, that it ſhall fall: there ſhall be [l] an overflowing ſhower, and ye, O great hailſtones, ſhall fall, and a ſtormy wind ſhall rent it. 12. Lo, when the wall is fallen, ſhall it not be ſaid unto you, Where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it? 13. Therefore thus ſaith the LORD God, I will even rent it with a ſtormy wind in my fury: and there ſhall be an overflowing ſhower in mine anger, and great hailſtones in my fury to conſume it. 14. So will I break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered morter, and bring it down to the ground, ſo that the foundation thereof ſhall be diſcovered, and it ſhall fall, and ye ſhall be conſumed in the midſt thereof: and [m] ye ſhall know that I am the LORD. 15. Thus will I accompliſh my wrath upon the wall, and upon them that have daubed it with untempered morter, and will ſay unto you, The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it; 16. To wit, the prophets of Iſrael, which propheſy concerning Jeruſalem, and which ſee viſions [n] of peace for her, and [o] there is no peace, ſaith the LORD God.

v. 10—16. The falſe prophets are farther rebuked and threatened.

1. They deceived the people. They cried peace, as if God would give them deliverance from the Babyloniſh yoke, when there was no peace, no proſpect as yet of their return from captivity, or hope of their being able to ſupport themſelves in rebellion againſt the Chaldeans. Thus they ſeduced God's people, thoſe who in profeſſion at leaſt were ſuch, and who had been ſeparated from other nations for his ſervice. One built up a wall, pretending Jeruſalem was impregnable, and that the enemy ſhould never break through; and, this being found pleaſing to the people, lo! others daubed it with untempered morter, ſupporting with ſpecious arguments the aſſertion: when, alas! their wall, however ſolid it appeared, was weak and tottering, and ready to fall before the firſt attacks of the beſiegers. Such are the plauſible errors which hereticks introduce, and the ſmooth prophecies of miniſters who dare not honeſtly offend by their ſimplicity, but court favour by flattering ſinners in their falſe hopes, the end of which will be the ruin of the deceived and the deceiver together.

2. Judgment is paſſed upon them. The Chaldean army, as an overflowing ſhower, as great hailſtones, and a ſtormy wind, ſhall overturn all their defences, and lay the walls of Jeruſalem in the duſt; armed with the fury of God, nothing can reſiſt the invaders; and then the vanity of theſe lying prophets will be ſeen, and the folly of thoſe who truſted in them manifeſt, when they who daubed the wall ſhall periſh under the ruins, v. 14. Note, (1.) The falſe refuges of the ſinner ſhall in the end prove his bane. (2.) When God is the enemy, reſiſtance is vain. (3.) They who deluded others to their deſtruction ſhall receive themſelves greater damnation.

3. God ridicules their confidence, v. 12. and triumphs in their fall. When the wall is fallen, it ſhall be ſaid unto you, Where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it? Thoſe whom they had deceived would abuſe them for their falſe aſſurances, and the faithful, who diſregarded their predictions, mock at their calamities. And it ſhall be then known and acknowledged that God is the Lord, when his word is thus verified, and his righteous judgments executed.

17. ¶ Likewiſe thou, ſon of man, ſet thy face againſt the daughters of thy people, which [p] propheſy out of their own heart; and propheſy thou againſt them, 18. And ſay, Thus ſaith the LORD God, Wo to the women that ſew pillows to all † armholes, and make kerchiefs upon the head of every ſtature to hunt ſouls: Will ye hunt the ſouls of my people, and will ye ſave the ſouls alive that come unto you? 19. And will ye pollute me among my people [q] for handfuls of barley, and for pieces of bread, to ſlay the ſouls that ſhould not die, and to ſave the ſouls alive that ſhould not live, by your lying to my people that hear your lies? 20. Wherefore thus ſaith the LORD God, Behold, I am againſt your pillows, wherewith ye there hunt the ſouls, ‡ to make them fly, and I will tear them from your arms, and will let the ſouls go, even the ſouls that ye hunt to make them fly. 21. Your kerchiefs alſo will I tear, and deliver my people out of your hand, and they ſhall be no more in your hand to be hunted, and [r] ye ſhall know that I am the LORD. 22. Becauſe with lies ye have made the heart of the righteous ſad, whom I have not made ſad; and [s] ſtrengthned the hands of the wicked, that he ſhould not return from his wicked way, § by [t] promiſing him life: 23. Therefore [u] ye ſhall ſee no more vanity, nor divine divinations, for I will deliver my people out of your hand, [x] and ye ſhall know that I am the LORD.

v. 17—23. As women, as well as men, had been favoured with divine revelation, there were ſuch now who pretended to inſpiration, and, actuated by the ſame evil ſpirit, joined the falſe prophets in their lies. Againſt theſe the prophet is commanded to ſet his face. Impudent ſinners need a bold reprover.

1. The crimes of the falſe propheteſſes are charged upon them.

(1.) They publiſhed the fictitious viſions of their own hearts, yet ſolemnly avouched God's authority to give weight to their lies. And too many hearkened to them, hoping or fearing according to their word. Note, (1.) Men eaſily believe what they wiſh true. (2.) When ſinners deſire to be flattered, and hate to be reproved, it is juſt in God to give them up to deluders.

(2.) They were vilely mercenary. They meant to fleece the deluded people; and impiouſly proſtituted God's ſacred name to gain credit to their predictions: even for a morſel of bread ready to tranſgreſs, and to invent a lying anſwer, ſuch as would pleaſe thoſe who conſulted them. Note, (1.) Nothing is more incompatible with a miſſion from God than the love of filthy lucre. (2.) Of all impiety that is chief, to abuſe the ſacred name of God and religion to ſerve worldly ends and purpoſes.

(3.) They uſed every art to enſnare men's ſouls, and hunt them into their net. Sometimes ſoothing them with pleaſing dreams, ſewing pillows to all arm-holes, or elbows, and making kerchiefs upon the head of every ſtature; intimating thereby how ſecurely they might reſt, and fear no enemy to ſtrip off their ornaments; engaging to ſave the ſouls alive whom God had doomed to die, and hardening thus the wicked in his impenitence by promiſing him life, when death temporal and eternal awaited him. On the other hand, ſometimes they threatened, denouncing deſtruction on thoſe whom God had determined to ſave, and ſeeking to diſcourage the righteous, and make their hearts ſad whom God had not made ſad. And this ſome refer particularly to the captives, whom they ſeverely cenſured for yielding to the Chaldeans, whilſt they promiſed thoſe who rebelled againſt Nebuchadnezzar all ſucceſs and proſperity. Note, (1.) Nothing ſtrengthens the hands of the wicked ſo much as to be bolſtered up with hopes that they may be ſaved though they perſiſt in their ſins. (2.) They who grieve the hearts of God's people, and ſeek to diſcourage them, ſhall ſeverely ſuffer for it.

2. God threatens them with deſerved wrath. He expoſtulates with them on the daring impiety of their conduct, v. 18. and denounces a fearful wo upon them. They ſhall be ſhortly ſilenced and confounded, when by the event their lies ſhould be detected; or they ſhould miſerably periſh in the ſiege, v. 23. and God will reſcue his poor people whom they hunted into their toils, tear off the pillows and kerchiefs, diſcover their deluſions, expoſe them to contempt, and make them more abhorred than ever they had been loved or feared; and hereby he will not only deliver his people from their ſnares, but eminently magnify his own great name. Note, (1.) It is an unſpeakable mercy when God ſaves his people from thoſe who ſought to tyrannize over their conſciences. (2.) God will not ſuffer his choſen to be led away by the deluſions of falſe teachers, who, by preaching to them human ſufficiency, man's free will, univerſal ſalvation, &c. puff them up in pride, and harden them in ſin; but will bring them to the knowledge of his bleſſed Self, comfort their dejected hearts with the views of his free grace and rich ſalvation, and, ſhedding abroad his love in their ſouls, make them both happy and holy.

CHAP. XIV.

1. The elders of Iſrael come to hear and enquire of the prophet, but becauſe hypocritical; they meet with a rebuke inſtead of acceptance, ver. 1—5. and are called upon to repent and reform, elſe it is at their peril to enquire of God, ver. 6—11. 2. Though Noah, Daniel, and Job ſhould pray for this people, yet becauſe the decree is gone forth, their prayers ſhould not be anſwered, ver. 12—21. And yet it is promiſed in the cloſe that a remnant ſhall eſcape, ver. 22, 23.

1. THEN [a] came certain of the elders of Iſrael unto me, and ſat before me. 2. And the word of the LORD came unto me ſaying, 3. Son of man, theſe men have ſet up their idols in their heart, and put the ſtumbling-block of their iniquity before their face: [b] ſhould I be enquired of at all by them? 4. Therefore ſpeak unto them, and ſay unto them, Thus ſaith the LORD God, Every man of the houſe of Iſrael that ſetteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the ſtumbling-block of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to the prophet, [c] I the LORD will anſwer him that cometh, according to the multitude of his idols, 5. That I may take the houſe of Iſrael in their own heart, becauſe they are all eſtranged from me through their idols. 6. ¶ Therefore ſay unto the houſe of Iſrael, Thus ſaith the LORD God, Repent and turn † yourſelves from your idols, and turn away your faces from all your abominations. 7. For every one of the houſe of Iſrael, or of the ſtranger that ſojourneth in Iſrael, which [d] ſeparateth himſelf from me, and ſetteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the ſtumbling-block of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to a prophet to enquire of him concerning me: I the LORD will anſwer him by myſelf. 8. And [e] I will ſet my face againſt that man, and will make him [f] a ſign and a proverb, and I will cut him off from the midſt of my people, and [g] ye ſhall know that I am the LORD. 9. And if the prophet be deceived when he has ſpoken a thing, [h] I the LORD have deceived that prophet, and I will ſtretch out my hand upon him, and will deſtroy him from the midſt of my people Iſrael. 10. And they ſhall bear the puniſhment of their iniquity, the puniſhment of the prophet ſhall be even as the puniſhment of him that ſeeketh unto him: 11. That the houſe of Iſrael may go no more aſtray from me, neither be polluted any more with all their tranſgreſſions: [i] but that they may be my people, and I may be their God, ſaith the LORD God.

v. 1—11. We have here,

1. Certain of the elders of Iſrael waiting on the prophet with apparent concern about their ſouls, and ſollicitude to hear and receive his admonitions. Whether they were of the captivity, or ſome who had come on buſineſs from Jeruſalem to Babylon, is uncertain. Note, The face of devotion and ſeriouſneſs is often put on by thoſe, who are utterly deſtitute of the power of godlineſs.

2. God let the prophet know what manner of men theſe were, whoſe hearts ſo ill correſponded with their exteriors. They have ſet up their idols in their heart, or cauſed them to aſcend upon their heart; their affections were placed upon them, their hearts the throne of idolatry; and though at a diſtance from their images, ſtill ſlaves to theſe vanities; ſuch an aſcendant had they over them. They put the ſtumbling-block of their iniquity before their face, and fall down to the ſtock and ſtone: and ſhould ſuch dare enquire of God? what impious effrontery! what anſwer can be expected, but wrath to the uttermoſt. Note, (1.) Heart idols are equally abominable with thoſe that are the work of men's hands; and covetouſneſs, ſelf-love, &c. as much idolatry as the bowing down to gods of gold or ſilver. (2.) They who put the ſtumbling-block of their iniquity before them, can expect nothing but to fall into the pit of deſtruction.

3. The Lord gives him an anſwer for them. With God there is no reſpect of perſons; whoever draws near to him in hypocriſy, ſhall bear his burden, and receive an anſwer according to the multitude of his idols; he will give them up to the deluſions they have choſen, and puniſh them according to their crimes. That I may take the houſe of Iſrael in their own heart, expoſing their ſin and folly, and bringing them to deſerved ſhame and puniſhment, becauſe they are all eſtranged from me through their idols, alienated from the ſervice and worſhip of God by their attachment to theſe abominations. Note, Our own hearts are our great plague and ſnare; they ſeduce us from God to indulge ſome favourite luſt, the idol within, and in ſpite of the remonſtrances of God's word, and our own conſciences, hurry us on to our ruin.

4. A ſolemn warning is given them to repent, on pain of eternal perdition; be they native Iſraelites, or ſojourners among them, they have the ſame call; they muſt turn from their idols, and from all their abominations; elſe, if they continued to ſeparate themſelves from God in this hated ſervice, and walked in theſe iniquities, God will ſpeak to them in terrible wrath, confound that daring impiety and hypocriſy which leads them to the prophet, pretending to conſult him, v. 7. will make them ſpectacles of horror, cut them off by ſudden death, and by theſe monuments of vengeance teach others to tremble, and fear to offend that God who is a conſuming fire. Note, (1.) The hypocrite ſhall be detected and confounded, often in this world, at fartheſt in a judgment day. (2.) Of all ſinners, the hypocrites doom will be moſt terrible, Mat. xxiv. 51.

5. The doom of the falſe prophets is read. The deceiver and the deceived ſhall periſh together. Since the people chuſe their own deluſions, God will give up the prophets they conſulted to a lying ſpirit, 1 Kings xxii. 22, 23. and in juſt judgment ſuffer them to be deceived by the devil. He will ſtretch out his avenging arm, and utterly deſtroy them from the midſt of the people, v. 9. and both the falſe prophet, and they who ſeek to him, ſhall bear the puniſhment of their iniquity, dreadful as their aggravated provocations. Myſterious are the ways of God; and though we are often loſt in our enquiries why he permits the evil we ſee, the day will come when all his diſpenſations will be proved, beyond contradiction, to be altogether righteous and true.

6. The judgments executed on the wicked will be a warning to many of the houſe of Iſrael, that they go no more aſtray, beholding the dire effects which ariſe from ſuch departures from God, and made wiſe by the ſufferings of others: neither be polluted with all their tranſgreſſions, which would neceſſarily involve them in the ſame ruin, but on the contrary learn to love and ſerve the bleſſed God, that they may be my people, approving their fidelity, and I may be their God, ſaith the Lord God, bleſſing them with all good things here, and their portion and exceeding great reward hereafter. Note, (1.) Others puniſhments ſhould deter us from their iniquities. (2.) Sin defiles the ſoul, and renders it odious in the eyes of a holy God. (3.) They who approve themſelves to God as his people, ſhall find the preſent and eternal advantages of his love and favour.

12. ¶ The word of the LORD came again to me, ſaying, 13. Son of man, when the land ſinneth againſt me by treſpaſſing grievouſly, then will I ſtretch out mine hand upon it, and [k] will break the ſtaff of the bread thereof, and will ſend famine upon it, and will cut off man and beaſt from it. 14. [l] Though theſe three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job were in it, they ſhould deliver but their own ſouls [m] by their righteouſneſs, ſaith the LORD God. 15. ¶ If I cauſe [n] noiſome beaſts to paſs through the land, and they † ſpoil it, ſo that it be deſolate, that no man may paſs through becauſe of the beaſts: 16. Though theſe three men were ‡ in it, as I live, ſaith the LORD God, they ſhall deliver neither ſons nor daughters; they only ſhall be delivered, but the land ſhall be deſolate. 17. ¶ Or if I bring [o] a ſword upon that land, and ſay, Sword, go through the land: ſo that I cut off man and beaſt from it: 18. Though theſe three men were in it, as I live, ſaith the LORD God, they ſhall deliver neither ſons nor daughters, but they only ſhall be delivered themſelves. 19. ¶ Or if I ſend a peſtilence into that land, and [p] pour out my fury upon it in blood, to cut off from it man and beaſt: 20. Though Noah, Daniel, and Job were in it, as I live, ſaith the LORD God, they ſhall deliver neither ſon nor daughter, [q] they ſhall but deliver their own ſouls by their righteouſneſs. 21. For thus ſaith the LORD God, How much more when [r] I ſend my four ſore judgments upon Jeruſalem, the ſword, and the famine, and the noiſome beaſt, and the peſtilence, to cut off from it man and beaſt? 22. ¶ Yet behold, therein [s] ſhall be left a remnant that ſhall be brought forth, both ſons and daughters: behold, they ſhall come forth unto you, and ye ſhall ſee their way, and their doings: and ye ſhall be comforted concerning the evil that I have brought upon Jeruſalem, even concerning all that I have brought upon it. 23. And they ſhall comfort you when ye ſee their ways and their doings: and ye ſhall know that [t] I have not done without cauſe, all that I have done in it, ſaith the LORD God.

v. 12—23. We have here,

1. The heavy judgments threatned on a guilty land. When the meaſure of their ſins is full, wrath to the uttermoſt will overtake them. Four ſore plagues are here mentioned; famine, when the ſtaff of bread is broken, and man and beaſt periſh with hunger. Wild beaſts, ſo numerous and ravenous, that all travelling muſt be unſafe, and the land deſerted and deſolate. The ſword, commiſſioned of God to go through the land, and conſume what the famine hath left; for whatever hand wields the ſword, God gives it the direction, and appoints it where to fall. Peſtilence, that depopulates the country, and puts a taint in the blood incurably fatal. Theſe are the arrows bent againſt wicked nations; and when his own people offend, God will ſhake his ſcourge over them alſo.

2. All interceſſion is vain when the decree is gone forth. Though Noah, Job, and Daniel joined as advocates, their piety and prayers could be of no avail. They could not deliver a ſon or daughter, their own ſouls only ſhould be given them for a prey. The mention of Job, with Noah and Daniel, ſeems ſtrongly to prove that he really lived, and anſwered the character given him in the book which bears his name, eminent for patience as Noah for his integrity, when all fleſh had corrupted their ways; and Daniel, though a young man, had already appeared diſtinguiſhed by his wiſdom, humility, piety, zeal, and prayer. Perhaps ſome few remained who reſembled theſe holy men, and for their ſake a hope might be entertained, that Jeruſalem would yet be ſpared, as Sodom might have been, if but ten righteous had been found in it. Indeed if any thing could have averted the threatned wrath, theſe advocates had prevailed; but her time is come, the meaſure of her guilt is full, her ruin determined, and the wrath denounced inexorable. Note, (1.) In the worſt of times, ſome few eminent ſaints are found. (2.) Though they may not prevail to avert the ruin of their land, themſelves ſhall be ſaved amidſt the general deſolations, ſometimes exempted from the common calamity, and wonderfully preſerved: at leaſt, if they ſuffer with others, they ſhall enjoy divine conſolations; and whatever becomes of their bodies, their ſouls are ſafe for eternity.

3. A remnant is reſerved from the general ruin. Brought forth out of Jeruſalem to join their brethren in captivity, and ye ſhall ſee their way and their doings; either behold their penitent return to God, humbled and converted by the judgments they have ſuffered, or their hardened wickedneſs, which would convince the captives of the righteous judgment of God upon them; and ye ſhall be comforted concerning all the evil I have brought upon Jeruſalem; pleaſed to ſee the bleſſed effects wrought thereby, if it led the ſufferers to repentance; or ſatisfied in the juſtice of God in his ſeverity upon ſuch tranſgreſſors: and they ſhall comfort you, when ye ſee their way and their doings; either it would delight them to ſee the gracious ſymptoms of their converſion, or if they perſiſted in their abominations, they would no longer grieve for their ſufferings, but juſtify God in them; and ye ſhall know that I have not done without cauſe, all that I have done in it, ſaith the Lord, but that the Lord in all his diſpenſations is righteous, juſt, and good. Note, (1.) Nothing will hereafter be matter of greater thankfulneſs to God's people, than thoſe bittereſt afflictions here which have contributed to their ſouls good. (2.) God will be glorified in all his works, and his ſaints will adore and delight in them; even the puniſhment of the wicked ſhall redound to his honour, and miniſter matter for their praiſes.

CHAP. XV.

The deſtruction of Jeruſalem is foretold, under the ſimilitude of a vine caſt into the fire. We have, 1. The uſeleſſneſs of a withered or barren vine, ver. 1—5. 2. The dreadful application of it to Jeruſalem, ver. 6—1.

1. AND the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, what is the vine-tree more than any tree, or than a branch which is among the trees of the foreſt? 3. Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any veſſel thereon? 4. Behold, [a] it is caſt into the fire for fuel; the fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the midſt of it is burnt: † is it meet for any work? 5. Behold, when it was whole it was meet for no work: how much leſs ſhall it be meet yet for any work, when the fire hath devoured it, and it is burned? 6. ¶ Therefore thus ſaith the LORD God, As the vine-tree among the trees of the foreſt, which I have given to the fire for fuel, ſo will I give the inhabitants of Jeruſalem. 7. And [b] I will ſet my face againſt them, they ſhall go out from one fire, [c] and another fire ſhall devour them: [d] and ye ſhall know that I am the LORD, when I ſet my face againſt them. 8. And I will make the land deſolate, becauſe they have ‡ committed a treſpaſs, ſaith the LORD God.

v. 1—8. Jeruſalem, in its beauty, was the joy of the whole earth; but now that ſin hath defiled it, the flames are kindling to devour her palaces.

1. She is compared to a wild and barren vine, the moſt unprofitable and uſeleſs tree in the foreſt, unfit for any work, and only ſuited for fuel to the fire. And if when flouriſhing it was not fit for any ſervice, how much leſs when reduced to aſhes, v. 5.

2. The application of this ſimilitude to Jeruſalem follows, v. 6. This city, with the inhabitants thereof, as the unprofitable vine, is doomed to the flames, becauſe of their great provocations, v. 8. God's wrath is kindled, and his face, as an implacable enemy, ſet againſt them; they were wholly unprofitable, brought him no glory: yea, noxious as the plants of a wild vine, therefore their land ſhall be deſolate, the fire devour them, and one calamity on another purſue them, till they are utterly conſumed, and God terribly made known to them, in the judgments he would execute upon them. Note, Wrath purſues ſinners, till it is perfected in the everlaſting burnings.

CHAP. XVI.

In this long diſcourſe is ſet forth, 1. The deſpicable and deplorable beginnings of the Jewiſh church and nation, ver. 3—5. 2. The many honours and favours God had beſtowed upon them, ver. 6—14. 3. Their treacherous and ungrateful departures from him to idolatry, repreſented by the moſt impudent whoredom, ver. 15—34. 4. A threatning of terrible judgments for this ſin, ver. 35—43. 5. An aggravation both of their ſin and of their puniſhment, by comparing them with Sodom and Samaria, ver. 44—59. 6. A promiſe of mercy to a penitent remnant, ver. 60—63.

1. AGAIN the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, cauſe Jeruſalem to know her abominations, 3. And ſay, Thus ſaith the LORD God unto Jeruſalem, [a] Thy birth, and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan, [b] thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite. 4. And as for thy nativity [c] in the day thou waſt born, thy navel was not cut, neither waſt thou waſhed in water † to ſupple thee: thou waſt not ſalted at all, nor ſwaddled at all. 5. v. 1—5. Ezekiel hath a commiſſion here given him to prophecy againſt Jeruſalem. Abominations great and aggravated were in her, and he muſt cauſe her to know them; at leaſt leave her and the inhabitants inexcuſable if they rejected the admonition. And as nothing is more hateful than ingratitude, he muſt remind them of their baſe original and wretched ſtate, when God was pleaſed to diſtinguiſh them with his favours, and upbraid them with their infamous unfaithfulneſs.

1. They were in their original vile and deſpicable. Thy birth, and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; there Abraham ſojourned, and the patriarchs and the Jewiſh nation ſeemed as if ſprung from thence; whilſt their deſcendants, in their temper and manners, copied too cloſely after the Canaanites, whoſe land they poſſeſſed. Thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite; not literally, for Abraham and Sarah were Chaldeans, but they were before their call idolaters like them, and by dwelling afterwards among them, were reckoned as natives of the ſoil, and in their practices the Jewiſh people imitated theſe wicked nations,

2. They were as a miſerable helpleſs infant, abandoned the moment it was born, expoſed in its blood without a friendly hand to waſh, ſupple, or ſwaddle the wretched babe, or a compaſſionate eye to pity it: nay, contrariwiſe, loathed and abhorred; which ſeems to refer to the ſtate of the Jewiſh people in Egypt, where their infants were expoſed, themſelves hated, oppreſſed, and ready to periſh, if God's compaſſions had not interpoſed to reſcue them from inſtant deſtruction; and what is ſaid of them, may be applied with a beautiful propriety to all the Iſrael of God. By nature corrupt and born in ſin, loathſome in the eyes of God, none able or willing to waſh away their guilt, expoſed to unavoidable ruin, helpleſs and hopeleſs but for the interpoſition of divine grace.

6. ¶ And when I paſſed by thee, and ſaw thee † polluted in thine own blood, I ſaid unto thee when thou waſt in thy blood, Live; yea, [d] I ſaid unto thee when thou waſt in thy blood, Live. 7. [e] I have ‡ cauſed thee to multiply as the bud of the field, and thou haſt increaſed and waxen great, and thou art come to ‖ excellent ornaments: thy breaſts are faſhioned, and thine hair is grown, whereas thou waſt naked and bare. 8. Now when I paſſed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold, thy time was the time of § love, and [f] I ſpread my ſkirt over thee, and covered thy nakedneſs: yea, I ſware unto thee, and entred into a covenant with thee, ſaith the LORD God, and [g] thou becameſt mine. 9. Then waſhed I thee with water; yea, [h] I throughly waſhed away thy † blood from thee, and [i] I anointed thee with oil. 10. I clothed thee alſo with broidered work, and ſhod thee with badgers ſkin, and I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with ſilk. 11. I decked thee alſo with ornaments, and [k] I put bracelets upon thine hands, and [l] a chain upon thy neck. 12. And I put a jewel on thy ‡ forehead, and ear-rings in thine ears, and a beautiful crown upon thine head. 13. Thus waſt thou decked with gold and ſilver, and thy raiment was of fine linen, and ſilk, and broidered work; thou didſt eat fine flour, and honey, and oil: and thou waſt exceeding beautiful, and thou didſt proſper into a kingdom. 14. And thy renown went forth among the heathen for thy beauty: for it was perfect through my comelineſs [m] which I had put upon thee, ſaith the LORD God.

v. 6—14. Eminently great and diſtinguiſhed were the favours God ſhewed this forlorn infant, the figure of the Jewiſh nation.

1. God reſcued them from ruin. He ſaw them lying in their blood, and ſaid unto them, Live; delivering them from the bondage of Egypt when they were ready to periſh; and the like he doth for all his ſpiritual Iſrael. He ſees their miſery, guilt, and helpleſſneſs; paſſes by them, in conſequence of his eternal counſels of grace; ſpeaks the life-giving word; opens the fountain for ſin and for uncleanneſs in a Saviour's ſide; waſhes them from all their defilement; implants the principle of ſpiritual life, which ſhall endure to eternity.

2. He multiplied them, ſo that they grew up as an infant to woman's ſtature, and became marriageable; adorned them as a bride, with jewels, the ſpoil of the Egyptians, v. 7. waſhed and anointed them, not only from the reproach of ſervitude, but arrayed them with gorgeous apparel, gave them abundance of good things, erected them into a great kingdom, and ſet up his ſanctuary among them, v. 9—13. and this may be applied to the gifts and graces of God's ſpirit, wherewith he beautifies the ſouls of the redeemed; and to the righteouſneſs of the Redeemer, in which arrayed, his people appear glorious in the eyes of the holy God.

3. He loved them, and eſpouſed them to himſelf in an everlaſting covenant. He ſpread his ſkirt over them, as their huſband and protector; and as a wife of youth, ſo warmly and tenderly did he regard them: ſo that thy time was a time of love; he not only dealt with them in a way of ſingular affection, but they alſo profeſſed themſelves wholly his, to love, enjoy, obey him. And at Sinai the marriage-contract might be ſaid to be ſigned, God there engaging to be their God, and they in return ſolemnly pledging their fidelity to him. Note, (1.) When God firſt manifeſts his grace to the miſerable ſinner, and plucking him as a brand from the belly of hell, ſhews him his deadly guilt cancelled by redeeming love, and heaven open to receive him; that time is emphatically a time of love, as God's people have proved by delightful experience. (2.) If God be ours in a covenant of promiſe, confirmed by an oath for our greater conſolation, we are bound by every tie of love and duty to approve our fidelity before him. (3.) The ſoul that is ſheltered under the ſkirt of divine protection, is ſafe from the fear of evil.

4. As he made them great by his favour, he raiſed their fame high among the nations around them, v. 14. They ſaw and admired their beauty; and in the happy days of David and Solomon, nothing ſeemed wanting to render the national happineſs compleat; when without they were revered and honoured, and within enjoyed peace and plenty, the upright adminiſtration of juſtice, and the moſt abundant means of grace: ſuch perfect comelineſs had God put on them. Note, (1.) Every true Iſraelite is perfect and compleat in the righteouſneſs of his Redeemer. (2.) All his comelineſs is from God's gift, and muſt be acknowledged to his glory: we have nothing we have not received.

15. ¶ But thou didſt truſt in thine own beauty, and [n] playedſt the harlot becauſe of thy renown, and pouredſt out thy fornications on every one that paſſed by: his it was. 16. And [o] of thy garments thou didſt take, and deckedſt thy high places with divers colours, and playedſt the harlot thereupon: the like things ſhall not come, neither ſhall it be ſo. 17. [p] Thou haſt alſo taken thy fair jewels of my gold and of my ſilver, which I had given thee, and madeſt to thyſelf images † of men, and didſt commit whoredom with them. 18. And tookeſt thy broidered garments, and coveredſt them:
and thou haſt ſet mine oil and mine incenſe before them.
19. My meat alſo which I gave thee, fine flour, and oil, and honey wherewith I fed thee, thou haſt even ſet it before them for ‡ a ſweet ſavour: and thus it was, ſaith the LORD God. 20. Moreover, [q] thou haſt taken thy ſons and thy daughters, whom thou haſt born unto me, and theſe thou haſt ſacrificed unto them, to be devoured:
is this of thy whoredoms a ſmall matter, 21.
That thou haſt ſlain my children, and delivered them to cauſe them to paſs through the fire for them? 22.
And in all thy abominations and thy whoredoms thou haſt not remembred the days of thy youth, [r] when thou waſt naked and bare, and [s] waſt polluted in thy blood.
23. And it came to paſs after all thy wickedneſs ([t] wo, wo unto thee, ſaith the LORD God) 24. That [u] thou haſt alſo built unto thee ‖ an eminent place, and [x] haſt haſt built thy high place at every head of the way, and haſt made thy beauty to be abhorred, and haſt opened thy feet to every one that paſſed by, and multiplied thy whoredoms. 26. Thou haſt alſo committed fornication [y] with the Egyptians thy neighbours, great of fleſh, and [z] haſt increaſed thy whoredoms, to provoke me to anger. 27. Behold therefore, I have ſtretched out my hand over thee, and have diminiſhed thine ordinary food, and delivered thee unto the will of them that hate thee, [a] the daughters of the Philiſtines which are aſhamed of thy lewd way. 28. [b] Thou haſt played the whore with the Aſſyrians, becauſe thou waſt unſatiable:

yea, thou haſt played the harlot with them, and yet couldſt not be ſatisfied. 29. Thou haſt moreover multiplied thy fornication in the land of Canaan
[c] unto Chaldea, and yet thou waſt not ſatisfied herewith.
30. How weak is thine heart, ſaith the LORD God, ſeeing thou doſt all theſe things, the work of an imperious whoriſh woman? 31. In that [d] thou buildeſt thine eminent place in the head of every way, and makeſt thine high place in every ſtreet, and haſt not been as an harlot (in that thou ſcorneſt hire.) 32. But as a wife that committeth adultery, which taketh ſtrangers inſtead of her huſband. 33. They give gifts to all whores, but [e] thou giveſt thy gifts to all thy lovers, and § hireſt them that they may come unto thee on every ſide for thy whoredom. 34. And the contrary is in thee from other women in thy whoredoms, whereas none followeth thee to commit whoredoms: and in that thou giveſt a reward, and no reward is given unto thee; therefore thou art contrary.

§ Heb. Bribeſt.

v. 15—34. The peculiar favours which the Jewiſh people had received, exceedingly aggravated the guilt of their apoſtacy.

1. They grew proud of their diſtinguiſhed mercies, forgot their original meanneſs, v. 22. truſted on their beauty, and forſook the rock of their ſalvation to play the harlot with dumb idols, v. 15. Note, (1.) The pride of beauty hath often proved the bane of its poſſeſſor. (2.) Forgetfulneſs of God and ourſelves, is at the bottom of all our ſinful departures from him.

2. They ran into the groſſeſt idolatry. Thou pouredſt out thy fornications on every one that paſſed by; his it was: as a common ſtrumpet proſtitutes herſelf to every paſſenger, ſo ready were they to embrace every new deity that offered, multiplying their whoredoms, ver. 25. beyond all other nations. Laviſh on theſe wretched paramours, their high places, like the harlot's bed, were decked with diverſe colours, and the jewels God had given them employed to faſhion and adorn their idols. The like things ſhall not come, neither ſhall it be ſo, no ſuch ſcandalous idolatry ever was, or ſhall be practiſed again, v. 16, 17. Before the images, the work of their own hands, they laviſhed their incenſe and offerings, counting nothing too much to ſpend in the gratification of their luſts, v. 18. Thus it was, ſaith the Lord God, open, avowed, and notorious, v. 19. And as if all the reſt had not been enough, their very children, thoſe deareſt gifts of God, ſhocking to relate, they had ſacrificed to theſe hated deities: inhuman, barbarous, unnatural; and robbing God of the property he claimed in them. They are my children, ſaith he, v. 21. not only as he had given them life and being, but as having adopted them in a peculiar covenant to be his people. Is this of thy whoredoms a ſmall matter? ver. 20. Some, perhaps, affected to treat them as ſuch, though ſo heinous and terrible; or the ſenſe is, their other wickedneſs was great, but this the ſummit of iniquity. With open effrontery, as a hardned whore, whoſe forehead is braſs, and knows no ſhame, ſo had they built an eminent place, or a brothel, had ſet up their idol temples and altars in every ſtreet, and in the highway, ſitting there as the harlot expoſed, v. 25. to inflame the paſſers by, and draw them in to commit adultery and idolatry; making their beauty abhorred of God and all good men; yea, of the very heathen, as a ſtrumpet deſpicable and hated by thoſe to whom ſhe hath proſtituted herſelf. And her weakneſs herein appeared great as her wickedneſs, v. 30. therefore a fearful wo is denounced againſt her, v. 23. the dreadful effects of which will be ſeen in time and in eternity. Note, (1.) Our gold and ſilver are not our own, but God's, and to him we are accountable for the uſe we make of them. (2.) The laviſhneſs of idolaters ſhould ſhame the niggardlineſs of the worſhippers of the true God. (3.) They who bring up their children in pride and vanity, and by their ill examples encourage them in ſin, are more grievouſly guilty than even theſe idolaters: the one only murdered their bodies; the others alſo murder their ſouls, and ſacrifice them to devils. (4.) Many make light of ſin now as a ſmall matter, but the puniſhment of it will be found inſupportably heavy. (5.) Wickedneſs and weakneſs are inſeparably connected. None but fools could barter the momentary pleaſures of ſin for the eternal torments of hell.

3. There were peculiar circumſtances attending their ſins, which rendered them exceedingly aggravated.

(1.) Their inſatiable luſt after new gods, v. 28. ever doting on the idols of thoſe nations from whom they had ſuffered moſt grievouſly. They committed fornication with the Egyptians, Aſſyrians, and Canaanites; and nothing ſeemed too far fetched, or too dearly bought, ſo great was their rage for idolatry; and after all they could not be ſatisfied, but ſtill craved for more. Note, (1.) Lawleſs luſt is ever tormenting, craving, inſatiate. (2.) They who forſake God can never find abiding ſatisfaction in any thing beſide.

(2.) Their unhumbled obſtinacy under the rebukes God had given them, v. 27. His heavy hand had been again and again laid on them: he would have brought them to repentance under his chaſtiſements. The famine waſted them; the Philiſtines ravaged their country, 2 Chron. xxviii. 18, 19. and even theſe idolaters were aſhamed of the inconſtancy of the Jewiſh people in ſo often changing their gods: yet every correction left them ſtill hardened, and they ſinned yet more and more. Note, When neither mercies draw, nor corrections bend, the caſe ſeems utterly deſperate.

(3.) Their diverſity from all other people, v. 31—34. Other harlots proſtituted themſelves for hire, and gained ſomething by their wickedneſs; but they, as a ſhameleſs adultereſs, not for want, but merely for lewdneſs ſake, not only courted but hired their lovers at a vaſt expence, contracting alliances with the Aſſyrians and Egyptians, 2 Kings xvi. 8. Iſa. xxx. 6, 7. ſolliciting their friendſhip, and hiring their gods for protectors.

35. ¶ Wherefore, O [f] harlot, hear the word of the LORD. 36. Thus ſaith the LORD God, Becauſe thy filthineſs was poured out, and thy nakedneſs diſcovered through thy whoredoms with thy lovers, and with all the idols of thy abominations, and by the blood of thy children, which thou didſt give unto them; 37. Behold therefore, [g] I will gather all thy lovers, with whom thou haſt taken pleaſure, and all them that thou haſt loved, with all them that thou haſt hated: I will even gather them round about againſt thee, and will diſcover thy nakedneſs unto them, that they may ſee all thy nakedneſs. 38. And I will judge thee, † as [h] women that break wedlock, and ſhed blood, are judged, and I will give thee blood in [i] fury and jealouſy. 39. And I will alſo give thee into their hand, and they ſhall throw down [k] thine eminent place, and ſhall break down thy high places: they ſhall [l] ſtrip thee alſo of thy clothes, and ſhall take thy fair jewels, and leave [m] thee naked and bare. 40. They ſhall alſo bring up a company againſt thee, and [n] they ſhall ſtone thee with ſtones, and thruſt thee through with their ſwords. 41. And [o] they ſhall burn thine houſes with fire, and execute judgments upon thee in the ſight of many women: and I will cauſe thee to ceaſe from playing the harlot, and thou alſo ſhalt give no hire any more. 42. So [p] will I make my fury towards thee to reſt, and my jealouſy ſhall depart from thee, and I will be quiet, and will be no more angry. 43. Becauſe [q] thou haſt not remembred the days of thy youth, but haſt fretted me in all theſe things; behold therefore, [r] I alſo will recompenſe thy way upon thine head, ſaith the LORD God, and thou ſhalt not commit this lewdneſs, above all thine abominations.

v. 35—43. It cannot be thought poſſible ſuch a guilty land ſhould long be ſpared: God's juſtice requires vengeance to be executed on ſuch a nation as this.

1. Her crimes are recited, that God may appear righteous in his judgments. Her filthy idolatries; the blood of murdered infants; her ſhameleſs lewdneſs; her baſe ingratitude; her long repeated provocations, which God ſpeaks of as having grieved and fretted him to behold, v. 43. theſe were her ſins, too flagrant to be denied, and too hainous to admit of excuſe.

2. Sentence is pronounced upon her. Murder and adultery were capital crimes, and therefore her judgment is an ignominious death. Both thoſe who loved and they who hated her will be ſpectators of her fall; yea, they ſhall be made the executioners of vengeance upon her, ſhall ſtrip her of all her wealth and ornaments, and leave her naked to her ſhame, v. 37. As a jealous huſband, and as the avenger of blood, God will puniſh her, v. 38. ſhe ſhall be ſtoned, and thruſt through with ſwords, when the Chaldean army battered down the walls of Jeruſalem, maſſacred the inhabitants, deſtroyed the high places, and burnt the city with fire. Thus God will recompenſe her according to her deſerts, v. 43. and make her a public example to other women, to the nations around, who, ſeeing her plagues, might be deterred from her ſins, v. 41. Note, (1.) God juſtly makes thoſe our tormentors to whom we have been tempters. (2.) Whatever ſinners ſuffer, it is no more than their juſt deſert. (3.) The judgments inflicted on others ſhould warn us againſt their wicked ways.

3. When God hath deſtroyed their idolatry, then he will reſt from his fury; his jealouſy ſhall depart, and the effects of his anger be removed. The captivity cured the Jews effectually of all inclination to idolatry, and then the controverſy ceaſed, and God reſtored them again to their own land. Though ſome underſtand this of their utter ruin and deſtruction, when they ſhould no more be able to play the harlot, and when God, having executed his wrath upon them, he would reſt ſatisfied in the righteous doom under which they periſhed, v. 42. Note, Sin is at the root of all God's controverſies with us: when the cauſe is removed the effect will ceaſe.

44. ¶ Behold, every one that uſeth proverbs, ſhall uſe this proverb againſt thee, ſaying, As is the mother, ſo is her daughter. 45. Thou art thy mother's daughter, that lotheth her huſband and her children, and thou art the ſiſter of thy ſiſters, which lothed their huſbands and their children: [s] your mother was an Hittite, and your father an Amorite. 46. And thine † elder ſiſter is Samaria, ſhe and her daughters that dwell at thy left hand: [t] and ‡ thy younger ſiſter that dwelleth at thy right hand, is Sodom and her daughters. 47. Yet haſt thou not walked after their ways, nor done after their abominations: but as if that were a very little thing, thou waſt corrupted more than they in all thy ways. 48. As I live, ſaith the LORD God, [u] Sodom thy ſiſter hath not done, ſhe nor her daughters, as thou haſt done, thou and thy daughters. 49. Behold, this was the iniquity of thy ſiſter Sodom, pride, [x] fulneſs of bread, and abundance of idleneſs was in her and in her daughters, neither did ſhe ſtrengthen the hand of the poor and needy. 50. And they were haughty, and [y] committed abomination before me: therefore [z] I took them away as I ſaw good. 51. Neither hath Samaria committed half of thy ſins; but thou haſt multiplied thine abominations more than they, and [a] haſt juſtified thy ſiſters in all thine abominations which thou haſt done. 52. Thou alſo which haſt judged thy ſiſters, bear thine own ſhame for thy ſins that thou haſt committed more abominable than they: they are more righteous than thou: yea, be thou confounded alſo, and bear thy ſhame, in that thou haſt juſtified thy ſiſters. 53. [b] When I ſhall bring again thy captivity, [c] the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midſt of them: 54. That thou mayſt [d] bear thine own ſhame, and mayſt be confounded in all that thou haſt done, in that [e] thou art a comfort unto them. 55. When thy ſiſters, Sodom and her daughters, ſhall return to their former eſtate, and Samaria and her daughters ſhall return to their former eſtate, then thou and thy daughters ſhall return to your former eſtate. 56. For thy ſiſter Sodom was not mentioned by thy mouth in the day of thy ‖ pride: 57. Before thy wickedneſs was diſcovered, as at the time of thy [f] reproach of the daughters of § Syria, and all that are round about her, [g] the daughters of the Philiſtines, which † deſpiſe thee round about. 58. [h] Thou haſt born thy lewdneſs, and thine abominations, ſaith the LORD. 59. v. 44—59. The wickedneſs of the Jewiſh people is here farther deſcribed by compariſon with other nations.

1. They were as bad as the Canaanites, whom the Lord had caſt out before them. They who uſe proverbs, ſhall ſay, As is the mother, ſo is the daughter; they exactly copied the manners of theſe nations, and ſeemed rather ſprung from an Hittite and Amorite, than from Abraham and Sarah. They bore the true character of an adultreſs, lothing her huſband and children, ſo did they forſake God their huſband for idols, and ſacrifice their children to them, as the Canaanites had done before them, though ſo awfully warned againſt their wicked ways, Lev. xviii. 27, 28.

2. They not only reſembled, but exceeded the wickedneſs of Sodom and Samaria. Thou art the ſiſter of thy ſiſters, like them in all their abominations, apoſtate from God, and devoted to the moſt ſhocking idolatry. Samaria, at the left hand, towards the north, is called the elder, or greater ſiſter, becauſe the metropolis of the ten tribes, whilſt Jeruſalem was only at the head of two: and Sodom, her younger ſiſter, becauſe a ſmaller city, and lay at her right hand towards the ſouth, with her daughter villages. The ſins of Sodom are particularly marked, v. 49. Pride, gluttony, idleneſs, uncharitableneſs, oppreſſion; and Jeruſalem had equalled, yea, exceeded them in all; not content to walk in their ways, ſhe grew more corrupt and abominable in her doings; nor had her ſiſter Samaria half her guilt, v. 51. Her idols were more numerous, and her ſins more aggravated by the means and mercies ſhe had enjoyed. She had judged them formerly, and ſeverely cenſured and condemned them and their wickedneſs, 2 Chron. xiii. 8—10. but now her conduct juſtified and patronized all their iniquities, v. 57. and comforted them with the plea, that the men of Judah were as bad, or worſe than they, v. 54. with ſhame and confuſion therefore ought ſhe to be covered, for her more grievous tranſgreſſions; either in repentance for them, or ſuffering the puniſhment due to them. And another cauſe alſo for ſhame is ſuggeſted, v. 56. For thy ſiſter Sodom was not mentioned by thy mouth in the day of thy pride; in their proſperity they diſdained the mention of the name of Sodom; or, they took no warning by her doom, to tremble for their own. Note, (1.) Pride is at the root of all ſin. (2.) Exceſs and idleneſs are the fuel to vile affections. (3.) Let thoſe who read Sodom's ſins, tremble for themſelves, leaſt the abuſe of their bleſſings ſhould lead them into the ſame guilt and ruin. (4.) The advantages we enjoy are a great aggravation of our ſins: the ſame action is doubly guilty in thoſe who ſin againſt light and love. (5.) Sinners muſt be confounded, either with the ſhame of penitents here, or with the everlaſting ſhame of reprobates in the day of viſitation. (6.) Pride goeth before deſtruction; they who will not be warned muſt be ruined.

3. Their judgments would be heavy, as thoſe which fell on the devoted cities of Sodom and Samaria. God had already in a meaſure humbled their pride, in the diſcovery of their wickedneſs, neſs, evident in the reproach and inſults they ſuffered from the Philiſtines and Syrians, 2 Chron. xxviii. 5. Thus they had begun to bear the puniſhment of their lewdneſs and abominations, v. 50. and God will deal with them farther, as they had done, rejecting them for his people as they had rejected him for their God; deſpiſing the oath, and breaking the covenant they had made at Sinai. They are doomed to a miſerable captivity, and Sodom and Samaria ſhall ſooner be reſtored than they: for however the penitent remnant ſhould be recovered, the wicked would be utterly abandoned to ruin, Jer. xxiv. 9, 10. Though ſome underſtand this of the converſion of the Jews, when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is come in. Note, (1.) Sin and the curſe are inſeparable. (2.) They who make themſelves vile by their wickedneſs, God will make them viler ſtill by their ſufferings. (3.) Companions in ſin will ſhare the ſame fate, and periſh together. (4.) They who reject God, are juſtly rejected by him.

60. ¶ Neverthleſs, I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and [k] I will eſtabliſh unto thee an everlaſting covenant. 61. Then [l] thou ſhalt remember thy ways, and be aſhamed, when thou ſhalt receive thy ſiſters, thine elder and thy younger: and I will give them unto thee for [m] daughters, [n] but not by thy covenant. 62. And I will eſtabliſh my covenant with thee, and thou ſhalt know that I am the LORD: 63. That thou mayſt remember and be confounded, and [o] never open thy mouth any more becauſe of thy ſhame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou haſt done, ſaith the Lord GOD.

v. 60—63. The chapter cloſes with a gleam of hope, and mercy yet triumphs over judgment. Though they were falſe and faithleſs, God is true, and his covenant of grace ſhall yet have its accompliſhment in the remnant reſerved by him in the days of the Meſſiah, to which the promiſe here hath an evident regard. God will remember his covenant in rich mercy, and eſtabliſh it with them for ever in Chriſt Jeſus, the effects of which ſhould be,

1. Their deep and unfeigned humiliation. Overcome with the ſenſe of his pardoning grace and love, they ſhall remember their ways, and be confounded for all their abominations, ſilenced, nor daring to complain of God's judgments, but acknowledging their deſerts; and the more firmly they are aſſured of his being pacified towards them, the more deeply ſhall they upbraid their own ingratitude againſt a God ſo gracious. Note, (1.) The great argument to engage us to evangelical repentance, is a ſenſe of God's reconciliation in Chriſt Jeſus. None abhor themſelves ſo thoroughly, as thoſe who believe his love moſt aſſuredly. (2.) We are called upon ever to remember our ways, and be confounded; though God hath forgiven us, we ſhould never forgive ourſelves.

2. He promiſes to bring the Gentiles into the communion of his church. The heathen lands, once their ſiſters in iniquity, ſhall now be admitted with the Jews into the fellowſhip of the goſpel, to ſhare all the bleſſings and privileges thereof, and ſhall be received by them with warm affection; but not by thy covenant; not by the Sinai covenant; not on condition of obſerving the ceremonial rites and inſtitutions; or not in virtue of their ſubmitting to the terms which the Jews, as conquerors, ſhould impoſe on them, who, under their carnal Meſſiah, flattered themſelves with extenſive empire: no; but by the covenant of grace, in which there is no diſtinction between Jew or Gentile, both alike being called freely, and entitled to all the promiſed mercies through faith in the Redeemer.

3. God will herein make his glory eminently to appear. Thou ſhalt know that I am the Lord: he had often before threatned them to make himſelf known in judgment; now he will be known in mercy. His faithfulneſs to his promiſes, and his rich grace, ſhall be manifeſted to them; and to their everlaſting comfort, in an everlaſting covenant eſtabliſhed in Chriſt Jeſus, they ſhall experience his everlaſting love.

CHAP. XVII.

The perfidy of Zedekiah, and the ruin of Judah, in conſequence of his rebellion, is the ſubject of this chapter, where God by the prophet, 1. Threatens the ruin of him and his kingdom, by a parable of two eagles and a vine, ver. 1—10. and the reddition of that parable, ver. 11—21. 2. He promiſeth hereafter to raiſe the royal family of Judah again in the Meſſiah and his kingdom, ver. 22—24.

1. AND the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, put forth a riddle, and [a] ſpeak a parable unto the houſe of Iſrael, 3. And ſay, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, A great eagle with great wings, [b] long winged, full of feathers, which had † divers colours, came unto Lebanon, and [b] took the higheſt branch of the cedar: 4. He cropt off the top of his young twigs, and carried it into a land of traffick; he ſet it in a city of merchants. 5. [c] He took alſo of the ſeed of the land, and ‡ planted it in a fruitful field, he placed it by great waters, and ſet it as a willow-tree. 6. And [d] it grew and it became a ſpreading vine of low ſtature, whoſe branches turned toward him, and the roots thereof were under him: ſo it became a vine, and brought forth branches, and ſhot forth ſprigs. 7. There was alſo [e] another great eagle with great wings, and many feathers; and behold, this vine did bend her roots toward him, and ſhot forth her branches toward him, that he might water it by the furrows of her plantation. 8. It was planted in a good § ſoil by great waters, that it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit, that it might be a goodly vine. 9. Say thou, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Shall it proſper? ſhall he not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof, that it wither? it ſhall wither in all the leaves of her ſpring, even without great power, or many people to pluck it up by the roots thereof. 10. Yea behold, being planted, ſhall it proſper? [f] ſhall it not utterly wither, when the eaſt-wind toucheth it? it ſhall wither in the furrows where it grew. 11. Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 12. [g] Say now to the rebellious houſe, Know ye not what theſe things mean? tell them, Behold, [h] the king of Babylon is come to Jeruſalem, and hath taken the king thereof, and the princes thereof, and led them with him to Babylon: 13. And hath taken of the king's ſeed, and made a covenant with him, [i] and hath ‖ taken an oath of him: he hath alſo taken the mighty of the land: 14. That the kingdom might be baſe, that it might not lift itſelf up, † but that by keeping of his covenant it might ſtand. 15. But [k] he rebelled againſt him in ſending his ambaſſadors into Egypt, [l] that they might give him horſes and much people: [m] ſhall he proſper? ſhall he eſcape that doth ſuch things? or ſhall he break the covenant, and be delivered? 16. As I live, ſaith the Lord GOD, ſurely [n] in the place where the king dwelleth that made him king, whoſe oath he deſpiſed, and whoſe covenant he brake, even with him, in the midſt of Babylon he ſhall die. 17. Neither ſhall Pharaoh with his mighty army and great company make for him in the war [o] by caſting up mounts, and building forts to cut off many perſons. 18. Seeing he deſpiſed the oath, by breaking the covenant, (when lo, he had given his hand) and hath done all theſe things, he ſhall not eſcape. 19. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, As I live, ſurely mine oath that he hath deſpiſed, and my covenant that he hath broken, even it will I recompenſe upon his own head. 20. And I will [p] ſpread my net upon him, and he ſhall be taken in my ſnare, and I will bring him to Babylon, and will plead with him there for his treſpaſs that he hath treſpaſſed againſt me. 21. And [q] all his fugitives with all his bands ſhall fall by the ſword, and they that remain ſhall be ſcattered towards all winds: [r] and ye ſhall know that I the LORD have ſpoken it.

1. The riddle and parable Ezekiel is ordered to put forth to them; not that God would wrap up in obſcure expreſſions their approaching doom, but that, engaged by this method of propoſing it, they might pay greater attention to the warning.

2. The explication of the riddle to the rebellious houſe of Judah, that they might not plead ignorance, but be left without excuſe.

[1.] The great eagle, v. 3. is Nebuchadnezzar; his great and long wings repreſent his vaſt dominions; and his coming to Lebanon, his invaſion of the land of Judea. Jeconiah is the higheſt branch cropped by him; and the top of the young twigs, the princes of the land, and the ſeed-royal, which he carried into captivity to a land of traffic, to Babylon, the great mart and ſeat of the empire, v. 4, 12. Zedekiah is the ſeed of the land, v. 5. whom he ſet with great circumſpection, as the word ſignifies, in the fruitful field of Judea, having exacted from him an oath of allegiance, v. 13. and thereupon appointed him king over much people, repreſented by great waters; having taken the mighty of the land as hoſtages for his fidelity; and that, weakened by their loſs, Zedekiah might be the leſs inclined or able to rebel, v. 14. and that though the kingdom ſtill remained, it might be baſe, reduced, and dependant upon the king of Babylon; and by keeping of his covenant it might ſtand, and flouriſh, though not in its former ſplendor, yet with comfort, peace, and dignity; as a vine, though of a low ſtature, whoſe branches turned towards Nebuchadnezzar, and the roots ſpread under him; ſafe and protected by his power, though ſubject to his diſpoſal: and in this ſtate it became a vine, and ſhot forth branches. The royal family increaſed, and for a while the people proſpered under Zedekiah's government, and might have grown greater, could they have been content with their ſtation. Note, When by the providence of God we are reduced, it is our wiſdom, and will be our comfort, to ſubmit, and make the beſt improvement of our preſent ſtate, and then we ſhall find ſome good ariſing to us out of the evil.

[2.] The other great eagle, v. 7. is the king of Egypt, with large and extenſive dominions, though not equal to the king of Babylon. To him Zedekiah inclined; and though he was very flouriſhing in his preſent ſtate, under the dominion of Nebuchadnezzar, yet he could not bear his ſubjection, and turned his branches, ſent his ambaſſadors to Egypt, in order to obtain infantry and cavalry to ſupport him in the rebellion he meditated; and to be watered by the furrows of her plantation, as Egypt was by the Nile, hoping to be enriched and made great by this alliance with the Egyptians. But they who are diſcontented with the ſtate Providence allots them, only plague themſelves by fighting againſt God, and aggravate the miſeries under which they are ſo impatient, as was Zedekiah's caſe. For,

[3.] God denounces his doom. So far from being watered by Egypt, the vine ſhall wither in the furrows where it was planted, as a tree blaſted by the eaſt wind. It ſhall be plucked up by the roots, and the fruit cut off; and this without great power or many people, any army being ſufficient to deſtroy that nation God hath devoted to ruin. How can a wretch ſo perfidious, a covenant-breaker, hope to eſcape? v. 15. By an oath, to ſhew the immutability of his counſel, God pronounces ſentence on the rebellious king, ungrateful to his benefactor, who left him a prince, when he might have bound him as a priſoner: falſe to the oath of God, and faithleſs to his engagements, God will puniſh him for his perjury. His Egyptian allies ſhall help in vain, v. 17. and inſtead of ſuccouring Jeruſalem, ſhall be beaten themſelves. Zedekiah's own forces, as cowards, ſhall flee, unable to ſtand in the day of battle; part ſlain with the ſword, and the ſhattered remains ſcattered to the four winds, v. 21. Thus deſerted and helpleſs, he ſhall be taken in God's ſnare, delivered a priſoner to the victorious king of Babylon, whoſe covenant he broke, and die in captive bands in the land of Chaldea; the righteous vengeance due to his crimes: and when this prediction ſhould be fulfilled, then at leaſt he ſhould be made to know that the Lord had ſpoken it, v. 21. Note, (1.) Oaths are ſacred things: they who trifle with them, ſhall bear their judgment. (2.) Sinners will not now believe the threatnings of God againſt them; but the time will come, when they will be terribly convinced of their truth by fatal experience.

22. ¶ Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, I will alſo take of the higheſt branch of the high cedar, and will ſet it, I will crop off from the top of his young twigs [s] a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent. 23. [t] In the mountain of the height of Iſrael will I plant it: and it ſhall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, [u] and be a goodly cedar: and under it ſhall dwell all fowl of every wing, in the ſhadow of the branches thereof ſhall they dwell. 24. And all the trees of the field ſhall know that I the LORD have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flouriſh: I the LORD have ſpoken, and have done it.

v. 22—24. In the midſt of the threatned deſolations we have a gracious promiſe to ſupport the hopes of God's people, who might be ready to fear the royal line of David would be extinct, and the promiſe of the Meſſiah, who was to deſcend from him, be diſappointed.

1. God will raiſe the tabernacle of David from its ruins: out of the cedar, the Jewiſh nation, from the higheſt branch, the royal family of Judah, God will crop off a tender one, the Meſſiah, and will plant it on a high mountain and eminent; in the mount of God in glory, whither the Saviour aſcended after his reſurrection; or in his church on earth, the ſpiritual mount Zion; and from thence his boughs ſhall ſpread, fill the earth with fruit, and afford a ſafe ſhelter for fowl of every wing: redeemed ſinners of all nations ſhall fly to him, and dwell under his ſhadow with delight, protected from every evil, and ſinging among the branches, happy in the experience of his love and favour. Some apply this to Zerubabel, in whom the line of David revived; but whatever reference it might have to him, we may venture to affirm, that a greater than Zerubabel is here.

2. God will be glorified in his work. All the trees of the field, the nations of the earth, converted by the preaching of the goſpel, ſhall know that I the Lord have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flouriſh; which ſome interpret of the deſtruction of the Chaldean monarchy, and the reſtoration of the Jewiſh people: others, of the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles, who ſeemed as a withered and dry tree, reſpecting all ſpiritual life: and others, more generally, of the deſtruction of the kingdom of Satan, and the exaltation of the kingdom of Chriſt, which ſhall in the latter day ſpread univerſally, and endure to eternity. I the Lord have ſpoken, and have done it; his word being as ſure as if it were already accompliſhed.

CHAP. XVIII.

God will not only be juſt in all his dealings with men, but make his righteouſneſs appear. We have here, 1. The corrupt proverb uſed by the profane Jews, ver. 1—3. 2. The reply given to it, in which God aſſerts in general his ſovereignty and juſtice, ver. 4. Pronounces a wo upon the wicked, ver. 4, 20. and a bleſſing upon the righteous, ver. 5—9. In particular, as to the caſe complained of, he aſſures us, (1.) That it ſhall be ill with a wicked man, though he had a good father, ver. 10—13. (2.) That it ſhall be well with a good man, though he had a wicked father, ver. 14—18. And therefore in this God is righteous, ver. 19, 20. (3.) That it ſhall be well with penitents, though they began never ſo ill, ver. 21—23, 27, 28. (4.) That it ſhall be ill with apoſtates, though they began never ſo well, ver. 24, 26. And the uſe of all this is, (1.) To clear the equity of all God's proceedings, ver. 25, 29. (2.) To engage us to repent, and turn to God, ver. 30—32. And theſe are things which belong to our everlaſting peace; O that we may underſtand and regard them before they be hid from our eyes!

1. THE word of the LORD came unto me again, ſaying, 2. What mean ye, that ye uſe this proverb concerning the land of Iſrael, ſaying, [a] The fathers have eaten ſour grapes, and the children's teeth are ſet on edge? 3. As I live, ſaith the Lord GOD, ye ſhall not have occaſion any more to uſe this proverb in Iſrael. 4. Behold, all ſouls are mine, as the ſoul of the father, ſo alſo the ſoul of the ſon is mine: [b] the ſoul that ſinneth, it ſhall die. 5. ¶ But if a man be juſt, and [c] do † that which is lawful and right, 6. And [d] hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lift up his eyes to the idols of the houſe of Iſrael, [e] neither hath defiled his neighbour's wife, neither hath come near to [f] a menſtruous woman, 7. And hath not [g] oppreſſed any, but hath reſtored to the debtor [h] his pledge, hath ſpoiled none by violence, hath [i] given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment, 8. He that hath not given forth [k] upon uſury, neither hath taken any increaſe, that hath withdrawn his hand from iniquity, [l] hath executed true judgment between man and man. 9. Hath walked in my ſtatutes, and hath kept my judgments to deal truly; he is juſt, [m] he ſhall ſurely live, ſaith the Lord GOD.

v. 1—9. We have here,

1. The inſolent and impious proverb in uſe among the Jews, The fathers have eaten ſour grapes, and the children's teeth are ſet on edge; which implied a charge of injuſtice and cruelty in God, as if he puniſhed them for the ſins of their fathers, and they had themſelves done nothing to provoke the wrath under which they lay. It was true indeed that, as a nation, their fathers ſins came into remembrance; but the inſinuation was falſe that for them alone they ſuffered: had they not copied after their forefathers wickedneſs they had never gone into captivity. Note, When ſinners find fault with God, it is a ſure ſymptom their heart is yet hardened, and unhumbled under their ſufferings.

2. The reproof God gives them hereupon. What mean ye, that ye uſe this proverb? with ſuch a blaſphemous inſinuation. God therefore will ſilence them; and ſwears by himſelf, they ſhall have occaſion to uſe this proverb no more. He will inflict immediate judgment on the ſinners, and not defer it to another generation, and will make it manifeſt to themſelves and others, that their ſufferings are no more than their deſerts.

3. He lays down the equitable method of his procedure. He, as the eternal ſovereign, indeed is not bound to give us any account of his matters. All ſouls are his, the work of his hands, accountable to him; and, as in mercy they have received their being from him, they may be aſſured he will do them no wrong.

He waves however his right of ſovereignty, and eſtabliſhes a rule of judgment to which none can reaſonably object.

(1.) The ſoul that ſinneth it ſhall die, be expoſed to temporal judgments in this life, and his puniſhment not be deferred to another generation; which ſeems to be the meaning of the death here threatened; or he ſhall die eternally, ſeparated from the bliſsful preſence of God, and conſigned to the place of torment. Let impenitent ſinners hear and tremble.

(2.) The juſt man ſhall live: and, that we may not miſtake, God gives his character in ſeveral particulars, both negatively and poſitively. Happy for us will it be, if we can through grace call the character our own. (1.) He is no idolater; neither joins in the worſhip nor gives the leaſt countenance to the ſervice, hating both the idols and the things ſacrificed to them, never deigning to lift his eyes to the one, nor to ſit down to feaſt on the other. (2.) He is no adulterer, nor lewd perſon, but poſſeſſes his veſſel in ſanctification and honour; neither by word or deed attempting the chaſtity of his neighbour's wife, nor in the time of her ſeparation approaching his own. (3.) He is not oppreſſive, by force or fraud depriving his neighbour of what is his juſt due; not taking advantage of his neceſſity, but reſtoring to the debtor his pledge when the redemption-money is paid; and, ſince the law had forbidden him to take uſury of his brethren, lending freely, hoping for nothing again. (4.) He is charitable to his power, feeding the hungry and cloathing the naked; willing to give, glad to diſtribute; and this not as depending on his works as meritorious, but actuated by a principle of love. (5.) He withdraws his hand from iniquity; will have no fellowſhip nor connection with wicked men or their deeds; and, if he hath been inadvertently drawn into evil, he haſtily returns, with grief and ſhame, to the right way. (6.) In all his dealings, either as a magiſtrate, a witneſs, a referee, or a man in buſineſs, he pays the ſtricteſt regard to truth and juſtice, and to his power deſires that every man may enjoy his right. (7.) To finiſh his character, he is not only juſt and merciful towards man, but pious towards God, walking in God's ſtatutes, making them the rule of his conduct; conſtant in his worſhip and ordinances, and keeping God's judgments to deal truly, never deviating from the line of juſtice God hath marked out. He is juſt: ſuch a converſation is an evidence to men of that righteouſneſs which by faith he poſſeſſes before God. And he ſhall ſurely live, ſaith the Lord God, happy in the enjoyment of God's favour, exempted from the plagues which are the portion of the ungodly, and ſhall ſhortly live eternally with God in glory.

10. ¶ If he beget a ſon that is a † robber, [n] a ſhedder of blood, and that doth the like to any one of theſe things, 11. And that doth not any of thoſe duties, but even hath eaten upon the mountains, and defiled his neighbour's wife, 12. Hath oppreſſed the poor and needy, hath ſpoiled by violence, hath not reſtored the pledge, and hath lift up his eyes to the idols, hath committed abomination, 13. Hath given forth upon uſury, and hath taken increaſe: ſhall he then live? he ſhall not live: he hath done all theſe abominations, [o] he ſhall ſurely die, [p] his blood ſhall be upon him. 14. ¶ Now lo, if he beget a ſon that ſeeth all his father's ſins which he hath done, and conſidereth, and doth not ſuch like, 15. That hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lift up his eyes to the idols of the houſe of Iſrael, hath not defiled his neighbour's wife, 16. Neither hath oppreſſed any, hath not ‡ withholden the pledge, neither hath ſpoiled by violence, but hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment, 17. That hath taken off his hand from the poor, that hath not received uſury nor increaſe, hath executed my judgments, hath walked in my ſtatutes; he ſhall not die for the iniquity of his father, he ſhall ſurely live. 18. As for his father, becauſe he cruelly oppreſſed, ſpoiled his brother by violence, and did that which is not good among his people, lo, even he ſhall die in his iniquity. 19. ¶ Yet ſay ye, Why? [q] doth not the ſon bear the iniquity of the father? when the ſon hath done that which is lawful and right, and hath kept all my ſtatutes, and hath done them, he ſhall ſurely live. 20. [r] The ſoul that ſinneth, it ſhall die: [s] the ſon ſhall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither ſhall the father bear the iniquity of the ſon; [t] the righteouſneſs of the righteous ſhall be upon him, and [u] the wickedneſs of the wicked ſhall be upon him.

v. 10—20. God, having laid down his method of procedure, applies it to particular caſes, demonſtrating the juſtice of his dealings, and the injuſtice of their cenſures.

1. For the juſtice of his dealings he obſerves,

(1.) That an ungodly ſon, though ſprung from a pious father, ſhall bear his own burden. The caſe is not uncommon; for grace doth not run in the blood, nor is the moſt careful education always ſucceſsful: the beſt of men have, to their grief, beheld the moſt ungodly children. Dreadful are the ſins here ſuppoſed; and indeed uſually they grow moſt abandoned who ſin againſt the greateſt light and warnings. This wicked ſon is deſcribed as the very reverſe to all goodneſs; a robber, a murderer, an idolater, an adulterer, an oppreſſor, an uſurer, in ſhort devoted to every abomination; the conſequence of which muſt be, he ſhall not live in the enjoyment of God's favour, or in peace in his poſſeſſions, he ſhall ſurely die, given up to the ſword of the enemy, or led captive, and, if he dies impenitent, conſigned to the eternal death of body and ſoul in hell; his blood ſhall be upon him, he hath only himſelf to blame for his deſtruction, his ſins the more aggravated and inexcuſable, and his miſery the more intolerable through the abuſe of the mercies he hath enjoyed.

(2.) The gracious ſon of a wicked father ſhall never fare the worſe for his deſcent from him. And a happy thing it is when a child, inſtead of being influenced by his parent's ill example to imitate it, ſees, conſiders, and takes warning to ſhun thoſe vices to which they were addicted. His character is the ſame deſcribed v. 6. for all juſt men walk by the ſame rule, and mind the ſame things; and, being found in the ſame way, have the ſame bleſſed end, he ſhall ſurely live, and ſhall not die for his father's iniquity; but his graceleſs father, whoſe ways were perverſe before God, oppreſſive, unjuſt, and negligent of every good work, he ſhall bear his iniquity and periſh under it.

2. Hence he infers the injuſtice of their cenſures. Yet ye ſay, Doth not the ſon bear the iniquity of the father? No, in no wiſe. He that doth that which is lawful and right ſhall live; but the ſoul that ſinneth ſhall die, whether father or ſon: the ſon ſhall not be chargeable with his father's iniquity; nor the father, when he hath diſcharged his duty towards him, be anſwerable for the conduct of his ungodly ſon. This is the ſettled rule of God's judgment: the righteouſneſs of the righteous ſhall be upon him, he ſhall have the preſent and eternal comfort of well doing; and the wickedneſs of the wicked ſhall be upon him, cruſhing him down under temporal judgments, and ſinking him at laſt into the belly of hell.

21. But [x] if the wicked will turn from all his ſins that he hath committed, and keep all my ſtatutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he ſhall ſurely live, he ſhall not die. 22. All his tranſgreſſions that he hath committed, [y] they ſhall not be mentioned unto him: in his righteouſneſs that he hath done, he ſhall live. 23. [z] Have I any pleaſure at all that the wicked ſhould die? ſaith the LORD God: and not that he ſhould return from his ways and live? 24. ¶ But [a] when the [b] righteous turneth away from his righteouſneſs, and [c] committeth iniquity, and doth according to all the abominations that the wicked man doth, ſhall he live? all his righteouſneſs that he hath done ſhall not be mentioned: in his treſpaſs that he hath treſpaſſed, and in his ſin that he hath ſinned, in them ſhall he die. 25. ¶ Yet ye ſay, [d] The way of the LORD is not equal. Hear now, O houſe of Iſrael, [e] Is not my way equal? [f] are not your ways unequal? 26. When a righteous man turneth away from his righteouſneſs, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done ſhall he die. 27. Again, when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedneſs that he hath committed, and doth that which is lawful and right, he ſhall ſave his ſoul alive. 28. Becauſe [g] he conſidereth and turneth away from all his tranſgreſſions that he hath committed, he ſhall ſurely live, he ſhall not die. 29. [h] Yet ſaith the houſe of Iſrael, The way of the LORD is not equal. O houſe of Iſrael, are not my ways equal? are not your ways unequal?

v. 21—29. The equity of the divine government is here farther demonſtrated. As God will not puniſh one man for the ſins of another, neither will he be rigorous to mark the tranſgreſſions of thoſe who return to him. The finally impenitent only ſhall periſh.

1. The ſinner that repents and turns to God ſhall ſurely live. Not that of himſelf he is able to turn and change his own heart. The work is God's to give repentance: and this he doth, [1.] By leading the ſinner to conſider his ways, v. 28. giving him an enlightened knowledge of the evil and danger of ſin, and opening his eyes to a diſcovery of that guilt to which he was before a ſtranger; in conſequence of which, [2.] He turns from ALL his wickedneſs, hating and forſaking it, and makes no allowed reſerve of the leaſt ſin. (3.) His obedience is ſincere and univerſal, keeping all God's ſtatutes, and doing that which is lawful and right, according to his beſt knowledge of God's word, in ſimplicity and truth, though not in perfection. And, when this is the caſe, he hath (4.) an aſſured evidence of his pardon and acceptance with God, of which repentance indeed is not the cauſe but the effect. His tranſgreſſions ſhall not only he forgiven but forgotten, not ſo much as mentioned unto him, to ſhame or upbraid him in the day of judgment. (5.) He ſhall ſurely live, he ſhall not die. Which may be confined to that exemption from temporal calamities, which an external obſervance of the moſaical inſtitutions ſeems to have ſecured, to which, rather than to real evangelical repentance, the context may then refer: or we may interpret the life here promiſed of the enjoyment of God's love and favour both here and for ever, which are ſure to all thoſe who walk in righteouſneſs and true holineſs.

2. God encourages ſinners, from the views of his rich grace and mercy, to return to him. Have I any pleaſure at all that the wicked ſhould die? ſaith the Lord God? No: vengeance is his ſtrange work, but mercy is his delight. And though his juſtice is glorified in the puniſhment of the obſtinately rebellious, yet he would rather glorify his grace in pardoning them, when they turn from their ways and live. Note, The ſoul that periſhes will have only himſelf to blame for his damnation.

3. The righteous man who turns apoſtate will periſh. Not that one truly righteous ever will or can finally be caſt away; but many who are profeſſionally ſuch, appear ſo before men, and count themſelves righteous, do turn from their righteouſneſs, caſt off their profeſſion, grow careleſs and outwardly profane and ſenſual, commit iniquity open and avowed, according to all the abominations of the wicked, joining with them, and in practice like them. Shall ſuch live? becauſe of the former appearances of righteouſneſs. No. Their good deeds, however many, will not be mentioned in their favour. They turn back unto perdition, and die in their ſins, v. 24. and for them, v. 26.

4. God appeals to their conſciences for the equity of his ways and the injuſtice of their reflections. Yet ye ſay the way of the Lord is not equal. Impudently and blaſphemouſly they dared arraign the divine juſtice at the bar of their partial ſelf-love; though the procedure was ſo evidently equal and juſt: nor could it poſſibly be otherwiſe; the judge of all the earth muſt needs do right. The inequality therefore was in themſelves, not in him: he was righteous, but they had done wickedly; his judgments altogether juſt, their murmuring under them wicked as unreaſonable.

30. [l] Therefore I will judge you, O houſe of Iſrael, every one according to his ways, ſaith the LORD God: [k] repent, and turn † yourſelves from all your tranſgreſſions; ſo iniquity ſhall not be your ruin. 31. ¶ Caſt away from you all your tranſgreſſions, whereby ye have tranſgreſſed, and make you [l] a new heart, and a new ſpirit; for why will ye die, O houſe of Iſrael? 32. For [m] I have no pleaſure in the death of him that dieth, ſaith the LORD God: wherefore turn yourſelves, and live ye.

v. 30—32. The caſe being thus fairly ſtated, God's methods of procedure appear fully vindicated. I will judge you according to your ways, giving to every man as his work is. Yet, as their works and ways would ſo ill bear the ſeverity of his enquiry, he lengthens their day of grace, and gives them yet ſpace to repent, and an earneſt invitation to engage them thereunto.

1. He invites them to repent and live, turning from all their tranſgreſſions with ſhame and rooted averſion, and caſting them away, with full purpoſe of heart never to return to them again. And he calls on them to make them a new heart and a new ſpirit, thoroughly changed in all their tempers and diſpoſitions; which though indeed their duty, yet God muſt give the power to enable them for what he doth command, ſee chap. xi. 19. and by his grace, preventing and following the word of exhortation he ſends, it becomes effectual to the ſinner's converſion.

2. He enforces his invitation with various arguments. [1.] So iniquity ſhall not be your ruin, as otherwiſe it infallibly would be; for except we repent we muſt periſh. [2.] God hath no delight in the ſinner's death, and therefore expoſtulates, Why will ye die, O houſe of Iſrael? It is as pleaſing to him to ſee the ſinner turned from the evil of his ways, as it is unſpeakably advantageous to ourſelves. They who refuſe therefore to give him this ſatisfaction, ſin againſt their own mercies, and die becauſe they will die. [3.] Immortal life and glory are before us, if we truly turn to God. Turn yourſelves, and live ye. And what can engage us, if theſe conſiderations are ineffectual.

CHAP. XIX.

This chapter is a lamentation over the ruin of Judah and her kings of the illuſtrious houſe of David, ver. 1. (1.) The kingdom of Judah is here compared to a lioneſs, and the princes to lions, that were fierce and ravenous, but hunted down and taken in nets, ver. 2—9. (2.) The kingdom is compared to a vine, and the princes to branches, that had been ſtrong and flouriſhing, but were now broken off and burnt, ver. 10—14.

1. MOreover, take thou up a lamentation for the princes of Iſrael, 2. And ſay, What is thy mother? a lioneſs: ſhe lay down among lions, ſhe nouriſhed her whelps among young lions. 3. And ſhe brought up [a] one of her whelps: it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey, it devoured men. 4. The nations alſo heard of him, he was taken in their pit, and they [b] brought him with chains unto the land of Egypt. 5. Now when ſhe ſaw that ſhe had waited, and her hope was loſt, then ſhe took [c] another of her whelps, and made him a young lion. 6. And [d] he went up and down among the lions, he became a young lion, and learned to catch the prey, and devoured men. 7. And he knew their † deſolate palaces, and [e] he laid waſte their cities, and the land was deſolate, and the fulneſs thereof by the noiſe of his [f] roring. 8. [g] Then the nations ſet againſt him on every ſide from the provinces, and ſpread their net over him: he was taken in their pit. 9. v. 1—9. We have here,

1. The prophet commanded to take up a lamentation over the princes of Iſrael, Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jeconiah, and Zedekiah, whoſe mournful ſtory would afford abundant matter for his grief. Note, We ſhould not only weep with thoſe that weep, but over thoſe alſo who never ſhed a tear for themſelves.

2. The Lord directs him what to ſay. Under the figure of a lioneſs and her whelps he deſcribes the kingdom and princes. The lioneſs, the mother, is the tribe of Judah, ravening, fierce, full of rapine and injuſtice; ſhe lay down among lions, joined in affinity with the neighbouring nations, and contracted alliances with them. She nouriſhed her whelps among young lions, brought up the young princes in principles of arbitrary power and oppreſſion. Jehoahaz, one of them, became a young lion, grown up, and ſeated on the throne of his father Joſiah, learned to catch the prey, and devoured men, exerciſing the moſt tyrannical ſway, and ſparing neither the properties nor lives of his ſubjects, as his covetouſneſs, his rage, or his caprice governed him. The nations alſo heard of him, what oppreſſion he uſed towards his people, and what deſigns he was forming to ſubdue his neighbours; and hereupon the Egyptians fell upon him, vanquiſhed and led him away a priſoner into Egypt, where he died.

Deſpairing of his return, the Jewiſh people advanced Jehoiakim to the throne, with the conſent of Pharaoh, and he trod in the wicked ſteps of his predeceſſor, alike ravenous, arbitrary, and oppreſſive. He learned to catch the prey, he devoured men, plundering his ſubjects and ſacrificing their lives to his reſentment. And he knew their deſolate palaces, ranſacking them to diſcover the treaſures concealed therein; or he knew their widows, when he had ſlain the huſband he defiled their widows; and by his tyranny he drove his ſubjects from their cities, and made the land deſolate through his roaring, neither their lives nor properties being any longer ſafe. The nations hereupon collected under Nebuchadnezzar, ſurrounded him as a beaſt with toils, and he was taken priſoner as a lion in a pit; they bound him in chains and caſt him into priſon, where probably he quickly died, and was thrown on a dunghill, ſee Jer. xxii. 18, 19. and his roaring ſilenced, no more the terror of the mighty in the land of the living.

10. ¶ Thy mother is [i] like a vine in thy † blood, planted by the waters, ſhe was fruitful, and full of branches by reaſon of many waters. 11. And ſhe had ſtrong rods, for the ſcepters of them that bear rule, and her ſtature was exalted among the thick branches, and ſhe appeared in her height with the multitude of her branches. 12. But ſhe was plucked up in fury, ſhe was caſt down to the ground, and [k] the eaſt-wind dried up her fruit: her ſtrong rods were broken and withered, the fire conſumed them. 13. And now ſhe is planted in the wilderneſs, in a dry and thirſty ground. 14. And [l] fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, which hath devoured her fruit, ſo that ſhe hath [m] no ſtrong rod to be a ſcepter to rule: [n] this is a lamentation, and ſhall be for a lamentation.

v. 10—14. The ſame perſons, compared before to a lioneſs and her whelps, are here likened to a vine and its branches.

1. Thy mother, the Jewiſh nation, is like a vine in thy blood, which,

which, laid at the root, is ſaid to contribute to its fertility; planted by the waters, enjoying the greateſt advantages and privileges; ſhe was fruitful and full of branches by reaſon of many waters, grew rich and populous; and ſhe had ſtrong rods for the ſcepters of them that bear rule, many princes ſprung from her, whoſe dignity was great; or the royal family was numerous, either of Joſiah or Zedekiah, to whom it may be referred; and her ſtature was exalted among the thick branches, the nation of the Jews was eminent and diſtinguiſhed; and appeared in her height with the multitude of her branches, particularly in the glorious days of David and Solomon, when they were the admiration of the nations around them. But,

2. This vine was plucked up in fury. Having long provoked God by their ſins, and Zedekiah by his rebellion filling up the meaſure of their iniquities, by the Chaldean army the country was utterly laid waſte; the ſtrong rods broken, withered, burnt; the king, princes, magiſtrates, ſlain or made captives. And now ſhe is planted in the wilderneſs, in a dry and thirſty ground, carried to Babylon, where they ſuffered hard ſervitude: or this reſpects the remnant left in Judea, that by the ravages of the Chaldean army had been turned into a deſert. And a fire is gone out of a rod of her branches: the rod is Zedekiah, and his rebellion the fire, which hath devoured her fruit, the people periſhing by the famine, peſtilence, and ſword, during the ſiege of Jeruſalem; ſo that ſhe hath no ſtrong rod to be a ſcepter to rule, Zedekiah being the laſt king of the houſe of David till the Meſſiah came. This is a lamentation, and ſhall be for a lamentation: the paſt deſolations were grievous; but, inſtead of coming to an end, ſucceeding generations would have freſh cauſe to bemoan their miſeries.

v. 1—4. The date of this prophecy is in the ſeventh year of Jeconiah's captivity and Zedekiah's reign, the fifth month, the tenth day; and it was delivered on occaſion of the elders of Iſrael, whether of the captivity, or from Jeruſalem, coming to conſult the prophet, as ſome ſuppoſe, from v. 32. whether they might not, to ingratiate themſelves with their heathen maſters, conform to their heathen worſhip: certain it is, whatever was the cauſe of their coming, their hearts were hypocritical, and the anſwer of God to them is full of wrath.

1. God refuſes to be enquired of by them, v. 3. for they who draw near to God hypocritically, can expect no mercy at his hands; their very prayers will be turned into ſin.

2. The prophet muſt arraign and condemn them; no more their advocate, but their accuſer, and now conſtituted their judge to pronounce ſentence upon them for all their own and their fathers abominations, v. 4.

5. ¶ And ſay unto them, Thus ſaith the LORD God, In the day when [d] I choſe Iſrael, and † lifted up mine hand unto the ſeed of the houſe of Jacob, and made myſelf [e] known unto them in the land of Egypt, when I lifted up mine hand unto them, ſaying, I am the LORD your God, 6. Then ſaid I unto them, Caſt ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and [g] defile not yourſelves with the idols of Egypt: I am the LORD your God. 8. But they rebelled againſt me, and would not hearken unto me: they did not every man caſt away the abominations of their eyes, neither did they forſake the idols of Egypt: then I ſaid, I will pour out my fury upon them, to accompliſh my anger againſt them in the midſt of the land of Egypt. 9. [h] But I wrought for my name's ſake, that it ſhould not be polluted before the heathen, among whom they were, in whoſe ſight I made myſelf known unto them, in bringing them forth out of the land of Egypt.

v. 5—9. God here begins to recapitulate the provocations of Iſrael; and they commenced from the day he began to form them into a people.

1. He reminds them of the wonders of his grace ſhown to them above all nations. He choſe them for a peculiar people, in the time of their deepeſt affliction, and moſt abject wretchedneſs in the land of Egypt; he made himſelf known to them, by his name Jehovah, and the miracles he wrought for their deliverance; confirming his favour towards them by an oath, and aſſuring them of the inheritance he had provided for them in a land flowing with milk and honey, the glory of all lands, which he eſpied for them, ſingled out with peculiar care, as the happy ſpot appointed for their abode. Note, (1.) God's people do not chuſe him, he chuſes them. (2.) None truly know God, but thoſe to whom he is pleaſed to reveal himſelf.

2. The commands he gave them were moſt reaſonable and eaſy. They were enjoined to caſt away every man the abominations of his eyes, and not defile themſelves with the idols of Egypt. And this he enforces with the moſt cogent reaſon, I am the Lord your God, the only worthy object of worſhip, and to whom they were bound by unnumbered obligations.

3. They notwithſtanding wilfully rebelled, and refuſed to hearken to God's commands, continuing in their abominations, and cleaving to the idols of Egypt, not deterred by all the plagues they beheld.

4. By his prophets he threatned to deſtroy them with the Egyptians. As they had joined in their idolatry, they deſerved to ſhare their ruin. But,

5. For his name's ſake he wrought, that the heathen might not blaſpheme, as if he was unfaithful to his promiſes, or unable to accompliſh them. Note, All the arguments for God's favour towards us come not from our deſert, but his ſovereign grace, and the purpoſes of his own glory.

10. ¶ Wherefore [i] I cauſed them to go forth out of the land of Egypt, and [k] brought them into the wilderneſs. 11. And I gave them my ſtatutes, and † ſhewed them my judgments, [l] which if a man do, he ſhall even live in them. 12. Moreover alſo, I gave them [m] my ſabbaths, to be a ſign between me and them, that they might know that I am the LORD that ſanctify them. 13. But [n] the houſe of Iſrael rebelled againſt me in the wilderneſs: they walked not in my ſtatutes, and they deſpiſed my judgments, [o] which if a man do, he ſhall even live in them; and my ſabbaths they greatly [p] polluted: then I ſaid I would pour out my fury upon them [q] in the wilderneſs to conſume them. 14. [r] But I wrought for my name's ſake, that it ſhould not be polluted before the heathen, in whoſe ſight I brought them out. 15. Yet alſo [s] I lifted up my hand unto them in the wilderneſs, that I would not bring them into the land which I had given them, flowing with milk and honey, [t] which is the glory of all lands: 16. [u] Becauſe they deſpiſed my judgments, and walked not in my ſtatutes, but polluted my ſabbaths: for their heart went after their idols. 17. Nevertheleſs, mine eye ſpared them from deſtroying them, neither did I make an end of them in the wilderneſs. 18. But I ſaid unto their children in the wilderneſs, Walk ye not in the ſtatutes of your fathers, neither obſerve their judgments, nor defile yourſelves with their idols. 19. I am the LORD your God; [x] walk in my ſtatutes, and keep my judgments and do them: 20. And [y] hallow my ſabbaths; and they ſhall be a ſign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the LORD your God. 21. Notwithſtanding the [z] children rebelled againſt me: they walked not in my ſtatutes, neither kept my judgments to do them, [a] which if a man do, he ſhall even live in them; they polluted my ſabbaths: then I ſaid I would pour out my fury upon them, to accompliſh my anger againſt them in the wilderneſs. 22. v. 16—26. The mercies of God, and the ingratitude and diſobedience of the Jewiſh people, are here diſplayed.

1. God's mercies towards them were amazingly great and ſingular. He brought them forth from Egypt with a high hand; led them into the wilderneſs, where they lived by daily miracles; gave them his law, with the ſtatutes and judgments of his worſhip, by obſervance of which they might expect to live long and enjoy the promiſed inheritance; he gave them alſo his ſabbaths, the weekly ſabbath and the ſabbatical and jubilee years, a ſign of his favour towards them, a memorial of their deliverance from Egypt, a pledge of their entrance into the reſt of Canaan, and a figure of the eternal reſt which remained for the faithful in a better world: thus God diſtinguiſhed them from all nations, and intended to make them know that He their Lord ſanctified them, theſe holy days, appointed for his immediate ſervice, having then, as they ſtill have, the moſt bleſſed influence upon the ſouls of thoſe who conſcientiouſly ſanctify their ſabbaths to keep them holy.

2. Their ingratitude and undutifulneſs were moſt provoking. In the wilderneſs, where they were ſurrounded with mercies and miracles, they rebelled, caſt off God's government, deſpiſed his ordinances, polluted his ſabbaths, and ſunk into idolatry, v. 16.

3. Offended with ſuch baſeneſs, God threatned utterly to conſume them in his fury, v. 13. But for his own glory, that the heathen might not diſhonour his name, as if he was unable to bring his people into the land of Canaan, he reſolved to fulfil his promiſe: yet, not to leave ſuch wickedneſs without a mark of his ſevere diſpleaſure, he ſware in his wrath, concerning the men of that generation, that they ſhould never enter into his reſt, v. 15. and, in conſequence thereof, their carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs. Let us therefore fear leſt, a promiſe being left us of entering into his reſt, any of us ſhould come ſhort of it, and periſh after the ſame example of unbelief and diſobedience.

4. God did not make an utter end of them, but ſpared their children, and ſolemnly warned them, by their fathers ruin, againſt their ſins, not to walk in their ſtatutes, or copy their worſhip or manners, but to flee from idolatry, to know the Lord to be their God, to worſhip him according to his own preſcription, obſervant of his ſabbaths, and obedient to his laws. Note, Children ſhould take warning by their parents ill example, and be more careful to abſtain from their ſins.

5. They notwithſtanding rebelled againſt God, and trod in the ſteps of their ungodly fathers, ſabbath-breakers, diſobedient, idolaters; rejecting their own mercies, they provoked that wrath which would have deſtroyed them, had not God for his own glory reſtrained his arm, after making them feel ſome heavy ſtrokes of his diſpleaſure in the wilderneſs. And though, according to his promiſe, he brought them into the land of Canaan, he foretold the fearful diſperſion to which at laſt they were doomed for their tranſgreſſions. Note, (1.) Sinners are ſelf-murderers: they might have lived if they would have been obedient; but they prefer ſin and death. (2.) They who walk in the ways of their wicked anceſtors muſt expect their judgments.

6. He gave them up to their own inventions, v. 25. Wherefore I gave them alſo ſtatutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they ſhould not live. He gave them up to the idolatrous cuſtoms of the nations, and ſuffered them to follow the vain traditions of their apoſtate forefathers. Though ſome interpret this of the judgments he ſent upon them; others of the rites of the ceremonial law, on which depending for righteouſneſs, they became a ſtumbling-block to them, inſtead of leading them to Chriſt. And I polluted them in their own gifts, ſuffering them to offer ſacrifices to idols, even the inhuman oblations of the firſt-born to Molech, to make them deſolate: thus weakened by their own more than ſavage conduct, they became an eaſier prey to their enemies: to the end that they might know that I am the Lord, righteous in the puniſhments inflicted upon them. Note, (1.) A greater curſe cannot fall upon the ſinner than to be left of God to the wickedneſs of his own heart. (2.) God will make himſelf known to ſinners: if they will not receive him as their Lord and Saviour, they ſhall prove him to be God the avenger.

27. ¶ Therefore, ſon of man, ſpeak unto the houſe of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, Thus ſaith the LORD God, Yet in this your fathers have blaſphemed me, in that they have † committed a treſpaſs againſt me. 28. For when I had brought them into the land, for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to them, then [k] they ſaw every high hill, and all the thick trees, and they offered there their ſacrifices, and there they preſented the provocation of their offering: there alſo they made [l] their ſweet ſavour, and poured out there their drink-offerings. 29. Then I ‡ ſaid unto them, What is the high place whereunto ye go? and the name thereof is called Bamah unto this day. 30. Wherefore ſay unto the houſe of Iſrael, Thus ſaith the LORD God, Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? and commit ye whoredom after their abominations? 31. For when ye offer your gifts, when [m] ye make your ſons to paſs through the fire, ye pollute yourſelves with all your idols even unto this day: and [n] ſhall I be enquired of by you, O houſe of Iſrael? As I live, ſaith the LORD God, I will not be enquired of by you. 32. And that which cometh into your mind [o] ſhall not be at all, that ye ſay, We will be as the heathen, as the families of the countries, to ſerve wood and ſtone.

v. 27—32. Their provocations ceaſed not in the wilderneſs; but when they came into the land of Canaan the ſame abominations were practiſed.

1. When God had fulfilled his promiſe to them, and brought them into the good land, they treſpaſſed yet more and more. Inſtead of confining themſelves to God's altar, in conformity to the cuſtoms of the heathen, they choſe hills and groves for their places of worſhip, and offered there their ſacrifices, incenſe and libations, which, if offered to the God of Iſrael, were contrary to his precept: but probably they rather there ſerved their idols, which made the provocation of their offering greater. And, tho' warned of the folly and ſin of their idolatrous ſervices, when they had God's altar to go to, they perſiſted in their perverſeneſs, and the high places were to the laſt frequented: it is called Bamah to this day. So inveterately rooted is the love of ſin in the heart of the ſinner.

2. Even after all the judgments executed upon them, the preſent generation committed the ſame abominations, polluting themſelves with idols, and cauſing their children to paſs through the fire to Molech; with the folly and wickedneſs of which God juſtly upbraids them; and how then could they dare enquire of him? or what anſwer of peace could they expect from him? he ſwears by himſelf, v. 31. neither their perſons nor petitions ſhould be regarded; and their ſchemes of currying favour with their heathen maſters, by compliances with their worſhip, and incorporating with them by intermarriages, he will blaſt; either they ſhall refuſe to admit them to join with them, or deſpiſe them for their perfidy. Note, (1.) Little is ever got by ſinful compliances: the very enemies of religion will honour thoſe who ſhew ſteadineſs and integrity; whilſt they treat apoſtates with contempt. (2.) They who by a religious profeſſion have once forfeited the world's favour, may deſpair of ever recovering it again.

33. ¶ As I live, ſaith the LORD God, ſurely with a mighty hand, and [p] with a ſtretched-out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you. 34. And I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are ſcattered, with a mighty hand, and with a ſtretched-out arm, and with fury poured out. 35. The rebellious ſinner will be eternally ſeparated at laſt from the congregation of the juſt, and never enter the reſt of glory. (2.) That ſoul is compleatly miſerable whom God abandons. (3.) Pretences to religion, when the heart is enſlaved by idol luſts, do but add profaneneſs and hypocriſy to iniquity.

[2.] The choſen ſhall be ſeparated, and bleſſed with God's regard. They ſhall paſs under the rod, viſited with corrections, and recovered in the furnace of affliction; or they ſhall be marked and diſtinguiſhed as God's people, as the ſhepherd marks the ſheep as they paſs under the rod. They ſhall be brought again into the bond of the covenant, be acknowledged as God's peculiar people, be reſtored again from their diſperſion to their own land, v. 41. and ſerve God in his Zion, his holy mountain, ver. 40. Their oblations and their worſhip ſhall be accepted; repentance given them to acknowledge, bewail, and abhor themſelves for their former tranſgreſſions; God will be ſanctified in them before the heathen, who will confeſs his faithfulneſs to his promiſes, his power and grace diſplayed in their recovery; and they ſhall know that he is the Lord, by experience of theſe his diſpenſations of mercy towards them, wrought not for their ſakes, who deſerved nothing but to periſh in their iniquities, but for his own name's ſake, moſt eminently to diſplay his glory, as the promiſe-keeping and ſin-pardoning God, v. 44. Note, (1.) Afflictions are the moſt bleſſed means of good to God's people. (2.) They who are marked in God's eternal purpoſes, ſhall be preſerved for the heavenly inheritance, amidſt all the changes of this periſhing world. (3.) When God accepts our perſons in Chriſt Jeſus, then our poor and imperfect ſervices become a ſweet ſavour through the Beloved. (4.) The ſinner that returns to God and finds favour, ſees in the glaſs of God's love the baſeneſs, malignity, and ingratitude of ſin, and loaths himſelf for all his abominations. (5.) We never know God truly, till by experience coming to him as loſt ſinners, we prove the wonders of his pardoning love. (6.) All our ſalvation flows not from our deſerts, but God's rich mercy; and as he deſigns his own glory herein, to the praiſe of the glory of his grace it muſt be wholly aſcribed.

45. ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 46. [e] Son of man, ſet thy face toward the ſouth, and drop thy word toward the ſouth, and propheſy againſt the foreſt of the ſouth-field; 47. And ſay to the foreſt of the ſouth, Hear the word of the LORD, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, I will kindle a fire in thee, and it ſhall devour [f] every green tree in thee, and every dry tree: the flaming flame ſhall not be quenched, and all faces from the ſouth to the north ſhall be burnt therein. 48. And all fleſh ſhall ſee that I the LORD have kindled it: it ſhall not be quenched. 49. Then ſaid I, Ah Lord GOD, they ſay of me, Doth he not ſpeak [g] parables?

v. 45—49. This paragraph begins a new prophecy, and would moſt properly have begun the next chapter, the ſubject of both being the ſame, the threatned ruin of Judah and Jeruſalem.

1. The foreſt of the ſouth field, towards which the prophet is commanded to ſet his face and drop his word, is the city of Jeruſalem, full of inhabitants, unfruitful as the trees of the wood, and the haunts of wicked men fierce and ravenous as the beaſts of the foreſt.

2. God threatens to kindle a fire in it, a fire of wrath; and the conflagration ſhall be univerſal, devouring and deſtroying all ranks, young and old without diſtinction, from one end of the land to the other, and none can quench it; a deſtruction ſo terrible ſhall mark the finger of divine vengeance, and even the ſurrounding heathens ſhall acknowledge that this is God's doing, v. 48.

3. Ezekiel makes his complaint to God. Ah! Lord God, they ſay of me, Doth he not ſpeak parables? they ſcoffed at the meſſage he brought them, as unintelligible, and counted it not worth their attention. Note, They who have no inclination to profit by the word of God, will always have ſome fault to find with the delivery of it.

1. AND the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. [a] Son of man, ſet thy face toward Jeruſalem, and [b] drop thy word toward the holy places, and propheſy againſt the land of Iſrael, 3. And ſay to the land of Iſrael, Thus ſaith the LORD, Behold, I am againſt thee, and will draw forth my ſword out of his ſheath, and [c] will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked. 4. Seeing then that I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked, therefore ſhall my ſword go forth out of his ſheath againſt all fleſh from the ſouth to the north: 5. That all fleſh may know that I the LORD have drawn forth my ſword out of his ſheath: it ſhall not return any more. 6. Sigh therefore, thou ſon of man, with the breaking of thy loins; and with bitterneſs ſigh before their eyes. 7. And it ſhall be when they ſay unto thee, Wherefore ſigheſt thou? that thou ſhalt anſwer, For the tidings, becauſe it cometh: and every heart ſhall melt and all hands ſhall be feeble, and every ſpirit ſhall faint, and all knees ſhall † be weak as water: behold, it cometh, and ſhall be brought to paſs, ſaith the Lord GOD.

v. 1—7. That the people might be left without excuſe, we have here a clear expoſition of the parable foregoing.

1. Againſt Jeruſalem is the prophetic word directed, the foreſt, where the fire of wrath is about to kindle, and the holy places, the temple and its courts, the profanations of which God will eſpecially avenge. He is againſt them, and nothing then can protect them from ruin; he threatens to draw the ſword of judgment, and cut off the righteous and the wicked, who ſhare often together in national calamities, though God will abundantly make up to his faithful in inward conſolations, whatever outwardly they ſuffer in common with others. From ſouth to north univerſal ruin is ſpread by the Chaldean army; and the ſword once drawn, is no more ſheathed till it hath made an utter end of them, agreeable to the foregoing parable, chap. xx. 47, 48.

2. To affect them with a ſenſe of the terribleneſs of the threatned ruin, the prophet muſt himſelf appear deeply affected with it. He muſt ſigh with ſuch depth and bitterneſs before them, as if his heart was ready to break; and as the expreſſion of ſuch vaſt anguiſh would make them inquiſitive into the cauſe, he muſt tell them, it is for the doleful tidings he is ſent to deliver, the certain accompliſhment of which approached, when every heart would melt, &c. their courage fail; and ſo diſpirited would they be, as neither to be able to fight or fly. God hath ſpoken it, and not one jot or tittle ſhall fail, v. 7. Note, (1.) A miniſter who would affect others with what he ſpeaks, muſt be affected himſelf, and a tear dropt over a periſhing ſoul is the moſt moving admonition. (2.) They who are never ſo ſtout-hearted againſt God's warnings now, will be overwhelmed with terror in the day of their calamity.

8. ¶ Again, the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 9. Son of man, propheſy and ſay, Thus ſaith the LORD, Say, [d] A ſword, a ſword is ſharpened, and alſo furbiſhed. 10. It is ſharpened to make a ſore ſlaughter, it is furbiſhed that it may glitter: ſhould we then make mirth? † it contemneth the rod of my ſon, as every tree. 11. And he hath given it to be furbiſhed, that it may be handled: the ſword is ſharpened, and it is furbiſhed to give into the hand of the ſlayer. 12. Cry and howl, ſon of man, for it ſhall be upon my people, it ſhall be upon all [e] the princes of Iſrael: ‡ terrors, by reaſon of the ſword, ſhall be upon my people: [f] ſmite therefore upon thy thigh. 13. Becauſe it is a trial, and what if the ſword contemn even the rod? it ſhall be no more, ſaith the Lord GOD. 14. Thou therefore, ſon of man, propheſy, and [g] ſmite thine ‖ hands together, and let the ſword be doubled the third time, the ſword of the ſlain, it is the ſword of the great men that are ſlain, which entreth into their privy chambers. 15. I have ſet the § point of the ſword againſt all their gates, that their heart may faint, and their ruins be multiplied: ah, it is made bright, it is † wrapt up for the ſlaughter. 16. Go thee one way or other, either on the right hand ‡ or on the left, whitherſoever thy face is ſet. 17. I will alſo [h] ſmite mine hands together, and [i] I will cauſe my fury to reſt: I the LORD have ſaid it.

v. 8—17. The ſword drawn in the foregoing verſes, is here ſharpened to do terrible execution; glittering and bright, bearing down all before it. The ſcepter of Iſrael's king is as unable to reſiſt its fury, as a rotten ſtick, v. 10. or the words may be rendered, it is the rod of my Son, the rod of Chriſt, executing judgment; It deſpiſeth every tree, reſiſtance is vain when he ſtrikes; for when God contendeth, he will overcome.

1. It is put into the ſlayer's hand, v. 11. into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, and directed againſt the princes and people of Iſrael; againſt all their gates, that their ruins may be multiplied, the city utterly demoliſhed, and they, without power of reſiſtance, faint and diſheartned, v. 15. Whichever way the ſword moves, to the right or left, it ſpreads havock around, v. 16. and the great men who fly in terrors to their ſecret chambers, find no protection from it, even there ſlain in their lurking-places, v. 14. And a ſevere trial it will prove to God's people, when they ſhall ſee it contemn even the rod, deſtroy the king, and put an end to the government of David's royal line. It ſhall be no more, ſaith the Lord God, none of David's family ſhall again wield the ſceptre till the Meſſiah comes, v. 13. Note, (1.) No eminence of ſtation can ſecure from God's judgment; nay, rather they who have by their ill examples contributed to the ſeduction of others, ſhall be moſt ſeverely puniſhed. (2.) Terrors will ſeize the guilty in the day of vengeance, from which they cannot flee. (3.) The ſtrongeſt fortreſs hath no defence, when God is the aſſailant. (4.) The ſword of judgment turns every way, let no ſinner hope to eſcape from it.

2. The prophet is commanded to teſtify his bitter grief at theſe deſolations, and to call on the people to join his lamentations. He muſt cry and howl, ver. 12. for the ravages he fortells; ſmiting his hands, ver. 4. in the greateſt agony, whilſt the third time he redoubles the warning, a ſword, a ſword, ver. 8. and again, v. 14. which ſome refer to the three captivities of Jehoiakim, Jeconiah, and Zedekiah; others to the coming of the Chaldeans: firſt, when they took Jeruſalem; ſecondly, when Nebuzar-adan burnt it: and laſtly, when in the twenty-third year of his reign, Nebuchadnezzar carried away the remnant of the people, Jer. lii. 5—30. Thus God will cauſe his fury to reſt, when he hath executed vengeance on the devoted land, according to his faithful word, v. 17. and ſeeing this muſt ſhortly come to paſs, the prophet expoſtulates with them on the unſeaſonableneſs of their preſent jollity: ſhould we then make mirth? when a drawn ſword hangs over our heads: rather in the duſt of deepeſt humiliation, with bitter cries and tears ſhould they ſeek to avert the impending blow. Note, (1.) They who declare the terrors of the Lord, muſt urge them vehemently, and redouble their warnings. (2.) It is a heart-felt grief to God's miniſters, to ſee ſinners unconcerned about their approaching and endleſs miſeries. (3.) God's word will have its accompliſhment, however now men ſlight and deſpiſe it.

18. ¶ The word of the LORD came unto me again, ſaying, 19. Alſo thou ſon of man, appoint thee two ways, that the ſword of the king of Babylon may come: both twain ſhall come forth out of one land, and chooſe thou a place, chooſe it at the head of the way to the city. 20. Appoint a way, that the ſword may come to [k] Rabbath of the Ammonites, and to Judah in Jeruſalem the defenced. 21. For the king of Babylon ſtood at the † parting of the way, at the head of the two ways, to uſe divination: he made his arrows bright, he conſulted with ‡ images, he looked in the liver. 22. At his right hand was the divination for Jeruſalem to appoint ‖ captains, to open the mouth in the ſlaughter, to lift up the voice with ſhouting, to appoint battering rams againſt the gates, to caſt a mount, and to build a fort. 23. And it ſhall be unto them as a falſe divination in their ſight, § to them that have ſworn oaths: but he will call to remembrance the iniquity that they may be taken. 24. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Becauſe ye have made your iniquity to be remembred, in that your tranſgreſſions are diſcovered, ſo that in all your doings your ſins do appear: becauſe, I ſay, that ye are come to remembrance, ye ſhall be taken with the hand. 25. ¶ And [l] thou profane wicked prince of Iſrael, [m] whoſe day is come, when iniquity ſhall have an end, 26. Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this ſhall not be the ſame, [n] exalt him that is low, and [o] abaſe him that is high. 27. † I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, [p] and it ſhall be no more until he come whoſe right it is, and I will give it him.

v. 18—27. The ſame ſubject is here farther purſued, and the ſword brought to their walls.

1. He is commanded to deſcribe on a tyle, or a table, two ways, leading from Babylon: the one to Rabbah, the capital of the Ammonites; the other to Jeruſalem, the fortreſs and metropolis of Judah, v. 19, 20. Here, at the head of the way, he muſt repreſent Nebuchadnezzar halting; and though reſolved to attack both places, uncertain with which to begin, uſing divination to determine his way; brightening the arrows on which it is ſuppoſed the names of the cities were engraven, and that the firſt that was drawn was to be firſt attacked, conſulting the images, and looking into the liver, the methods uſed by the heathens to obtain direction, and enquire into the ſucceſs of their enterprizes. And all his divinations directed him to take the right-hand road which led to Jeruſalem, to encamp around it, appoint the officers to direct the ſiege, raiſe up the hoſtile mounts, and batter the gates, till at the breach they might enter into the city. Note, (1.) The wiſeſt men are often at a ſtand, it is not in man that walketh to direct his ſteps. (2.) Though many events appear to us merely fortuitous, yet even the lot comes forth according to God's diſpoſal, and by his decree. (3.) Many are doing God's work, who are not at all ſenſible of him by whoſe hand they are guided.

2. Both prince and people draw their ruin upon their own heads.

[1.] The people, who deſpiſe the prophetic warning, ſhall be ſeized and led captives. The Jews derided the divination as vain, and not to be regarded; and the mention of it by the prophet diſturbed not their ſecurity; though the oaths they had ſworn and broken might juſtly alarm them with fears of an avenging God. Or perhaps they depended on the league made with Egypt, and confirmed by mutual oaths for aſſiſtance. But he will call to remembrance the iniquity, the treachery and perjury of Zedekiah and the people, that they may be taken as birds in an evil net. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord, who is able to accompliſh his purpoſes, and true to his word, becauſe ye have made your iniquity to be remembered by new tranſgreſſions, adding to their paſt ſins, in that your tranſgreſſions are diſcovered, their perfidious conduct expoſed openly to the nations around, and to the king of Babylon; ſo that in all your doings, your ſins do appear viſible to every eye; becauſe, I ſay, that they are come to remembrance before God and the king of Babylon, ye ſhall be taken with the hand, ſeized as a helpleſs bird in a net, and led captives for their iniquities. Note, (1.) Sinners flatter themſelves often that the warnings of God are falſe divinations, but they will be found dreadful realities. (2.) The tranſgreſſions of the wicked will be diſcovered and puniſhed; if not before, at fartheſt at the great day of recompence.

[2.] The prince of Judah hath a peculiar burden laid on him, as the chief author of the nation's ruin. He is charged as profane and wicked, ver. 25. and what can be more ſo than the ingratitude, perjury, treachery, and rebellion of which he was guilty? and kings are not too high to be plainly told their ſin and danger. His day is come to be deſtroyed, when iniquity ſhall have an end, when the meaſure ſhall be filled, and the puniſhment due to it inflicted. Thus ſaith the Lord God, remove the diadem, and take off the crown, degrade him from his dignity, and depoſe him from the throne of Judah; this ſhall not be the ſame, his kingdom ſhall not continue: exalt him that is low, Jehoiachin now a captive, Jer. lii. 31, 32. and abaſe him that is high, Zedekiah, the reigning monarch; or it may ſignify the changes which the conqueror at his pleaſure would make. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, certainly and utterly, and it ſhall be no more a kingdom under the rule of David's royal poſterity, until he come whoſe right it is, the Meſſiah, raiſed up to ſit on the throne of David his father, Luke i. 32. and I will give it him, even a throne enduring as the days of eternity, and univerſal from pole to pole. Note, (1.) Profaneneſs and wickedneſs in a prince are doubly criminal, as the evil of his example is more extenſively infectious. (2.) The day will come when all who do iniquity ſhall receive their righteous doom. (3.) Crowns are precarious poſſeſſions; the only unfading diadem muſt be ſought in a better world. (4.) Pride will have a fall, whilſt humility is the way to honour. (5.) The Lord Jeſus is the rightful king and heir of all things; whatever enemies oppoſe his advancement, muſt finally be overthrown, and all his foes be made his footſtool.

28. ¶ And thou, ſon of man, propheſy, and ſay, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD [q] concerning the Ammonites, and concerning [r] their reproach: even ſay thou, The ſword, the ſword is drawn: for the ſlaughter it is furbiſhed, to conſume becauſe of the glittering: 29. Whiles [s] they ſee vanity unto thee, whiles they divine a lie unto thee, to bring thee upon the necks of them that are ſlain, of the wicked, [t] whoſe day is come, when their iniquity ſhall have an end. 30. [u] Shall I cauſe it to return into his ſheath? I will judge thee in the place where thou waſt created, [x] in the land of thy nativity. 31. And I will pour out mine indignation upon thee, I will blow againſt thee in the fire of my wrath, and deliver thee into the hand of † brutiſh men, and ſkilful to deſtroy. 32. Thou ſhalt be for fuel to the fire: thy blood ſhall be in the midſt of the land, [y] thou ſhalt be no more remembred: for I the LORD have ſpoken it.

v. 28—32. Though Judah be firſt viſited, let not Ammon think to eſcape.

1. They had provoked God by their reproach, inſulting over his Iſrael, as if he could not ſave them, chap. xxv. Zeph. xi. 8—10. whilſt they flattered themſelves now the king of Babylon was returned thither, that their gods would protect them, and their diviners and ſoothſayers confirmed them in their deluſion. Note, (1.) God is jealous for his people, and will ſuffer no inſult ſhewn them to go unpuniſhed. (2.) Sinners uſually flatter themſelves into their ruin.

2. God threatens to pour out his wrath upon them, v. 31. The ſword that was drawn againſt Judah is ſtill unſheathed, furbiſhed for the ſlaughter, and whetted to conſume them, to bring them on the necks of the ſlain, of the wicked; they muſt periſh by the ſame arm that ſlew the wicked Jews when their day was come, and their iniquities ripe for deſtruction, v. 29. nor will the ſword return to its ſcabbard, till it hath executed God's vengeance upon them in the land of their nativity, the place where they were ſettled ever ſince they were formed into a people, v. 30. Fierce are the flames of wrath kindled againſt them; their appointed executioners ſavage in their tempers, and ſkilful to deſtroy, v. 31. As fuel they muſt be conſumed by the devouring fire of their enemies, and their blood be ſhed in the midſt of the land whither the Chaldeans would penetrate, and the ruin they would make ſhould never be repaired; thou ſhalt be remembered no more, ſaith the Lord God, all the traces of their nation being quite obliterated. Note, (1.) It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of that God who is a conſuming fire. (2.) Sinners are fuel for the flames of hell. (3.) They who promiſe themſelves, becauſe they have long been ſecure, they ſhall be always ſafe, will be dreadfully ſurprized when their unexpected ruin comes.

C H A P. XXII.

Here are three ſeveral meſſages which God intruſts the prophet to deliver concerning Judah and Jeruſalem. 1. A catalogue of their ſins is given, which had expoſed them to ſhame, and for which God would bring them to ruin, ver. 1—16. 2. They are compared to droſs, and as ſuch condemned to the fire, ver. 17—22. 3. All orders and degrees of men among them are here found guilty, and as none appeared as interceſſors, they muſt all expect to ſhare in the ſame puniſhment, ver. 23—31.

1. MOreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Now thou ſon of man, [a] wilt thou † judge, wilt thou judge [b] the ‡ bloody city? yea, thou ſhalt ſhew her all her abominations. 3. Then ſay thou, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, The city ſheddeth blood in the midſt of it, that her time may come, and maketh idols againſt herſelf, to defile herſelf. 4. Thou art become guilty in thy blood [c] that thou haſt ſhed, and haſt defiled thyſelf in thine idols which thou haſt made, and thou haſt cauſed thy days to draw near, and art come even unto thy years; [d] therefore have I made thee a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries. 5. Thoſe that be near, and thoſe that be far from thee, ſhall mock thee, which art ‖ infamous, and much vexed. 6. v. 1—16. Jeruſalem, the bloody city, is here brought to the bar to be convicted and condemned: and the prophet is conſtituted of God both her accuſer and her judge.

1. Her abominations are many, great, and aggravated; and they are ſhewn her to evince and manifeſt the juſtice of God in her deſtruction.

(1.) Murder: The blood of innocents was ſhed in the midſt of her, from aſſaſſinations, tyrannical abuſe of power, or perverſion of juſtice; the guilt of which cried aloud, v. 4. The princes and magiſtrates, who ſhould have avenged ſuch crimes, were themſelves the firſt to perpetrate them to the utmoſt of their power, ver. 6. whilſt talebearers ſought to incenſe them by malicious reports and inſinuations, and were chargeable with all the miſchief which enſued, v. 9. and perjured wretches or aſſaſſins, for money, were ready to ſwear away the life of the innocent, or murder in ſecret ſuch as, by malice or revenge, were marked for their bloody knife, v. 12.

(2.) Idolatry: The ſad effects of which were their pollution, v. 4: and in conſequence their deſtruction, v. 3. And thoſe who ran not to the groſſer exceſſes, indulged themſelves in eating on the mountains of the ſacrifices, and thereby became partakers with the idolaters.

(3.) Diſobedience to parents: They ſet light by father and mother, deſpiſed their authority, diſobeyed their commands, or mocked at their infirmities; and this is amongſt the moſt atrocious crimes.

(4.) Oppreſſion and deceit: They took advantage of the ignorance or neceſſities of the ſtranger; vexed with exorbitant demands, or litigious ſuits, the fatherleſs and widow, who were unable to defend themſelves; extorted uſury from their brethren; and with greedineſs increaſed their gain to their neighbour's diſadvantage, v. 12.

(5.) The profanation of holy things, v. 8. and particularly of the ſabbaths: They deſpiſed God's ordinances; either totally neglected the ceremonial rites and worſhip of the temple, or performed them in a careleſs perfunctory manner, and the ſabbaths were no more obſerved than common days, and that generally opens a wide door to all ungodlineſs.

(6) Lewdneſs of all ſorts: the moſt criminal and odious, open and barefaced, v. 9. even inceſt, v. 10. Raviſhment, even of her that was ſet apart for pollution, with whom all commerce was particularly forbidden, Lev. xx. 11. Adultery, and the debauching even a daughter-in-law, and a ſiſter, v. 11. ſuch horrid and ſhocking crimes were committed by them, and cried for vengeance.

(7.) At the root of all was forgetfulneſs of God: They left him far above out of their ſight, and then they feared to commit no wickedneſs.

2. The charge being indiſputable, the prophet, as judge, pronounces ſentence on the criminal. Her day is come, her meaſure of iniquity is full, ſhe is ripe for vengeance, v. 4.

therefore God hath made her a reproach to the heathen far and near, infamous in their eyes, ſo vile and abandoned was her conduct; and much vexed with their deriſion and inſults, yet no more than ſhe moſt juſtly deſerved. With indignation God ſmites his hand at her diſhoneſt gain and bloody crimes, v. 13. and his fierce anger how can ſhe ſuſtain? when his terrible word ſhall receive its accompliſhment, and his threatned wrath be poured out upon her, v. 14. In conſequence of which, ſhe will be ſcattered among the heathen, and miſerably diſperſed in the countries, till her filthineſs was conſumed by the deſtruction of the ringleaders in iniquity, and the recovery of a remnant brought to repentance in the furnace of affliction. And thou ſhalt take thine inheritance in thyſelf, rejected of God, and poſſeſſing nothing but a miſerable being in want and wretchedneſs, and thou ſhalt know that I am the Lord; when theſe judgments are inflicted, and God's almighty power, impartial juſtice and inviolable truth hereby ſignally diſplayed, v. 16. Note, (1.) Though God bears long with ſinners, he will not bear always. (2.) Reproach for God is honour and happineſs; reproach for ſin truly infamous, and the prelude to everlaſting ſhame and contempt. (3.) The ſtouteſt hearted ſinners will tremble in a day of wrath. (4.) They who promiſe themſelves impunity in their ſins, in oppoſition to God's warnings, will find themſelves terribly deceived. (5.) Sooner or later the ſoul will be made to know what a portion it hath loſt by apoſtacy from God, and what wages it hath earned, even eternal death.

17. And the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 18. Son of man, [z] the houſe of Iſrael is to me become droſs, all they are braſs, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midſt of the furnace, they are even the † droſs of ſilver. 19. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Becauſe ye are all become droſs, behold therefore I will gather you into the midſt of Jeruſalem. 20. ‡ As they gather ſilver, and braſs, and iron, and lead, and tin into the midſt of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it, to melt it; ſo will I gather you in mine anger, and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you. 21. Yea, I will gather you, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye ſhall be melted in the midſt thereof. 22. As ſilver is melted in the midſt of the furnace, ſo ſhall ye be melted in the midſt thereof; and ye ſhall know that I the LORD have poured out my fury upon you.

v. 17—22. They who have made themſelves refuſe and vile, muſt expect to be treated accordingly.

1. The whole houſe of Iſrael is become droſs; once they were ſilver, but now wretchedly degenerated, deſpicable and uſeleſs as the ſcum of the furnace. Nothing precious remained in them, but like the baſer metals they were as braſs in impudence, as iron for hardneſs of heart, as tin for hypocriſy, and as lead for ſtupidity under all their warnings.

2. God threatens to gather them, as metals into the furnace, into Jeruſalem, whither they would flee on the approach of the Chaldeans, ſilver, braſs, iron, lead, and tin together; ſome gracious ſouls, repreſented by ſilver, being found among the reſt who would be purified by that fire of affliction, which would conſume the ungodly as droſs. There God will blow upon them as a refiner, in wrath and anger melt them with his judgments, and leave them there under the dire tokens of his diſpleaſure, devoted to famine, peſtilence, and the ſword during the ſiege, and made to acknowledge, in the judgments they felt, the heavy hand of God which was laid upon them. Note, In the day of judgment, the ſinners of every character will be collected, and caſt into the furnace of fire; and they who are once ſhut up there, will remain there to eternity.

23. ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 24. Son of man, ſay unto her, Thou art the land that is not cleanſed, nor rained upon in the day of indignation. 25. [a] There is a conſpiracy of her prophets in the midſt thereof, like a roaring lion ravening the prey: they have [b] devoured ſouls: [c] they have taken the treaſure and precious things: they have made her many widows in the midſt thereof. 26. Her prieſts have † violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have [d] put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they ſhewed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my ſabbaths, and I am profaned among them. 27. Her [e] princes in the midſt thereof are like wolves ravening the prey, to ſhed blood, and to deſtroy ſouls, to get diſhoneſt gain. 28. And [f] her prophets have daubed them with untempered morter, [g] ſeeing vanity, and divining lies unto them, [h] ſaying, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, when the LORD hath not ſpoken. 29. [i] The people of the land have uſed ‡ oppreſſion, and exerciſed robbery, and have vexed the poor and needy: yea, they have oppreſſed the ſtranger wrongfully. 30. And [k] I ſought for a man amongſt them that ſhould [l] make up the hedge, and [m] ſtand in the gap before me for the land, that I ſhould not deſtroy it: but I found none. 31. Therefore have I poured out mine indignation upon them, I have conſumed them with the fire of my wrath: [n] their own way have I recompenſed upon their heads, ſaith the Lord GOD.

v. 23—31. The various methods of divine providence and grace made no impreſſion on the people of Iſrael. They were neither cleanſed from their filthineſs by the judgments they ſuffered, nor reformed by the warnings they received; like the parched ground not rained upon, ſo were their hearts hard and impenetrable; and whilſt God withheld from them the dew of heaven to water the earth, in his indignation he ſent a heavier judgment, withholding the dew of his heavenly influences, v. 24. All ranks and orders of men among them were advanced to the ſummit of wickedneſs.

1. The falſe prophets who ſhould, by the office they pretended to aſſume, have ſtood in the gap, and by their prayers and labours ſought to avert the impending judgments, inſtead of that, formed a conſpiracy to perſecute the true prophets, and flatter the people to their ruin. Like ravening lions they devoured ſouls, taking away the lives of the innocent, or by their falſe doctrines murdered immortal ſouls. They have taken the treaſure and precious things of the innocent, deſtroyed by them; or of the deluded, who paid them well for their lying divinations of peace. They have made her many widows in the midſt thereof, by the murders they have committed, or by their encouraging that rebellion in which ſo many periſhed. Note, Lying prophets who deceived ſinners to their ruin, ſhall receive the heavieſt ſtrokes of vengeance.

2. The prieſts cordially joined with the falſe prophets in their wickedneſs. They violated God's law, perverting it in their explications, and contradicting it in their practice; ſo that inſtead of teaching others, their examples were the greateſt encouragement to the wicked. They made no difference between holy and profane, paid no regard to the preſcription of God, but lived at large, obſerving neither diſtinction of meats nor days; the ſabbath to them was but as a common day; they admitted, indiſcriminately, any into the courts of the temple, and out of it kept company with the ceremonially unclean, or the abandoned, without a word of rebuke. Thus God was profaned among them, his word abuſed, his ordinances ſlighted, his authority deſpiſed.

3. The princes, who as miniſters of juſtice ſhould have vindicated the oppreſſed, and exerted their power in the protection of injured innocence, were themſelves like wolves ravening the prey; inſidious, arbitrary, lawleſs, cruel; not only plundering the weak with impunity, and with diſhoneſt gain grinding the faces of the poor, but even imbruing their hands in blood, as their rage, revenge, or covetouſneſs led them; deſtroying the lives of thoſe who had offended them, or on whoſe ſpoils they had fixed their greedy eye. And, ſhocking to relate! the infamous prophets, to curry favour with theſe wealthy patrons, flattered them in their wickedneſs, and daubed them with untempered morter; probably perſuading them they did God ſervice in perſecuting the troubleſome prophets, and the faithful who remonſtrated againſt their ſins, and vindicating their cruel deeds to others as wholſome ſeverities. Note, (1.) The height of ſtation aggravates the enormity of the offence. (2.) The daubing prophets at the elbows of the great, who proſtitute the ſacred office they pretend to bear, by mean compliances and infamous countenance given to their ſins, ſhall ſhortly meet an avenging God.

4. The people naturally followed examples ſo pernicious; the ſyſtem of corruption deſcended; and as each in an inferior ſtation had power, he uſed it to oppreſſion; and exerciſed robbery, vexing the poor by extortion, and treating the ſtranger wrongfully, whoſe ignorance laid him the more eaſily open to deceit and impoſition.

5. So general and univerſal was the apoſtacy, that not a man was found among all theſe prophets, prieſts, princes, or people, who endeavoured to interpoſe to make up the hedge, or ſtand in the gap to avert by his prayers, his admonitions, or his labours, the impending wrath, and endeavour the reformation of the land. God ſought for ſuch, and ſought in vain. Note, (1.) Sin makes the breach at which ruin enters. (2.) When none are found to pray or plead with God for the land, the caſe is deſperate.

6. Becauſe of theſe things, God's indignation is poured out; the fire kindles, the ſinners are conſumed together, and their own ways recompenſed on their heads. Note, However terrible the end of the ungodly may be, their ſufferings ſhall be no more than their deſerts.

CHAP. XXIII.

This, as well as the ſixteenth and twentieth chapters, is a hiſtory of the apoſtacies of God's people from him, and the aggravations of thoſe apoſtacies under the ſimilitude of corporal whoredom and adultery. Here is, 1. The apoſtacy of Iſrael and Samaria, ver. 1—8. And their ruin for it, ver. 9, 10. 2. The apoſtacy of Judah and Jeruſalem, ver. 11—21. for which they ſhall likewiſe periſh, ver. 22—35. 3. The joint-wickedneſs of both together, ver. 36—44. and the joint-ruin of them both, ver. 45—49.

1. THE word of the LORD came again unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, there were [a] two women the daughters of one mother. 3. And [b] they committed whoredoms in Egypt, they committed whoredoms in their youth: there were their breaſts preſſed, and there they bruiſed the teats of their virginity. 4.
And the names of them were † Aholah the ‡ elder, and § Aholibah her ſiſter: and [c] they were mine, and they bare ſons and daughters: thus were their names, Samaria is Aholah, and Jeruſalem Aholibah. 5. And Aholah played the harlot when ſhe was mine, and ſhe doted on her lovers, on [d] the Aſſyrians her neighbours, 6. Which were cloathed with blue, captains and rulers, all of them deſirable young men, horſemen riding upon horſes. 7. Thus ſhe committed her whoredoms with them, with all them that were ‖ the choſen men of Aſſyria, and with all on whom ſhe doted, with all their idols ſhe defiled herſelf. 8. Neither left ſhe her whoredoms [e] brought from Egypt: for in her youth they lay with her, and they bruiſed the breaſts of her virginity, and poured their whoredom upon her. 9. Wherefore I have delivered her into the hand of her lovers, [f] into the hand of the Aſſyrians, upon whom ſhe doted. 10.
Theſe [g] diſcovered her nakedneſs, they took her ſons and her daughters, and ſlew her with the ſword: and ſhe became † famous among women, for they had executed

v. 1—10. Iſrael and Judah, ſiſter kingdoms, the daughters of one mother, ſprung from the ſame original ſtock, are here conſidered under the character of two infamous women, Aholah, and Aholibah.

1. They were early debauched by idolatry; even in Egypt they began to tranſgreſs, and loſt their virgin honour, v. 3.

2. Though they were God's eſpouſed ones, and he was pleaſed to take them for his own, and to raiſe them up a numerous offspring; yet they treacherouſly departed from him, and played the harlot. Aholah, which is Samaria, ſignifies her tabernacle, ſhe having firſt forſook God's tabernacle, and ſet up her own worſhip at Dan and Bethel. She is called the elder, or greater, the kingdom of Iſrael conſiſting of ten tribes. Though ſhe had revolted from the royal houſe of David, God ſtill owned her for his; but her abominable idolatries ſoon made a fatal ſeparation. She doated on her lovers, particularly on her Aſſyrian neighbours; contracted alliances with them: admired their idols, their worſhip, and military forces, which were ſo richly dreſſed, and placed on them the dependance ſhe withdrew from God, v. 7. Yet ſhe perſiſted alſo in the worſhip of the gods of Egypt, the beginning of her apoſtacy, and ſerved the calves in Bethel and Dan, as well as the newly-introduced deities of the Aſſyrians. Note, (1.) They who have been a profeſſing people, when they apoſtatize, ſink under the moſt aggravated guilt. (2.) Whatever we doat upon, becomes our idol; and God will not with impunity ſuffer us to give the honour, love, and homage due to him, unto another.

3. For their apoſtacy Samaria and Iſrael were deſtroyed. God made thoſe on whom they had doated, and whoſe idols they ſerved, the inſtruments of his vengeance, v. 9. They diſcovered her nakedneſs, ſtripped her of all her treaſures, led her children captives, and utterly ruined the kingdom; executing God's judgments upon her; ſo that ſhe became famous among women. Her crimes and her dreadful end were the general ſubject of converſation in the neighbouring lands, and afforded an awful warning not to imitate her ſins, leſt the ſame plagues ſhould follow. Note, (1.) Thoſe whom we have made our tempters, God in righteous judgment often makes our tormentors. (2.) They who render themſelves famous by wickedneſs, will by God's vengeance be made monuments of wretchedneſs.

11. And [h] when her ſiſter [i] Aholibah ſaw this, [k] ſhe was more corrupt in her inordinate love than ſhe, and in her whoredoms more than her ſiſter in her whoredoms.
12. She doted upon [l] the Aſſyrians her neighbours, captains and rulers clothed moſt gorgeouſly, horſemen riding upon horſes, all of them deſirable young men. 13.
Then I ſaw that ſhe was defiled, that [m] they took both one way. 14. And that ſhe increaſed her whoredoms: for when ſhe ſaw men pourtrayed upon the wall, the images of the Chaldeans pourtrayed with vermilion, 15.
Girded with girdles upon their loins, exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads: all of them princes to look to, after the manner of the Babylonians of Chaldea, the land of their nativity: 16. And [n] as ſoon as ſhe ſaw them with her eyes, ſhe doted upon them, and ſent meſſengers unto them into Chaldea. 17. And the † Babylonians came to her into the bed of love, and they defiled her with their whoredom, and ſhe was polluted with them, and [o] her mind was ‡ alienated from them. 18. So ſhe diſcovered her whoredoms, and diſcovered her nakedneſs:
then [p] my mind was alienated from her, like as my mind was alienated from her ſiſter. 19. Yet ſhe [q] multiplied her whoredoms, in calling to remembrance the days of her youth, wherein ſhe had played the harlot in the land of Egypt. 20. For ſhe doted upon their paramours, [r] whoſe fleſh is as the fleſh of aſſes, and whoſe iſſue is like the iſſue of horſes. 21. Thus thou calledſt to remembrance the lewdneſs of thy youth, in bruiſing thy teats by the Egyptians, for the paps of thy youth.

v. 11—21. Far from taking warning by Samaria's fate, Jeruſalem not only copied but exceeded her abominations. She is called Aholibah, or, my tabernacle is in her, God having choſen Zion for his peculiar abode, and this exceedingly aggravated the guilt of her apoſtacy.

1. She took the ſame way to defile herſelf her ſiſter had done, doating upon the Aſſyrians; admiring the dreſs and military appearance of their captains and ſoldiers; courting their alliance; depending on them for protection; increaſing her idols beyond what Samaria had done, v. 14. falling in love with the very pictures of their deified heroes, who were pourtrayed in rich attire on the walls of their temples, v. 14, 15. and ſending meſſengers to Chaldea to form a league, and adopt their idols and worſhip, v. 16. And no ſooner had ſhe taken the Babylonians to her adulterous bed, and defiled herſelf with their idols, than ſhe was alienated from them, as luſt and loathing often ſucceed each other. She rebelled under Jehoiakim and Zedekiah, 2 Kings xxiv. 1, 20. and caſt off the alliance with Babylon, v. 17. and calling to mind with pleaſure the idolatries of the Egyptians, v. 21. returned to play the harlot with them, doating on theſe paramours, as better ſuiting her inſatiable lewdneſs, v. 20. openly diſcovering her whoredoms and her nakedneſs, as a brazen proſtitute hardened againſt ſhame. Note, (1.) Inordinate appetites indulged only grow more fickle and craving. (2.) Long habit of ſin gives effrontery to the lewd, and they dare avow and boaſt of what others bluſh to name, and tremble but to think of.

2. God ſaw and abhorred ſuch ſhameleſs idolatry, and his mind was alienated from her, as it was from her ſiſter. He caſt off Judah alſo from her relation to him, and left her, as a wife divorced, to all the miſeries which muſt enſue when his protection was withdrawn. Note, They who provoke God to caſt them from his favour, have only themſelves to blame for the miſeries which follow.

22. ¶ Therefore, O Aholibah, thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [s] Behold, I will raiſe up thy lovers againſt thee, from whom thy mind is alienated, and I will bring them againſt thee on every ſide; 23. The Babylonians, and all the Chaldeans, [t] Pekod and Shoa, and Koa, and all the Aſſyrians with them: all of them deſirable young men, captains and rulers, great lords and renowned, all of them riding upon horſes. 24. And they ſhall come againſt thee with chariots, wagons, and wheels, and with an aſſembly of people which ſhall ſet againſt thee buckler, and ſhield, and helmet round about: and I will ſet judgment before them, and they ſhall judge thee according to their judgments. 25. And [u] I will ſet my jealouſy againſt thee, and they ſhall deal furiouſly with thee: they ſhall take away thy noſe and thine ears, and thy remnant ſhall fall by the ſword: they ſhall take thy ſons and thy daughters, and thy reſidue ſhall be devoured by the fire. 26. [x] They ſhall alſo ſtrip thee out of thy cloaths, and take away † thy fair jewels. 27. Thus [y] will I make thy lewdneſs to ceaſe from thee, and thy whoredom brought from the land of Egypt: ſo that thou ſhalt not lift up thine eyes unto them, nor remember Egypt any more. 28. For thus ſaith the Lord GOD,

v. 22—35. We have here,

1. Judgment pronounced on Jeruſalem for her crimes. Thoſe lovers on whom ſhe doated are appointed to be her deſtroyers : their armies, with a vaſt train of carriages, at God's command ſhall come up, beſiege and deſtroy the cities, and lay waſte the country, v. 22—24. As a jealous huſband, enraged with an adulterous wife, God will viſit them in fury ; the Chaldeans ſhall cut off their noſe and ears, literally disfiguring them to render them loathſome, or deſtroying their king, princes, and prieſts, repreſented by theſe ; and ſlay all the remnant of the people, except thoſe who, ſtripped of all their ornaments, even to their cloaths, ſhall be driven, naked as ſlaves, into a miſerable captivity, v. 26. and the few houſes in Jeruſalem that have ſtood the ſiege unhurt, ſhall now be burnt with fire, v. 25. Delivered into the hands of thoſe they hated, and againſt whom they had rebelled, v. 28. they may expect no favour or pity : they will deal hatefully with them ; treat them with rigour and ſeverity ; plunder all their poſſeſſions ; leave them naked and bare ; and in the greatneſs of their puniſhment the greatneſs of their crimes will appear, v. 29.

2. God's wrath evidently ſeen in their ruin will make their ſufferings ſtill more bitter. Though he employs the Chaldeans as inſtruments, he ſays, v. 30. I will do theſe things unto thee ; and moſt righteous will he appear in his judgments : their flagrant idolatries juſtify his ſevereſt ſtrokes of vengeance, v. 30. Since they walked in Samaria's ways, they deſerve to drink of her cup full of fury, a cup of drunkenneſs, ſorrow, aſtoniſhment, and deſolation, the very dregs of which they muſt ſuck out ; and, expoſed to the ſcorn and deriſion of the nations around them, for madneſs and vexation at their wretched ſtate, ſhall pluck off their own breaſts, as men in a fit of rage and deſpair, v. 31—34. Becauſe they have forgotten God, which is the ſource of all their wickedneſs, and caſt him behind their backs, deſpiſing his authority, and rejecting his government, he will lay upon them the puniſhment of their idolatries and lewdneſs, v. 35. and make theſe to ceaſe from among them ; ſo that the remnant, who are brought through this fiery furnace, ſhall never return to idolatry again, v. 27. as they never more did after the captivity. Note, (1.) They who ſhare with the wicked in their ſins, may expect to ſhare with them in their plagues. (2.) The cup of drunkenneſs will ever prove a cup of ſorrow. (3.) They who by lewdneſs have made themſelves vile, juſtly deſerve to have their whoredoms diſcovered, and to be made the deriſion of every beholder.

36. ¶ The LORD ſaid moreover unto me, Son of man, [l] wilt thou † judge [m] Aholah and Aholibah ? yea, [n] declare unto them their abominations ; 37. That they have committed adultery, and [o] blood is in their hands, and with their idols have they committed adultery, and have alſo [p] cauſed their ſons whom they bare unto me, to paſs for them through the fire to devour them. 38. Moreover, this they have done unto me : they [q] have defiled my ſanctuary in the ſame day, and [r] have profaned my ſabbaths. 39. For when they had ſlain their children to their idols, then they came the ſame day into my ſanctuary to profane it ; and lo, [s] thus have they done in the midſt of mine houſe. 40. And furthermore, that ye have ſent for men to come from far, unto whom a meſſenger was ſent, and lo, they came, for whom thou didſt waſh thyſelf, [t] paintedſt thy eyes, and deckedſt thyſelf with ornaments, 41. And ſatteſt upon a ‡ ſtately [u] bed, and a table prepared before it, [x] whereupon thou haſt ſet mine incenſe and mine oil. 42. And a voice of a multitude being at eaſe was with her, and with the men of the common ſort were brought § Sabeans from the wilderneſs, which put bracelets upon their hands, and beautiful crowns upon their heads. 43. Then ſaid I unto her that was old in adulteries, Will they now commit ‖ whoredoms with her, and ſhe with them ? 44. Yet they went in unto her, as they go in unto a woman that playeth the harlot : ſo went they in unto Aholah and unto Aholibah the lewd women. 45. ¶ And the righteous men, they ſhall [y] judge them after the manner of adultereſſes, and after the manner of women that ſhed blood ; becauſe they are adultereſſes, and [z] blood is in their hands. 46. For thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [a] I will bring up a company upon them, and will give them to be removed and ſpoiled. 47. And the company [b] ſhall ſtone them with ſtones, and † diſpatch them with their ſwords ; they ſhall ſlay their ſons and their daughters, and burn up their houſes with fire. 48. Thus [c] will I cauſe lewdneſs to ceaſe out of the land, [d] that all women may be taught not to do after your lewdneſs. 49. And they ſhall recompenſe your lewdneſs upon you, and [e] ye ſhall bear the ſins of your idols : [f] and ye ſhall know that I am the Lord GOD.

v. 36—49. After the account given of the wickedneſs of Judah and Iſrael, God appeals to the prophet, whether he ought any longer to plead for them, or whether he ought not in God's name to condemn them to the death they had deſerved.

1. He muſt declare unto them their abominations ; and they were exceeding ſinful.

(1.) Groſs idolatry, which is ſpiritual adultery, the breach of the covenant between God and them, v. 37.

(2.) The moſt unnatural murders, even the ſacrificing their own children to Moloch ; ſo beſotted were they, and mad upon their idols, v. 37.

(3.) Horrid profanation of God's ſanctuary. With the blood of innocents freſh upon them, that very day, with unhallowed feet and polluted lips, they dared appear before God in his temple, as if deſigning to affront him, or as if they thought with hypocritical ſervices to impoſe upon him : and this they did in the midſt of his houſe, ſetting up their idols even there, or without ſhame daring to appear among the foremoſt worſhippers.

(4.) They profaned the ſabbaths, not only by ſervile works, or taking their pleaſures on that holy day, but by the worſhip of their idols, and the horrid ſacrifices of their own children.

(5.) They courted the alliances of the heathen nations, the Egyptians, Aſſyrians, and Chaldeans ; received their ambaſſadors in great ſtate and ſplendor, as a harlot attires and paints herſelf to meet her paramour ; made them a noble entertainment ; uſed the ſacred incenſe to perfume the room, and the oil to anoint them, as a mark of peculiar honour : or perhaps, as ſome ſuſpect, theſe were deſigned for the ambaſſadors uſe, to be employed in their idol's ſervice, v. 41. A great concourſe of people alſo aſſembled to grace their public entrance ; a multitude at eaſe, who flattered themſelves ſuch great alliances muſt needs conduce to the ſecurity of the ſtate. And beſides the Jewiſh populace, a number of Sabeans from the deſart ſwelled the cavalcade ; or of drunkards, as in the margin, to drink healths and huzza on this auſpicious event ; dreſſed up with bracelets on their hands, and crowns upon their heads, that they might make the moſt ſplendid appearance, v. 42. God in vain admoniſhed them of the folly, ſin, and danger of ſuch connections : they were grown old in adultery, and hardened againſt reproof. The alliance was concluded ; they went in unto her, as to a harlot : Samaria firſt, and Jeruſalem afterwards, as lewd and abandoned women, gladly received them, and joined in their idolatries, v. 44. Note, (1.) The affectation of being well with the great, hath been often a dangerous ſnare to men's ſouls. (2.) They who deſert God for human confidences, however ſmiling their undertakings at firſt may appear, will find in the iſſue a lie in their right hand.

2. He muſt denounce againſt them God's wrath. The righteous men, they ſhall judge them ; which ſome underſtand of the prophets of God, who foretold their doom, and paſſed ſentence upon them ; though others more probably apply it to the Babylonians, who were comparatively more righteous than they, and were appointed of God as the executioners of his righteous vengeance. Their crimes were capital, adulteries and murders manifold, and their puniſhment accordingly, v. 45. A company at God's command, the Chaldean army, ſhall come, and ſeize and ſpoil them, v. 46. Some ſhall be ſtoned, ſlain with the engines that battered the city ; others diſpatched with the ſword; their ſons and daughters murdered in their preſence; their city and every houſe burnt with fire, v. 47. Thus by the utter ruin of the kingdom, the worſhip of idols ſhould be utterly deſtroyed, and never more be reſtored; and all who behold their ruin will be warned againſt their ſins, v. 48. With ſuch wrath and deſtruction ſhould their lewdneſs be recompenſed, and the burden of their guilt and puniſhment be heavily laid on them; ſo that if they will not be taught any other way, by their ſufferings at leaſt they ſhall be made to know that God is the Lord, true to his threatnings, and almighty to accompliſh them, v. 49. Note, (1.) Others falls ſhould be our warning. (2.) However ſinners may flatter themſelves, a day of recompence is near, when they will receive the wrath they have provoked.

CHAP. XXIV.

The deſign of this prophecy is to ſhew the certain ruin of Jeruſalem: it was delivered the very day the king of Babylon began to prepare for the ſiege, ver. 2. 1. By the ſign of fleſh boiling in a pot is ſhewed, the miſeries that Jeruſalem ſhould ſuffer during the ſiege, ver. 3—14. 2. By the ſign of Ezekiel's not mourning for the death of his wife, is ſhewed, that the calamities coming upon Jeruſalem were too great to be lamented, ver. 15—27.

590. 1. AGAIN in the ninth year, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, Write thee the name of the day, even of this ſame day: the king of Babylon ſet himſelf againſt Jeruſalem [a] this ſame day. 3. And utter a parable unto the rebellious houſe, and ſay unto them, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [b] Set on a pot, ſet it on, and alſo pour water into it. 4. [c] Gather the pieces thereof into it, even every good piece, the thigh and the ſhoulder, fill it with the choice bones. 5. Take the choice of the flock, and † burn alſo the bones under it, and make it boil well, and let them ſeethe the bones of it therein. 6. ¶ Wherefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Wo to the [d] bloody city, to the pot whoſe ſcum is therein, and whoſe ſcum is not gone out of it; bring it out piece by piece, [e] let no lot fall upon it. 7. For her blood is in the midſt of her, [f] ſhe ſet it upon the top of a rock, [g] ſhe poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with duſt: 8. That it might cauſe fury to come up to take vengeance, I have ſet her blood upon the top of a rock, that it ſhould not be covered. 9. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [h] Wo to the bloody city, I will even make the pile for fire great. 10. Heap on wood, kindle the fire, conſume the fleſh, and ſpice it well, and let the bones be burnt. 11. Then ſet it empty upon the coals thereof, that the braſs of it may be hot, and may burn, and that the filthineſs of it may be molten in it, that the ſcum of it may be conſumed. 12. She hath wearied ‡ herſelf with lies, and her great ſcum went not forth out of her: her ſcum ſhall be in the fire. 13. In thy filthineſs is lewdneſs: becauſe I have [i] purged thee, and [k] thou waſt not purged, [l] thou ſhalt not be purged from thy filthineſs any more, [m] till I have cauſed my fury to reſt upon thee. 14. [n] I the LORD have ſpoken it, it ſhall come to paſs, and I will do it, I will not go back, [o] neither will I ſpare, neither will I repent; according to thy ways, and according to thy doings ſhall they judge thee, ſaith the Lord GOD.

v. 1—14. The king of Babylon was now gone forth with his army, his deſigns a ſecret probably to all, but God knew whither his courſe was bent, and what he was doing; and, the very day Jeruſalem was inveſted, reveals it to the prophet, and bids him write it down, probably in ſome public regiſter, that when the intelligence arrived, they might be confirmed in the divine authority by which he ſpake, ſince at ſo vaſt a diſtance none could have conveyed the tidings, had they not come immediately from God: and hereby they might be aſſured of the fulfilment of all his other predictions, particularly the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which they ſtill flattered themſelves ſhould not be taken. To undeceive them, though a rebellious houſe, God gives them,

1. A ſign: a boiling pot, v. 3. ſee Jer. i. 13. filled with the beſt pieces of meat, v. 4. with the choiceſt bones from the prime of the flock, v. 5. and a fire continually fed, till the whole was thoroughly boiled together.

2. The explication of the ſign, or parable. The pot is Jeruſalem, the bloody city, on whom God denounces woe, v. 9. the fire is God's wrath burning fierce and conſtant; the choice pieces are the great men of Jeruſalem with their king; the bones, their ſtrong warriors. Theſe together muſt boil till their ſcum riſes, intimating the wrath due to their provocations; and it is not gone out, they continuing impenitent under all their ſufferings. Therefore God commands, Bring it out piece by piece; none of any age, ſex, or ſtation, muſt be ſpared: let no lot fall upon it, to ſave any from the general deſtruction. Heap on wood, kindle the fire, conſume the fleſh; thoroughly boil it down, denoting the intenſeneſs and continuance of the miſeries the beſieged would undergo: make it ſavoury, that the Chaldeans may greedily devour the prey; and let the bones be burnt, the men of war deſtroyed: then ſet it empty upon the coals thereof, that the braſs of it may be hot and burn; the city, after the ſiege, being by Nebuchadnezzar's order burnt to the ground.

3. The juſtice of God in this deſtruction of Jeruſalem is manifeſted: it is the juſt reward of her crimes, ſo black and enormous. Becauſe ſhe hath ſhed openly and laviſhly the blood of innocents, and far from deſiring to conceal her guilt, on the top of the rock it ſtood proclaimed, as if daring divine vengeance. Probably on theſe eminencies they ſacrificed their children, v. 7. therefore God heard the cry, and awaked to judgment, and in righteous retaliation will pour out their blood on the top of a rock, executing them publicly as malefactors. Their ſcum, their filthy ways, ſhall be conſumed, ſince inſtead of being led to repentance by what they had ſuffered, and the warnings God had given them, they hardned their hearts: like a pot which boils over, their ſcum running over into the fire, ſhall add fierceneſs to the flames, in which they will miſerably periſh. With lies, with idol vanities, or the falſe hopes the prophets of Judah ſuggeſted, or the alliances ſhe had formed, ſhe had wearied herſelf; diſappointed of all her expectations, v. 12. yet unhumbled ſtill, and obſtinately perſiſting in her ſins. In thy filthineſs is lewdneſs, a fixed and rooted delight in ſin, and daring avowal of it; ſo that all the means uſed were ineffectual to reclaim her. I have purged thee, and thou waſt not purged; therefore ſince the caſe was deſperate, ſhe is abandoned to ruin: ſhe ſhall not be purged from her filthineſs any more; no methods ſhall be uſed for her recovery, but God's fury ſhall reſt upon her, v. 13. without pity, and without repentance; according to her deeds he will recompenſe her in judgment, and his decree gone forth is irreverſible; it ſhall ſurely come to paſs. Note, (1.) Blood will cry for vengeance, and daring ſinners ſhall one day be made a ſpectacle to angels and to men. (2.) They who harden their hearts againſt the means God uſes for their converſion, muſt periſh without remedy. (3.) It is moſt juſt to abandon thoſe to their own luſts, who ſay unto the Almighty, Depart from us. (4.) The truth of God is engaged for the puniſhment of ſinners: unleſs he prove a liar, they muſt lie down in everlaſting burnings.

15. ¶ Alſo the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 16. Son of man, behold, I take away from thee [p] the deſire of thine eyes with a ſtroke: yet neither ſhalt thou mourn nor weep, neither ſhall thy tears run down. 17. † Forbear to cry, make no mourning for the dead, [q] bind the tire of thine head upon thee, and put on thy ſhoes upon thy feet, and cover not thy ‡ lips, and eat not the bread of men. 18. So I ſpake unto the people in the morning, and at even my wife died; and I did in the morning as I was commanded. 19. ¶ And the people ſaid unto me, Wilt thou not tell us what theſe things are to us, that thou doſt ſo? 20. Then I anſwered them, The word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 21. Speak unto the houſe of Iſrael, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, [r] I will profane my ſanctuary, the excellency of your ſtrength, the deſire of your eyes, and § that which your ſoul pitieth; and your ſons and your daughters whom ye have left ſhall fall by the ſword. 22. And your tires ſhall be upon your heads, and your ſhoes upon your feet: [t] ye ſhall not mourn nor weep, but [u] ye ſhall pine away for your iniquities, and mourn one towards another. 24. Thus [x] Ezekiel is unto you a ſign: according to all that he hath done ſhall ye do: [y] and when this cometh, [z] ye ſhall know that I am the Lord GOD. 25. Alſo thou ſon of man, ſhall it not be in the day when I take from them their ſtrength, the joy of their glory, the deſire of their eyes, and ‖ that whereupon they ſet their minds, their ſons and their daughters; 26. That [a] he that eſcapeth in that day ſhall come unto thee, to cauſe thee to hear it with thine ears? 27. be a ſign unto them, and they ſhall know that I am the LORD.

v. 15—27. By another ſign, that moſt nearly affected the prophet, the certain ruin of Jeruſalem is foretold.

1. God will ſuddenly take from him the wife on whom he placed his fond affections, the deſire of his eyes, with a ſtroke. Note, (1.) Thoſe who are joined in marriage bonds ſhould delight in each other, and ſtudy mutually to render themſelves every day more amiable and deſirable in each other's eyes. (2.) Death ſpares not the deareſt relatives, and the ſuddenneſs of the ſtroke often renders the ſeparation more grievous; but God's hand ſeen in the viſitation, ſhould reconcile us to his will: he gave, and, when he pleaſes, may juſtly reſume his own gifts.

2. Ezekiel is forbidden to ſhew any ſymptom of grief and mourning, ſuch as were natural and uſual on theſe melancholy occaſions. His tears muſt neither flow, however bitter his inward anguiſh; nor muſt he make any change, as was uſual in ſuch a caſe, in his attire; nor eat the bread of men, ſuch as was ſent to mourners by their friends during their firſt pangs of ſorrow, when they were ſuppoſed inattentive to the calls of nature.

3. The prophet is all obedience. He ſpake to the people in the morning concerning this melancholy event, and at even his prediction was verified, his wife died ſuddenly. The next morning he appeared as uſual, without expreſſing one ſymptom of his bitter ſorrow, ſince ſo the Lord had commanded him. Note, (1.) Submiſſion to God's will, however bitter the affliction, is not only our duty, but ſhould be our delight. (2.) They who are put in truſt with the goſpel, muſt ſhew a deadneſs to the world; not only to its inordinate cares, but muſt alſo moderate their ſorrows, as examples to others of humble reſignation.

4. Such a behaviour in the prophet naturally excited the people's enquiries into the cauſe; and ſuſpecting it was with a view to them, they deſired to be informed of the meaning of his conduct, and he is ordered fully to explain it to them. Ezekiel is a ſign unto them: as God had done to him, ſo would he ſhortly deal with them, and cauſe them to act in like manner. Their ſanctuary, once their glory and boaſt, the deſire of their eyes, for though they had loſt the power of godlineſs, they prided themſelves in the temple; the excellency of their ſtrength, on which they placed their chief confidence, and that which their ſoul pitied; they could not think of its deſolations without being deeply affected; it ſhall be profaned, given into the hands of the heathen, and utterly demoliſhed by them; and their ſons and daughters, the joy of their hearts, who were left from the peſtilence and famine, ſhall fall by the Chaldean ſword, v. 21. And as Ezekiel had done, ſo ſhould they do, ſhewing no token of grief, becauſe ſo great it would overwhelm them, and be too big for utterance: or not daring to complain, for fear of provoking their conquerors: or when all were involved in the common calamity, none would remain exempted to ſend the bread of mourners to their neighbours: nor could they make bare their feet, when forced to travel into a miſerable captivity. Thus in ſilent anguiſh they ſhould pine away in their iniquities, hardened in impenitence, and ſhut up in deſpair, and mourn one towards another, when they could privately meet together; not to bewail in penitence their ſins, but to murmur and complain againſt God, and aggravate their miſeries by their impatience under them. Note, (1.) Great griefs often ſtupify, and finding no vent in tears, pent up they overwhelm the ſoul. (2.) They who mourn only for their ſufferings, but not for their ſins, ſhew their hearts to be yet hardened.

5. The event would ſhortly verify the prophetic word. The tidings of the dreadful cataſtrophe of the Jews would reach Babylon; ſome miſerable fugitive would report how terribly Jeruſalem fell; her ſtrength broken; her armies deſtroyed; her riches plundered; the temple, the joy of their glory, in which they placed eſpecial confidence, deſtroyed; and their ſons and daughters, on whom they had ſet their fond affections, the deſire of their eyes, maſſacred by the Chaldean ſword, v. 25. Then ſhould the prophet's lips be opened, to converſe with the meſſenger of theſe grievous tidings, and enquire into the particulars; and though from the time of this prophecy he was dumb, ſpoke no more to the Jews, but turned himſelf to other nations; then his tongue ſhall be looſed again, to addreſs them, and urge the puniſhments inflicted on the rebellious, according to the ſign given them, as arguments for the repentance of the captives, who muſt know and own the truth and righteouſneſs of God, manifeſted in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Note, (1.) They who will not believe God's warnings, will at laſt be convinced of their truth by his judgments. (2.) When men ſet their minds on creature-comforts, God often puniſhes them in deſtroying their idols.

CHAP. XXV.

Judgment begins at the houſe of God, but it does not end there. Sentence has already been paſſed upon Judah, here the neighbouring nations are threatned. 1. The Ammonites, ver. 1—7. 2. The Moabites, ver. 8—11. 3. The Edomites, ver. 11—14. 4. The Philiſtines, ver. 15—17. That which is laid to the charge of each of them is their barbarous and inſolent carriage towards God's Iſrael; for none ſhall trample on God's people with impunity.

v. 1—7. The Ammonites, the implacable enemies of the Jewiſh people, are firſt to be reckoned with. The Lord Jehovah, the God of Iſrael, declares their provocations, and denounces their doom.

1. Their crime was, the malicious pleaſure they took in ſeeing God's Iſrael ruined. They beheld with delight the profanations of the ſanctuary, and exulted in the deſolations and captivity of the people; expreſſing the rancour and deſpite of their hearts by their outward geſtures, clapping their hands, leaping, and ſhouting for thoſe miſeries, which the leaſt humanity would have taught them to pity. Note, (1.) The enmity of the natural heart againſt God's people is ſure to expreſs itſelf on their falls or miſfortunes. (2.) God obſerves and will ſeverely viſit the malice and rancour ſhewn by the enemies of his Iſrael.

2. Their puniſhment for this inſolent carriage will be their utter deſtruction. The men of the eaſt, the Chaldeans, or the Arabians, who were in Nebuchadnezzar's army, and afterwards poſſeſſed the country; they ſhall ſeize their land for a poſſeſſion, ſet up their palaces therein, and dwell there, feaſting on their ſpoil, their fruits, and their milk, v. 4. Rabbah, the metropolis, ſhall be turned into a ſtable for camels, and the country feed the flocks of their conquerors, v. 5. God's ſtretched-out arm ſhall make an end of them, cut them off from being any longer a people, and cauſe them to periſh from the earth, v. 6. and in this terrible deſtruction make his own great name known as the avenger of his people's wrongs.

8. ¶ Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [g] Becauſe that Moab and Seir do ſay, Behold [h] the houſe of Judah is like unto all the heathen: 9. v. 8—17. Three other guilty nations are called to God's bar, and hear their doom. Their crimes and their puniſhments are nearly ſimilar.

1. The Moabites.

(1.) Their crime was, delight in the ſins and ſufferings of God's people. They ſay, Behold the houſe of Judah is like unto all the heathen; perfect apoſtates from their God, and wholly given to idolatry, and, as the conſequence thereof, fallen into the hands of the Babylonians; and no diſtinction ſubſiſting between them and others, of which they uſed to boaſt. Note, (1.) Apoſtates from God's worſhip give the adverſaries great occaſion to blaſpheme. (2.) Though the ſame event happens to the righteous and the wicked, yet God knows how to put a vaſt difference between them.

(2.) The puniſhment of Moab would be to become a prey to the ſame invaders as had deſtroyed the country of Ammon: their defences ruined; their country laid open; and their capital cities, their glory, demoliſhed. Thus ſhould they fall as the Ammonites their neighbours, whoſe name would be loſt among the nations; and by theſe judgments God executes, his power, his wrath, and the truth of his threatnings would be known unto them.

2. The Edomites.

(1.) They not only, as their neighbours of Moab and Ammon, beheld and rejoiced in the fall of Judea; but they remembred the old grudge between Jacob and Eſau, their ſubjection by David, and their chaſtiſement by Amaziah, and now embraced the favourable moment to execute their cruel revenge upon the poor afflicted people; at which God is highly and juſtly offended, v. 12. Note, Whatever provocations we have received, it is highly criminal to entertain malice, or revenge ourſelves: this is God's prerogative; Vengeance is mine.

(2.) God will puniſh them ſeverely: from north to ſouth the ravages of the Chaldeans ſhall ſpread, and man and beaſt be cut off by the out-ſtretched arm of the Lord: and when afterwards they returned from their captivity, and began to recover themſelves, by the hand of his people Iſrael God will lay vengeance upon them; which was fulfilled under the Maccabees, 1 Mac. v. 3. and Hircanus, as Joſephus relates, ſubdued and made them tributaries. Thus will the Lord pour out his anger and fury upon them, and make them know by what they feel, againſt what a God of omnipotence and juſtice they have offended.

3. The Philiſtines. Their ſin and puniſhment is nearly ſimilar. With a deſpiteful heart they ſeized this opportunity of taking vengeance for the old grudge they bore them: but they ſhall ſuffer for it; God's arm of vengeance ſhall eſpouſe his people's quarrel; their mighty men ſhall periſh, their maritime cities be deſtroyed, and with furious rebukes they ſhall be made to know, that Iſrael's God is above all gods, and be made to confeſs his righteous judgments.

CHAP. XXVI.

The city of Tyre, the famed mart of nations, and known throughout the world, is next brought to God's bar. We have here, 1. The ſin charged upon Tyre, which was triumphing in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ver. 2. 2. Its deſtruction foretold, (1.) The extremity of it, it ſhall be utterly ruined, ver. 4—6, 12, 13, 14. (2.) The inſtruments of this deſtruction, many nations, ver. 3. particularly the king of Babylon, with his vaſt victorious army, ver. 7—11. (3.) The great ſurprize and alarm that this ſhould give to the neighbouring nations, ver. 15—21.

1. AND it came to paſs in the eleventh year, in the firſt day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, [a] becauſe that Tyrus hath ſaid againſt Jeruſalem, [b] Aha, ſhe is broken that was the gates of the people: ſhe is turned unto me, I ſhall be repleniſhed now ſhe is laid waſte: 3. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, I am againſt thee, O Tyrus, and will cauſe many nations to come up againſt thee, as the ſea cauſeth his waves to come up. 4. And they ſhall deſtroy the walls of Tyrus, and break down her towers: I will alſo ſcrape her duſt from her, and make her like the top of a rock. 5. It ſhall be a place for the ſpreading of nets in the midſt of the ſea: for I have ſpoken it, ſaith the Lord GOD, and it ſhall become a ſpoil to the nations. 6. And her daughters which are in the field ſhall be ſlain by the ſword, and [c] they ſhall know that I am the LORD. 7. ¶ For thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, I will bring upon Tyrus Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, [d] a king of kings from the north, with horſes, and with chariots, and with horſemen, and companies, and much people. 8. He ſhall ſlay with the ſword thy daughters in the field, and he ſhall make a fort againſt thee, and † caſt a mount againſt thee, and lift up the buckler againſt thee. 9. And he ſhall ſet engines of war againſt thy walls, and with his axes he ſhall break down thy towers. 10. By reaſon of the abundance of his horſes, their duſt ſhall cover thee, thy walls ſhall ſhake at the noiſe of the horſemen, and of the wheels, and of the chariots, when he ſhall enter into thy gates, ‡ as men enter into a city wherein a breach is made. 11. With the hoofs of his horſes ſhall he tread down all the ſtreets; he ſhall ſlay thy people by the ſword, and thy § ſtrong garriſons ſhall go down to the ground. 12. And they ſhall make a ſpoil of thy riches, and make a prey of thy merchandiſe, and they ſhall break down thy walls, and deſtroy ‖ thy pleaſant houſes, and they ſhall lay thy ſtones, and thy timber, and thy duſt in the midſt of the water. 13. And I will cauſe the noiſe of [e] thy ſongs to ceaſe, and the ſound of thy harps ſhall be no more heard. 14. And I will make thee like the top of a rock: thou ſhalt be a place to ſpread nets upon: thou ſhalt be built no more: for I the LORD have ſpoken it, ſaith the Lord GOD.

v. 1—14. The ſame year Jeruſalem was deſtroyed, was this prophecy delivered. We have,

1. The joy the Tyrians took in their ruin, and the hopes of advantage which they conceived would accrue to them from her fall. Jeruſalem had been the gates of the people, much frequented, a place of great trade, but was now broken down; and they hoped all the traffic that had been carried on there, would be transferred to them, and that they ſhould be repleniſhed, both with people who might fly thither, or with captives, and the ſpoil ſold by the conquerors. Note, It is very ſinful to be pleaſed with the death or misfortunes of thoſe who were our rivals in trade, or whoſe fall is our advantage; and the envy and covetouſneſs which appear herein, God will aſſuredly remember and puniſh.

2. God threatens to viſit Tyre for her iniquity. I am againſt thee; and he is more to be feared than innumerable hoſts. At his beck, and under his guidance, the king of Babylon ſhall beſiege the city with an immenſe army, raging like the waves of the ſea: the duſt raiſed by the multitude of his cavalry ſhall obſcure the ſkies as a thick cloud, and his military engines ſhake down the walls, till at the breach his troops ſhall enter, and ſpread deſolation on every ſide. Her daughters ſhall be ſlain with the ſword; either the cities and people of the continent ſubject to Tyre; or ſo terrible ſhould be the maſſacre when the city was taken, that not even the women will be ſpared: her garriſons beat to the ground; the ſtatues of her ſtrength, the images of her idols, on whom ſhe placed her confidence, trodden under foot; the very pavements broken with the prancings of the horſes; the rich merchandize becomes a prey to the beſiegers; the walls razed; the whole city laid in ruins; the very duſt ſcraped off, and made bare as the top of a rock. Deſerted now, no ſongs of mirth, no muſic, ſhall be heard any more in her; nor ſhall ſhe ever be rebuilt, at leaſt not on the ſame ſpot, or be reſtored to her former ſplendor, but remain a deſart waſte, as the top of a rock; a place for fiſhermen to dry their nets; which, according to the reports of thoſe who have been there, is to this day literally true of Tyre, ſince its final deſtruction. God hath ſpoken it, and therefore the fulfilment is ſure, and in theſe judgments he will make himſelf terribly known to them.

15. ¶ Thus ſaith the Lord GOD to Tyrus, [f] Shall not the iſles ſhake at the ſound of thy fall, when the wounded cry, when the ſlaughter is made in the midſt of thee? 16. Then [g] all the princes of the ſea ſhall come down from their thrones, and lay away their robes, and put off their broidered garments: they ſhall cloath themſelves with † trembling, they ſhall ſit upon the ground, and ſhall tremble at every moment, and be aſtoniſhed at thee. 17. And [h] they ſhall take up a lamentation for thee, and ſay to thee, How art thou deſtroyed that waſt inhabited ‡ of ſea-faring men, [i] the renowned city which waſt ſtrong in the ſea, ſhe and her inhabitants, which cauſe their terror to be on all that haunt it? 18. of thy fall ; yea, the iſles that are in the ſea [k] ſhall be cities that are not inhabited, when I ſhall bring up the deep upon thee, and great waters ſhall cover thee ; 20.

When I ſhall bring thee down with them that deſcend old, with them that go down to the pit, that thou be

v. 15—21. The dreadful ruin of Tyre is here farther deſcribed.

1. The iſlands of the ſea, terrified with her fall, will quake for fear ; their princes deſcending from their thrones, with expreſſions of deepeſt ſorrow ſhall mourn over her deſolations, whilſt they tremble in expectation of ſharing her fate. They ſhall take up their lamentation, aſtoniſhed how ſuch a glorious city could be deſtroyed, and weeping over the mighty fallen. Once ſo renowned had Tyre been ; ſtrong in the ſea ; fortified by the waves as bulwarks, and filled with mariners, the moſt expert and bold ; the terror of all that ploughed the main : ſhe reigned the unrivalled miſtreſs of the ocean ; but now was deſerted and deſolate ; the people departed into captivity ; the city, with its inhabitants, ſunk under the waters ; demoliſhed by the army of the Chaldeans, ruſhing with reſiſtleſs fury upon them, and bringing them down to the ſides of the pit with thoſe who have been long dead. Yea, ſo total and entire ſhall be the overthrow, that ſcarce the veſtiges ſhall remain where once it ſtood ; and never again ſhall it be inhabited, at leaſt not in the ſame ſpot, or with the ſame ſplendor. So weak is human ſtrength, ſo fading human greatneſs ; ſo tottering the foundations of the ſtrongeſt cities : if we would dwell abidingly in ſafety, we muſt look above the earth for that better city whoſe maker and builder is God.

2. The Lord will do this, v. 19—21. I will make thee a terror ; his hand ſhall be viſible in their ruin ; and his deſign in her fall is to give her neighbours warning, that, terrified with her deſtruction, they may avoid her ſins.

3. The reſtoration of Iſrael, over whom ſhe triumphed, ſhall aggravate the irreparable ruin of Tyre. I ſhall ſet glory in the land of the living ; in Iſrael, whither many ſouls, ſpiritually alive to God, ſhould return from the captivity, and God will exalt and diſtinguiſh them with his love, favour, and protection. Note, (1.) The church of the redeemed is the land of the living ; bleſſed and happy are they who have their portion therein. (2.) The ſouls alive to God by grace are aſſuredly deſigned for glory, for grace is glory begun. (3.) The joy and glory of the ſaints in heaven will aggravate the torments of the damned in hell, when they behold the bliſs from which they are eternally excluded, and gnaſh with rage and deſpair.

CHAP. XXVII.

In this chapter we have, 1. A large account of the dignity, wealth, and ſplendor of Tyre, ver. 1—25. which is deſigned to make its ruin the more lamentable. 2. A prediction of its fall, and the conſternation which all its neighbours ſhall thereby be put into, ver. 26—36. And this is intended to ſtain the pride of all worldly glory, and by ſetting the one over againſt the other, to let us ſee the vanity and uncertainty of the riches, honours, and pleaſures of the world, and what little reaſon we have to place our happineſs in them, or to be confident of the continuance of them.

1. THE word of the LORD came again unto me, clothes for chariots. 21. Arabia, and all the princes of [f] Kedar, they ‖ occupied with thee in lambs, and

v. 1—25. Though Tyre was a heathen land, the prophet muſt make lamentation over it ; for a gracious heart is filled with univerſal charity, and, touched with tender ſympathy, laments over the miſeries of the afflicted wherever they appear.

We have,

1. The great proſperity of Tyre, which made her fall the more grievous.

(1.) She was moſt conveniently ſituated, at the entry of the ſea, and ſurrounded by it, v. 4. her harbour moſt commodious, and the grand mart of the world, whither all the produce of the eaſt and weſt was brought and exchanged.

(2.) The city was moſt beautifully adorned with noble ſtructures, where magnificence, elegance, and uſe contributed to perfect her beauty, ver. 4.

(3.) Her fleets were numerous, admirably built and rigged, and ſome moſt ſuperbly adorned ; the very ſails fine linen embroidered from Egypt ; the pavilions covered with purple and blue ; and the very benches inlaid with ivory, ver. 6, 7.

(4.) Her ſhips were excellently manned ; the pilots and chief officers Tyre ſupplied, v. 8. the ſeamen, the adjacent country ; and in her docks the wiſeſt artificers were employed to refit and repair her navy.

(5.) The choiceſt ſoldiery were hired for her guard, from diſtant martial nations, v. 10. furniſhed with weapons for war, which in time of peace were hung up in the armouries, ready to be uſed on any emergence, affording at once ſafety and ornament to the city, v. 11. Note, The way to maintain a nation's peace is thus to be ever ready for war.

(6.) Her trade was vaſt and univerſal : ſhips from all quarters of the globe crouded her harbour, v. 9. The nations, and the ſeveral commodities of their traffic, are mentioned, v. 12—24. The countries of many of theſe are well-known, ſome utterly uncertain, and only afford the critics ſcope for conjecture ; but of ſuch immaterial points we may well be content to remain ignorant. Obſerve, however, the vaſt advantages of trade, what an intercourſe it opens, and brings in the produce of the moſt diſtant lands, with as great plenty as if it had been the native growth of our own ſoil : but with increaſing wealth increaſing luxury uſually ruſhes in, and the ſeeds of ruin are often ſpringing up in the midſt of the greateſt proſperity.

2. Tyre prided herſelf on her beauty, and all nations praiſed and extolled her, v. 3, 25. Thus is wealth often the food of vanity: and they who abound in riches are cried up and praiſed. The great are uſually much more noticed and honoured than the good.

26. ¶ Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters: [k] the eaſt-wind hath broken thee in the † midſt of the ſeas. 27. Thy [l] riches and thy fairs, thy merchandiſe, thy mariners, and thy pilots, thy calkers, and the occupiers of thy merchandiſe, and all thy men of war that are in thee, ‡ and in all thy company which is in the midſt of thee, ſhall fall into the § midſt of the ſeas in the day of thy ruin. 28. And in their wailing they ſhall take up a lamentation for thee, and lament over thee, ſaying, [o] What city is like Tyrus, like the deſtroyed in the midſt of the ſea? 33. When [p] thy wares went forth out of the ſeas, thou filledſt many people, thou didſt enrich the kings of the earth with the multitude of thy riches, and of thy merchandiſe. 34. In the time when [q] thou ſhalt be broken by the ſeas in the depths of the waters, thy merchandiſe and all thy company in the midſt of thee ſhall fall. 35. v. 26—36. The greatneſs of her wealth and excellence ſerves but to increaſe the miſery of her fall. Behold this proud city laid low in ruins: a monument to other trading nations not to be ſecure in the day of proſperity.

1. Like a rich veſſel wrecked by the unſkilfulneſs of the rowers, ſo was Tyre brought into great waters, expoſed by ſome imprudent conduct of her governors to the reſentment of the king of Babylon, the eaſt wind, that daſhed this gallant ſhip in pieces in the midſt of the ſeas, and her merchandize, riches, inhabitants, ſoldiers and ſeamen, periſhed in the waters, v. 27. Thus hath the unſkilfulneſs of her pilots often ruined a nation.

2. The dreadful cries of the ſinking city ſhall reach the ſuburbs, the cities and villages on the continent, and the few who eſcape to the ſhore, as men from a ſhipwreck, ſhall cauſe their voice to be heard againſt thee, blaming the imprudent conduct of the pilots, who provoked the king of Babylon's reſentment; or for thee, bewailing the deſolations they beheld, with deepeſt expreſſions of anguiſh and vexation, with duſt on their heads, wallowing in aſhes, tearing off their hair, and weeping with bitterneſs and heart-felt grief, bemoaning in plaintive lamentations the dire cataſtrophe; once ſo great, ſo rich, a joyous city, repleniſhing with her merchandize the kings of the earth, now fallen into the loweſt ſtate of abject wretchedneſs, and, inſtead of the buſy hum of crouded ſtreets, ſolitude and ſilence reign throughout. So awful a change can God in judgment quickly make, when his wrath ariſes againſt a guilty land.

3. The utter ruin of this proud city ſhall fill ſome with terror and aſtoniſhment, the kings of the neighbouring iſles ſhall be ſore afraid. If Tyre could not ſtand, which they deemed impregnable, how ſhould they? Others ſhall hiſs at her, mocking her vain confidence, and hoping, as ſhe had done on the ruin of Jeruſalem, that the trade of Tyre ſhall be transferred to their ports, and they ſhall be enriched thereby: for, being thus fallen, ſhe never ſhall be any more; never rebuilt on the ſame ſpot, or riſe to the ſame empire of the ſeas. Some think this means no more than a long time, during ſeventy years, ſee Iſa. xxiii. 15, 17. though the prophecy may reſpect her laſt deſtruction, ſince which to this day ſhe hath lain in ruins. The traffick and fall of the antichriſtian powers are deſcribed in expreſſions borrowed from this prophecy, ſee Rev. xviii. for their ruin ſhall as aſſuredly come in the ſeaſon fixed by the divine decree.

[f] ‡ By thy great wiſdom, and by thy traffick haſt thou increaſed thy riches, and thine heart is lifted up becauſe of thy riches: 6. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Becauſe [g] thou haſt ſet thine heart as the heart of God; 7. Behold therefore, I will bring ſtrangers upon thee, [h] the terrible of the nations: and they ſhall draw their ſwords againſt the beauty of thy wiſdom, and they ſhall defile thy brightneſs. 8. They ſhall bring thee down to the pit, and thou ſhalt die the deaths of them that are ſlain in the midſt of the ſeas. 9. Wilt thou yet ſay before him that ſlayeth thee, I am God? but thou ſhalt be a man and no God in the hand of him that § ſlayeth thee. 10. v. 1—10. The prince of Tyre is next the ſubject of the prophetic word. Diſtinct from the general ruin of his country, a particular warning is given to him.

1. His pride was exceſſive. His heart was lifted up in high conceit of his own excellence, as if he could rival the monarch of the univerſe: he ſaid, I am a God; boaſted himſelf as a Deity, and perhaps expected divine honours ſhould be paid him. His throne ſeemed to be fixed firm as that of the Moſt High, and and as glorious in the midſt of the ſeas, which owned his ſovereign ſway. But he is told, Thou art man, and not God, a poor, dependent, dying worm; though thou ſet thine heart as the heart of God, thinking his wiſdom and dominion great as thoſe of the eternal Jehovah, and himſelf as worthy to be feared, obeyed, and worſhipped. Two things particularly he valued himſelf upon. (1.) His wiſdom. Thou art wiſer than Daniel, in his own opinion at leaſt. The fame of Daniel had perhaps reached even to Tyre, as the moſt remarkable perſon for wiſdom of all the wiſe men of the eaſt: but the king of Tyre fancied he far excelled him, and, with penetration approaching omniſcience, would have it believed, there was no ſecret could be hid from him. Thus often do we ſee knowledge puff up, and the moſt precious gifts of God perverted to his diſhonour. (2.) His wealth. By his wiſdom he planned his ſchemes of traffick, and riches flowing in as a river upon him, every acquiſition filled his mind with loftier imaginations of his own importance: he aſcribed his gains not to God's providence but his own prudence, and fancied himſelf thereby exalted above all danger. The boaſts of Antichriſt, 2 Theſſ. xi. 4. are expreſſed nearly in the ſame language; of whom the prince of Tyre is the type and figure.

2. His doom is read. He boaſted himſelf a God, but he muſt die as a man. The Chaldeans, the terrible of the nations, from a ſtrange land ſhall come, and with drawn ſwords demoliſh the force of Tyre, defile her beauty, and lay all her proud palaces in the duſt; and this vain prince, far from finding reſpect ſhewn to that majeſty he counted ſacred, ſhall go to an ignominious grave, like thoſe who are in a ſea-fight ſlain and caſt overboard without ceremony, a prey for fiſhes, v. 8. and, worſe ſtill, he ſhall die under the curſe of God, the deaths of the uncircumciſed, eternally undone and loſt. And ſure is the doom pronounced, ſince the God of truth hath ſpoken it, v. 10.

3. This will ſilence his arrogant pretenſions. Such vengeance executed upon him will prove his frailty and vanity; and his boaſts of godlike power and wiſdom will vaniſh, when, in the hands of his murderers, he ſhall be found a weak and helpleſs worm. Note, Death, at fartheſt, will make the proudeſt know they are but men.

11. ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 12. Son of man, [k] take up a lamentation upon the king of Tyrus, and ſay unto him, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Thou ſealeſt up the ſum full of wiſdom and perfect in beauty. 13. Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth: and [n] I have ſet thee ſo; thou waſt upon the holy mountain of God; thou haſt walked up and down in the midſt of the ſtones of fire. 15. Thou waſt perfect in thy ways from the day that thou waſt created, till iniquity was found in thee. 16. By the multitude of thy merchandiſe they have filled the midſt of thee with violence, and thou haſt ſinned: therefore I will caſt thee as profane out of the mountain of God: and I will deſtroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midſt of the ſtones of fire. 17. [oo] Thine heart was lifted up becauſe of thy beauty, thou haſt corrupted thy wiſdom by reaſon of thy brightneſs: [o] I will caſt thee to the ground, I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee. 18. Thou haſt defiled thy ſanctuaries by the multitude of thine iniquities, by the iniquity of thy traffick; therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midſt of thee, it ſhall devour thee, and I will bring thee to aſhes upon the earth, in the ſight of all them that behold thee. 19. All they that know thee among the people, ſhall be aſtoniſhed at thee: [p] thou ſhalt be ‖ a terror, and never ſhalt thou be any more.

v. 11—19. We have here a lamentation over the prince of Tyrus.

1. He was, to appearance, raiſed to the higheſt pitch of human proſperity. Thou ſealeſt up the ſum full of wiſdom, and perfect in beauty, compleat in every accompliſhment of mind and perſon, and great as the wealth of this world could make him. Thou haſt been in Eden the garden of God, as happy, in appearance, as Adam in the delicious manſions prepared for him in the days of his innocence. Every precious ſtone adorned him, ſtudded his crown, and glittered on his royal robes. The moſt curious and exquiſite inſtruments of muſic were prepared to celebrate his birth or coronation day, v. 13. Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth; alluding probably to the golden cherubim that covered the mercy-ſeat, or to that which guarded the tree of life in Eden; ſo beautiful he ſeemed, and ſo mighty to protect his people from every foe. And I have ſet thee ſo: to God he owed his advancement, and all the greatneſs he poſſeſſed. Thou waſt upon the holy mount of God, thou haſt walked up and down in the midſt of the ſtones of fire, adorned with jewels, as God's high-prieſt when he put on the precious breaſt-plate. Which ſome interpret of Antichriſt, aſſuming infallible wiſdom, v. 12. ſeated on high in the church of God, dreſſed in moſt coſtly apparel, v. 13. pretending the authority of Chriſt to be the head and protector of the church, the mount of God, and uſurping authority over the people of God, the ſtones of fire, who ſhine bright in all holy converſation.

2. His iniquity brought him to deſtruction. Thou waſt perfect in thy ways from the day that thou waſt created, proſpered and waſt ſucceſsful, till iniquity was found in thee. (1.) There was iniquity in traffic, v. 18. In the multitude of merchandize much fraud and violence was practiſed. For very hard it is to be engaged in a multiplicity of buſineſs with clean hands: the myſtery of trade is too frequently a myſtery of iniquity. (2.) He was proud and vain-glorious, v. 17. Thine heart was lifted up becauſe of thy beauty; and, gazing on his own excellencies, his wiſdom became fooliſhneſs: for thoſe who are proud of their attainments corrupt and ſpoil what otherwiſe would be praiſe-worthy. (3.) Thou haſt defiled thy ſanctuaries by idolatrous worſhip, or the lewd actions commonly practiſed there. For which multitude of iniquities God threatens to deſtroy him, utterly to caſt him down from his high eſtate, and cut him off from all his poſſeſſions as profane; having abuſed his ſtation, he juſtly forfeits it: in the duſt the kings ſhall behold him lie, and take warning by his fall, or exult over him, v. 17. A fire of divine wrath ſhall be kindled, conſume his city to aſhes, and himſelf in the midſt of it, v. 18. and the beholders, with terror and aſtoniſhment, ſhall wonder at his fearful fall, from which he ſhall never recover, v. 19. All which is moſt applicable to the man of ſin, whoſe coffers are filled with the gainful trade of prieſtcraft, pardons and indulgences; proud of his dignity, corrupt in his worſhip, defiling the ſanctuary with image-worſhip and ſuperſtition: for which his day of ruin will come, when all his glory will be tarniſhed, when he ſhall be caſt down with divine judgments, and at laſt doomed to the lake which burneth with fire for ever and ever. Note, Let all the workers of iniquity tremble: the ſame ſins will aſſuredly produce the ſame deſtruction.

20. ¶ Again the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 21. Son of man, ſet thy face [q] againſt Zidon, and propheſy againſt it, 22. And ſay, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold I am againſt thee, O Zidon, and [r] I will be glorified in the midſt of thee: and [s] they ſhall know that I am the LORD, when I ſhall have executed judgments in her, and ſhall be ſanctified in her. 23. For I will ſend into her peſtilence, and blood into her ſtreets, and the wounded ſhall be judged in the midſt of her by the ſword upon her on every ſide; and they ſhall know that I am the LORD. 24. ¶ And there ſhall be no more [t] a pricking brier unto the houſe of Iſrael, nor any grieving thorn of all that are round about them that deſpiſed them, and they ſhall know that I am the Lord GOD. 25. Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, When [u] I ſhall have gathered the houſe of Iſrael from the people among whom they are ſcattered, and ſhall be ſanctified in them in the ſight of the heathen, then ſhall they dwell in their land that I have given to my ſervant Jacob. 26. And they ſhall dwell † ſafely therein, and ſhall build houſes, and [x] plant vineyards: yea, they ſhall dwell with confidence when I have executed judgments upon all thoſe that ‡ deſpiſe them round about them, and they ſhall know that I am the LORD their God.

v. 20—26. Two ways God will glorify himſelf.

1. In the deſtruction of Zidon. God is her enemy, will execute his judgments upon her, and be ſanctified, make his holineſs and juſtice appear in her ruin. The depopulating ſcourge of peſtilence ſhall be ſent upon her, and the wounded ſhall fall on every ſide. Thus will God make himſelf known in the vengeance he executes.

2. In the reſtoration and proſperity of his Iſrael. God will bring them again to their own land, and cauſe them to dwell ſafely: the nations around, who deſpiſed and vexed them as briars and thorns, ſhall be no more; and he will be ſanctified among the heathen, who will be made to own his hand evidently diſplayed in behalf of his own people: and with comfort they ſhall know him to be the Lord, experiencing his mercy and proving his faithfulneſs. And this reſtoration ſeems to look farther than their return from Babylon, after which they were ſtill frequently beſet with enemies, and to have reſpect to their laſt recovery, when they ſhall be admitted into the church, and enter with the redeemed into that eternal reſt where the wicked will ceaſe from troubling, and every tear be for ever wiped from their eyes.

CHAP. XXIX.

The four following chapters are concerning Egypt, which often proved a broken reed to the houſe of Iſrael. 1. The deſtruction of Pharaoh foretold, for his dealing deceitfully with Iſrael, ver. 1—7. 2. The deſolation of the land of Egypt, ver. 8—12. 3. A promiſe of the reſtoration thereof in part after forty years, ver. 13—16. 4. The poſſeſſion that ſhould be given to Nebuchadnezzar of the land of Egypt, ver. 17—20. 5. A promiſe of mercy to Iſrael, ver. 21.

1. IN the tenth year, in the tenth month, in the twelfth day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, ſet thy face againſt Pharaoh king of Egypt, and propheſy [a] againſt him, and againſt all Egypt. 3. But [d] I will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will cauſe the fiſh of thy rivers to ſtick unto thy ſcales, and I will bring thee up out of the midſt of thy rivers, and all the fiſh of thy rivers ſhall ſtick unto thy ſcales. 5. And I will leave thee [e] thrown into the wilderneſs, thee and all the fiſh of thy rivers: thou ſhalt fall upon ‡ the open fields, thou ſhalt not be brought together, nor gathered: I have given thee for meat to the beaſts of the field, and to the fowls of the heaven. 6. And all the inhabitants of Egypt [f] ſhall know that I am the LORD, becauſe they have been [g] a ſtaff of reed to the houſe of Iſrael. 7. [h] When they took hold of thee by thy hand, thou didſt break, and rent all their ſhoulder: and when they leaned upon thee, thou brakeſt, and madeſt all their loins to be at a ſtand.

v. 1—7. The date of this prophecy is obſervable. It was juſt at the time when the Egyptian army was advancing to raiſe the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and when the Jews confidently expected relief from their approach. The vain hopes ſinners entertain are often moſt ſanguine when their ruin is neareſt.

Before Christ 589.

The prophecy is directed againſt Egypt and her king, repreſented by a great dragon, or crocodile, lying in the river Nile. We have here,

1. His pride. He lieth in the midſt of his rivers, ſecure, at eaſe, and rolling in wealth and pleaſures; and hath ſaid, my river is my own, I have made it for myſelf; as if he reigned independent of God, and owed to himſelf alone the monarchy he poſſeſſed. Thus pride calls God's gifts our own, and, ſelf-idolaters, we leave him far above out of our ſight.

2. The judgment executed on Pharaoh. I am againſt thee, or above thee, able and determined to puniſh his arrogance. God will put hooks in his jaws, and, with all the fiſh which ſtick to his ſcales, his numerous forces, will drag him out of his rivers, v. 4. and in the wilderneſs give him, with all his army, for a prey to the beaſts of the earth and the fowls of heaven. Note, Pride is the prelude to deſtruction; and they who are moſt ſecure are uſually moſt expoſed.

3. The provocation which moſt haſtened the ruin of Egypt was her falſehood and deceitfulneſs with regard to the Jewiſh people. Encouraged by the alliance with Pharaoh, Zedekiah rebelled againſt the king of Babylon, and now, when he looked for ſupport from Egypt, the ſtaff on which he leaned broke under him, to his vaſt diſappointment and utter conſternation, rent his ſhoulder, brought on him the Chaldean ſword, and made all his loins at a ſtand, compelled to ſtand alone, and in the greateſt amazement, conſcious of his own inability to cope with Nebuchadnezzar's army. It was folly indeed in Zedekiah to truſt on ſuch auxiliaries; but their perfidy in deceiving him was not the leſs criminal; and God will revenge ſuch treachery.

8. ¶ Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, I will bring a ſword upon thee, and cut off man and beaſt out of thee. 9. And the land of Egypt ſhall be deſolate and waſte, and they ſhall know that I am the LORD; becauſe he hath ſaid, [l] The river is mine, and I have made it. 10. Behold therefore, I am againſt thee, and againſt thy rivers, and I will make the land of Egypt † utterly waſte and deſolate, [k] from the tower of ‡ Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia. 11. [l] No foot of man ſhall paſs through it, nor foot of beaſt ſhall paſs through it, neither ſhall it be inhabited forty years. 12. [m] And I will make the land of Egypt deſolate in the midſt of the countries that are deſolate, and her cities among the cities that are laid waſte ſhall be deſolate forty years: and I will ſcatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will diſperſe them through the countries. 13. ¶ Yet thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [n] At the end of forty years will I gather the Egyptians from the people whither they were ſcattered. 14. And I will bring again the captivity of Egypt, and will cauſe them to return into the land of Pathros, into the land of their § habitation, and they ſhall be there [o] a ‖ baſe kingdom. 15. It ſhall be the baſeſt of the kingdoms, neither ſhall it exalt itſelf any more above the nations: for I will diminiſh them, that they ſhall no more rule over the nations. 16. And it ſhall be no more the confidence of the houſe of Iſrael, which bringeth their iniquity to remembrance, when they ſhall look after them: but they ſhall know that I am the Lord GOD.

v. 8—16. We have here,

1. The terrible overthrow of Egypt foretold. God will make them know by his judgments that he is the Lord, and prove the vanity of their inſolent vaunts, v. 9. The ſword of the Chaldeans ſhall paſs through the land, lay all waſte before it, cut off man and beaſt from one end of Egypt to the other, v. 10. and leave it depopulated, without trade, unfrequented and like a deſert during forty years, v. 11. the inhabitants in general being ſlain, or carried into captivity, v. 12. We find, v. 17. that, in the 27th year of Jeconiah's captivity, Egypt was given to Nebuchadnezzar; and if we allow three years for completing the conqueſt, the forty years will end with the deſtruction of the Babylonian monarchy by Cyrus, when probably Egypt, as well as the other nations, recovered in great meaſure her liberty.

2. The reſtoration of Egypt when the forty years were expired; not to her former grandeur and magnificence, but, tho' a kingdom, and flouriſhing under ſome of her monarchs, particularly the Ptolomies, yet by repeated conqueſts at laſt reduced to its preſent baſe and low eſtate under the Turks, no more the miſtreſs of nations, nor the ſtay of Iſrael, to bring their iniquity to remembrance, by their placing dependance upon Egypt, and withdrawing their confidence from God. Note, (1.) God ſtill in wrath remembers mercy. (2.) It is gracious as juſt in the Lord to remove thoſe creature comforts and confidences which eſtranged our hearts from him.

Before Christ 572.

17. ¶ And it came to paſs in the ſeven and twentieth year, in the firſt month, in the firſt day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 18. Son of man, Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon cauſed his army [p] to ſerve a great ſervice againſt Tyrus: every head was made bald, and every ſhoulder was peeled: yet had he no wages, nor his army for Tyrus, for the ſervice that he had ſerved againſt it. 19. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, [q] I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he ſhall take her multitude, and † take her ſpoil, and take her prey, and it ſhall be the wages for his army. 20. I have given him the land of Egypt for his ‡ labour wherewith he ſerved againſt it, becauſe they wrought for me, ſaith the Lord GOD. 21. ¶ In that day [r] will I cauſe the horn of the houſe of Iſrael to bud forth, and I will give thee the opening of the mouth in the midſt of them, and they ſhall know that I am the LORD.

v. 17—21. This is the laſt of all Ezekiel's prophecies, and ſixteen or ſeventeen years after the preceding; but all the prophecies concerning Egypt are laid together.

1. In conſideration of the hard ſervice Nebuchadnezzar underwent before Tyre, v. 18. the ſpoil of which ſo little repaid him for his pains, great part of their effects being removed, as hiſtory informs us, before the place was taken, Egypt is given him and his army for their wages, v. 18. being before weakened by inteſtine diviſions, it fell an eaſy prey to the conqueror. As the vengeance executed on Tyre was by divine command, God will not ſuffer Nebuchadnezzar to work without a reward. Note, (1.) Even wicked men, when employed in God's ſervice, find their account in it; they are paid in the good things of this life. (2.) Many who propoſe no other end but their own advantage, and perhaps the gratification of their ambition and covetouſneſs, by the ſecret over-ruling power of God are made unwittingly ſubſervient to his deſigns.

2. A gracious promiſe is made to God's Iſrael. In that day will I cauſe the horn of the houſe of Iſrael to bud; either at the day of Egypt's deſtruction, about which time Daniel and his fellows, Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, were ſo diſtinguiſhed of God, and honoured by the king of Babylon, ſee Dan. i. 3. xi. 49. or ſhortly after, when Jehoiachim was enlarged from priſon and honourably treated, Jer. lii. 31, 32. or the time here ſpoken of may refer to the forty years, v. 12. when the captivity of Iſrael as well as Egypt ſhould end, and under Zerubbabel and others the nation ſhould revive from its deſolations. And I will give thee the opening of the mouth in the midſt of them, when the fulfilment of the prophecies would give peculiar force to his exhortations, and embolden him in the work of the Lord. For, though no more of his prophecies are recorded, no doubt he continued a faithful preacher to the people, which could not but prove a ſingular bleſſing to them. For when God enlarges the hearts of his faithful ſervants, and enables them with boldneſs to ſpeak, it is a gracious ſymptom of his purpoſe to make them ſee the travail of their ſouls in the ſalvation of thoſe to whom they miniſter.

Thus will I execute judgments in Egypt: and [o] they ſhall know that I am the LORD.

v. 1—19. Fearful is the overthrow of the Egyptians here recorded.

1. They are called to howl, and lament the dreadful day, big with wrath, and ſwift approaching; a day of darkneſs and gloomineſs, when every face ſhould gather blackneſs. It ſhall be the time of the heathen; either the time to viſit the heathen nations of Egypt and Ethiopia, or the time of the Chaldean power. Note, The ſinner's day, though long delayed, ſhall come at laſt; and then, too late, he will pour forth his remedileſs ſorrows.

2. The threatned deſtruction ſhall utterly ruin both Egypt and her confederates. The ſword of the victorious king of Babylon ſhall fill the land, from one end to the other, with the carcaſes of the ſlain; the cities ſhall be deſtroyed, the images broken, the country deſolate, terrors ſpread on every ſide, the beauty, ſtrength, and multitude of Egypt utterly waſted, and the dark cloud of abject wretchedneſs ſpread over them. Thus ſhall a fierce and terrible enemy, v. 11. from a ſtrange and diſtant land, v. 12. wicked men, whom no laws of humanity or juſtice reſtrain, be let looſe upon them, and ravage without mercy. The pride of Egypt, v. 6. her royal family, ſhall be extinct, v. 13. and no hopes remain from the riſing generation, the young men being ſlain with the ſword, v. 17. and the daughters gone into captivity, v. 18. Nor ſhall her auxiliaries be able to give her the leaſt ſupport; they ſhall fall with her, v. 6. Ethiopia, Lybia, Lydia, Chub, and all the mingled people of various nations, who are in league with Egypt, ſhall periſh. And, whilſt many out of theſe countries, who ſojourned among the Egyptians, or were auxiliaries in their army, fell with them, v. 5. the tidings of their deſtruction ſhall fly ſwift to the careleſs Ethiopians, and terrify them with the apprehenſions of ſharing Egypt's fate. Nor are their apprehenſions groundleſs; for, Lo! it cometh. Note, (1.) Confederates in iniquity will periſh together. (2.) When we ſee our neighbour's houſe on fire, it is time to tremble for our own: one ſinner's fall ſhould alarm the ſurvivors.

3. God's hand is viſible in the judgment. Whatever inſtrument he employs, the work is his own, v. 10. His veracity is engaged for the fulfilment of the threatning, v. 12. and, in the judgments he will execute, his power and faithfulneſs will appear, and they ſhall know that he is the Lord. Note, (1.) Whatever judgments are in the earth, God's hand is to be ſeen and acknowledged in them. (2.) One jot or tittle of God's word ſhall never fail.

v. 20—26. The army of the Egyptians, which had attempted to raiſe the ſiege of Jeruſalem, had been now forced to retire with ſhame to their own land, and, without making any farther efforts, left Jeruſalem to her fate; but their own ruin quickly followed. It is foretold,

1. That Egypt ſhall be weakened by degrees and brought to deſtruction. One arm of Pharaoh was already broken in the defeat received at Carchemiſh, Jer. xlvi. 2. and the conqueſt of a part of the Egyptian dominions, 2 Kings xxiv. 7. and from this fatal ſtroke he never recovered; a ſecond blow would compleat his ruin. His ſtrong arm, as well as that which was broken, God will break by the ſword of Nebuchadnezzar: ſo that, unable to wield a ſword, groaning as a ſoldier deſperately wounded, he muſt fall. His kingdom ſhall be vanquiſhed, his people diſperſed and led into captivity. And in theſe ſufferings God inflicts, he will make them know that he is the Lord.

2. That the king of Babylon ſhall grow ſtronger and ſtronger. God will put a ſword into his hands, give him might to wield it, and ſubdue Egypt before him. All power is given from above: the ſtrength of the mightieſt is derived alone from the almighty God.

CHAP. XXXI.

The prophecy of this, as of the two former chapters, is againſt Egypt, and deſigned to humble Pharaoh. The prophet is here ordered, 1. To ſhew him that the king of Aſſyria had been like him in greatneſs, ver. 3—9. And, 2. In pride and carnal ſecurity, ver. 10. 3. He is to relate to him the fall of the king of Aſſyria, what a noiſe it made among the nations, and what a warning it gave to all potent princes to take heed of pride, ver. 11—17. 4. He muſt leave the king of Egypt to apply all this to himſelf, to ſee his own face in the looking-glaſs of the king of Aſſyria's ſin, and to foreſee his own fall through the perſpective-glaſs of his ruin, ver. 18.

1. AND it came to paſs in the eleventh year, in the third month, in the firſt day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, ſpeak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, and to his multitude, [a] Whom art thou like in thy greatneſs? 3. ¶ [b] Behold, the Aſſyrian was a cedar in Lebanon † with fair branches, and with a ſhadowing ſhroud, and of an high ſtature, and his top was among the thick boughs. 4. [c] The waters ‡ made him great, the deep § ſet him up on high, with her rivers running round about his plants, and ſent out her little rivers unto all the trees of the field. 5. Therefore his height was exalted above all the trees of the field, and his boughs were multiplied, and his branches became long becauſe of the multitude of waters when ‖ he ſhot forth. 6. All [d] the fowls of heaven made their neſts in his boughs, and under his branches did all the beaſts of the field bring forth their young, and under his ſhadow dwelt all great nations. 7. Thus was he fair in his greatneſs, in the length of his branches: for his root was by great waters. 8. The cedars in [e] the garden of God could not hide him: the fir-trees were not like his boughs, and the cheſnut-trees were not like his branches; not any tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty. 9. I have made him fair by the multitude of his branches: ſo that all the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, envied him.

v. 1—9. This prophecy bears date about five weeks before Jeruſalem was taken, when judgment, which had begun at the houſe of God, did not end there; but Egypt muſt alſo drink of the cup of trembling.

Pharaoh is bid to conſult the records of time, and ſelect the mightieſt monarch that had gone before him, with whom to compare himſelf, even the Aſſyrian; who, notwithſtanding all his ancient greatneſs, was now fallen. Nimrod had founded that monarchy, and the Babylonian empire had riſen on its ruins. A warning to the greateſt not to be high-minded, but fear.

The Aſſyrian monarch is compared to a tall and ſpreading cedar. His dignity moſt exalted, his dominions vaſtly extenſive, and admirably governed, like the regular branches of a lofty tree, v. 7. No prince or potentate could vie with him of all the ſurrounding nations, v. 8. and they ſecretly envied his greatneſs, v. 9. the tribute which merit and proſperity uſually muſt pay. Protected by his power, and ſafe under his government, multitudes from all nations choſe to ſettle in his dominions, v. 6. Planted by the Divine Providence, v. 9. and watered with the abundance of temporal good things, he ſeemed ſufficiently ſtrong to reſiſt every ſtormy blaſt; and ſent out little rivers to all the trees of the field; all his ſubjects received abundant advantages from him. Note, They are truly great who employ their power and influence to promote the good of mankind.

v. 10—18. The Aſſyrian monarch, whom Pharaoh reſembled in greatneſs, he muſt reſemble in his ruin.

1. They were both puffed up on their proſperity. Thou haſt lifted up thyſelf in height; thou, O king of Egypt; or thou, O king of Aſſyria; for to either the words may be applied; and they are true of both, pride being the common ſnare which attends advancement; and few carry with them, into a ſuperior ſphere, the humble ſpirit of their former ſtation.

2. They fall alike, as the juſt puniſhment of their pride and wickedneſs, v. 11.

(1.) The Aſſyrian by the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, the mighty one of the heathen, who in the beginning of his reign, in conjunction with Cyaxares king of the Medes, is ſaid to have deſtroyed that monarchy, with Nineveh the capital, and transferred the ſeat of empire to Babylon. God had ordained his ruin, and therefore it muſt infallibly come to paſs, v. 11. Already this mighty cedar is broken: the terrible army of Chaldeans and Medes have lopped all his branches, and left them withering on every mountain and valley, and by every river: the provinces of the empire diſmembered, the cities and country ſubdued; ſo that, as birds from a falling tree, the ſeveral nations, who ſought for ſhelter under the ſhadow of the Aſſyrian monarch, are fled, have deſerted him in the day of his calamity, v. 12. His enemies, like birds and beaſts of prey, feed upon him; or, literally, the fowls of heaven fall upon the carcaſes of the ſlain; or thoſe who envied his greatneſs, v. 9. rejoice at his fall, v. 13. And herein God deſigned to warn proud monarchs of their danger, not to truſt on their power or wealth, as if theſe could be their protection; but to remember they are mortal worms, and in an inſtant, when God ſtrikes, numbered with the dead, v. 14. This the Aſſyrian monarch proved, and at his ruin a univerſal groan was given from all who were in league with him, as the forreſt echoes with the falling cedar, v. 16. a general ſtagnation of trade and commerce for a while prevailed; and, trembling for themſelves, his allies fainted, conſcious of their own inability to reſiſt the conqueror of their mightier Aſſyrian friend, v. 15. whilſt the trees of Eden, the choice and beſt of Lebanon, either the kingdoms ſubdued and ravaged by the Aſſyrian monarch in times paſt, or the nations in alliance with him, who ſhared his fearful deſtruction, v. 17. ſhall in their graves be comforted to ſee him brought as low as themſelves, v. 16. Note, (1.) Wickedneſs is the cauſe of all our wretchedneſs. (2.) Pride will have a fall. (3.) They who are courted in proſperity will often be deſerted in the day of calamity. (4.) The fall of great men uſually involves multitudes in their ruin. (5.) God intends his providential ſtrokes on others ſhould be warnings to ourſelves.

(2.) The Egyptian monarch may expect the ſame fate. Let him chuſe the mightieſt kingdoms with which to compare himſelf, nay were he even ſo great as the king of Aſſyria, it would not ſecure him from ruin: he ſhould be brought to the ſame wretched ſtate; lie down among the dead, yea among the uncircumciſed, under the eternal wrath of God. This is Pharaoh and his multitude: ſuch ſhall be the end of all his greatneſs, grandeur, and numerous ſubjects. And thus ſhall the wicked be turned into hell, with all the nations, however many or mighty, that forget God.

v. 1—16. Though Egypt was an idolatrous nation, and Pharaoh a wicked prince, the prophet muſt take up a lamentation over them. For the miniſters of God, when they can do no more, muſt weep over thoſe who, hardened in ſin, refuſe to ſhed a tear for themſelves.

1. The king of Egypt is compared to a lion, fierce, devouring, ravenous; to a whale, or crocodile with his rivers, a multitude of people, or from his rivers, ſallying forth in queſt of prey; and as this animal with his feet troubles the waters, ſo did he with his armies diſturb the tranquility of his neighbours. Note, Ambitious princes are the troublers of the earth, and the ſcourges of mankind.

2. His deſtruction is foretold. The ſame ſimilitude is continued; God, the author of his ruin, ſhall take him as a great fiſh in his net, with all his numerous forces, v. 3. and drag him to land; where, as a fiſh out of his element, he muſt periſh, and being caſt forth into the open field, become a prey for every fowl and every beaſt, v. 4. Yea, ſo immenſe will be the carnage, ſuch a torrent of blood be ſhed, that the vallies ſhall be filled with the corpſes of the ſlain, and the rivers ſwelled with human gore, hyperbolically ſpeaking, as high as the mountains, v. 5, 6. The ſword is God's, the executioners of vengeance the Chaldeans, v. 11. Mighty men, the terrible of the nations, who ſhall ſpoil the pomp, plunder the wealth, and ſlay the multitude of the Egyptians, v. 12. Yea, the very cattle ſhall be deſtroyed, and the foot of man or beaſt ſhall no more diſturb the waters, ſo few ſhould remain, v. 13. The land throughout ſhall be deſolate, and all its plenty be at an end, v. 15. Even the luminaries of heaven, as if ſhocked to behold theſe ravages, ſhall be darkened and clothed in ſackcloth, v. 7, 8. And the once rapid rivers, as if congealed with grief, ſhall roll ſlowly on with difficulty their heavy flood, v. 14.

3. The tidings of Pharaoh's fall, with his multitudes, will alarm, amaze, and bitterly affect the nations. Not only the neighbours and allies would be vexed at their overthrow, lament them, and tremble at the judgments they beheld, v. 16, 17, 18. but even the remoteſt countries who had no connection with the Egyptians, v. 9. ſhall hear with aſtoniſhment the report, and dread every moment, leaſt that ſword of the Lord, brandiſhed before them by the king of Babylon, ſhould fall at laſt upon their heads. Note, (1.) When the ſword of judgment is brandiſhed before us, and we ſee others ſmitten, it is high time to tremble for ourſelves. (2.) Inſtead of being humbled by the viſitations of God before them, hardened ſinners murmur and fret againſt God.

4. The Lord will make himſelf awfully known by theſe ſtrokes of vengeance: the folly of pride and creature-confidence will then appear, and God be found the only true abiding ſupport, and ſatisfying portion.

v. 17—32. About a fortnight after the former prophecy, was this delivered. It brings Pharoah, with his multitude, to their graves, and the prophet muſt lament over them, or rather compoſe a funeral dirge to be ſung on this melancholy occaſion.

1. Egypt is brought to the grave, and received among the dead. The prophet is ordered to caſt them down, ver. 18. becauſe divine power accompanied his prophetic word. Like other famous nations, ſhe muſt lie low, nor be exempted from the common fate of thoſe, whom in beauty ſhe rivalled, v. 19. She is delivered to the ſword, and dragged, as the corpſes of malefactors, in ignominy to the pit, v. 20. The mighty amongſt the dead are poetically repreſented as riſing to congratulate Pharaoh on his arrival, Iſa. xiv. 9. and admit him free of their dreary manſions, v. 21.

2. A variety of nations are mentioned who had gone down before him to the grave, and waited, in deriſion, to pay him mock honour, now become like one of them.

(1.) The Aſſyrian monarch, with his ſubjects, a vaſt congregation, once the terror of the living, now ſlain by the ſword, and their graves in rows placed round the ſepulchre of their king, v 22, 23. Note, They who have been a terror to others, muſt themſelves fall before the King of Terrors.

(2.) The Perſians with their king next appear; they too had raiſed a mighty noiſe in the world, but are now gone down uncircumciſed, unholy and profane, into the nether parts of the earth, ſlain by the ſword, and laid in an ignominious grave, v. 24, 25.

(3.) Meſhech and Tubal lie there, ſuppoſed to be the Scythian nations, not buried in ſtate as the mighty, but with their ſwords under their heads, as warriors, and their iniquity ſhall be upon their bones, dug out of their graves, and ignominiouſly expoſed, though once the terror of the mighty in the land of the living.

(4.) There lies Edom with her kings and princes. Their might unable to protect them, and forced to ſtoop to the devouring ſword. Though the circumciſed deſcendants of Abraham, yet being unlike him in their ſpirit and temper, they fall among the uncircumciſed. No outward privileges can protect thoſe, whoſe hearts are apoſtatized from God.

(5.) The princes of the North, with the Zidonians, notwithſtanding their maritime forces and ſtrong fortifications, are fallen, and their pride confounded in the duſt, v. 30.

Laſtly. Pharaoh with his multitude, ſlain by the ſword, ſhall make his grave with theſe, and ſhare that conſolation, if ſuch a wretched reflection can be ſuppoſed to adminiſter comfort, that he looks round and beholds other mighty monarchs as low and wretched as himſelf, v. 31, 32.

In all this deſcription of Egypt's fall, perhaps ſomething typical may be intended reſpecting the ruin of the antichriſtian foe, Rev. xi. 8. which may engage the prophet to dwell the longer upon it. And we may in general read and tremble, whilſt we ſee ſinners ſo many and mighty caſt down into the pit of deſtruction; and learn how fearful a thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God.

CHAP. XXXIII.

The prophet from ſpeaking to other nations, returns to his own people. 1. He muſt let them know what his office was: that he was a watchman, and had received a charge concerning them, for which he was accountable, ver. 1—9. 2. He muſt let them know upon what terms they ſtand with God, that if a wicked man repent he ſhall not periſh; but if a righteous man apoſtatize, he ſhall periſh, ver. 10—20. 3. He muſt tell thoſe who yet remained in the land of Iſrael, and flattered themſelves that they ſhould continue there, that their hopes would fail them, becauſe they perſiſted in their ſins, ver. 21—29. 4. Thoſe are rebuked who attended Ezekiel's miniſtry, but were inſincere in their profeſſions of devotion, ver. 30—33.

1. AGAIN the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, ſpeak to the children of thy people, and ſay unto them, When I bring the ſword upon a land, if the people of the land take a man of their coaſts, and ſet him for their [a] watchman: 3. If when he ſeeth the ſword come upon the land, he blow the trumpet, and [b] warn the people; 4. Then † whoſoever heareth the ſound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the ſword come, and take him away, his blood ſhall be upon his own head. 5. He heard the ſound of the trumpet, and took not warning, [c] his blood ſhall be upon him: but he that taketh warning, ſhall deliver his ſoul. 6. But if the watchman ſee the ſword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned: if the ſword come and take any perſon from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand. 7. ¶ [d] So thou, O ſon of man, I have ſet thee a watchman unto the houſe of Iſrael: therefore thou ſhalt hear the word [e] at my mouth, and [f] warn them from me. 8. When I ſay unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou ſhalt ſurely die; if thou doſt not ſpeak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man ſhall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand. 9. Nevertheleſs, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it: if he do not turn from his way, he ſhall die in his iniquity, but thou haſt delivered thy ſoul.

v. 1—9. Once more the prophet is ſent to the rebellious houſe of Iſrael. And we have here,

1. The office of a watchman deſcribed. In times of danger and invaſion, when the people ſet a watchman to deſcry the approaching enemy, his buſineſs is to wake, look out, and ſpread the alarm whenever he ſeeth the ſword coming; in which caſe having diſcharged his truſt, his own fidelity will be approved, and if others take warning they will be ſafe; if not, their blood will be on their own heads. But if negligent, or aſleep, the ſword comes, and, for want of warning ſurpriſed, any ſoul periſhes in his iniquity, then ſhall his blood be required at the watchman's hand, v. 2—6. An awful charge! and well may they tremble for themſelves who undertake to be watchmen to immortal ſouls againſt ſurrounding ſpiritual foes.

2. God applies this to Ezekiel. He is by divine commiſſion appointed a watchman to the houſe of Iſrael; his buſineſs is attentively to hear, and faithfully to report the word of warning God ſhall deliver to him: particularly he muſt ſay to the wicked, without diſtinction of perſons, or fear of men's faces, O wicked man, thou ſhalt ſurely die. Wherever unrepented iniquity is found, there the heavy wrath of God will lie; and neither the greateſt will be ſpared, nor the meaneſt overlooked. Death eternal will be the aſſured wages of ſin; and wicked men are warned of this, that whilſt there is yet hope they may fly from the wrath to come, to him who alone can, and will abundantly pardon. If he neglected his duty, then the wicked ſhould periſh in his iniquity; for it will not excuſe the careleſs ſinner that he lived and died under a negligent paſtor, when he had God's word in his hands; but his blood will God require at the prophet's hands, and terrible will be the cry of the blood of loſt ſouls in the ears of unfaithful miniſters in a judgment-day. But if he was faithful, however obſtinate the ſinner might be, he would at leaſt have the comfort of delivering his own ſoul; and though Iſrael be not gathered, he ſhall be glorious in the eyes of the Lord. And this was not merely directed to him, but is alſo written for our inſtruction, and equally applicable to every one entruſted with the care of immortal ſouls; on whoſe fidelity ſo much depends, and whoſe unfaithfulneſs muſt be attended with ſuch aggravated guilt and miſery.

10. ¶ Therefore, O thou ſon of man, ſpeak unto the houſe of Iſrael, Thus ye ſpeak, ſaying, If our tranſgreſſions and our ſins be upon us, and [g] we pine away in them, how ſhould we then live? 11. Say unto them, As I live ſaith the Lord GOD, [h] I have no pleaſure in the death of the wicked, [i] but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for [k] why will ye die, O houſe of Iſrael? 12. Therefore, thou ſon of man, ſay unto the children of thy people, [l] The righteouſneſs of [m] the righteous ſhall not deliver him in the day of his tranſgreſſion: as for the wickedneſs of the wicked, he ſhall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedneſs; [n] neither ſhall the righteous be able to live for his righteouſneſs in the day that he ſinneth. 13. When I ſhall ſay to the righteous, that he ſhall ſurely live: if he [o] truſt to his own righteouſneſs, and commit iniquity; all his righteouſneſs ſhall not be remembred, but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he ſhall die for it. 14. Again, when I ſay unto the wicked, Thou ſhalt ſurely die: if he turn from his ſin, and [p] do † that which is lawful and right; 15. If the wicked [q] reſtore the pledge, [r] give again that he had robbed, walk in [s] the ſtatutes of life without committing iniquity; he ſhall ſurely live, he ſhall no die. 16. None of his ſins that he hath committed, ſhall be mentioned unto him: he hath done that which is lawful and right; he ſhall ſurely live. 17. ¶ [t] Yet the children of thy people ſay, The way of the LORD is not equal: but as for them, their way is not equal. 18. [u] When the righteous turneth from his righteouſneſs, and committeth iniquity, he ſhall even die thereby. 19. But if the wicked turn from his wickedneſs, and do that which is lawful and right, he ſhall live thereby. 20. [x] Yet ye ſay, The way of the LORD is not equal, O ye houſe of Iſrael, [y] I will judge you every one after his ways.

v. 10—20. The ſubſtance of theſe verſes we had before, chap. xviii. 20. and we need repeatedly to have ſuch important truths inculcated upon us.

1. They quarrelled with God's diſpenſations of providence and grace, as if they were unjuſt and unequal, and would argue from the words with which the prophet concluded, chap. xxiv. 23. that it was in vain to call them to repentance and life, when their ſins were bound upon them, and they muſt neceſſarily pine away in their iniquities, though the prophet had ſpoken conditionally of what would be their caſe, if they did not return to God, and with an expreſs view to lead them to repentance. Note, (1.) They who chuſe to err, will pervert the moſt glorious truths of God, that they may have a plea to harden themſelves in iniquity. (2.) Many through deſpair of pardon ruſh preſumptuouſly on their ſins, and have their hearts hereby utterly hardened.

2. God ſilences their unjuſt reflections.

(1.) Their deſpair had no foundation from God's word, but aroſe from their own wilfulneſs. Far from delighting in the death of a ſinner, vengeance is God's ſtrange work. He aſſures them, nay, by an oath confirms his word, that he had rather they would turn and live; nay, he warmly expoſtulates with them on the folly and perverſeneſs of their conduct, and with repeated earneſtneſs urges them to conſider their ways, and turn from their iniquities that they may not die, as otherwiſe they infallibly muſt. Note, (1.) Sinners muſt repent, or periſh. (2.) God is grieved, ſpeaking after the manner of men, when they perverſely reject the calls of his word. (3.) The damnation of the ſinner lieth at his own door, in a day of judgment he will have only himſelf to blame.

(2.) Their charge upon God as dealing unequally, is refuted, they themſelves being judges; for what can be ſo evidently equitable as his procedure? 1. The righteous ſhall ſurely live, ver. 13. they who by the faith of Jeſus, and by his ſpirit in them, are both accounted righteous before God, and really appear ſuch before men: but the moſt plauſible profeſſors, if they apoſtatize, will periſh, and many ſuch there ever were, and will be. The grand ſource of their ruin is their pride; they truſt on their own righteouſneſs, the moſt fatal rock againſt which a ſoul can ſplit; for the moment a ſinner places confidence in his own doings and duties, and fancies himſelf ſtrong enough to reſiſt any temptation, he is already fallen. This high conceit is his mortal ſin, and the ſure forerunner of his ruin: puffed up with pride, he falls into the ſnare of the devil; commits iniquity, lives and dies in the practice of it, and the conſequence of this is, he periſhes everlaſtingly: all his pleas of former goodneſs will ſtand him in no ſtead at God's bar; he is found in unrepented guilt, and ſinks under the curſe into the belly of hell; and the more confident his former hopes were, and the more eminent his profeſſion, the more dreadful will his diſappointment be, and the more aggravated his guilt. Be not therefore high-minded, but fear. 2. The wicked ſhall ſurely die, ſuch is the decree of the unchangeable God; not that this terrible ſentence is deſigned to bar the door of hope againſt penitents, far from it; but to warn them of their danger, that they may eſcape from it. For, whenever a ſinner turns to God, however aggravated his guilt, and numberleſs or enormous his tranſgreſſions, he ſhall, through Jeſus, be accepted, and find that he can as eaſily pardon many tranſgreſſions as few; and for the encouragement of the trembling ſoul, God is pleaſed to aſſure us, his arms are open; and ſo far from upbraiding us with our rebellions, he will not ſo much as mention them in the day we return to him. The paſt ſhall all be cancelled, the preſent bleſſed change ſhall only be remembered; and in the way of truth and righteouſneſs, in which by divine grace we are enabled now to walk, we ſhall aſſuredly find eternal life.

The concluſion from the whole is clear. God's ways are equal, theirs unequal; he will not own therefore theſe unreaſonable and wicked men as his people, but turns them over to the prophet, v. 17. determined to judge them according to their ways; and however they diſpute againſt him, he will glorify his righteouſneſs in the deſtruction of the impenitent and apoſtates, and in the ſalvation of the penitent and faithful.

21. ¶ And it came to paſs in the twelfth year of [z] our captivity, in the tenth month, in the fifth day of the month, [a] that one that had eſcaped out of Jeruſalem, came unto me, ſaying, [b] The city is ſmitten. 22. Now
[c] the hand of the LORD was upon me in the evening, afore he that was eſcaped came; and had opened my mouth until he came to me in the morning, and my mouth was opened, and I was no more [d] dumb. 23.
Then the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 24. Son of man, [e] they that inhabit thoſe waſtes of the land of Iſrael, ſpeak, ſaying, [f] Abraham was one, and he inherited the land: but we are many, the land is given us for inheritance. 25. Wherefore ſay unto them, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [g] Ye eat † with the blood; and [h] lift up your eyes toward your idols, and ſhed blood; and ſhall ye poſſeſs the land? 26. Ye ſtand upon your ſword, ye work abomination, and ye defile every one his neighbour's wife; and ſhall ye poſſeſs the land?
27. Say thou thus unto them, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, As I live, ſurely, they that are in the waſtes ſhall fall by the ſword, and him that is in the open field [i] will I give to the beaſts ‡ to be devoured: and they that be in the forts [k] and in the caves, ſhall die of the peſtilence.
28. For [l] I will lay the land ‖ moſt deſolate, and [m] the pomp of her ſtrength ſhall ceaſe: and the mountains of Iſrael ſhall be deſolate, that none ſhall paſs through. 29. [n] Then ſhall they know that I am the of all their abominations which they have committed.

v. 21—29. Ezekiel had been informed, chap. xxiv. 26. that one of thoſe eſcaped out of the flames of Jeruſalem, ſhould give him an affecting narrative of the miſeries that devoted place had ſuffered; and lo! the meſſenger arrives. According to ſome, this was a year and four months after the fatal cataſtrophe; though others, by a different method of computation, ſuppoſe it only a month from the time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

1. The prophet, the evening before the meſſenger arrived, by a divine impreſſion, being made acquainted with the ſad news he brought, chap. xxiv. 27. had began anew, after a long ſilence, with earneſtneſs and zeal to addreſs his unhappy countrymen; taking occaſion from this ſad event to warn them of the dreadful conſequences of ſin, and call them to repentance.

2. After he had heard the particulars of the ſiege, and deſtruction of the city, with the ravages of the Chaldean army through the country, he hath a word from God ſent unto him, to be delivered to the miſerable remnant who inhabited the waſtes of Judea; and ſo far from being humbled with all the judgments they had ſeen, and the ſufferings they had felt, continued juſt as bad as ever: and theſe were either Johanan and his aſſociates, or ſome others who might ſtill have continued in Judea, after he and his company were departed into Egypt.

(1.) Their pride was inſufferable. Far from lamenting their ſins, which had cauſed the deſolations of the land, they count themſelves as high in God's favour as Abraham; yea, in ſome reſpects they think they exceed him, poſſeſſing their inheritance by as good a title; and being many, to keep poſſeſſion of it againſt oppoſers, v. 24.

(2.) Their other ſins were great and aggravated. [1.] Ye eat with the blood, contrary to the divine preſcription, Lev. xix. 26. or upon the blood, referring to the idolatrous practices of the heathen, who ſat down round the blood of the ſacrifices they had offered to devils, and fancied they held communion with them thereby. [2.] Ye lift up your eyes towards your idols, worſhipping theſe abominations. [3.] Ye ſhed blood, the blood of innocents. [4.] Ye ſtand upon your ſword, place confidence in an arm of fleſh. [5.] Ye work abomination, ſlaves to vile affections and unnatural luſts. [6.] Ye defile every one his neighbour's wife, which is juſtly reckoned among the moſt atrocious crimes.

(3.) The conſequence of ſuch wickedneſs could not but be fatal to them. Shall ye poſſeſs the land? ſuch miſcreants as the earth groaned to bear? No. The ſword of vengeance will purſue them in the waſte places; thoſe who are in the open fields the beaſts ſhall devour, and they who have fled to the forts and fortreſſes for ſhelter, ſhall die of the peſtilence, v. 27. One judgment ſhall follow upon another, till the land is compleatly deſolate; their remaining ſtrength they boaſted of is utterly ruined, and the very mountains waſted without flocks or herds feeding on them: nor ſhall a traveller paſs through the land, ſo uncultivated, ſo depopulated would it be, and filled with wild beaſts, v. 28. Such judgments would make them know an avenging God, who having ſworn to puniſh will execute his threatnings, and give them the juſt recompenſe their abominations deſerve, v. 29.

30. ¶ Alſo thou ſon of man, [o] the children of thy people ſtill are talking † againſt thee by the walls, and in the doors of the houſes, and ſpeak one to another, every one to his brother, ſaying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the LORD. 31. And [p] they come unto thee as the people cometh, and ‡ they ſit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: [q] for with their mouth they ‖ ſhew much love, but their heart goeth [r] after their covetouſneſs. 32. And lo, thou art unto them as § a very lovely ſong of one that hath a pleaſant voice, and can play well on an inſtrument: for [s] they hear thy words, but they do them not. 33. [t] And when this cometh to paſs (lo it will come) then [u] ſhall they know that a prophet hath been among them.

v. 30—33. The Jews which remained in the land were, we find, bad, very bad: nor were many of the captivity much better, as here evidently appears.

1. They were hypocritical mockers and revilers. They came with other worſhippers, and ſat, to appearance, gravely and attentively, as if deſirous to hear the prophetic word, and in their profeſſions before the prophet pretended much love; but their hearts were in the gall of bitterneſs and bond of iniquity; covetouſneſs reigned within; they were pleaſed with the prophet's manner, his expreſſions and elocution as a ſpeaker, but paid no regard to the matter. It was the amuſement of an hour; and when they were gone, they could readily join in the abuſe caſt upon him; and among their own party ridicule and revile the preacher, his doctrine, and his hearers. Note, (1.) Public perſons, eſpecially miniſters, will be the but of obloquy. If they knew but half the evil ſaid of them, it might diſcourage them; but God knows their revilers, and will puniſh them. (2.) It is a ſerious matter to hear God's word; they who make a jeſt of things ſacred, will find by and by that God is not thus to be mocked. (3.) Many come to the ordinances in formality, and for faſhion ſake, who never ſo much as expect edification from them. (4.) We often ſee a ſmooth tongue cover a malignant heart; from the teeth outward, all is profeſſion of love and regard, but rancour and enmity rage within. (5.) Many take pleaſure in hearing the man and the miniſter, who pay no regard to the meſſage; and whilſt their ears are delighted, their hearts are untouched. (6.) Even among profeſſors of religion, covetouſneſs is a reigning ſin; and nothing more effectually quenches the good impreſſions of God's word than this.

2. God's word will ſtand when all contemners of it ſhall periſh together. When this cometh to paſs (lo it will come) however now ſcoffers deſpiſe the wrath of God, they will too late rue their folly; then ſhall they know that a prophet hath been among them, when the event verifies the prediction, and the threatned vengeance overtakes them.

CHAP. XXXIV.

The iniquities and calamities of God's Iſrael had been largely and pathetically lamented before. In this chapter the ſhepherds of Iſrael, their rulers both in the church and ſtate, are called to an account, as having been very much acceſſary to their ſin and ruin. 1. They are charged with negligence, unſkilfulneſs, and unfaithfulneſs in the management of public affairs, ver. 1, 6, 8. 2. They are diſcharged from their truſt for inſufficiency and treachery, ver. 7, 10.

7, 10. 3. God promiſes to take care of his flock though they did not, ver. 11, 16. 4. A charge is exhibited againſt thoſe of the flock that were fat and ſtrong, for injuring the weak and feeble, ver. 17—22. 5. The Meſſiah is promiſed as the great and good ſhepherd of the ſheep, who ſhould redreſs all their grievances, ver. 23—31.

1. AND the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. [a] Son of man, propheſy againſt [b] the ſhepherds of Iſrael, propheſy and ſay unto them, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD unto the ſhepherds, [c] Wo be to the ſhepherds of Iſrael [d] that do feed themſelves: ſhould not the ſhepherds [e] feed the flocks? 3. [f] Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock. 4. [g] The diſeaſed have ye not ſtrengthened, neither have ye healed that which was ſick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye ſought that which was loſt; but [h] with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them. 5. And [i] they were ſcattered † becauſe there is no ſhepherd: and they became meat to all the beaſts of the field, when they were ſcattered. 6. My ſheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, [k] my flock was ſcattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did ſearch or ſeek after them.

v. 1—6. We have here,

1. A woe denounced againſt the ſhepherds of Iſrael, the princes and magiſtrates, or the prieſts and Levites, who were the great authors of Iſrael's ruin; and though their ſtation was ſo high, and their profeſſion ſo reſpectable, yet neither would ſcreen them from ſevere rebuke, nor exempt them from God's fearful wrath. Negligent paſtors are the moſt criminal of all tranſgreſſors, and may expect the heavieſt judgment.

2. The ſin charged upon them is enriching themſelves at the expence of their neglected flocks; indifferent what became of the people committed to their charge, they never thought of feeding them, but of fattening themſelves. The magiſtrates took no pains to vindicate the oppreſſed, to relieve the poor, to bring back thoſe who were fled to foreign lands, to ſuppreſs vice, or encourage religion: the miniſters intent only on their tythes and offerings, took no pains to ſeek the loſt, to inſtruct the ignorant, recover the erroneous, warn the unruly, or comfort the feeble-minded; the ſouls of men ſeemed in no wiſe their concern. With force and cruelty, both in church and ſtate, they ruled; and uſed to the purpoſes of oppreſſion the power committed to their truſt for the protection and edification of God's people, ſo that they had really no ſhepherd; yea, worſe than none: for thoſe who uſurped the office were in fact ravening wolves. Wo to the poor people that are in ſuch a caſe!

7. ¶ Therefore, ye ſhepherds, hear the word of the LORD; 8. As I live, ſaith the Lord GOD, ſurely becauſe my flock became a prey, and my flock became meat to every beaſt of the field, becauſe there was no ſhepherd, [l] neither did my ſhepherds ſearch for my flock, but the ſhepherds fed themſelves, and fed not my flock: 9. Therefore, O ye ſhepherds, hear the word of the LORD; 10. Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, [m] I am againſt the ſhepherds, and [n] I will require my flock at their hand, and cauſe them to ceaſe from feeding the flock, neither ſhall the ſhepherds feed themſelves any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them. 11. ¶ For thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, I, even I, will both ſearch my ſheep, and ſeek them out. 12. † As a ſhepherd ſeeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his ſheep that are ſcattered; ſo will I ſeek out my ſheep, and will deliver them out of all places, where they have been ſcattered [o] in the cloudy and dark day. 13. And [p] I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Iſrael by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country. 14. I will feed them [q] in a good paſture, and upon the high mountains of Iſrael ſhall their fold be: there ſhall they lie in a good fold, and in a fat paſture ſhall they feed upon the mountains of Iſrael. 15. I will feed my flock, and I will cauſe them to lie down, ſaith the Lord GOD. 16. [r] I will ſeek that which was loſt, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will ſtrengthen that which was ſick: but I will deſtroy [s] the fat and the ſtrong, I will feed them with judgment.

v. 7—16. The careleſs ſhepherds are cited to God's bar. God will puniſh them, and graciouſly reſcue the flock they have abuſed.

1. He will puniſh the ſhepherds for their neglect and rapaciouſneſs, v. 8. God is againſt them, and his wrath who can abide? He will call them to a ſevere account for the loſs of every ſheep of his flock that periſhed through their negligence. Zedekiah, and the princes who rebelled, ſhall bear the guilt of all the innocent blood which was ſhed in conſequence thereof. And every loſt ſoul ſhall cry for vengeance againſt the unfaithful miniſter who ſuffered him, unconcerned, to die in his iniquity. God will turn them out of their office, and ſuffer them no more to fatten on the ſpoil. The king and princes of Judah ſhall be hurled from their high eſtate, and caſt into the depths of abject wretchedneſs, and thoſe prieſts and Levites who abuſed their ſacred office, be degraded, v. 10. Note, (1.) Miniſters can never too often reflect upon the ſolemn account they muſt one day make. (2.) God juſtly deprives oppreſſors of the power they abuſe.

2. God will himſelf take care of his own flock; none of his ſheep ſhall periſh. Though their paſtors are unfaithful, and neglect them, he will provide for them. Behold, I, even I the Lord, able and willing to ſave them; I will, (1.) both ſearch my ſheep, and ſeek them out, wherever they are diſperſed through all the earth, not one ſhall be loſt, v. 11. He knoweth thoſe that are his, and in his good time will bring them into his fold from their ſtate of wandering, during the cloudy and dark day; and this was fulfilled primarily in the reſtoration of the Jews from their captivity, and is ſpiritually ſtill fulfilling day by day, whilſt by his word and grace he is gathering in his redeemed people from the earth, calling them out of darkneſs into his marvellous light, till he hath accompliſhed the number of his elect, and his eternal kingdom comes: may my ſoul in that day be the object of his care! (2.) He will feed them upon the mountains of Iſrael, and cauſe them to lie down in peace and ſafety, in a good fold, and a fat paſture, ver. 14, 15. The Jews on their return to their own land, enjoyed abundance of bleſſings, and particularly the privileges of the ſanctuary and ordinances of God's worſhip. And in the church, the mount of God, do all believers find the rich paſtures of grace, and the ſweet waters of divine conſolation: incloſed as in a fold, under the protection of their Almighty ſhepherd, they are ſafe from all the powers of evil, and reſt under his ſhadow with great delight: happy the people that are in ſuch a caſe! (3.) He will not only recover them from their wanderings, but heal thoſe that were hurt, during their ſtate of departure from him, and ſtrengthen thoſe that were ſick. The awakened ſinner feels his deadly wounds, his heart is broken with a ſenſe of guilt, and weak he finds himſelf, and unable to reſiſt his corruptions, but the Saviour who bought his ſheep with his own blood, pours in his precious balm to aſſwage their pains, and cures the deſperate. By his ſpirit he renews their minds, gives the medicine which heals their ſickneſs, even his efficacious grace, which can ſave them from the bondage of corruption, and ſtrengthens their weakneſs, that they may be enabled to walk and pleaſe God.

3. It is repeated, to mark the certainty and terribleneſs of their deſtruction. I will deſtroy the fat and the ſtrong; for he who glorifies his mercy in the ſalvation of his people, will glorify his juſtice in the damnation of his and their enemies; feeding them with judgment, inflicting the righteous vengeance due to their iniquities.

17. And as for you, O my flock, thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [t] Behold, I judge between † cattle and cattle, between the rams and the ‡ he-goats. 18. Seemeth it a ſmall thing unto you, to have eaten up the good paſture, but ye muſt tread down with your feet the reſidue of your paſtures? and to have drunk of the deep waters, but ye muſt foul the reſidue with your feet? 19. And as for my flock, they eat that which ye have troden with your feet: and they drink that which ye have fouled with your feet. 20. ¶ Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD unto them, Behold, I, even I will judge between the fat cattle, and between the lean cattle. 21. Becauſe ye have thruſt with ſide, and with ſhoulder, and puſhed all the diſeaſed with your horns, till ye have ſcattered them abroad: 22. Therefore will I ſave my flock, and they ſhall no more be a prey, and I will judge between cattle and cattle. 23. And I will ſet up [u] one ſhepherd over them, and he ſhall feed them, [x] even my ſervant David; he ſhall feed them, and he ſhall be their ſhepherd. 24. And I the LORD will be their God; and my ſervant David a prince among them, I the LORD have ſpoken it. 25. And [y] I will

v. 17—31. The prophet turns from the ſhepherds to the flock, for they were of different kinds. The church of profeſſors ever conſiſted of a mixed multitude, good and bad; but there is a diſcerning ſhepherd, the Lord Jeſus, here ſpoken of, who will ſhortly ſeparate the precious from the vile.

1. A heavy charge is brought againſt ſome of the flock; the fat, the rams and he-goats, the wealthy who oppreſſed their neighbours, and, not content with the gains of extortion, embittered by their ill uſage the little which remained to the poor flock, as if they took a pleaſure in their diſtreſſes, v. 18, 19. Nay, they not only trod down the paſtures, and fouled the waters, but thruſt with the ſide and ſhoulder, and puſhed the diſeaſed with their horns, adding affliction to the afflicted. Many apply this to the Scribes and Phariſees, who devoured the poor, fouled the waters of truth by their traditions, and oppreſſed with their anathemas the poor of the flock, who confeſſed the Lord Jeſus. Though it may be alſo generally applied to wicked men in every age, who have copied theſe deſtructive ways; and, tho' in profeſſion the flock of Chriſt, have ſhewn themſelves the moſt inveterate enemies of his faithful ſheep; but God will judge them, deliver his people from them now, and make an eternal ſeparation ſhortly between the precious and the vile.

2. Rich conſolation is ſpoken to the faithful few. God will ſave his flock, nor ſuffer them any more to be a prey to their enemies; particularly by raiſing up the promiſed Meſſiah, under whoſe protection his people ſhould dwell in ſafety.

(1.) His character and office are deſcribed. I will ſet up one ſhepherd over them: both Jew and Gentile under him ſhall become one fold; and by the divine appointment he is conſtituted the head over all things to his church; and he ſhall feed them by his word, his Spirit, his ordinances, his miniſters; even my ſervant David, ſo called as being David's promiſed ſeed, and God's ſervant, as employed by him in the work of the ſalvation of loſt ſouls: a plant of renown, v. 29. moſt tranſcendently glorious in his perſon and offices, and exalted in the preaching of his goſpel.

(2.) For his ſake God will make with them a covenant of peace. Man is by nature in a ſtate of enmity with God, till Chriſt, our peace, brings us, who were far off, nigh unto God; then we become intereſted in the everlaſting covenant of grace; God engages to be our God; and his ſervant David, the Lord Jeſus, becomes our prince and ſaviour, to give repentance and remiſſion of ſins, and to reign over and protect his redeemed, v. 24. and Iſrael, all true believers, ſhall be his people, to love, ſerve, and enjoy him to eternity, v. 30.

(3.) Ineſtimably great and precious are the privileges to which the flock of God becomes entitled, in virtue of this covenant of peace. Since the Lord their God was with them, v. 30. their deliverance was ſure, and peace and plenty were now their happy portion. They ſhall be ſafe under the divine protection; their ſpiritual enemies, the evil beaſts, v. 25. ſubdued, and cauſed to ceaſe out of the land: they ſhall be delivered from fear of evil; though in the midſt of ſnares and temptations, God will preſerve them, v. 25, 28. and having broken the oppreſſors yoke, and reſcued them from thoſe who ſerved themſelves of them, he will make them know he is the Lord, by bleſſed experience of his almighty power, grace, and love, v. 27. They ſhall want no manner of thing that is good; all ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt Jeſus ſhall ſurround them. I will make them and the places round about my hill, a bleſſing; ſo eminently ſhall they be diſtinguiſhed with his favours; and all who ſee them will call them bleſſed; yea, they ſhall themſelves alſo be bleſſings to others. And I will cauſe the ſhower to come down in his ſeaſon; the graces and conſolations of his Spirit, which the Redeemer ſhowers down upon the hearts of his people, according to their various neceſſities. There ſhall be ſhowers of bleſſings; the greateſt abundance of the richeſt gifts of God, pardon, adoption, holineſs, glory, freely beſtowed upon the redeemed ſoul: and the tree of the field ſhall yield her fruit; the fruits of righteouſneſs, which ſpring from theſe quickening ſhowers of grace: and the earth ſhall yield her increaſe, in an abundance of converts raiſed up by the preaching of the goſpel. They ſhall be no more conſumed with hunger, but be richly fed with that bread which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world: neither ſhall they bear the ſhame of the heathen any more, God having appeared for them, and made it evident, by the diſpenſations of his providence and grace, that he is their God, v. 31. their preſent portion, and exceeding great reward. The Jews returned from captivity enjoyed literally many of theſe bleſſings outwardly; but they are moſt eminently fulfilled to the Iſrael of God in every age, who in Chriſt Jeſus are bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings in heavenly things.

CHAP. XXXV.

This chapter contains a prophecy of the deſtruction of Edom. 1. Their ſin was malice to Iſrael, ver. 5, 10, 13. 2. Their ruin is threatned for it: God will be againſt them, ver. 3. Their country ſhall be laid waſte, ver. 4. depopulated, and made quite deſolate, ver. 6—9. and left ſo, when other nations that had been waſted ſhould recover themſelves, ver. 14, 15.

1. MOREOVER, the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. Son of man, ſet thy face againſt mount Seir, [a] and propheſy againſt it, 3. And ſay unto it, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, O mount Seir, I am againſt thee, and I will ſtretch out mine hand againſt thee, and I will make thee † moſt deſolate. 4. I will lay thy cities waſte, and thou ſhalt be deſolate, and thou ſhalt [b] know that I am the LORD. 5. Becauſe thou haſt had a ‡ perpetual hatred, and [c] haſt § ſhed the blood of the children of Iſrael by the force of the ſword, in the time of their calamity, [d] in the time that their iniquity had an end: 6. Therefore, as I live, ſaith the Lord GOD, I will prepare thee unto blood, and blood ſhall purſue thee: [e] ſith thou haſt not hated blood, even blood ſhall purſue thee. 7. Thus will I make mount Seir moſt deſolate, and cut off from it him that paſſeth out, and him that returneth. 8. And I will fill his mountains with his ſlain men: in thy hills, and in thy valleys, and in all thy rivers ſhall they fall that are ſlain with the ſword. 9. [f] I will make thee perpetual deſolations, and thy cities ſhall not return, and [g] ye ſhall know that I am the LORD.

v. 1—9. Mount Seir had before been arraigned and condemned: a ſecond time, to ſhew the certainty and immutability of God's council, the prophet muſt repeat the charge and the judgment paſſed upon her. Since God was againſt her, he muſt ſet his face againſt her too.

1. The provocation given by the Edomites was, their enmity and ill behaviour towards God's Iſrael. The hatred of Eſau againſt Jacob had been tranſmitted as a deadly feud to his poſterity; and now they had an opportunity to wreak their revenge upon the Jews, they failed not to improve it, and ſhed the blood of thoſe who fled in the day of their calamity, unable to reſiſt, when the meaſure of their iniquity was full, and their ruin compleated, v. 8. Note, (1.) The quarrels of parents frequently deſcend to their children, and even national antipathies are often deeply rooted; but the moſt perpetual hatred is that which ever did and ever will ſubſiſt between the ſeed of the ſerpent and the ſeed of the woman. (2.) It is baſe and cruel to take advantage of the diſtreſs of others, to oppreſs them, and add to their affliction.

2. The puniſhment denounced is the utter deſolation of their country, v. 3. Since they had ſo laviſhly ſhed blood, God will give them blood to drink, v. 6. The mountains ſhall be filled with the ſlain, and the ſword devour without mercy, v. 8. ſo that on which ever ſide they turned, death met them. Thus ſhould the country be made perpetual deſolations, and never more be reſtored to its former proſperity: and in theſe judgments God will make himſelf known to them, as the avenger of his people's wrongs; and ſooner or later ſhall the revenge of the malicious be thus with fearful vengeance repaid.

10. Becauſe thou haſt ſaid, Theſe two nations, and theſe two countries ſhall be mine, and we will [h] poſſeſs it, † whereas [i] the LORD was there: 11. Therefore, as I live, ſaith the Lord GOD, I will even do [k] according to thine anger, and according to thine envy which thou haſt uſed out of thy hatred againſt them: and I will

will make myſelf known amongſt them, when I have judged thee. 12. And thou ſhalt know that I am the LORD, and that I have heard all thy blaſphemies which thou haſt ſpoken againſt the mountains of Iſrael, ſaying, They are laid deſolate, they are given us ‡ to conſume. 13. Thus with your mouth ye have § boaſted againſt me, and [l] have multiplied your words againſt me: I have heard them. 14. Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, When the whole earth rejoiceth, I will make thee deſolate. 15. [m] As thou didſt rejoice at the inheritance of the houſe of Iſrael, becauſe it was deſolate, ſo will I do unto thee: thou ſhalt be deſolate, O mount Seir, and all Idumea, even all of it, and they ſhall know that I am the LORD.

v. 10—15. We have here farther inſtances of the wickedneſs of the Edomites.

1. In their blaſphemies both againſt God and his people. Thou haſt ſaid, Theſe two nations and countries ſhall be mine; they thought of ſeizing the land of Judah and Iſrael for their own; whereas, or though, the Lord was there; which ſhewed their profaneneſs and impiety, as if, notwithſtanding his preſence and protection, they could and would poſſeſs it. They concluded, becauſe the land was deſolate, that God had utterly abandoned his people, v. 12. but it was far otherwiſe; for every boaſt and inſolent word uttered againſt them, the Lord regarded as a reproach caſt upon himſelf, v. 13.

2. They rejoiced to ſee the deſolations of Iſrael, v. 15. their envy and hatred were thus gratified, and with a malicious pleaſure they inſulted over them.

3. God remarked their wicked words: he heard, and will avenge them; he will retaliate upon them all the anger, envy, and hatred they ſhewed to his people, and make them deſolate as thoſe over whom they rejoiced. Yea, when other nations ſhall ſee their miſeries removed, Edom's deſolations ſhall remain; or, as the words, v. 14. may be rendered, The whole earth ſhall rejoice in the deſolations which I ſhall make for thee, pleaſed to behold their fall. And herein God will alſo glorify himſelf, and make his juſtice, power, and regard to his people, known in their enemies deſtruction, v. 11. Note, (1.) Not an idle word eſcapes the divine cognizance; much leſs the hard ſpeeches which profane and ungodly ſinners utter againſt the Lord. (2.) They who maliciouſly rejoice in the death of others, by whom they hope to gain, may expect that others will expreſs the ſame malicious pleaſure over them, when the day of their fall arrives. (3.) God will order all the diſpenſations of his providence and grace in ſuch a way, as to demonſtrate his care and love for his own people.

CHAP. XXXVI.

There are two diſtinct prophecies in this chapter; 1. One that relates to the temporal eſtate of the Jews, wherein their preſent deplorable condition is deſcribed, and the triumphs of their neighbours in it; but it is promiſed, that their grievances ſhould be all redreſſed, and they in due time ſettled again in their own land in the midſt of peace and plenty, ver. 1—15. 2. Another that ſeems chiefly to concern their ſpiritual eſtate, wherein they are minded of their former ſins, and God's judgments upon them to humble them, ver. 16—20. But it is promiſed, (1.) That God would glorify himſelf in ſhewing mercy to them, ver. 21—24. (2.) That he would ſanctify them, by giving them his grace, and fitting them for his ſervice; and this for his own name's ſake, and in anſwer to their prayers, ver. 25—38.

1. ALSO thou ſon of man, propheſy unto [a] the mountains of Iſrael, and ſay, Ye mountains of Iſrael, hear the word of the LORD. 2. Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Becauſe [b] the enemy had ſaid againſt you, Aha, [c] even the ancient high places [d] are ours in poſſeſſion: 3. Therefore propheſy and ſay, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, † Becauſe they have made you deſolate, and ſwallowed you up on every ſide, that ye might be a poſſeſſion unto the reſidue of the heathen, and ye are ‡ taken up in the lips of talkers, and [e] are an infamy of the people: 4. Therefore ye mountains of Iſrael, hear the word of the Lord GOD, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD to the mountains, and to the hills, to the § rivers, and to the valleys, to the deſolate waſtes, and to the cities that are forſaken, which became a prey and deriſion to the reſidue of the heathen that are round about: 5. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [f] Surely in the fire of my jealouſy have I ſpoken againſt the reſidue of the heathen, and againſt all Idumea, [g] which have appointed my land into their poſſeſſion, with the joy of all their heart, with deſpiteful minds to caſt it out for a prey. 6. Propheſy therefore concerning the land of Iſrael, and ſay unto the mountains and to the hills, to the rivers and to the valleys, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, I have ſpoken in my jealouſy, and in my fury, becauſe [h] ye have borne the ſhame of the heathen. 7. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, I have lifted up mine hand, ſurely the heathen that are about you, they ſhall bear their ſhame. 8. ¶ But ye, O mountains of Iſrael, ye ſhall ſhoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Iſrael, for they are at hand to come. 9. For behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye ſhall be tilled and ſown. 10. And [i] I will multiply men upon you, all the houſe of Iſrael, even all of it, and the cities ſhall be inhabited, and the waſtes ſhall be builded. 11. And I will multiply upon you man and beaſt, and they ſhall increaſe and bring fruit, and I will ſettle you after your old eſtates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings, and [k] ye ſhall know that I am the LORD. 12. Yea, I will cauſe men to walk upon you, even my people Iſrael, and [l] they ſhall poſſeſs thee, and thou ſhalt be their inheritance, and thou ſhalt no more henceforth [m] bereave them of men. 13. Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Becauſe they ſay unto you, [n] Thou land devoureſt up men, and haſt bereaved thy nations; 14. Therefore thou ſhalt devour men no more, neither ‖ bereave thy nations any more, ſaith the Lord GOD. 15. [o] Neither will I cauſe men to hear in thee the ſhame of the heathen any more, neither ſhalt thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither ſhalt thou cauſe thy nations to fall any more, ſaith the Lord GOD.

v. 1—15. The land of Iſrael was now deſolate and depopulated, but God ſtill thought upon the duſt thereof. We have,

1. His compaſſionate regard towards this miſerable country. It was become a prey and deriſion to the reſidue of the heathen, ver. 4. Their neighbours inſulted them, and every tongue, v. 3. was ready to ſpread their infamy, v. 6. to upbraid them with their ſins, and mock at their ſufferings; whilſt the nations around them, the reſidue, who had ſurvived the judgments threatned, chap. xxv. xxvi. each ſeized that part of Judea which bordered upon their own country, as their prey.

2. His jealouſy for his people. Becauſe with ſpiteful joy their enemies exulted in their miſeries, and with daring intruſion entred the inheritance of the Lord, v. 5. he hath ſpoken in the fire of his jealouſy, ver. 5. and in his fury, ver. 6. that he will ſeverely avenge their wrongs, and cover with ſhame and confuſion theſe inveterate and malicious foes, v. 7. Note, They who make God's people the ſubject of deriſion, will ſhortly be themſelves expoſed to everlaſting ſhame and contempt.

3. God gives his people aſſurance of a happy reſtoration, and plenty of all good things in their own land; and the time is at hand, v. 8. The mountains ſhall yield abundant fruit; tho' now uncultivated, they ſhall be tilled and ſown; the cities that lie in ruins ſhall be repleniſhed with inhabitants, v. 10. and all the houſe of Iſrael, even all of it, not the two tribes only, but the ten tribes who went before into captivity, ſhall ſettle on their old eſtates, and ſee their flocks and herds multiplying under the divine bleſſing; and God will do better for them than at their beginnings; particularly with regard to the ſpiritual bleſſings beſtowed in the days of the Meſſiah, v. 11. Then ſhould the mountains again become the abode of men, inſtead of wild beaſts, which had dwelt therein; the idolatries committed in them ſhould ceaſe, nor provoke God any more to bereave them of inhabitants, v. 12—14. and the reproach which had been laid on the mountains of Iſrael by the heathen, as if they had devoured all who dwelt in them, ſhall for ever be at an end, v. 15. Probably this prophecy looks to future times, and whatever fulfilment it received in the return of the Jews from Babylon, the perfect accompliſhment of it is yet to come.

16. ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 17. Son of man, when the houſe of Iſrael dwelt in their own land, [p] they defiled it by their own way, and by their doings: their way was before me as the uncleanneſs of a removed woman. 18. Wherefore I poured my fury upon them [q] for the blood that they have ſhed upon the land, and for their † idols wherewith they had polluted it. 19. And I ſcattered them among the heathen, and they were diſperſed through the countries: according to their way, and according to their doings I judged them. 20. v. 16—24. The great end God propoſes is the advancement of his own glory, and therefore the unworthineſs of his people is no bar to their ſalvation, rather the more ſhall the riches of his grace be magnified.

1. They had indeed forfeited all title to favour. By their ſins they had diſhonoured God, and defiled the land: ſo totally corrupted were they, that every thing they touched, like a woman in her ſeparation, became unclean, v. 17. Murder and idolatry marked their way, and provoked God to pour out his fury upon them, v. 18. and to ſcatter them for their abominations into heathen lands, v. 19. Yet even there all their ſufferings were ſtill ineffectual; they ſinned yet more, and gave the adverſaries of the Lord occaſion to blaſpheme. Their wicked lives brought a ſcandal on that name they profeſſed to reverence and ſerve, and the very heathen treated them with ſcorn. Theſe are the people of the Lord: they mocked at their pretended relation to him; their conduct gave the lie to their profeſſions; or it implied an inſult on their God, as if, notwithſtanding all the Jewiſh boaſts, he were unable to ſave them from the hand of their enemies. Note, The ſins of profeſſors are the greateſt ſcandal to religion, and give juſt occaſion to the adverſaries of the Lord to blaſpheme; but wo unto him by whom the offence cometh!

2. God will glorify his great name and the riches of his grace in their deliverance. They had no reaſon to expect any thing from him but wrath to the uttermoſt, their provocations were ſo aggravated; but then the heathen would blaſpheme the more: therefore, not for their ſake, but for his own glory, he will interpoſe, and gather them from among the nations, and bring them to their own land. Note, Where ſin hath abounded, God is moſt exalted in mercy, cauſing his grace much more to abound.

v. 25—38. Whatever accompliſhment this prophecy had in the return of the Jewiſh people from captivity, when they were for ever cured of all inclination to idolatry, it ſeems to have a more eſpecial regard to goſpel times. We have here,

1. Many great and precious promiſes given to God's people. (1.) God will cleanſe them from all their ſins, v. 25. by the blood of ſprinkling removing their guilt, and by the efficacy of his grace delivering them from the power of their iniquities. (2.) He will give them a new heart, v. 26. a heart changed by his divine energy from its former ſtate of corruption, hardneſs, and unbelief; another ſpirit ſhall influence and guide them; the ſtony heart, inſenſible and obdurate, ſhall be taken away, and in its ſtead a heart of fleſh ſhall be given them, tender, and ſuſceptible of every gracious impreſſion. (3.) Having made new their hearts, he will make ſtrait paths for their feet, and enable them to walk therein, v. 27. He will not only clearly point out the path of duty, but engage and conſtrain them to walk in it, and work in them to will and to do of his good pleaſure. (4.) He will take them into covenant with himſelf: Ye ſhall be my people, and I will be your God. He engages to make them ſuch as he would have them be, to work all for them and in them, and is himſelf the all-ſufficient portion of his people. (5.) He will give them plenty of all ſuch good things as they need; particularly, what the Jews counted the greateſt earthly bleſſing, they ſhall return to their own land; have abundance of corn and fruit; ſhall know no more famine as before; nor be reproached by the heathen, as forced to ſeek their bread from other countries; when, to the wonder and ſurprize of the ſurrounding nations, the land of Judea, lately ſo deſolate, ſhall be tilled, and become like the garden of Eden for fruitfulneſs; and the cities in ruins ſhall be fortified, and repleniſhed with inhabitants. So ſoon can God's bleſſing make a barren land fruitful, as his curſe makes the fruitfulleſt land barren.

Some interpreters ſuppoſe all theſe promiſes are yet to receive their accompliſhment in the recovery of the Jews from their preſent ſtate of diſperſion in the latter day.

2. The effect of God's rich grace extended to them would be their unfeigned repentance. Then ſhall ye remember your own evil ways, and loath yourſelves in your own ſight for your iniquities, and for your abominations. Nothing brings the ſoul to true humiliation, and ſuch a ſenſe of the baſeneſs and ingratitude of ſin, as a view of God's pardoning love: then we begin to loath ourſelves; ſin appears the abominable thing God hates, and therefore we hate it too: every remembrance of the paſt covers us with genuine ſhame; and though God hath forgiven us, we can never forgive ourſelves, for having ever offended a God ſo gracious.

3. God intends his own glory in what he doth for them, they being utterly unworthy the leaſt regard; yet, though it is a matter of pure grace, he expects they ſhall ſeek it in the way of prayer, and be confounded for their former evil ways, v. 32, 33. and he will give the anſwer of mercy, increaſing them as a flock, the flock of Jeruſalem in her ſolemn feaſts, immenſe numbers of ſheep being driven on theſe occaſions to Jeruſalem for ſacrifice, and vaſt multitudes of worſhippers aſſembled in the courts of the Lord's houſe; and ſo numerous and populous ſhould their deſolate land and cities become; ſince he hath ſpoken it, the accompliſhment is ſure. Note, (1.) Salvation is entirely of grace; our righteouſneſs and deſerts are utterly excluded, for indeed we have none, and God alone muſt be exalted in mercy. (2.) God's promiſes do not ſuperſede, but encourage our prayers. They who reſtrain prayer before God, ſin againſt their own mercies. (3.) What God hath ſpoken is as good as done: not one jot or tittle of his word ſhall ever fail.

CHAP. XXXVII.

The reſtoration of the people of God is here prefigured, 1. By a viſion of dry bones brought together, and raiſed to life, ver. 1—14. 2. By the coalition of two ſticks into one is ſhewn, the union of the two kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah at their return from captivity, ver. 15—22. a type of the union of Jews and Gentiles in one church in the days of the Meſſiah; and ſo, 3. The prophet ſlides into a prediction of the kingdom of Chriſt, which ſhould be ſet up in the world, and of the glories and graces of that kingdom, ver. 23—28.

1. [a] THE hand of the LORD was upon me, and [a] Chap. i. 3.
carried me out in the Spirit of the LORD, and ſet me down in the midſt of the valley which was full of bones, 2. And cauſed me to paſs by them round about, and behold, there were very many in the open valley, and lo, they were very dry. 3. And he ſaid unto me, Son of man, can theſe bones live? and I anſwered,

O Lord GOD, thou knoweſt. 4. Again he ſaid unto me, Propheſy † upon theſe bones, and ſay unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the LORD. 5. Thus ſaith the Lord GOD unto theſe bones, Behold, [b] I will cauſe breath to enter into you, and ye ſhall live. 6. And I will lay ſinews upon you, and will bring up fleſh upon you, and cover you with ſkin, and put breath in you; and ye ſhall live, and [c] ye ſhall know that I am the LORD. 7. So I propheſied as I was commanded: and as I propheſied, there was a noiſe, and behold [d] a ſhaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone. 8. And when I beheld, lo, the ſinews and the fleſh came up upon them, and the ſkin covered them above; but there was no breath in them. 9. Then ſaid he unto me, Propheſy unto the ‡ wind, propheſy, ſon of man, and ſay to the wind, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [e] Come from the four winds, O § breath, and breathe upon theſe ſlain, that they may live. 10. So I propheſied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and ſtood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army. 11. ¶ Then he ſaid unto me, Son of man, theſe bones are the whole houſe of Iſrael: behold, they ſay, [f] Our bones are dried, and [g] our hope is loſt, we are cut off for our parts. 12. Therefore propheſy, and ſay unto them, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, [h] O my people, I will open your graves, and cauſe you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Iſrael. 13. And ye ſhall know that I am the LORD, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, 14. And [i] ſhall put my Spirit in you, and ye ſhall live, and I ſhall place you in your own land: then ſhall ye know that I the LORD have ſpoken it, and performed it, ſaith the LORD.

v. 1—14. We have here,

1. The viſion. Under the powerful impulſe of the Spirit, the prophet is carried into the valley full of dry bones, disjointed and ſcattered in confuſion: an emblem of the Jewiſh people now captives in Babylon, ſo diſperſed that, to human view, their recovery was as much deſpaired of as the reſtoration of dry bones to life. Therefore, when aſked, Can theſe bones live? he replies, Thou knoweſt. Nothing ſhort of omnipotence can effect the amazing miracle. Note, (1.) Man's ſoul by nature is like theſe dry bones, totally void of all ſpiritual life, unable to exert one good deſire, or make the leaſt effort towards his recovery. (2.) God alone knows whom he deſigns for life, and whom he foreknew he predeſtinates to be conformed to the image of his ſon, quickning them from the death of ſin unto the life of righteouſneſs.

2. The prophet is commanded to propheſy upon or over theſe dry bones, and to call on them to attend, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord. And ſince by a divine energy accompanying his word their reſtoration to life ſhould be accompliſhed, he is ordered, v. 9. to pray unto the Spirit for his quickning influences, Come, O breath, or ſpirit, and breathe upon theſe ſlain, that they may live: and, though the work might ſeem ſtrange and fruitleſs, the prophet obeyed, v. 10. Note, (1.) Though the ſinner's ſoul of himſelf be as incapable of receiving the goſpel call as dry bones of hearing our voice, yet muſt we ſpeak in dependance upon the Spirit, which God hath promiſed, to make the miniſtrations of his own word effectual. (2.) Whilſt we are crying aloud to ſinners, we muſt be looking up to God, and pouring out our ſouls in prayer to him who quickneth the dead.

3. A wonderful effect followed his propheſying; for they who go forth in dependance on the divine power ſhall ſee the wonders of God's grace. A noiſe and ſhaking enſued, each bone joined his fellow, and fleſh and ſinews grew upon them; and, at the prophet's invocation, life entered into them, according to the promiſe, v. 6. and they ſtood up, an exceeding great army, v. 9, 10. Thus, by the proclamation of Cyrus, the captives were aſſembled, and, by the Divine Spirit animated, they were enabled to overcome all the difficulties in their way. And we have here alſo a repreſentation, (1.) Of our ſpiritual reſurrection from the death of ſin; by the preaching of the word a ſhaking is occaſioned among the ſouls dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; deep convictions make them tremble, and by the power of the Holy Ghoſt ſpiritual life is communicated. (2.) Of the reſurrection of the body in the laſt day, when all our ſcattered atoms ſhall be reunited, and the ſame body be raiſed by the power of God to life eternal.

4. The application of the whole to the houſe of Iſrael. They were theſe dry bones; reduced to the loweſt ſtate of abject miſery, and abandoning themſelves to deſpair. But in the time of our deepeſt diſtreſs God will make his power and grace more eminently known; therefore the prophet is commanded to aſſure them, that God will deliver them from their captivity, which was like opening the graves to the dead, v. 12. and give them life, in their reſtoration to the comfortable and peaceable poſſeſſion of their own land. God hath ſpoken, and will perform it; they may confidently truſt him; for what he promiſes is as good as done. Note, (1.) In times of ſore temptation, and long continued diſtreſs, our faith is ready to faint, and unbelief to prevail. (2.) Though we may deſpair of ourſelves, our ſtate may not be deſperate; God can do for us more than we can think. (3.) The lower we are reduced, the more is the power and grace of God magnified in our recovery.

15. ¶ The word of the LORD came again unto me, ſaying, 16. Moreover, thou ſon of man, [k] take thee one ſtick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for [l] the children of Iſrael his companions: then take another ſtick, and write upon it, For Joſeph the ſtick of Ephraim, and for all the houſe of Iſrael, his companions. 17. And [m] join them one to another into one ſtick, and they ſhall become one in thine hand. 18. ¶ And when the children of thy people ſhall ſpeak unto thee, ſaying, Wilt thou not ſhew us what thou meaneſt by theſe? 19. [n] Say unto them, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, I will take the ſtick of Joſeph which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Iſrael his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the ſtick of Judah, and make them one ſtick, and they ſhall be one in mine hand. 20. ¶ And the ſticks whereon thou writeſt, ſhall be in thine hand before their eyes. 21. And ſay unto them, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, I will take the children of Iſrael from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every ſide, [o] and bring them into their own land. 22. And [p] I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Iſrael, and [q] one king ſhall be king to them all: and they ſhall be no more two nations, neither ſhall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all: 23. Neither ſhall they defile themſelves any more with their idols, nor with their deteſtable things, nor with any of their tranſgreſſions: but I will ſave them out of all their dwelling-places, wherein they have ſinned, and will cleanſe them: ſo [r] ſhall they be my people, and I will be their God. 24. And [s] David my ſervant ſhall be king over them: and [t] they all ſhall have one ſhepherd: they ſhall alſo walk in my judgments, and obſerve my ſtatutes, and do them. 25. And they ſhall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my ſervant, wherein your fathers have dwelt, and they ſhall dwell therein, even they and their children, and their childrens children [u] for ever, and my ſervant David ſhall be their prince for ever. 26. Moreover, I will make [x] a covenant of peace with them, it ſhall be an everlaſting covenant with them, and I will place them, and [y] multiply them, and will ſet my [z] ſanctuary in the midſt of them for evermore. 27. [a] My tabernacle alſo ſhall be with them: yea, [b] I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people. 28. And the heathen ſhall know that [c] I the LORD do ſanctify Iſrael, when my ſanctuary ſhall be in the midſt of them for evermore.

v. 15—28. For the encouragement of the faithful among the captives, great things are promiſed which God will do for them.

1. The two kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael, ſo long ſeparated, and ſo often vexatious to each other, ſhall be reunited, and become one people: and this is repreſented by the joining of two ſticks in the prophet's hand; on one of which was inſcribed the name of Judah and her companions, the tribe of Benjamin and thoſe of the other tribes who on the revolt cleaved to the houſe of David; on the other the name of Ephraim, and his companions the houſe of Iſrael, of which Samaria, which lay in the lot of Ephraim, was the capital. The people who ſaw the ſign would naturally be inquiſitive, and deſire to know the meaning, v. 18. and he muſt inform them, that as theſe ſticks became one in his hand, ſo ſhould they become one people in God's hand, v. 19. no mutual jealouſies, no jarring diſcord, ſhall remain; but, returning together from their captivity, they ſhall become one nation, under one king: which was primarily fulfilled on their return from Babylon; but ſeems principally to refer to goſpel times, when, under the king Meſſiah, Jews and Gentiles ſhall become one people, the partition wall being broken down, and they ſhall have one Lord, one faith, one baptiſm, and be one fold under one ſhepherd.

2. All their idolatries ſhall be for ever done away, v. 23. After their return from Babylon they never more relapſed: God having ſaved them from the places of temptation, delivered them alſo from all inclination to their former abominations. Note, (1.) It is a ſingular mercy when God ſaves us from the places and perſons who have been a temptation to us, and by his gracious providence removes us from the evil. (2.) God will ſave his people from all their ſins; not only from their actual prevalence, but he will mortify alſo their deſire after them; and indeed, unleſs the heart be cleanſed, it would ſignify little to have the temptation merely removed.

3. They ſhall be taken into an everlaſting covenant of grace and peace with God, v. 26. and he will effectually incline them to cleave to him. They ſhall be his people, his grace will cauſe the glorious change; and he will be their God, to bleſs, preſerve, and protect them. David, the root from his ſtock, the Meſſiah, ſhall be their king and ſhepherd, to guard them from their enemies, to feed them under his care, making them obedient in all things to his bleſſed will, and engaging their fidelity to himſelf. Note, (1.) It is of God's grace, not our choice; by his power, not our own ability, that we become his people, and obedient to his holy will. (2.) The covenant of grace is everlaſting; they who are truly intereſted therein have their everlaſting happineſs ſecured.

4. They ſhall for ever enjoy in peace the inheritance of their anceſtors, tranſmitting it to children's children, and ſhall be ſafe and happy under the rule of their anointed king Meſſiah, v. 25. whoſe kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom, and his dominion that which never ſhall be deſtroyed. And this ſeems to direct us, for the full accompliſhment of the prophecy, to future times, when this unhappy people, now ſo diſperſed, ſhall receive the Lord's Chriſt, and to the end of time enjoy the bleſſings of his government. Note, Chriſt's ſubjects, the children of Zion, may well be joyful in their king; ſince he for ever lives and reigns, they ſhall live and reign with him in glory everlaſting.

5. God himſelf will dwell in the midſt of them. They ſhall not only be increaſed and eſtabliſhed, but enjoy the ſpecial tokens of his preſence. His ſanctuary and tabernacle, erected among them, ſhall never more be deſtroyed; Jeſus, the true tabernacle, in whom dwelt all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily, ſhall be in the midſt of them, and in his church they ſhall ſee his glory, and maintain communion with him in the ordinances of his ſervice, and find, to their unſpeakable comfort, God to be their God, whilſt they ſhare in all the bleſſings of his people.

6. God will be glorified among the heathen in ſuch his diſpenſations of mercy towards his Iſrael. They ſhall know that he doth ſanctify Iſrael, by ſuch evident marks of his love, by ſuch powerful operations of his grace upon them, and by the erection of his ſanctuary among them for evermore. Note, They who enjoy the privileges of the ſanctuary muſt ſhew the influence it hath upon them in the ſanctification of their hearts and lives.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

1. AND the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 2. [a] Son of man, ſet thy face againſt [b] Gog, the land of Magog, † the chief prince of Meſhech and Tubal, and propheſy againſt him, 3. Thou ſhalt aſcend and come like a ſtorm, thou ſhalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou and all thy bands, and [h] many people with thee. 10. Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, It ſhall alſo come to paſs, that at the ſame time ſhall things come into thy mind, and [i] thou ſhalt ‖ think an evil thought. 11. Sheba and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarſhiſh, with all the young lions thereof, ſhall ſay unto thee, Art thou come to take a ſpoil? haſt thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away ſilver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great ſpoil?

v. 1—13. Various have been the conjectures concerning Gog and Magog; the former the king, the latter probably the kingdom: and as uncertain are the countries of Meſhech and Tubal. Some ſuppoſe they have a particular reference to the ravages of Antiochus, and other enemies of Iſrael, after their return from their captivity; whilſt others interpret them of the later enemies of God's church, particularly of the Turks and Tartars. Whoever they are, their attempts ſhall iſſue in their own confuſion, and God will glorify himſelf in judgment upon them.

1. God reſolves to blaſt their enterprizes, great as their forces are, and terrible as their armament appears, and therefore his people need not fear, however threatning the danger. Note, They who have an omnipotent God for them need not be concerned who are againſt them.

2. The confederacy againſt God's Iſrael is ſtrong, and the army furniſhed with every weapon of war. Perſia, Egypt, Lybia, Gomer, are auxiliaries, and under the conduct of Gog their mighty general, as their guard and leader, are bid ironically prepare for the battle, v. 7. The armament is directed againſt the land of Iſrael, againſt thoſe who are brought back from the ſword, recovered from their diſperſion, and now dwelling ſafely, without fear of evil, without walls or gates, and therefore ſeem to be an eaſy prey to the invaders, v. 11. Not doubting of his ſucceſs, the neighbouring nations of Sheba and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarſhiſh, ſhall congratulate Gog on his certain victory. v. 13. or it may be envying him the ſpoil he is about to ſeize; or, as young lions, deſirous to ſhare it with him. Like a riſing ſtorm, he threatens to ſweep all before him, v. 9. and, ſure of his prey, thinks of nothing but reducing the land to the former deſolations from which it hath now recovered, v. 12. Such are the evil thoughts of this proud enemy, v. 10. which God takes notice of, and will puniſh him for them. Note, (1.) The beginning of all evil is from within; out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, and they produce wicked works. (2.) They who are moſt confident of ſucceſs are often moſt fearfully diſappointed.

3. Whatever ſucceſs may at firſt ſeem to follow the enemy, the iſſue will be fatal: after many days thou ſhalt be viſited. Thus Antiochus, though he prevailed ſo far, was at laſt brought low; and the Ottoman empire, that hath long riſen to ſuch a height of power, we expect alſo will be deſtroyed at the laſt.

14. ¶ Therefore, ſon of man, propheſy and ſay unto Gog, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [n] In that day when my people of Iſrael dwelleth ſafely, ſhalt thou not know it? 15. [o] And thou ſhalt come from thy place out of the north parts, thou and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horſes, a great company, and a mighty army. 16. And thou ſhalt come up againſt my people of Iſrael, as a cloud to cover the land, [p] it ſhall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee againſt my land, that the heathen may know me, when I ſhall be ſanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes. 17. Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Art thou he [q] of whom I have ſpoken in old time † by my ſervants the prophets of Iſrael, which propheſied in thoſe days many years, that I would bring thee againſt them? 18. And it ſhall come to paſs at the ſame time, when Gog ſhall come againſt the land of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord GOD, that my fury ſhall come up in my face. 19. For [r] in my jealouſy, [s] and in the fire of my wrath have I ſpoken: [t] ſurely in that day there ſhall be a great ſhaking in the land of Iſrael: 20. So that [u] the fiſhes of the ſea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beaſts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men men that are upon the face of the earth, ſhall ſhake at my preſence, and the mountains ſhall be thrown down, and the † ſteep places ſhall fall, and every wall ſhall fall to the ground. 21. v. 14—23. The prophecy is repeated to ſhew the certainty of the event.

1. The enemy ſhall hear of the peace and plenty God's Iſrael enjoy, and how ſecurely they dwell, and that ſhall induce him to come up, as ſecure of ſucceſs; or v. 14. may ſignify the vanity of his attempt: God will make him know no foe can diſturb thoſe whom he cauſeth to dwell in ſafety. When God therefore brings him up, it is not for ſpoil, but to be himſelf for a prey, that the heathen may know the jealouſy of the Lord over his people, and be confounded: and in judgment he will be glorified in the deſtruction of his enemies and theirs. Note, (1.) All muſt contribute to advance the glory of the divine perfections; even the wicked ſhall cauſe his righteouſneſs to be exalted in their ſufferings. (2.) He who toucheth God's people touches the apple of his eye, and he will avenge their wrongs.

2. God hath foretold the invaſion of old time, that his people might not count it ſtrange when it ſhould come in the latter days. Many things probably the prophets ſpoke which are not recorded: and by another name the ſame enemy, here ſpoken of, may have been intended, as Deut. xxxii. 43. Pſal. ix. 15. Iſa. xxvii. 1. Joel iii. 1. Note, Whatever troubles the church may fall into, there is effectual ſecurity given in the prophetic word for its perpetuity, and Chriſt's ſervants may triumph ſtill in his ſure ſalvation.

3. The enemy ſhall be utterly deſtroyed: and terrible is the ſcene of havock here deſcribed. God's indignation riſes at this inſolent invader of his people, and flames of wrath flaſh from his eyes; in terrors at his frown the earth trembles; even the birds and beaſts, as well as men, affrighted, quake; the mountains and precipices fall, and every fortreſs is laid in the duſt: the ſwords of this terrible hoſt ſhall be turned againſt each other, peſtilence ſhall devour them, and blood in rivers flow; a ſtorm of vengeance ſhall deſcend from heaven upon them, as upon Sodom, hailſtones, fire and brimſtone, and ruin, utter and fearful, ſhall overtake them. Note, (1.) They who have been a terror to others, God can eaſily make a terror to themſelves. (2.) God cannot want inſtruments of vengeance: the very ſword of his enemies ſhall turn its point againſt them when he ſo ordains, and they ſhall become their own executioners.

4. God will be glorified in the execution of theſe his judgments, and will diſplay his power, juſtice, and truth, to the conviction of many nations, who ſhall be brought, by what they behold, to acknowledge him the only true God, and to aſcribe to him the glory due unto his name.

CHAP. XXXIX.

This chapter concludes the prophecy againſt Gog and Magog. Here is, 1. An expreſs prediction of their utter deſtruction, ver. 1—7. 2. The vaſtneſs of that deſtruction ſhewn from the burning of their weapons, ver. 8—10. The burying of their ſlain, ver. 11—16. And the feaſting of the fowls upon the dead bodies of thoſe that were unburied, ver. 17—23. 3. God's gracious purpoſes to his Iſrael, in this and his other providences, are declared, and a promiſe of further mercy he had yet in ſtore for them, ver. 23—29.

1. THerefore, [a] thou ſon of man, propheſy againſt Gog, and ſay, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Behold, I am againſt thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meſhech and Tubal. 2. [b] And I will turn thee † back, and ‡ leave but the ſixth part of thee, [c] and will cauſe thee to come up from the § north-parts, and will bring thee upon the mountains of Iſrael: 3. And [d] I will ſmite thy bow out of thy left hand, and will cauſe thine arrows to fall out of thy right hand. 4. Thou ſhalt fall upon the mountains of Iſrael, thou and all thy bands, and the people that is with thee: [e] I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every ‖ ſort, and to the beaſts of the field to be devoured. 5. Thou ſhalt fall upon the † open field, for I have ſpoken it, ſaith the Lord GOD. 6. And [f] I will ſend a fire on Magog, and among them that dwell ‡ careleſly in the iſles, and they ſhall know that I am the LORD. 7. So will I make my holy name known in the midſt of my people Iſrael, and I will not let them pollute my holy name any more; and the heathen ſhall [g] know that I am the LORD, the holy One in Iſrael.

v. 1—7. When God begins he will make an end; his enemies ſhall feel his vengeance and periſh utterly.

1. He threatens the deſtruction of Gog and his army, and the deſolation of his country. His ſoldiers, for whom he drained his kingdom, and left but a ſixth part behind him, ſhall be diſabled from hurting God's people, and fall upon the mountains of Iſrael, a prey to every beaſt and bird; and, whilſt the king with his army miſerably periſhes there, the fire of God, ſome conſuming judgment, ſhall devour his country; and even the iſles of his dominion, which promiſed themſelves ſecurity from their ſituation, ſhall be conſumed together: for, when God riſeth up to judgment, no place or perſon is privileged, or may hope for exemption. Note, (1.) The mightieſt armies before God are as eaſily cruſhed as the moth. (2). Whilſt the ambitious unjuſtly labour to uſurp the rights of others, God juſtly puniſhes them with the loſs of what was their own.

2. God will thus make himſelf known and glorious. His people will prove his power, faithfulneſs, and grace, ſignally manifeſted on their behalf, and be engaged thereby, renouncing all their former idolatries, to cleave to him alone: for nothing tends to ſeparate the heart from ſin ſo effectually as the right knowledge of God. And his enemies the heathen ſhall know him too by theſe examples of his vengeance, ſhall fear to provoke his jealouſy, nor dare any more to moleſt his people. Note, The judgments of God on others ſhould be our warnings.

8. ¶ Behold, [h] it is come, and it is done, ſaith the Lord GOD; this is the day whereof I have ſpoken. 9. And they that dwell in the cities of Iſrael ſhall go forth, and ſhall ſet on fire and burn the weapons, both the ſhields and the bucklers, the bows and the arrows, and the † hand-ſtaves, and the ſpears, and they ſhall ‡ burn them with fire ſeven years: 10. So that they ſhall take no wood out of the field, neither cut down any out of the foreſts: for they ſhall burn the weapons with fire, and [i] they ſhall ſpoil thoſe that ſpoiled them, and rob thoſe that robbed them, ſaith the Lord GOD. 11. ¶ And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, that I will give unto Gog a place there of graves in Iſrael, the valley of the paſſengers on the eaſt of the ſea; and § it ſhall ſtop the noſes of the paſſengers: and there ſhall they bury Gog, and all his multitude, and they ſhall call it, the valley of ‖ Hamon-gog. 12. And ſeven months ſhall the houſe of Iſrael be burying of them, that they may cleanſe the land. 13. Yea, all the people of the land ſhall bury them, and it ſhall be to them a renown, the day that I ſhall be glorified, ſaith the Lord GOD. 14. And they ſhall ſever out men † of continual employment, paſſing through the land, to bury with the paſſengers thoſe that remain upon the face of the earth to cleanſe it: after the end of ſeven months ſhall they ſearch. 15. And the paſſengers that paſs through the land, when any ſeeth a man's bone, then ſhall he ‡ ſet up a ſign by it, till the buriers have buried it in the valley of Hamon-gog. 16. And alſo the name of the city ſhall be § Hamonah: thus ſhall they cleanſe the land. 17. ¶ And thou ſon of man, Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, Speak unto ‖ every feathered fowl, and to every beaſt of the field, [k] Aſſemble yourſelves and come, gather yourſelves on every ſide to my † ſacrifice that I do ſacrifice for you, even a great ſacrifice upon the mountains of Iſrael, that ye may eat fleſh, and drink blood. 18. Ye ſhall eat the fleſh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the princes of the earth, of rams, of lambs, and of ‡ goats, of bullocks, [l] all of them fatlings of Baſhan. 19. And ye ſhall eat fat till ye be full, and drink blood till ye be drunken, of my ſacrifice which I have ſacrificed for you. 20. Thus ye ſhall be filled at my table with horſes and chariots, [m] with mighty men, and with all men of war, ſaith the Lord GOD. 21. And I will ſet my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen ſhall ſee my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them. 22. So the houſe of Iſrael ſhall know that I am the LORD their God, from that day and forward.

v. 8—22. What God hath ſpoken is as ſure as if it were already accompliſhed, whether it be promiſe or threatning. It is come, it is done: for faith realizes both as preſent.

By three things the dreadful deſtruction of the army of Gog is repreſented.

1. By the vaſt quantity of weapons of war which, among other ſpoil, ſhould be collected, and furniſh the people of Iſrael with fuel during ſeven years; and every chip they burned, would ſerve to remind them of God's mercy, and to awaken their gratitude.

2. By the length of time which it will take to bury the dead, and the numbers employed in the ſervice. The whole houſe of Iſrael, aſſiſted by the paſſengers, who would willingly labour to remove ſo great a nuiſance, v. 11. ſhall be no leſs than ſeven months employed in cleanſing the land, and collecting the bodies to their burying-place, the valley of paſſengers, on the eaſt of the ſea, of the dead ſea, or the ſea of Tiberias; a great thoroughfare from Syria to Egypt, which ſhall from this event, receive a new name, and be called the valley of Hamon-gog, and the city near thereunto Hamonah, alluding to the multitudes there buried. And it ſhall be a renown to Iſrael in that day, when God ſhall be glorified; ſuch an aſtoniſhing inſtance of the divine interpoſition in their favour ſhall make them reſpected, and their humanity to the dead redound greatly to their honour. And at the ſeventh month's end, when the multitudes that fell together are covered in the earth, certain perſons ſhall be appointed to go through the land, and bury the ſcattered corpſes, whilſt every traveller who paſſes by, when he ſees a bone, ſhall ſet up a mark for the notice of the ſearchers appointed, until the land be thoroughly cleanſed. Note, (1.) When our noſtrils are offended with the putrefaction of a corpſe, we ſhould remember the ſin which hath made theſe bodies ſo vile. (2.) They who have experienced great national mercies, ſhould unite in their labour to cleanſe their land from every pollution of ſin, and to this every lover of his country will gladly lend a helping hand. (3.) To advance God's glory, is Iſrael's great renown.

3. There will be enough for every bird and beaſt to feed upon, and they are commanded to come and devour the ſlain, ſacrificed to divine juſtice. Corpſes enough there will be, not merely for a meal, but to fatten them; and this not only of the common ſoldiers, but of the mighty, and the princes of the earth, with their horſes and chariots, fallen in one promiſcuous ruin.

Thus God will make the heathen to ſee and obſerve his judgments againſt the enemies of his people, and will advance his own great glory thereby: whilſt the houſe of Iſrael ſhall exult in his ſalvation, and receive freſh confirmation of God's care and love, engaging their confidence in him from that day forward, even for ever. Let God's Iſrael then to the end of time truſt in the Lord for ever, and be aſſured he will never diſappoint their expectations.

23. ¶ And the heathen ſhall know that the houſe of they treſpaſſed againſt me, therefore hid I my face from them, and gave them into the hand of their enemies; uncleanneſs, and according to their tranſgreſſions have I done unto them, and hid my face from them. 25.

them afraid. 27. When I have brought them again from the people, and gathered them out of their enemies nations; 28. Then ſhall they know that I am the more there. 29. Neither will I hide my face any more [r] Joel ii. 28. Acts ii. 17. from them: for [r] I have poured out my Spirit upon the houſe of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord GOD.

v. 23—29. Much had the people of God ſuffered from the blaſphemies of their enemies, much under the heavy hand of God upon them in afflictions, but now he will deliver them for ever out of all their troubles.

1. The heathen ſhall be ſilenced, and convinced of God's deſigns in the ſufferings of his people. They thought the captivity of Iſrael was owing to their weakneſs, or the inability of their God to protect them, but by this amazing exertion of divine power on their behalf, they ſhall ſee that the only cauſe of their ſuffering was their ſin, for which they were given into their enemies hands, v. 23. and that God dealt with them according to their tranſgreſſions, in all the evils he brought upon them. So that what he did was with a view to his own glory, viſiting their iniquity with a rod; yet, as by the event appeared, not taking his loving kindneſs from them, nor ſuffering his truth to fail, nor wanting power to recover and reſtore them to their former ſplendor, when they had ſmarted ſufficiently under his corrections.

2. God's own people ſhall know his deſigns of grace towards them, notwithſtanding all they have ſuffered. Jealous for his own honour, which the heathen had reproached, he will magnify himſelf in Iſrael's deliverance, v. 25. and ſince they have born their ſhame, and all their treſpaſſes, a ſufficient meaſure of puniſhment for them, and teſtified unfeigned repentance for their provocations, aggravated by the mercies, peace, and comforts they had enjoyed, when they dwelt ſafely in their land, and none made them afraid, ver. 26. Therefore he will now turn his hand, recover them from their diſperſion, and bring them to their own land; and hereby God will be ſanctified in the ſight of many nations, who will own his diſpenſations towards his Iſrael to have been righteous, juſt, and good. And they themſelves, whilſt they acknowledge God's juſtice in their ſufferings, ſhall experience his rich grace in their ſalvation, and know him to be their God, their covenant God, their God for ever and ever, v. 28. for the light of his countenance ſhall no more be hid from them, the tokens of his favour be no more ſuſpended, but he will pour out his ſpirit upon them, that they ſhall not depart from him. Note, (1.) True penitents are willing to bear their ſhame, and own their ſufferings leſs than their iniquities deſerve. (2.) When by divine grace we return to God, he will return to us, and lift up again upon us the light of his countenance.

CHAP. XL.

The nine following chapters are very myſterious. They are full of difficulties, which the beſt commentators ſeem to have but unſatisfactorily explained, and many have entirely paſſed them over in ſilence. Till the event ſhall have explained the prophecy, it is, perhaps, wiſeſt to be content to be ignorant. The matter here is not at all eſſential to our ſalvation, the truths neceſſary thereunto are written as with a ſun-beam. It ſeems, however, very evident, that no material city or temple can be here intended; the dimenſions being ſo vaſt, the circumference of the walls of this new Jeruſalem exceeding the compaſs of the whole land of Canaan; nor doth the deſcription of the ſtructure or ſituation correſpond with the temple built by Solomon or Zerubbabel, chap. xliv. 2. xlv. 1—5. Some imagine the city ſpoken of, Rev. xx. is the ſame with this here deſcribed, but though ſome of the expreſſions there uſed ſeem to be borrowed from hence, there is a very great difference both with reſpect to the gates, and the compaſs of the walls; and beſides, no temple was there. It is probable therefore, that the whole of this prophecy muſt be underſtood figuratively; either of the goſpel-church, particularly in the latter day, when her glory ſhall appear brighteſt, and an immenſe acceſſion of converts be made of ſuch as ſhall be ſaved; or of the ſtate of glory, when all the redeemed ſhall come to the eternal temple, where they ſhall ſerve God day and night, and go out no more.

v. 1—4. The date of this prophecy is in the twenty-fifth year of the captivity of Jeconiah, in the tenth day of the beginning of the year, which was reckoned in two different ways: the civil year began at the autumnal equinox, and then this tenth day muſt have been the great day of atonement: the eccleſiaſtical year commenced from the vernal equinox, and then this day falls on the tenth of Niſan, anſwering to part of our March and April, when the paſchal lamb was ſeparated from the flock, in order to be ſlain on the fourteenth.

The ſcene is laid in the land of Judea, and in viſion the prophet is ſet on a very high mountain, and there was, as it were, the frame of a city, full in his view. There appeared to him in the gate, a glorious perſonage, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the maker and builder of this city of God, his church. His figure was bright and gliſtering as burniſhed braſs, and in his hand he bore a meaſuring reed and line; and addreſſing the prophet, bid him carefully behold, attentively hear, with fixed thoughtfulneſs weigh, and with fidelity deliver to the houſe of Iſrael, what was about to be revealed to him. Note, (1.) The miniſters of God muſt themſelves carefully read, mark, learn, and inwardly digeſt the word of truth, that they may be enabled truly to declare it to others. (2.) We muſt be ourſelves divinely taught by the Lord Jeſus, before we can poſſibly teach others.

5. And behold, a wall on the outſide of the houſe round about, and in the man's hand a meaſuring reed of ſix cubits long, by the cubit, and an hand-breadth: ſo he [h] meaſured the breadth of the building one reed: and the height one reed. 6. ¶ Then came he unto [i] the gate † which looketh toward the eaſt, and went up the ſtairs thereof, and meaſured the threſhold of the gate, which was one reed broad, and the other threſhold of the gate, which was one reed broad. 7. And every little chamber was one reed long, and one reed broad, and between the little chambers were five cubits, and the threſhold of the gate, by the porch of the gate within was one reed. 8. He meaſured alſo the porch of the gate within, one reed. 9. Then meaſured he the porch of the gate, eight cubits, and the poſts thereof two cubits, and the porch of the gate was inward. 10. And the little chambers of the gate eaſt-ward, were three on this ſide, and three on that ſide, they three were of one meaſure, and the poſts had one meaſure on this ſide, and on that ſide. 11. And he meaſured the breadth of the entry of the gate ten cubits, and the length of the gate thirteen cubits. 12. The ‡ ſpace alſo before the little chambers was one cubit on this ſide, and the ſpace was one cubit on that ſide, and the little chambers were ſix cubits on this ſide, and ſix cubits on that ſide. 13. He meaſured then the gate from the roof of one little chamber to the roof of another: the breadth was five and twenty cubits, door againſt door. 14. He made alſo poſts of threeſcore cubits, even unto the poſt of the court round about the gate. 15. And from the face of the gate of the entrance, unto the face of the porch of the inner gate, were fifty cubits. 16. And [k] there were ‖ narrow windows to the little chambers, and to their poſts within the gate round about, and likewiſe to the § arches: and windows were round about † inward: and upon each poſt were palm-trees. 17. [l] Then brought he me into the outward court, and lo, there were chambers, and a pavement made for the court round about: [m] thirty chambers were upon the pavement. 18. And the pavement by the ſide of the gates, over againſt the length of the gates, was the lower pavement. 19. Then he meaſured the breadth from the forefront of the lower gate, unto the forefront of the inner court ‡ without, an hundred cubits eaſt-ward and north-ward. 20. ¶ And the gate of the outer court that looked toward the north, he meaſured the length thereof, and the breadth thereof. 21. And the little chambers thereof were three on this ſide, and three on that ſide, and the poſts thereof, and the [n] arches thereof were after the meaſure of the firſt gate: the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits. 22. And their windows, and their arches, and their palm-trees, were after the meaſure of the gate that looketh towards the eaſt, and they [o] went up unto it by ſeven ſteps, and the arches thereof were before them. 23. And the gate of the inner court was over-againſt the gate toward the north, and toward the eaſt, and he meaſured from gate to gate an hundred cubits. 24. ¶ After that, he brought me toward the ſouth, and behold, a gate toward the ſouth, and he meaſured the poſts thereof, and the arches thereof, according to theſe meaſures. 25. And there were windows in it, and in the arches thereof round about, like thoſe windows; the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits. 26. And there were ſeven ſteps to go up to it, and the arches thereof were before them, and it had palm-trees, one on this ſide, and another on that ſide, upon the poſts thereof.

v. 5—26. The meaſuring reed in the hand of the glorious perſon before mentioned was ſix cubits long, exceeding the common cubit by a hand's breadth.

The outer wall is firſt meaſured, three yards and an half high, and of the ſame width. The church is a ſacred incloſure, and ſafely protected by the power and love of him, who is as a wall of fire round about his people.

In this wall were three gates, at the eaſt, the north, and ſouth; typical, it may be, of Jeſus the way to God, no man coming to the Father but by him. The aſcent to the gates was by ſeven ſteps; intimating, that when we go to the temple, we ſhould lift up our hearts to God. The little chambers adjoining to the gate, ſhould teach all true worſhippers, eſpecially miniſters, to ſeek no great things here below; and they were many, for in our father's houſe are many manſions. Each chamber had windows, for all believers enjoy the light of the divine word: the windows were narrow, the meaſure of our knowledge here below being at the beſt imperfect. The different courts may intimate the different eſtates of God's people, ſome of whom maintain more intimate communion with him than others. The poſts, with palm-trees engraven on them, repreſent the ſtrength and flouriſhing condition of the ſaints of God, never overwhelmed with the heavieſt afflictions, and triumphing over all their foes. The glittering pavement, ver. 17. may teach us where all the glories of this preſent world ſhould be put, even under our feet.

27. And there was a gate in the inner court toward the ſouth, and he meaſured from gate to gate toward the ſouth an hundred cubits. 28. And he brought me to the inner court by the ſouth-gate, and he meaſured the ſouth gate according to theſe meaſures: 29. And the little chambers thereof, and the poſts thereof, and the arches thereof according to theſe meaſures, and there were windows in it, and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad. 30. And the [p] arches round about were five and twenty cubits long, and five cubits † broad. 31. And the arches thereof were toward the utter court, and [q] palm-trees were upon the poſts thereof; and the going up to it had eight ſteps. 32. ¶ And he brought me into the inner court toward the eaſt, and he meaſured the gate according to theſe meaſures. 33. And the little chambers thereof, and the poſts thereof, and the arches thereof were according to theſe meaſures, and there were windows therein, and in the arches thereof round about; it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad. 34. And the arches thereof were toward the outward court, and palm-trees were upon the poſts thereof on this ſide, and on that ſide, and the going up to it had [r] eight ſteps. 35. ¶ And he brought me to the north-gate, and meaſured it according to theſe meaſures: 36. [s] The little chambers thereof, the poſts thereof, and the arches thereof, and the windows to it round about: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits. 37. And the poſts thereof were toward the utter court, and palm-trees were upon the poſts thereof, on this ſide, and on that ſide, and the going up to it had eight ſteps. 38. And the chambers and the entries thereof were by the poſts of the gates, where they waſhed the burnt-offering.

By eight ſteps was the aſcent into this court; the nearer we approach to God, the more ſhall we be raiſed above the world, and the things of it.

39. ¶ And in the porch of the gate were two tables on this ſide, and two tables on that ſide, to ſlay thereon the burnt-offering, and [t] the ſin-offering, and [u] the treſpaſs-offering. 40. the inner gate were the chambers of [x] the ſingers in the inner court, which was at the ſide of the north-gate:
and their proſpect was toward the ſouth, one at the ſide of the eaſt-gate, having the proſpect toward the north.

the houſe, and meaſured each poſt of the porch, five

1. Of the tables, to ſlay and prepare the ſacrifices for the altar. Before we draw near to God, we ſhould prepare our offering, and not be raſh with our lips, to utter any thing before God.

2. The chambers; ſome for the ſingers, others for the prieſts, who had the care of the houſe and the altar. They who ſerve at the temple, deſerve a proviſion there.

3. The altar in the inner court repreſents the Lord Jeſus; and as it ſtood in the center againſt the three gates, all the worſhippers in the moſt diſtant court could look to it: for him in all our worſhip we muſt ever keep in view, by whom alone we have acceſs unto God.

4. Before the temple was a porch, with pillars, probably like Jachin and Boaz, intimating the ſtability and beauty of the goſpel-church.

CHAP. XLI.

An account was given of the porch of the houſe in the cloſe of the foregoing chapter, this brings us to the temple itſelf; the deſcription of which creates much difficulty to the critical expoſitors, and occaſions differences among them. Thoſe muſt conſult them, who are nice in their inquiries into the meaning of the particulars of this delineation; it ſhall ſuffice us to obſerve, 1. The dimenſions of the houſe, the poſts of it, ver. 1. the door, ver. 2. the wall and the ſide-chambers, ver. 5, 6. the foundations and wall of the chambers, and their doors, ver. 8—11. the houſe itſelf, ver. 13. 2. The dimenſions of the oracle, or moſt holy place, ver. 3, 4. 3. An account of another building over againſt the ſeparate place, ver. 12—15. 4. The manner of the building of the houſe, ver. 7, 16, 17. 5. The ornaments of the houſe, ver. 18, 19, 20. 6. The altar of incenſe, and the table, ver. 22. 7. The doors between the temple and the oracle, ver. 23, 26. There is ſo much difference both in the terms and in the rules of architecture between one age and another, one place and another, that it ought not to be any ſtumbling-block to us, that there is ſo much in theſe deſcriptions dark and hard to be underſtood, about the meaning of which the learned are not agreed. To one not ſkilled in mathematics the mathematical deſcription of a modern ſtructure would be ſcarce intelligible; and yet to a common carpenter or maſon among the Jews at that time, we may ſuppoſe all this in the literal ſenſe of it was eaſy enough.

1. AFterward he brought me to the temple, and meaſured the poſts, ſix cubits broad on the one ſide, and ſix cubits broad on the other ſide, which was the breadth of the [a] tabernacle. 2. And the breadth of [b] the † door was ten cubits, and the ſides of the door were five cubits on the one ſide, and five cubits on the other ſide: and he meaſured the length thereof forty cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits. 3. Then went he inward, and meaſured the poſt of the door two cubits, and the door ſix cubits, and the breadth of the door ſeven cubits. 4. So [c] he meaſured the length thereof twenty cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits before the temple; and he ſaid unto me, This is the moſt holy place. 5. After, he meaſured the wall of the houſe ſix cubits, and the breadth of [d] every ſide-chamber four cubits round about the houſe on every ſide. 6.
And the ſide-chambers were three, ‡ one over another, and ‖ thirty in order, and they entred into the wall which was of the houſe for the ſide-chambers, round about, that they might § have hold, but they had not hold in the wall of the houſe. 7. [e] And † there was an enlarging and a winding about ſtill upward to the ſide-chambers, for the winding about of the houſe went ſtill upward round about the houſe: therefore the breadth of the houſe was ſtill upward, and [f] ſo increaſed from the loweſt chamber to the higheſt by the midſt. 8. I ſaw alſo the height of the houſe round about: the foundations of the ſide-chambers were [g] a full reed of ſix great cubits. 9.
The thickneſs of the wall which was for the ſide-chambers without, was five cubits, and that which was left, was the place of the ſide-chambers that were within.
10. And between the chambers was the wideneſs of twenty cubits round about the houſe on every ſide. 11.
And the doors of the ſide-chambers were toward the place that was left, one door toward the north, and another door toward the ſouth, and the breadth of the place that was left, was five cubits round about.

v. 1—11. The prophet is at laſt brought to the temple; for they who commit themſelves to the divine guidance, ſhall be brought to his eternal preſence in the better temple above.

The door was as wide as the whole tabernacle of Moſes; the goſpel opening a great door, and effectual, and the numbers admitted into the chriſtian church vaſtly exceeding thoſe who ever joined in the Jewiſh worſhip.

The chambers in the ſides of the temple increaſed a cubit in breadth each ſtory, which was taken out of the thickneſs of the wall. The higher we build for glory, the more enlarged ſhould be our hearts with faith, and love, and heavenly-mindedneſs.

12. Now the building that was before the ſeparate place, at the end toward the weſt, was ſeventy cubits broad, and the wall of the building was five cubits thick round about, and the length thereof ninety cubits. 13.
So he meaſured the houſe, an hundred cubits long; and thereof, an hundred cubits long. 14. Alſo the breadth of the face of the houſe, and of the ſeparate place toward the door ‡ cieled with wood round about, ‖ and from the door. 25. And there were made on them, on [p] the doors

v. 12—26. In neither of the other two temples do we find any thing that anſwers this building, which ſtood in a court by itſelf.

The temple itſelf was adorned with cherubims and palm-trees, alternately; being carved on the wall, only two of the cherub's faces appeared. Every prieſt who looked thereon, might learn what his duty required of him, to join the wiſdom of the man to the courage of the lion: and then he ſtood between two palm-trees, the enſigns of triumph, aſſured of victory over all the powers of wickedneſs.

The altar here was of wood, and no mention of the gold wherewith it was overlaid in the other temples; perhaps to intimate that no more material fire or incenſe would be made uſe of, but the more grateful fire of love, and incenſe of prayer and praiſe. And it is called a table, v. 22. the great ſacrifice being once offered, we have only now to feaſt thereupon, and eat that fleſh and drink that blood, which gives immortal life to the ſoul.

This chapter continues and concludes the meaſuring of this myſtical temple, of which it is very hard to underſtand the architecture, and yet more hard to comprehend the myſtical meaning. Here is, 1. A deſcription of the chambers that were about the courts, their ſituation and ſtructure, ver. 1—13. and the uſes for which they were deſigned, ver. 13, 14. 2. A ſurvey of the whole compaſs of ground, which was taken up with the houſe, and the courts belonging to it, ver. 15—20.

1. THEN he brought me forth into [a] the utter court, the way toward the north, and he brought me into the chamber that was over againſt the ſeparate place, and which was before the building toward the north. 2. Before the length of an hundred cubits was the north-door, and the breadth was fifty cubits. 3. Over againſt the twenty cubits, which were for the inner court, and over againſt the pavement which was for the utter court, was gallery againſt gallery in three ſtories. 4. And before the chambers was a walk of ten cubits breadth inward, a way of one cubit, and their doors toward the north. 5. Now the upper chambers were ſhorter: for the galleries were [b] higher than theſe, † than the lower, and than the middlemoſt of the building. 6. For they were in three ſtories, but had not pillars as the pillars of the courts: therefore the building was ſtraitned more than the loweſt, and the middlemoſt from the ground. 7. And [c] the wall that was without over againſt the chambers, towards the utter court on the forepart of the chambers, the length thereof was fifty cubits. 8. For the length of the chambers that were in the utter court was fifty cubits: and lo, before the temple were an hundred cubits. 9. And ‡ from under theſe chambers was ‖ the entry on the eaſt ſide, § as one goeth into them from the utter court. 10. The chambers were in the thickneſs of the wall of the court toward the eaſt, over againſt the ſeparate place, and over againſt the building. 11. And the way before them was like the appearance of the chambers which were towards the north, as long as they, and as broad as they, and all their goings out were both according to their faſhions, and according to their doors. 12. And according to the doors of the chambers that were toward the ſouth, was a door in the head of the way, even the way directly before the wall toward the eaſt, as one entreth into them. 13. ¶ Then ſaid he unto me, The north-chambers, and the ſouth-chambers, which are before the ſeparate place, they be holy chambers, where the prieſts that approach unto the LORD [d] ſhall eat the moſt holy things: there ſhall they lay the moſt holy things, and [e] the meat-offering, and the ſin-offering, and the treſpaſs-offering; for the place is holy. 14. When the prieſts enter therein, then ſhall they not go out of the holy place into the utter court, but there they ſhall lay their [f] garments, wherein they miniſter; for they are holy: and ſhall put on other garments, and ſhall approach to thoſe things which are for the people.

v. 1—14. We have here,

1. The chambers about the temple. Probably deſigned for the retirement of the holy worſhippers, where they might be alone for prayer and meditation: they who would find comfort in public ordinances, muſt maintain communion with God in private. The chambers were many, for in the heavenly temple there are many manſions. They had galleries before them, where they who lodged there might meet and converſe together about the things of God; the great privilege, duty, and delight of God's people.

2. Theſe chambers, many of them at leaſt, were appropriated for the uſe of the prieſts; and were the places where they depoſited the holy things, and their ſacred veſtments. They who have the charge of the ſanctuary muſt reſide upon the ſpot, and God hath made a proviſion for them, that they might wait on him without diſtraction.

15. Now when he had made an end of meaſuring the inner houſe, he brought me forth toward the gate whoſe proſpect is toward the eaſt, and meaſured it round about. 16. He meaſured the eaſt † ſide with the meaſuring-reed, five hundred reeds, with the meaſuring-reed round about. 17. He meaſured the north-ſide five hundred reeds, with the meaſuring-reed round about. 18. He meaſured the ſouth-ſide five hundred reeds, with the meaſuring-reed. 19. ¶ He turned about to the weſt-ſide, and meaſured five hundred reeds, with the meaſuring-reed. 20. He meaſured it by the four ſides: it had a wall round about, [g] five hundred reeds long, and five hundred broad, to make a ſeparation between the ſanctuary and the profane place.

v. 15—20. The ground on which this temple and its courts ſtood, is computed to be about eight miles in circumference; intimating the vaſt extent of the church of Chriſt in the times of the goſpel, and particularly when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is come in. A wall of ſeparation divided the ſanctuary from the profane place, to ſignify the preſent excluſion of all thoſe from the bleſſings and benefits of Chriſt's church and kingdom, who continue unhumbled in their ſins; and to prefigure the eternal ſeparation of the world that lieth in wickedneſs, from the preſence of God in glory.

CHAP. XLIII.

The prophet having given us a view of this myſtical temple, comes now to deſcribe the worſhip that ſhould be performed in it. In this chapter we have, 1. The glory of God filling the temple, ver. 1—6. 2. A promiſe given of the continuance of God's preſence with his people, upon condition of their return to and continuance in his inſtituted worſhip, and their renunciation of idolatry, ver. 7—12. 3. A deſcription of the altar of burnt-offerings, ver. 13—17. 4. Directions given for the conſecration of that altar, ver. 18—27. And Ezekiel ſeems here to ſtand between God and Iſrael, as Moſes did, when the ſanctuary was firſt ſet up.

1. AFterward he brought me to the gate, even the gate that looketh toward the eaſt. 2. [a] And behold, the glory of the God of Iſrael came from the way of the eaſt: and [b] his voice was like a noiſe of many waters, and the earth ſhined with his glory. 3. And it was [c] according to the appearance of the viſion which I ſaw, even according to the viſion that I ſaw, when I came † to [d] deſtroy the city: and the viſions were like the viſion that I ſaw by the river Chebar: and I fell upon my face. 4. And the glory of the LORD came into the houſe by the way of the gate, whoſe proſpect is toward the eaſt. 5. So the Spirit took me up, and brought me into the inner court, and behold, [e] the glory of the LORD filled the houſe. 6. And I heard him ſpeaking unto me out of the houſe, and the man ſtood by me.

1. The ſame bright viſion that had before been ſeen by the prophet, again appears from the eaſt. It was the glory of the God of Iſrael; like many waters his voice was heard far off, his goſpel having ſpread into diſtant lands, and the earth ſhined with his glory; his church, as the moon, reflecting the luſtre ſhe hath borrowed from him the ſun of righteouſneſs.

[i] Eph. ii. 20, &c. 1 Pet. ii. 4, 5.

7. ¶ And he ſaid unto me, Son of man, the place of my throne, and [f] the place of the ſoles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midſt of the children of Iſrael for ever, and my holy name ſhall the houſe of Iſrael no more defile, neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredom, nor by [g] the carcaſes of their kings in their high places. 8. [h] In their ſetting of their threſhold by my threſholds, and their poſts by my poſts, † and the wall between me and them, they have even defiled my holy name by their abominations that they have committed: wherefore I have conſumed them in mine anger. 9. Now let them put away their whoredom, and the carcaſes of their kings far from me, and I will dwell in the midſt of them for ever. 10. ¶ Thou ſon of man, ſhew the houſe to the houſe of Iſrael, that they may be aſhamed of their iniquities, and let them meaſure the ‡ pattern. 11. And if they be aſhamed of all that they have done, ſhew them [i] the form of the houſe, and the faſhion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the laws thereof: and write it in their ſight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them. 12. This is the law of the houſe; upon the top of the mountain, the whole limit there round about ſhall be moſt holy: behold, this is the law of the houſe.

v. 7—12. God having taken poſſeſſion of his temple, admoniſhes them of the obligations lying upon them, to be more faithful to him than they had ever yet been.

1. They had formerly grievouſly offended, and had been deſervedly puniſhed. They and their kings had been groſs idolaters, and worſhipped on the high places, v. 7. They had corrupted the ſervice of the ſanctuary by their own inventions; had even dared to erect their idols and altars in that ſacred place; and by ſuch abominations had provoked God's wrath and indignation againſt them, v. 8. Note, They who faithleſsly depart from God, provoke him to take up the ſcourge and plague them for their offences.

2. He calls on them to repent, and graciouſly promiſes to make them ſuch as he would have them be. They muſt put away their whoredoms, their idolatrous ſervices, and the carcaſes of their kings; which ſome ſuggeſt were buried in or near the houſe of God, or rather the idols themſelves are meant, as loathſome in God's ſight, as a putrid corpſe in ours; and in order to induce them hereunto, the prophet muſt ſhew them the houſe, that a ſenſe of the mercy God hath in ſtore for them, may work upon their hearts, and his goodneſs lead them to repentance, v. 10. and if they expreſſed ſhame and confuſion in the view of their paſt conduct, then he muſt go farther, and give them a more diſtinct view of the glorious fabric and all its parts; and give them in writing all the ordinances thereof, that they may keep them and do them, v. 11. And whilſt God is thus uſing the ſtrongeſt motives, he promiſes to make them effectual: They ſhall defile my name no more; yea, he will engage their hearts to his bleſſed ſelf, and, in conſequence thereof, dwell in the midſt of them for ever, as their God. Note, (1.) If the goodneſs of God doth not lead ſinners to repentance, nothing elſe can ever produce it. (2.) When we begin to return to God, every ſtep we take will give us freſh reaſon for deeper humiliation and ſelf-loathing. (3.) They who are reſtored to God's favour, will above all things deſire henceforth to walk in his ways. (4.) The work of the ſinner's ſalvation is from God alone; it is an act of his ſovereign grace, and wholly effected by his divine power.

3. The law of God's houſe is declared, v. 12. not only the ſanctuary, but the whole mountain is now moſt holy; no veil in the goſpel church excludes the believer, but through the blood of Jeſus we have boldneſs to enter into the holieſt, Heb. x. 19. and are called upon as his diſciples to perfect holineſs in the fear of God.

1. The altar; typical of the Lord Jeſus, through whom all our ſacrifices find acceptance with God, and the ſinner that flies to the horns of this altar, ſhall find a ſure refuge from fear of evil.

2. The conſecration of the altar, and the ſervice to be performed on it, which God promiſes to accept. Chriſt, by offering his own blood as the atonement, hath conſecrated himſelf as the altar, and every believer is now a ſpiritual prieſt, ordained to offer ſpiritual ſacrifices thereon, acceptable and well-pleaſing to God through him.

CHAP. XLIV.

In this chapter we have, 1. The appropriating of the eaſt gate of the temple to the prince, ver. 1—3. 2. A reproof ſent to the houſe of Iſrael for their former profanations of God's ſanctuary, with a charge to them to be more ſtrict for the future, ver. 4—9. 3. The degrading of thoſe Levites that had formerly been guilty of idolatry, and the eſtabliſhing of the prieſthood in the family of Zadok which had kept their integrity, ver. 10—16. 4. Divers laws and ordinances concerning the prieſts, ver. 17—31.

1. THEN he brought me back the way of the gate of the outward ſanctuary which looketh toward the eaſt, and it was ſhut. 2. Then ſaid the LORD unto me, This gate ſhall be ſhut, it ſhall not be opened, and no man ſhall enter in by it; becauſe the LORD the God of Iſrael hath entred in by it, therefore it ſhall be ſhut. 3. It is for [a] the prince; the prince, he ſhall ſit in it to eat bread before the LORD; [b] he ſhall enter in by the way of the porch of that gate, and ſhall go out by the way of the ſame.

v. 1—3. The prophet, following his heavenly guide, returns to the eaſt gate; which, in honour of him, whoſe glory entered the temple thereat, was kept ſhut ever after, only the prince was admitted to eat his part of the peace offerings in the porch, and to go in and out by the way of the porch of that gate: which ſome interpreters ſuppoſe, in the myſtical ſenſe to ſignify the bleſſed Virgin, the mother of Jeſus: others, that this repreſents the kingdom of heaven ſhut againſt mankind by reaſon of ſin, till Chriſt the and hear with thine ears all that I ſay unto thee concerning all the ordinances of the houſe of the LORD, and all the laws thereof, and mark well the entring in

6. [e] And thou ſhalt ſay to the rebellious, even to the nor uncircumciſed in fleſh, ſhall enter into my ſanctuary,

v. 4—9. Once more we have the prophet proſtrate, adoring the great God, whoſe glory he beheld. Deep views of the divine Majeſty will ever produce the moſt abaſing apprehenſions of ourſelves.

1. The prophet is charged to take notice of what he ſaw, and attend to what was told him; for they whom God employs, muſt carefully obſerve his orders, and be firſt taught themſelves of him, before they can be effectual teachers of others.

2. He is commanded, [1.] To deliver the meſſage God gave him to the houſe of Iſrael, that rebellious houſe, to convince them of their ſins. Their abominations were great, and it was high time for them to amend: they had introduced into the ſanctuary the uncircumciſed and the profane, to the defilement of that holy place, and the great diſhonour of God; and inſtead of chuſing the moſt able, zealous, and godly miniſters from among the prieſts and Levites, ye have ſet keepers in my ſanctuary for yourſelves; ſuch as ſtudied to pleaſe, not profit them, and would flatter them in their ſins, inſtead of teſtifying againſt them. Note, (1.) They who begin to taſte any thing of the bitterneſs of ſin, will reflect with grief on every moment of the time paſt when they walked therein. (2.) It is a high profanation of Chriſt's table, when perſons profane and immoral are admitted thereunto, and he will reſent the provocation. (3.) They who chuſe flattering prieſts will periſh in their own deluſions. [2.] To point out to them the path of duty. No ſtranger, uncircumciſed in heart or fleſh, may enter the ſanctuary; and happy would it be for the church of Chriſt if theſe directions were more carefully obſerved, and none admitted to partake of her moſt ſacred ordinances, much leſs entruſted with the miniſtry, who have not given ſome ſatisfactory evidence by their principles and practice, that they are partakers of the grace of God in truth.

10. [k] And the Levites that are gone away far from from me after their idols, they ſhall even bear their iniquity.

11. Yet they ſhall be miniſters in my ſanctuary, having charge at the gates of the houſe, and miniſtring to the houſe: they ſhall ſlay the burnt-offering, and the ſacrifice for the people, and they ſhall ſtand before them to miniſter unto them: 12. Becauſe [l] they miniſtred unto them before their idols, and † cauſed the houſe of Iſrael to fall into iniquity; therefore have I lift up mine hand againſt them, ſaith the Lord GOD, and they ſhall bear their iniquity. 13. [m] And they ſhall not come near unto me to do the office of a prieſt unto me, nor to come near to any of my ‡ holy things in the moſt holy place: but they ſhall bear their ſhame, and their abominations which they have committed.
14. But I will make them keepers of the charge of the houſe for all the ſervice thereof, and for all that ſhall be done therein. 15. ¶ [n] But the prieſts the Levites, the ſons of Zadok, that kept the charge of my ſanctuary, when the children of Iſrael went aſtray from me, they ſhall come near to me to miniſter unto me, and they ſhall ſtand before me to offer unto me the fat and the blood, ſaith the Lord GOD. 16. They ſhall enter into my ſanctuary, and they ſhall come near to [o] my table, to miniſter unto me, and they ſhall keep my charge.

v. 10—16. The Lord is here taking account of his ſervants.

1. The unfaithful are degraded: they had betrayed their truſt; and as a miniſter's ill example hath ever the moſt pernicious effects, their idolatry had emboldened the people in their iniquities, therefore God will ſuffer them no more to miniſter as formerly before him: yet not utterly to exclude them, and ſink them in deſpair, as if reprobate, and as if no place was left for repentance, they are ſtill to be employed in the more ſervile offices, and to partake in the proviſion of God's houſe, bearing their ſhame, though not utterly caſt away. Note, (1.) The church will never recover her primitive beauty, till her primitive diſcipline is reſtored. (2.) Though open offenders muſt be put to ſhame, too much ſeverity and rigour may drive thoſe to deſpair whom we ſhould deſire to lead to repentance.

2. The faithful are diſtinguiſhed. The ſons of Zadok, who in the general apoſtacy maintained their integrity, are confirmed in their office, and in the high honour of drawing near to God in his moſt ſolemn ſervices. Fidelity ſhall never loſe its reward; and they who know the happineſs of communion with God, deſire no higher honour or greater reward than to be eſtabliſhed his ſervants for ever, and preſerved in a conſtant ſtate of nearneſs to his bleſſed ſelf.

And [c] after he is cleanſed, they ſhall reckon unto him and every ‖ dedicate thing in Iſrael ſhall be things, and every oblation of all of every ſort of your oblations ſhall be the prieſts: ye [f] ſhall alſo give unto the prieſts the firſt of your dough, that he may cauſe the bleſſing to reſt in thine houſe. 31. The prieſts ſhall not eat of any thing that is [g] dead of itſelf, or torn, whether it be fowl or beaſt.

v. 17—31. The faithful who are appointed to miniſter before God, have here directions given them:

1. Concerning their clothes. They muſt wear linen garments when they are employed in their miniſtry, that they might not ſweat, and put them off when they have finiſhed the ſervice, and not ſanctify the people with their garmemts; as if the touch of them communicated any holineſs, or leaſt any ſuperſtitious conceit might be entertained thereof by the people. The miniſters of Chriſt, above all others, are eſpecially called upon to keep their garments clean from every ſpot, for on them every eye will be fixed.

2. Concerning their hair. They muſt not be on the one hand ſhaved, as the prieſts of Egypt, nor on the other effeminately affect long hair, but have their heads polled. The Romiſh prieſts chuſe to copy after their heathen predeceſſors.

3. Concerning their drink. No wine muſt enter their lips when they went in to miniſter. Note, Nothing can be conceived in a chriſtian miniſter more ſcandalouſly infamous than intemperance.

4. Concerning their marriages. They may not take for a wife a woman divorced, leaſt her ſuſpicious character bring a diſhonour upon her huſband, nor a widow, unleſs it be a prieſt's widow, but a maiden of the houſe of Iſrael. Note, (1.) It is a mark of the antichriſtian church to forbid marriage to the clergy. (2.) Miniſters above all others, for the honour of their high office, need be eſpecially careful whom they chuſe for their yoke-fellow.

5. Concerning the exerciſe of their miniſtry. [1.] They muſt teach the people the difference between the holy and profane, between the clean and unclean; and this with regard to perſons, principles, and practices; pointing out the evil as to be avoided, and the good to be embraced and followed. [2.] In appeals made to them, they muſt judge impartially according to God's word. [3.] In their aſſemblies they muſt be directed in their worſhip and diſcipline by his laws and ſtatutes, and hallow God's ſabbaths, both in private and public, and exhort others to do the ſame.

6. Concerning their mourning. They may not come near a dead corpſe, which would make them ceremonially unclean, and prevent them from approaching the ſanctuary: only for thoſe neareſt relations ſpecified v. 25. they may defile themſelves; but before they return to their ſacred ſervices again they muſt be cleanſed by a ſin-offering. Though miniſters are not forbidden to ſorrow as men, they muſt be examples of reſignation, and ſee that their grief does not break in upon the duties of their office.

7. Concerning their maintenance. They had no inheritance in Iſrael, but their proviſion aroſe from the altar they ſerved: God was their poſſeſſion, whoſe favour is the richeſt portion; and whilſt they exerted themſelves in his ſervice, the piety of the people would procure them plenty of all needful things; ſo that they ſhould not be reduced to eat what died of itſelf, or was torn; and in return, the bleſſing of God's miniſters reſting upon them, would amply compenſate the people for what they employed in his ſervice and their maintenance. Note, God's miniſters have a right to live by the altars they ſerve, and it is the intereſt, as well as duty of the people, to take care of them, for the bleſſing of God in anſwer to their prayers ſhall be an abundant recompenſe.

CHAP. XLV.

In this chapter is farther repreſented to the prophet in viſion, 1. The diviſion of the holy land. So much for the temple and the prieſts that attended the ſervice of it, ver. 1—4. So much for the Levites, ver. 5. So much for the city, ver. 6. So much for the prince, and the reſidue to the people, ver. 7, 8. 2. The ordinances of juſtice that were given both to prince and people, ver. 9—12. 3. The oblations they were to offer, and the prince's part in thoſe oblations, ver. 13—17. Particularly in the beginning of the year, ver. 18—20. and in the paſſover, and the feaſt of tabernacles, ver. 21—25. And all this ſeems to point at the new church-ſtate that ſhould be ſet up under the goſpel, which both for extent and purity ſhould far exceed that of the Old Teſtament.

1. MOREOVER, when ye ſhall † divide by lot the land for inheritance, ye ſhall [a] offer an oblation unto the LORD, ‡ an holy portion of the land: the length ſhall be the length of five and twenty thouſand reeds, and the breadth ſhall be ten thouſand: this ſhall be holy in all the borders thereof round about. 2. Of this there ſhall be for the ſanctuary [b] five hundred in length, with five hundred in breadth, ſquare round about; and fifty cubits round about for the § ſuburbs thereof. 3. And of this meaſure ſhalt thou meaſure the length of five and twenty thouſand, and the breadth of ten thouſand: and in it ſhall be the ſanctuary, and the moſt holy place. 4. The holy portion of the land ſhall be for the prieſts the miniſters of the ſanctuary, which ſhall come near to miniſter unto the LORD, and it ſhall be a place for their houſes, and an holy place for the ſanctuary. 5. And the five and twenty thouſand of length, and the ten thouſand of breadth, ſhall alſo the Levites, the miniſters of the houſe have for themſelves, for a poſſeſſion for [c] twenty chambers. 6. ¶ And ye ſhall appoint the poſſeſſion of the city five thouſand broad, and five and twenty thouſand long over againſt the oblation of the holy portion: it ſhall be for the whole houſe of Iſrael. 7. ¶ And a portion ſhall be for [d] the prince on the one ſide, and on the other ſide of the oblation of the holy portion, and of the poſſeſſion of the city, before the oblation of the holy portion, and before the poſſeſſion of the city, [e] from the weſt-ſide weſtward, and from the eaſt-ſide eaſtward: and the length ſhall be over againſt one of the portions, from the weſt-border unto the eaſt-border. 8. In the land ſhall be his poſſeſſion in Iſrael, and [f] my princes ſhall no more oppreſs my people, and the reſt of the land ſhall they give to the houſe of Iſrael according to their tribes.

v. 1—8. The diviſion of the land here directed, is very different from that made by Moſes and Joſhua, and the extent of the country divided vaſtly exceeds that ancient inheritance of God's Iſrael, the land of Canaan: this therefore moſt fitly may be referred to the kingdom of Chriſt, and his church, enlarged by the vaſt acceſſion of converts, both of Jews and Gentiles.

1. The firſt portion is for God, his ſanctuary in the midſt, and around it the abode of the prieſts and Levites, with the land appropriated for their uſe; and this is conſidered as an oblation unto the Lord, for what is done to them for his ſake, he accepts as done unto himſelf. Their reſidence is near the ſanctuary, for there muſt their conſtant attendance be. A non-reſident miniſter of Chriſt, is a contradiction in terms.

2. The next portion is for the city, where the whole houſe of Iſrael, at leaſt ſome of every tribe, dwelt: a figure of the Iſrael of God, united in one communion, and become one fold under one ſhepherd.

3. The portion of the prince is allotted him without: the admeaſurement is not mentioned, but enough to maintain his dignity, and prevent the oppreſſion of the people: which ſome interpret of the prince Meſſiah, whoſe dominion ſhall extend eaſt and weſt, and who is around his church and people, as a guard to protect them from the inroads of every enemy.

4. The reſt of the land is appointed for the tribes to inhabit, who, under the government of their prince Meſſiah, ſhall be ſafe and happy.

9. ¶ Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [g] Let it ſuffice you, O princes of Iſrael: remove violence and ſpoil, and execute judgment and juſtice, and take away your † exactions from my people, ſaith the Lord GOD. 10. Ye ſhall have [h] juſt balances, and a juſt ephah, and a juſt bath. 11. v. 9—12. We have here,

1. An injunction laid on the princes to avoid all oppreſſion, and miniſter true judgment to the people, it being high time to put an end to the paſt ſcene of extortion and violence. Princes muſt remember they are but men, and accountable to him from whom they have received their power, the abuſe of which will in the end prove fatally ruinous to themſelves.

2. The people muſt exerciſe uprightneſs in their dealings among themſelves, conſcientiouſly exact in their coins, weights, and meaſures. True piety towards God, will ever produce honeſty towards men.

13. This is the oblation that ye ſhall offer; the ſixth part of an ephah of an homer of wheat, and ye ſhall give the ſixth part of an ephah of an homer of barley. 14. Concerning the ordinance of oil, the bath of oil, ye ſhall offer the tenth part of a bath out of the cor, which is an homer of ten baths; for ten baths are an homer: 15. And one † lamb out of the flock, out of two hundred, out of the fat paſtures of Iſrael, for a meat-offering, and for a burnt-offering, and for ‡ peace-offerings, to make reconciliation for them, ſaith the Lord GOD. 16. reconciliation for the houſe of Iſrael. 18. Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, In the firſt month, in the firſt day of the month, thou ſhalt take a young bullock without blemiſh, and [l] cleanſe the ſanctuary. 19. And the prieſt ſhall take of the blood of the ſin-offering, and put it upon the poſts of the houſe, and upon the four corners of the ſettle of the altar, and upon the poſts of the gate of the inner-court. 20. [m] In the firſt month, in the fourteenth day of the month, ye ſhall have the paſſover, a feaſt of ſeven days, unleavened bread ſhall be eaten. 22. And upon that day ſhall the prince prepare for himſelf, and for all the people of the land, [n] a bullock for a ſin-offering. 23. And ſeven days of the feaſt he ſhall prepare a burnt-offering to the LORD, ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams [o] without blemiſh, daily the ſeven days, and a kid of the goats daily for a ſin-offering. 24. And he ſhall prepare a meat-offering of an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and an hin of oil for an ephah. 25. v. 13–25. Particular directions are laid down for the ſervice of God.

1. Reſpecting the oblations to be offered by all the people of the land: of their corn a ſixtieth part; of their wine the hundreth; of their lambs one in two hundred, but from the fatteſt paſtures, muſt be offered, for the prince in Iſrael, or to the prince in Iſrael, the Lord Jeſus, to whoſe honour theſe were devoted for the maintenance of his miniſters, and for the more immediate ſervice of his church, and for whoſe ſake they are accepted, v. 17. Note, (1.) They who enjoy the bleſſings of God's providence, are bound to honour him with a part of their abundance. (2.) Our oblations, prayers, and praiſes are then accepted, when the atoning blood of the lamb hath made the reconciliation, and opened us a way to the throne of God.

2. Reſpecting their ſolemnities, which differed exceedingly from the Moſaical inſtitutions, and intimated a change in that diſpenſation:

(1.) On the firſt day of the year the ſanctuary was to be cleanſed by the blood of a ſin-offering, and the ſame ceremony was repeated on the ſeventh day for him that had erred and was ſimple. Even ſanctuaries on earth have need of cleanſing continually; the pureſt ſocieties of chriſtians muſt ever apply to the atoning blood, and we are bound every year, yea every day, to beg the forgiveneſs of our negligences and ignorances, which, without the all-powerful interceſſion and oblation of the great high prieſt of our profeſſion, Jeſus Chriſt, muſt eternally deſtroy us.

(2.) On the fourteenth of Niſan the paſſover is to be kept, with the ſeven days of unleavened bread, and a bullock each day, offered for a ſin-offering, v. 22. prepared by the prince, with its meat and drink-offering; beſides a kid of the goats each day for a ſin-offering, and ſeven bullocks and rams for a burnt-offering. All which are typical of the Lord Jeſus, who hath prepared himſelf a ſacrifice for us, and is our paſſover, by whoſe blood we have received the atonement, to whom we muſt have an eye in all our approaches to God, and on whom by faith we muſt feaſt to the ſtrengthening and refreſhing of our ſouls.

(3.) On the ſeventh month, the fifteenth day, the feaſt of tabernacles is ordered to be obſerved ſeven days, with the ſame ſacrifices as before. All pointing to the great Redeemer, and directing us to him, in and through whom alone all our ſervices are accepted of God.

CHAP. XLVI.

In this chapter we have, 1. Some farther rules given, both to the prieſts and to the people, relating to their worſhip, ver. 1—15. 2. A law concerning the prince's diſpoſal of his inheritance, ver. 16—18. 3. A deſcription of the places provided for the boiling of the ſacrifices, and the baking of the meat-offerings, ver. 19—24.

1. THUS ſaith the Lord GOD, The gate of the inner-court that looketh toward the eaſt, ſhall be ſhut the ſix working-days: but on the ſabbath it ſhall be opened, and in the day of the new-moon it ſhall be opened. 2. And [a] the prince ſhall enter by the way of the porch of that gate without, and ſhall ſtand by the poſt of the gate, and the prieſts ſhall prepare his burnt-offering, and his peace-offerings, and he ſhall worſhip at the threſhold of the gate: then he ſhall go forth, but the gate ſhall not be ſhut until the evening. 3. Likewiſe the people of the land ſhall worſhip at the door of this gate before the LORD, in the ſabbaths, and in the new-moons. 4. And the burnt-offering that the prince ſhall offer unto the LORD in the ſabbath-day, ſhall be ſix lambs without blemiſh, and a ram without blemiſh. 5. And the meat-offering ſhall be an ephah for a ram, and the meat-offering for the lambs, † as he ſhall be able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah. 6. And in the day of the new-moon it ſhall be a young bullock without blemiſh, and ſix lambs, and a ram: they ſhall be without blemiſh. 7. And he ſhall prepare a meat-offering, an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram: and for the lambs according as his hand ſhall attain unto, and an hin of oil to an ephah. 8. And when the prince ſhall enter, he ſhall go in by the way of the porch of that gate, and he ſhall go forth by the way thereof. 9. ¶ But when the people of the land ſhall come before the LORD in the ſolemn feaſts, he that entreth in by the way of the north-gate to worſhip, ſhall go out by the way of the ſouth-gate: and he that entreth by the way of the ſouth-gate, ſhall go forth by the way of the north-gate: he ſhall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but ſhall go forth over againſt it. 10. And the prince in the midſt of them, when they go in, ſhall go in; and when they go forth, ſhall go forth. 11. And in the feaſts, and in the ſolemnities, the meat-offering ſhall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram, and to the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah. 12. Now when the prince ſhall prepare a voluntary burnt-offering, or peace-offerings, voluntarily unto the LORD, one ſhall then open him the gate that looketh toward the eaſt, and he ſhall prepare his burnt-offering, and his peace-offerings, as he did on the ſabbath-day: then he ſhall go forth, and after his going forth, one ſhall ſhut the gate. 13. [b] Thou ſhalt daily prepare a burnt-offering unto the LORD, of a lamb ‡ of the firſt year without blemiſh: thou ſhall prepare it § every morning. 14. And thou ſhalt prepare a meat-offering for it every morning, the ſixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat-offering continually, by a perpetual ordinance unto the LORD. 15. Thus ſhall they prepare the lamb, and the meat-offering, and the oil, every morning, for a continual burnt-offering.

v. 1—15. The rules here preſcribed for the place and manner of God's worſhip, like the preceding ſolemnities, differed far from thoſe preſcribed by the law of Moſes.

1. The eaſt-gate, that at other times was always ſhut, chap. xliv. 2. on the ſabbaths, the new-moons, and when the prince offered a voluntary ſacrifice, was to be opened for him: though it ſeems he muſt not go through it into the inner-court, but ſtand in the porch, by the poſt of the door, from whence he might ſee the prieſts offering the ſacrifices he brought. By the north and ſouth-gates the people were to enter the courts of the houſe, obſerving always to return by the gate oppoſite that by which they came in: and on the ſabbaths and new-moons they were to attend the prince at the eaſt-gate, who ſhould be in the midſt of them, their leader and example in the holy ſervice. Note, (1.) It is the greateſt glory of a prince to be a pattern to his people of true piety. (2.) They who are the higheſt on earth, when they know themſelves, will think themſelves honoured in the meaneſt place of the church of God. (3.) With Chriſt our king at our head, we may boldly draw near to the throne of God, and be aſſured of gracious acceptance in his ſight. (4.) When we ſet our hearts towards the heavenly temple, we may not look back, but ſtill forgetting the things which are behind, muſt preſs forward to thoſe that are before.

2. The ſacrifices the prince muſt provide, are a daily burnt-offering of a lamb; on the ſabbath ſix lambs and a ram; on the new-moons an ox was moreover added: all of them without blemiſh, with their ſeveral meat and drink-offerings: ſome of theſe are much larger than was ordered by the law of Moſes, whilſt thoſe for the lambs are left to his ability, v. 5. Our offerings at God's altar muſt be proportioned to the proſperity with which he hath bleſſed us. Where he hath given much of them, he expects the more.

16. ¶ Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, If the prince give a gift unto any of his ſons, the inheritance thereof ſhall be his ſons, it ſhall be their poſſeſſion by inheritance.

Before Chriſt 574.

17. But if he give a gift of his inheritance to one of his ſervants, then it ſhall be his to [c] the year of liberty; after, it ſhall return to the prince: but his inheritance ſhall be his ſons for them. 18. Moreover, [d] the prince ſhall not take of the people's inheritance, by oppreſſion to thruſt them out of their poſſeſſion; but he ſhall give his ſons inheritance out of his own poſſeſſion: that my people be not ſcattered every man from his poſſeſſion.

c Lev. xxv. 10.

v. 16—18. If a prince wanted to leave an inheritance to any of his children, he is permitted to ſettle a part of his poſſeſſions upon him, and it would continue to his deſcendants for ever; but if he made a gift of land to any of his ſervants, it muſt revert to his family again at the year of Jubilee. Theſe gifts muſt be out of his own patrimony, and not the fruits of oppreſſion, or the plunder of his people. Kings muſt by their mild and equitable rule gain the love of their ſubjects; this will prove their greateſt riches, for then they will be ready to ſacrifice their lives and fortunes in his ſervice.

19. ¶ After, he brought me through the entry, which was at the ſide of the gate, into the holy chambers of the prieſts, which looked toward the north: and behold, there was a place on the two ſides weſt-ward. 20. Then ſaid he unto me, This is the place where the prieſts ſhall boil the treſpaſs-offering, and the ſin-offering, where they ſhall bake the meat-offering: that they bear them not out into the utter court, [e] to ſanctify the people. 21. Then he brought me forth into the utter court, and cauſed me to paſs by the four corners of the court, and behold, † in every corner of the court there was a court. 22. In the four corners of the court there were courts ‡ joined of forty cubits long, and thirty broad: theſe four § corners were of one meaſure. 23. And there was a row of building round about in them, round about them four, and it was made with boiling-places under the rows round about. 24. Then ſaid he unto me, Theſe are the places of them that boil, where the miniſters of the houſe ſhall boil the ſacrifice of the people.

v. 19—24. The altar being ſo liberally as above ſupplied with ſacrifices, part of which belonged to the prieſts, and were to be eaten in the holy place, there were boilers and ovens near their chambers, where they prepared theſe holy things, none of which might be carried out into the outer court, to ſanctify the people, who might ſancy, that partaking of theſe holy things would recommend them to God's favour, or that but touching them communicated virtue. Such ſuperſtitious conceits the miniſters of the ſanctuary muſt never countenance.

1. AFTERWARD he brought me again unto the door of the houſe, and behold, [a] waters iſſued out from under the threſhold of the houſe eaſtward: for the fore-front of the houſe ſtood toward the eaſt, and the waters came down from under from the right ſide of the houſe, at the ſouth ſide of [b] the altar. 2. Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me about the way without unto the utter gate by the way that looketh eaſtward, and behold, there ran out waters on the right ſide. 3. And when the man that had the line in his hand, went forth eaſtward, he meaſured a thouſand cubits, and he brought me through the waters: the † waters were [c] to the ancles. 4. Afterward he meaſured a thouſand, and it was a river that I could not paſs over: for the waters were riſen, [d] waters ‡ to ſwim in, a river that could not be paſſed over. 6. ¶ And he ſaid unto me, Son of man, haſt thou ſeen this? then he brought me, and cauſed me to return to the brink of the river. 7. Now when I had returned, behold, at the § bank of the river were very many [e] trees on the one ſide and on the other. 8. Then ſaid he unto me, Theſe waters iſſue out towards the eaſt-country, and go down into the ‖ deſart, and go into the ſea: which being brought forth into the ſea, the waters ſhall be healed. 9. v. 1—12. Theſe waters of the ſanctuary are uſually ſuppoſed to ſignify the goſpel of Jeſus, the bleſſed effects and glorious extent of it being hereby repreſented. There was nothing like theſe ſtreams flowing from the material temple at Jeruſalem, and therefore it is evident the viſion muſt be taken in a myſtical ſenſe.

1. The fountain-head was in the ſanctuary, and from the threſhold of the houſe the waters iſſued. In the temple did Chriſt and his apoſtles daily teach, and from thence did the word of the Lord go forth into the Gentile lands; and he himſelf is both the temple and the door, from which theſe living waters flow, and who gives them their quickening power and efficacy.

2. The courſe of the river was eaſtward, and then, either by dividing its ſtreams, or by winding round, it turned weſt into the ſea, either the Dead Sea, the Lake of Sodom, or the Mediterranean. The goſpel, which began to be preached at firſt in Galilee, and ſpread afterwards chiefly through the countries that lay eaſt of Judea, went forth in proceſs of time into all lands, even to the ends of the earth.

3. The waters as they ran grew wider and deeper: the prophet and his divinely-appointed guide croſſing it thrice, at the diſtance of a thouſand cubits each from the fountain-head, found the river ſwoln from their ankles to their knees, then riſen to their loins; and when the fourth time they would have croſſed the waters, they were no longer fordable, v. 5. And this may refer, [1.] To the ſpreading of the goſpel in the world: from ſmall beginnings the church of God hath increaſed exceedingly, and ſhall go on ſtill enlarging, till the whole earth ſhall be covered with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the ſea. [2.] To the truths of God, which the farther we ſearch, the deeper we ſhall find them. Some things are plain and obvious, and reach but to the ankles; in others, more abſtruſe, experience and enquiry will lead us farther up to the loins; whilſt in ſome, the farther we go, the more we are loſt, and can only ſtand on the river's brink, and cry with Paul, O the depth! Rom. xi. 33. [3.] To the work of grace in a believer's ſoul, which by continual acceſſions of light and love from the great fountain-head, increaſes with the increaſe of God, till we come to the perfect man, to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt.

4. Wherever theſe ſtreams went forth, their wondrous virtue appeared: even the waters of Sodom were healed, v. 8. for ſuch is the mighty efficacy of the Saviour's grace, that it reaches to the moſt deſperate: the vileſt may find pardon through his blood, and renovation by the power of his Spirit: to the uttermoſt his ſalvation extends, and none are beyond it, who do not wilfully reject it. And whitherſoever theſe rivers came, they communicated life, v. 9. Such is the quickening influence which attends the goſpel of Jeſus: where-ever it is preached, dead ſinners live, and, like a well-watered tree, the ſouls of believers are green and flouriſhing: but the obſtinate and impenitent are left to their miſery, as the marſhes and miry places, v. 11. abandoned to eternal ruin.

5. Vaſt ſhoals of fiſh ſhall live in this river, and the fiſhermen caſt in their nets, and dry them on the banks thereof; intimating the multitude of converts that by the preaching of the goſpel ſhall be called into the church of Chriſt, and the diligence and laboriouſneſs of the miniſters of Chriſt, as well as the ſucceſs of their miniſtrations, for their labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord.

6. On the banks every uſeful tree for food or phyſic grew, their leaf never fading, their fruit ever abounding, See Rev.

xxii. 2. Theſe repreſent the ſouls of the faithful, the trees of righteouſneſs, the planting of the Lord, deriving from Jeſus their life and vigour; watered every moment by his grace; green in their profeſſions; in every good work bringing forth fruit to the glory of God; pouring the balm of friendly advice and conſolation into the hearts of the tempted and afflicted; and perſevering in every labour of love, till their life of grace on earth ſhall be exchanged for the eternal life of glory in heaven.

13. ¶ Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, This ſhall be the border, whereby ye ſhall inherit the land, according to the twelve tribes of Iſrael: [m] Joſeph ſhall have two portions. 14. And ye ſhall inherit it, one as well as another: concerning the which [n] I † lifted up mine hand to give it unto your fathers, and this land ſhall fall unto you for inheritance. 15. And this ſhall be the border of the land toward the north ſide from the great ſea, the way of Hethlon, as men go to Zedad; 16. Hamath, Berothah, Sibraim, which is between the border of Damaſcus, and the border of Hamath; ‡ Hazar-hatticon, which is by the coaſt of Hauran. 17. And the border from the ſea, ſhall be [o] Hazar-enan, the border of Damaſcus, and the north northward, and the border of Hamath: and this is the north-ſide. 18. And the eaſt-ſide ye ſhall meaſure § from Hauran, and from Damaſcus, and from Gilead, and from the land of Iſrael by Jordan, from the border unto the eaſt-ſea: and this is the eaſt-ſide. 19. And the ſouth-ſide ſouthward from Tamar, even to [p] the waters of ‖ ſtrife in Kadeſh, the † river, to the great ſea: and this is the ſouth-ſide ‡ ſouth-ward. 20. The weſt-ſide alſo ſhall be the great ſea from the border, till a man come over againſt Hamath: this is the weſt-ſide. 21. So ſhall ye divide this land unto you, according to the tribes of Iſrael. 22. ¶ And it ſhall come to paſs, that ye ſhall divide it by lot for an inheritance unto you, and to the ſtrangers that ſojourn among you, which ſhall beget children among you: and [q] they ſhall be unto you as born in the country among the children of Iſrael, they ſhall have inheritance with you among the tribes of Iſrael. 23. v. 13—23. The borders of the land here marked out are conſiderably larger than thoſe deſcribed by Moſes and Joſhua, or than the country poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites after their return from the Babyloniſh captivity, and ſhews this muſt be underſtood typically of the church of Chriſt, and the true Iſrael of God, which, under the goſpel diſpenſation, ſhould have a great increaſe.

Joſeph hath two portions, to complete the number of the twelve tribes, Levi being taken to attend the ſanctuary, and having a portion adjoining thereunto. They are to divide the land into twelve equal ſhares, See Rev. vii. 4—8. which was not the caſe at the firſt diviſion of the country, when the greater tribes had more, and the ſmaller leſs. But now in the church of Chriſt believers are all one, entitled to the ſame privileges, and ſharing alike the ſame grace and glory; and this in virtue of the everlaſting covenant, confirmed by an oath, and ſure to all the ſpiritual ſeed.

Here alſo the ſtrangers are allowed to inherit among native Iſraelites, which before was forbidden; for now the middle wall of partition is taken down, and the Gentiles made fellow heirs and of the ſame body, members of Chriſt, and inheritors of the kingdom of God.

a Chap. xlvii. 15, &c.

1. NOW theſe are the names of the tribes, [a] from the north-end to the coaſt of the way of Hethlon, as one goeth to Hamath, Hazar-enan, the border of Damaſcus north-ward, to the coaſt of Hamath (for theſe are his ſides eaſt and weſt) † a portion for [b] Dan. 2. And by the border of Dan, from the eaſt-ſide unto the weſt-ſide, a portion for Aſher. 3. And by the border of Aſher, from the eaſt-ſide even unto the weſt-ſide, a portion for Naphtali. 4. And by the border of Naphtali, from the eaſt-ſide unto the weſt-ſide, a portion for Manaſſeh. 5. And by the border of Manaſſeh, from the eaſt-ſide unto the weſt-ſide, a portion for Ephraim. 6. And by the border of Ephraim, from the eaſt-ſide even unto the weſt-ſide, a portion for Reuben. 7. And by the border of Reuben, from the eaſt-ſide unto the weſt-ſide, a portion for Judah. 8. ¶ And by the border of Judah, from the eaſt-ſide unto the weſt-ſide, ſhall be [c] the offering which ye ſhall offer of five and twenty thouſand reeds in breadth, and in length as one of the other parts, from the eaſt-ſide unto the weſt-ſide, and the ſanctuary ſhall be [d] in the midſt of it. 9. The oblation that ye ſhall offer unto the LORD, ſhall be of five and twenty thouſand in length, and of ten thouſand in breadth. 10. And for them, even for the prieſts, ſhall be this holy oblation, toward the north, five and twenty thouſand in length, and toward the weſt ten thouſand in breadth, and toward the eaſt ten thouſand in breadth, and toward the ſouth five and twenty thouſand in length, and the ſanctuary of the LORD ſhall be in the midſt thereof. 11. [e] ‡ It ſhall be for the prieſts that are ſanctified, of the ſons of Zadok, which have kept my § charge, which went not aſtray when the children of Iſrael went aſtray [f] as the Levites went aſtray. 12. And this oblation of the land that is offered, ſhall be unto them a thing moſt holy by the border of the Levites. 13. And over againſt the border of the prieſts, the Levites ſhall have five and twenty thouſand in length, and ten thouſand in breadth: all the length ſhall be five and twenty thouſand, and the breadth ten thouſand. 14. And [g] they ſhall not ſell of it, neither exchange, nor alienate the firſt-fruits of the land: for it is holy unto the LORD. 15. ¶ And the five thouſand that are left in the breadth over againſt the five and twenty thouſand, ſhall be a profane place for the city, for dwelling and for ſuburbs, and the city ſhall be in the midſt thereof. 16. And theſe ſhall be the meaſures thereof, the north-ſide four thouſand and five hundred, and the ſouth-ſide four thouſand and five hundred, and on the eaſt-ſide four thouſand and five hundred, and the weſt-ſide four thouſand and five hundred. 17. And the ſuburbs of the city ſhall be toward the north two hundred and fifty, and toward the ſouth two hundred and fifty, and toward the eaſt two hundred and fifty, and toward the weſt two hundred and fifty. 18. And the reſidue in length over againſt the oblation of the holy portion, ſhall be ten thouſand eaſt-ward, and ten thouſand weſt-ward: and it ſhall be over againſt the oblation of the holy portion, and the increaſe thereof [h] ſhall be for food unto them that ſerve the city. 19. And they that ſerve the city, ſhall ſerve it out of all the tribes of Iſrael. 20. All [i] the oblation ſhall be five and twenty thouſand, by five and twenty thouſand: ye ſhall offer the holy oblation four-ſquare, with the poſſeſſion of the city. 21. ¶ And the reſidue ſhall be for the prince on the one ſide, and on the other of the holy oblation, and of the poſſeſſion of the city over againſt the five and twenty thouſand, of the oblation toward the eaſt-border, and weſt-ward over againſt the five and twenty thouſand toward the weſt-border, over againſt the portions for the prince, and it ſhall be the holy oblation, and the ſanctuary of the houſe ſhall be in the midſt thereof. 22. Moreover, from the poſſeſſion of the Levites, and from the poſſeſſion of the city, being in the midſt of that which is the prince's, between the border of Judah and the border of Benjamin, ſhall be for the prince. 23. As for the reſt of the tribes, from the eaſt-ſide unto the weſt-ſide, Benjamin ſhall have † a portion. 24. And by the border of Benjamin, from the eaſt-ſide unto the weſt-ſide, Simeon ſhall have † a portion. 25. And by the border of Simeon, from the eaſt-ſide unto the weſt-ſide, Iſſachar a portion. 26. And by the border of

v. 1—29. The diviſion of the land, and the poſition of the ſeveral tribes, are very different from what had ever been the caſe, either under Joſhua, or after the Babyloniſh captivity.

1. Dan, the laſt provided for, Joſh. xix. 40. is here the firſt; for under the goſpel ſo it often happens, Matth. xix. 30. and the chief of ſinners become the chief of ſaints.

2. The tribes lay contiguous in a row, mutual ſupports to each other, ſignifying the union maintained in the church of Chriſt between the members, and the mutual aſſiſtance each communicates and receives, for the ſtrengthening and comfort of the whole body.

3. The ſanctuary with the Levites lay in the midſt; ſeven tribes were to the north, five to the ſouth of it; thus they might more conveniently meet together, and maintain communion with each other.

4. The prieſts portion was around the temple, that they might be at hand continually; and as they were liberally provided for by the oblations, they were the more obliged to attend at the altar. Note, It is the worſt of ſacrilege when prieſts fatten on the ſpoils of that altar, at which they never ſerve.

5. The lands of the prieſts were unalienable, and might neither be ſold nor exchanged. What is dedicated to God's ſervice may no more be diverted to other purpoſes.

6. The city is four-ſquare, and the ſuburbs equally extending on every ſide, called the profane place, being, in compariſon with the ſanctuary, common for all the people of the ſeveral tribes. This city repreſents the goſpel-church, in which the faithful are joined together under the government of their great king, Jeſus; and ſafe under his protection, no enemy can approach to hurt them.

7. There ſhall be a number ſelected out of all the tribes to ſerve the city; intimating the duty of thoſe who are magiſtrates, or miniſters, or private Chriſtians, to lay out themſelves for the advancement of Chriſt's church and kingdom in the world.

8. The prince's lot is ſuited to his high dignity, v. 21. near the ſanctuary, as deſigned to be the protector of religion, and the example of true godlineſs to his ſubjects. Chriſt is the church's prince, her defence, and glory.

9. Judah and Benjamin lay on each ſide the ſanctuary, in the moſt honourable place. They who kept their integrity, and ſtood faithful, when others apoſtatized, ſhall receive the reward of their fidelity.

30. ¶ And theſe are the goings out of the city on the north-ſide, four thouſand and five hundred meaſures. 31. And [l] the gates of the city ſhall be after the names of the tribes of Iſrael, three gates north-ward; one gate of Reuben, one gate of Judah, one gate of Levi. 32. And at the eaſt-ſide four thouſand and five hundred: and three gates; and one gate of Joſeph, one gate of Benjamin, one gate of Dan. 33. And at the ſouth-ſide four thouſand and five hundred meaſures: and three gates; one gate of Simeon, one gate of Iſſachar, one gate of Zebulun. 34. At the weſt-ſide four thouſand and five hundred, with their three gates; one gate of Gad, one gate of Aſher, one gate of Naphtali. 35. It was round about eighteen thouſand meaſures: [m] and the name of the city from that day ſhall be, † [n] The LORD is there.

v. 30—35. The immenſe extent of this city, computed by ſome at 32,000 miles, evidently ſhews it muſt be myſtically taken, as that glorious church into which all nations ſhould flow together. The twelve gates bearing the names of the twelve tribes, intimate the freedom of acceſs which all believers have through Jeſus, the door into the city of God: none are excluded, who do not exclude themſelves. The name the city bears is Jehovah Shammah, God in a peculiar manner manifeſting his preſence in the midſt of his church and people here below, preſerving them from all their foes: he is near to hear and grant all their petitions; comforting them with a ſenſe of his love, and dwelling in their hearts, now become the habitation of God through the Spirit. And this alſo will be the conſummation of the eternal bliſs and glory, that God is there, ſhining on his choſen with the unclouded beams of everlaſting conſolation. Bleſſed and happy they, who are called to enter by the gates into the city, and enjoy that unutterable felicity of being for ever with the Lord.

OR, A
PRACTICAL COMMENT
Upon the BOOK of the PROPHET
DANIEL.

TO comfort the diſtreſſed people of Iſrael during their ſad captivity, God was pleaſed to raiſe them up prophets in Babylon. Daniel, the author of the following book, was probably of the ſeed-royal, or at leaſt of noble blood, and eminent, as we find in his cotemporary Ezekiel, for his diſtinguiſhed wiſdom, as well as ſingular piety. In his prophecies the preciſe time of the Meſſiah's coming is ſo expreſsly fixed, that the Jews, unwilling to ſubmit to the evidence, degrade him from the rank of prophets; and, making a diſtinction between the influence of the Holy Spirit and the gift of prophecy, admit that he wrote under the former, though they will not allow him the latter. But he is expreſsly ſtiled a prophet, Matth. xxiv. 15. and may juſtly claim a place among the chief of them, his predictions being ſo diſtinct and particular, and the events deſcribed ſo momentous, reſpecting the great monarchies that ſhould ſucceſſively ariſe; with a particular regard to the Meſſiah and his kingdom, which at laſt ſhould be ſet up in the world, and endure to the end of time.

This book is written partly in Hebrew, and partly in Chaldee: The ſtory of Bell and the Dragon, and Suſannah and the Elders, that are extant in the Greek of Theodotion, and in the Vulgate Latin verſion, and by them annexed to this book, as a part of it, are evidently apocryphal and ſpurious.

CHAP. I.

This chapter gives us a more particular account of the beginning of Daniel's life, his original, and education, than we have of any other of the prophets. We have here, 1. Jehoiakim's firſt captivity, ver. 1, 2. in which Daniel, with others of the ſeed-royal, was carried to Babylon. 2. The choice made of Daniel, and ſome other young men, to be brought up in the Chaldean literature, that they might be fitted to ſerve the government, and the proviſion made for them, ver. 3—7. 3. Their pious refuſal to eat the portion of the king's meat, and their determining to live upon pulſe and water, which, having tried it, the maſter of the eunuchs allowed them to do, finding that it agreed very well with them, ver. 8—16. 4. Their wonderful improvement above all their fellows in wiſdom and knowledge, ver. 17—21.

1. IN the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah, [a] came Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon unto Jeruſalem, and beſieged it. 2. And [b] the LORD gave Jehoiakim king of Judah into his hand, with part of the veſſels of the houſe of GOD, which he carried into [c] the land of Shinar, to the houſe of his god, and [d] he brought the veſſels into the treaſure-houſe of his god. 3. ¶ And the king ſpake unto Aſhpenaz the maſter of his eunuchs, that he ſhould bring [e] certain of the children of Iſrael, [f] and of the king's ſeed, and of the princes; 4. Children [g] in whom was no blemiſh, but well-favoured, and ſkilful in all wiſdom, and cunning in knowledge, and underſtanding ſcience, and [h] ſuch as had ability in them to ſtand in the king's palace, and [i] whom they might teach the learning and the tongue of the Chaldeans. 5. And the king appointed them a daily proviſion of the king's meat, and of the wine which he drank: ſo nouriſhing them [k] three years, that at the end thereof [l] they might ſtand before the king. 6. Now among theſe were of the children of Judah, Daniel, Hananiah, Miſhael, and Azariah: 7. Unto whom the prince of the eunuchs [m] gave names: [n] for he gave unto Daniel the name of Belteſhazzar; and to Hananiah, of Shadrach; and to Miſhael, of Meſhach; and to Azariah, of Abed-nego.

v. 1—7. God had threatned Hezekiah to puniſh him for his pride; that the treaſures in which he gloried, ſhould be plundered by the king to whoſe ambaſſadors he had vainly ſhewed them, and his children led into captivity, Iſa. xxxix. 6, 7. The fulfilment of that prophecy is here recorded. In the third of Jehoiakim, which was the firſt year of Nebuchadnezzar, that conqueror invaded Judea, and beſieged and took Jeruſalem; yet, not deſigning entirely to ſubvert the government, he left the king in poſſeſſion of his royal dignity, though a tributary, and contented himſelf with the plunder of a part of the veſſels veſſels of the ſanctuary, as a trophy of his victory, and to be placed in the temple of his god, as a tribute of thankfulneſs for his ſucceſs. So much more devotion and gratitude do idolaters often ſhew to their falſe gods, than the profeſſors of his religion pay to the only living and true Jehovah. He choſe alſo the moſt promiſing and ingenious youths, that were of royal or noble extraction, to be trained up in his court, and qualified for offices of truſt and government under him. Thus whilſt he rendered them uſeful miniſters of ſtate, they ſerved alſo as hoſtages for the fidelity of their parents. We may obſerve,

1. The directions given for the choice of theſe youths, which ſhewed the conſummate wiſdom and policy of the monarch. They muſt be without deformity, well-favoured, the lovely countenance beſpeaking often the ſweet diſpoſition of the mind. They muſt be young, that they might more readily incorporate with the people among whom they were captives, and learn their manners and language: and perſons of genius and learning, well ſkilled in all the knowledge that was proper for their years and ſtation, and likely to improve under the tuition of their Chaldean maſters.

2. The care taken of their maintenance and education. Three years they were liberally maintained at the king's expence, and under the moſt accompliſhed maſters, that they might become acquainted with the language, laws, arts, and learning of the Chaldeans; and, at the expiration of this time, be qualified to appear before the king, and fill that department moſt ſuited to their genius and capacity. Note, (1.) The good education of youth is a public concern. (2.) They who wiſh to ſerve their generation, muſt ſpend their earlier days not in idleneſs or pleaſure, but ſtudy: if that ſeaſon be loſt, it is afterwards ſcarcely to be redeemed.

3. Among theſe youths four are particularly mentioned, as rendering themſelves moſt remarkable in the ſucceeding hiſtory. Their names were, Daniel, which ſignifies, God is my judge; Hananiah, God is gracious to me; Miſhael, aſked of God; and Azariah, God is my help. Theſe the prince of the eunuchs changed into other names; either to ſhew his authority over them, or to intimate that they were now naturalized, and become Chaldeans; or in honour of the gods of Babylon, inſtead of the God of Iſrael, whoſe name they bore, and hoping perhaps the more eaſily to ſeduce them to the worſhip of the idols after whom they were now called. Thus Daniel is named Belteſhazzar, or Bel's treaſurer; Hananiah, Shadrach, the meſſenger of the ſun; Miſhael, Meſhach, or of Schach, the name of one of their gods or goddeſſes; Azariah, Abed-nego, the ſervant of Nego, perhaps the ſame idol mentioned Iſa. xlvi. 1. But tho' their names were changed, their hearts were the ſame; and, far from ſerving theſe idols, they approved themſelves the ſervants of the true God.

8. ¶ But Daniel purpoſed in his heart, that he [o] would not defile himſelf with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank: therefore he requeſted of the prince of the eunuchs, that he might not defile himſelf. 9. Now [p] GOD had brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince of the eunuchs. 10. And the prince of the eunuchs ſaid unto Daniel, [q] I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat, and your drink: for why ſhould he ſee your faces worſe liking than the children which are of your † ſort? then ſhall ye make me [r] endanger my head to the king. 11. Then ſaid Daniel to ‡ Melzar, whom the prince of the eunuchs had ſet over Daniel, Hananiah, Miſhael, and Azariah, 12. Prove thy ſervants, I beſeech thee, [s] ten days, and let them give us [t] pulſe to eat, and water to drink. 13. Then let our countenances be looked upon before thee, and the countenance of the children that eat of the portion of the king's meat: and as thou ſeeſt, deal with thy ſervants. 14. So he conſented to them in this matter, and proved them ten days. 15. And at the end of ten days, their countenances appeared fairer and fatter in fleſh, than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat. 16. Thus Melzar took away the portion of their meat, and the wine that they ſhould drink: and gave them pulſe.

v. 8—16. We have here,

1. Daniel a favourite with the prince of the eunuchs. His own amiable qualities no doubt deſerved regard; but the ſingular affection he found from this heathen maſter was from God, who hath in his hand the hearts of all men. If we find favour therefore with thoſe from whom perhaps we leaſt expected it, let us acknowledge this to be the gift of God.

2. He is ſcrupulouſly careful to maintain a conſcience void of offence. The king had allowed him and his companions a liberal maintenance, but they feared to defile themſelves with the meat and wine of the king; either as being ſuch food as was forbidden by their law, or as having been offered in ſacrifice to idols, or bleſſed in their name: they rather therefore choſe to live upon the plaineſt and coarſeſt diet, than on theſe dainties; and Daniel, as their ſpokeſman, intercedes for them with the prince of the eunuchs, that they might be excuſed from uſing the king's proviſion, and be permitted to live on pulſe and water; hard fare for the ſons of princes! Note, (1.) They who would preſerve their ſouls from ſin, muſt keep a ſtrict guard over their ſenſual appetites. (2.) The pooreſt repaſt eaten with a good conſcience, is a more delicious morſel, than all the dainties of the luxurious. (3.) They who have a ſenſe of the evil of ſin, will think no ſuffering or ſelf-denial hard, in order to eſcape from it. (4.) Humble entreaty will prevail on thoſe, whom obſtinate refuſal would but have exaſperated; as was the caſe here; for,

3. The prince of the eunuchs, after ſome objections, conſents. He was fearful, leſt ſuch ſpare diet ſhould make theſe young princes look worſe than their fellows; the conſequence of which would perhaps be the anger of the king, and might coſt him his head. But as Daniel and his companions deſire only ten days trial by way of experiment, he is ſatisfied to wait that time, and compare them with the others: or elſe Melzar, the officer to whoſe care they were entruſted, and to whom Daniel addreſſed anew his requeſt, grants them this liberty, perhaps with the connivance of his ſuperior; and the event approved the experiment; for at the expiration of the ten days, theſe were fairer and fatter than the others, who had feaſted on the king's dainties. Note, (1.) An abſtemious diet is the beſt friend to health. (2.) Let the poor, who are reduced to pulſe and water, remember, that God's bleſſing can make theſe preferable to a ſtalled ox. (3.) Whatever we deny ourſelves for God's glory, ſhall, in the iſſue, prove our greateſt gain.

17. ¶ As for theſe four children, [u] GOD gave them [x] knowledge and ſkill in all learning and wiſdom: and Daniel [y] had underſtanding in all viſions and dreams. 18. Now, [z] at the end of the days that the king had ſaid he ſhould bring them in, then the prince of the eunuchs brought them in before Nebuchadnezzar. 19. And the king communed with them: and among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Miſhael, and Azariah: therefore [a] ſtood they before the king. 20. [b] And in all matters of wiſdom and underſtanding that the king enquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and aſtronomers that were in all his realm. 21. And [c] Daniel continued even unto the firſt year of king Cyrus.

v. 17—21. We are here told,

1. The great progreſs in learning theſe gracious youths made under the divine bleſſing. They minded their buſineſs, and God eminently bleſſed them, giving them ſingular ſkill and knowledge; and Daniel in particular was endued with underſtanding in all viſions and dreams, which he was enabled to interpret, not by any pretended rules of art, but by divine inſpiration; and in theſe alſo God was pleaſed to make known unto him future events.

2. The king highly honoured them at the expiration of the three years. When he came to examine into the proficiency of theſe ſtudents, he found none to be compared with thoſe four: he therefore took them into his ſervice, and dignified them with a ſeat at his council-board. And he had abundant reaſon to approve the choice he had made of them; for in all matters of wiſdom and underſtanding, reſpecting the conduct of affairs private or public, they were ten times better than the wiſeſt and moſt experienced of his counſellors, and the moſt celebrated of the magicians. From this time till the firſt year of Cyrus, Daniel continued at court and in favour, and lived to ſee that happy event, the reſtoration of his people to their own land. Note, (1.) They who ſingly make God's glory their aim, moſt effectually conſult their own honour and happineſs. (2.) Wiſdom is not always confined to age: when God teaches, he can give to youth more underſtanding than the ancients.

CHAP. II.

It was ſaid, chap. i. 17. that Daniel had underſtanding in dreams; and here we have an early and eminent inſtance of it, which ſoon made him famous in the court of Babylon. We have, 1. The great perplexity that Nebuchadnezzar was put into by a dream which he had forgot, and his command to the magicians to tell him what it was, which they could not, ver. 1—11. 2. Orders given to deſtroy them all, and Daniel and his fellows among the reſt, ver. 12—15. 3. The diſcovery of this ſecret to him in anſwer to prayer, and the thankſgiving he offered up to God thereupon, ver. 16—23. 4. His admiſſion to the king, and the diſcovery he made to him, both of his dream, and of the interpretation of it, ver. 24—45. 5. The great honour which Nebuchadnezzar buchadnezzar put upon Daniel, in recompence for this, and the preferment of his companions with him, ver. 46—49.

603. 1. AND in the ſecond year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuchadnezzar dreamed dreams, [a] wherewith his ſpirit was troubled, and his ſleep brake from him. 2. Then the king commanded to call the magicians, and the aſtrologers, and the ſorcerers, and the Chaldeans, for to ſhew the king his dreams: ſo they came, and ſtood before the king. 3. And the king ſaid unto them, I have dreamed a dream, and my ſpirit was troubled to know the dream. 4. Then ſpake the Chaldeans to the king in Syriac, [b] O king, live for ever: [c] tell thy ſervants the dream, and we will ſhew the interpretation. 5. The king anſwered and ſaid to the Chaldeans, The thing is gone from me: if ye will not make known unto me the dream, with the interpretation thereof, ye ſhall be [d] cut in pieces, and your houſes ſhall be made a dunghil. 6. But if ye ſhew the dream, and the interpretation thereof, ye ſhall receive of me gifts, [e] and rewards, and great honour: therefore ſhew me the dream, and the interpretation thereof. 7. They anſwered again and ſaid, Let the king tell his ſervants the dream, and we will ſhew the interpretation of it. 8. The king anſwered and ſaid, I know of certainty, that ye would † gain the time, becauſe ye ſee the thing is gone from me. 9. But if ye will not make known unto me the dream, [f] there is but one decree for you: for ye have prepared lying and corrupt words to ſpeak before me, till the time be changed: therefore tell me the dream, and I ſhall know that ye can ſhew me the interpretation thereof. 10. ¶ The Chaldeans anſwered before the king, and ſaid, There is not a man upon the earth that can ſhew the king's matter: therefore there is no king, lord, nor ruler, that aſked ſuch things at any magician, or aſtrologer, or Chaldean. 11. And it is a rare thing that the king requireth, and there is none other that can ſhew it before the king, [g] except the gods, whoſe dwelling is not with fleſh. 12. For this cauſe the king was angry and very furious, and commanded to deſtroy all the wiſe-men of Babylon. 13. And the decree went forth, that the wiſe-men ſhould be ſlain; and they ſought Daniel and his fellows to be ſlain.

v. 1—13. The date of this prophecy is ſaid to be in the ſecond year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign; but as it appears Daniel was carried captive in the firſt, and continued three years under the tuition of the Chaldean ſages, this creates a difficulty, which interpreters have variouſly ſolved. The moſt probable way of accounting for it ſeems to be, that this year was the fourth from his being aſſociated with his father in the empire, and the ſecond from his death, when he reigned alone; or, the ſecond year in the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, commencing from the time Daniel was appointed to ſome employment about the king. We have here,

1. The troubled dreams of this mighty monarch. Whilſt his meaneſt ſubjects ſlept undiſturbed, his agitated mind was harraſſed with ſtrange imaginations; and the deep impreſſions made by them dwelt upon his ſpirit, occaſioned vaſt perplexity in his thoughts, and drove ſleep from his eyelids. Note, We are apt to envy thoſe who roll in affluence, and live in all the pomp of earthly grandeur; but we know not the pangs they often feel, and their ſleepleſs hours, becauſe of fear in the night.

2. His magicians and aſtrologers are ſummoned to ſhew the dream, and the interpretation thereof; for though the painful impreſſion of it remained, the particulars were gone from his memory. They inſtantly attend his orders, with warmeſt wiſhes for his proſperity expreſs their high reſpect for the king, and requeſting the recital of the dream, confidently promiſe the interpretation thereof. They ſpoke in the Syriac or Chaldee tongue, which was then the ſame, however different ſince, and to the eighth chapter this language is uſed, that the Chaldeans might read, and be convinced of the folly of their idolatry, and turned to the true God. The requeſt of the magicians ſeemed highly reaſonable; but the king, unable to grant it, inſiſted upon their telling him the dream itſelf, on penalty of their utter deſtruction if they failed, and with a promiſe of the greateſt rewards and honours if they could gratify him herein. In vain they remonſtrated the impoſſibility and unreaſonableneſs of the demand; impoſſible, becauſe, as they confeſs, none but the gods, who have not their dwelling with fleſh, were capable of ſuch knowledge. They admit the divine omniſcience, though, blindly erring, they aſcribe that which alone belongs to the one infinite and eternal Jehovah, to their many fictitious deities: Unreaſonable, becauſe never king before required ſuch a thing from any magician or ſoothſayer. But their remonſtrances exaſperate, inſtead of convincing this deſpotic monarch; for arbitrary power is deaf to reaſon. He upbraids them, as if they had combined to impoſe upon him, and meant only to gain time, till either he ſhould loſe the deſire of knowing the dream, or be unable to recollect, if what they ſhould advance was true; or till his threatning to puniſh them ſhould be changed: he therefore inſiſts on the immediate ſatisfaction of his deſire, perſuaded that, could they tell the dream, they could not fail of giving the true interpretation alſo. The magicians repeat their remonſtrances, and the king grows more furious; for where paſſion rages, and obſtinacy in the wrong refuſes to hear the voice of truth; reaſon, however mildly urged, inſtead of ſoothing, but exaſperates; and where power is with the oppreſſors, what they cannot ſupport with equity, they will puſh on with fury. The magicians and wiſe men are therefore doomed to die without exception; and Daniel and his fellows, though entirely ignorant of the whole tranſaction, are ſought for among the reſt to be ſlain. We may obſerve here, (1.) What a miſery it is to live under an arbitrary government, where neither law nor reaſon avail any thing againſt the deſpotic will of a mercileſs tyrant. (2.) Though theſe magicians were now about to ſuffer unjuſtly, yet God was righteous, in permitting thoſe to be puniſhed for what they really never pretended to do, in return for their daring to impoſe on others, by pretending to that which they knew themſelves unable to perform.

14. ¶ [h] Then Daniel anſwered with counſel and wiſdom to Arioch the † captain of the king's guard, which was gone forth to ſlay the wiſe men of Babylon. 15. He anſwered and ſaid to Arioch the king's captain, Why is the decree ſo haſty from the king? Then Arioch made the thing known to Daniel. 16. Then Daniel went in, and [i] deſired of the king that he would give him time, and [k] that he would ſhew the king the interpretation. 17. Then Daniel went [l] to his houſe, and made the thing [m] known to Hananiah, Miſhael, and Azariah, his companions: 18. [n] That they would deſire mercies of the GOD of heaven concerning this ſecret; that Daniel and his fellows ſhould not periſh [o] with the reſt of the wiſe-men of Babylon. 19. ¶ Then was the ſecret revealed unto Daniel [p] in a night-viſion: then Daniel bleſſed the GOD of heaven. 20. Daniel anſwered and ſaid, [q] Bleſſed be the name of GOD for ever and ever: for wiſdom and might are his. 21. And he changeth [r] the times and the ſeaſons: [s] he removeth kings, and ſetteth up kings: [t] he giveth wiſdom unto the wiſe, and knowledge to them that know underſtanding. 22. [u] He revealeth the deep and ſecret things: [x] he knoweth what is in the darkneſs, and [y] the light dwelleth with him. 23. I thank thee, and praiſe thee, O thou God of my fathers, who haſt given me wiſdom and might, and [z] haſt made known unto me now what we deſired of thee: for thou haſt now made known unto us the king's matter.

v. 14—23. When tyrants reign, they will not want inſtruments to execute their unjuſt decrees. Already was Arioch gone forth for this bloody work, and Daniel, among the reſt, appointed to the ſlaughter: but God had otherwiſe ordained; and now when deſtruction ſeemed moſt fearfully to hang over him and his companions, all things were working together for their more diſtinguiſhed honour and advancement. So little can we judge of good or evil by outward appearances.

Daniel, though before this ſo famed for his ſkill, and acknowledged by the king to be ten times wiſer than all his ſages, had not been conſulted or thought of; for paſſion excludes all deliberate reflection; but his prudence and prayer now warded off the fatal blow that threatned ſo much miſchief.

1. He mildly interrogates the captain on the reaſon of this haſty decree; and when he learnt the cauſe, he went in, or up unto the king, and humbly begs a ſhort reſpite, undertaking to give the king all the ſatisfaction he deſired; and now ſenſible of his haſtineſs, or rather wrought upon by the inviſible hand of him who hath the hearts of kings at his diſpoſal, the requeſt is granted, and the execution ſtayed.

2. No ſooner is Daniel retired, than he hath recourſe in prayer to the God of heaven, who alone could reveal the ſecret; and he engages his three faithful companions to join in their ſupplications for the ſame mercy, in which they were alike intereſted with himſelf, ſince, ſhould the king's decree be put in force, they muſt periſh with the magicians. Note, (1.) In every emergence prayer ſhould be our firſt recourſe. (2.) It is good to have praying friends, and our duty to deſire, as well as an high privilege to enjoy, an intereſt in their ſupplications.

(3.) All our hopes of an anſwer from God ariſe from faith in his promiſed mercies, and they who thus draw near to him, ſhall never be diſappointed.

3. God heard and anſwered their requeſts. He revealed the ſecret to Daniel in a night-viſion: either the following night he dreamed the ſame dream Nebuchadnezzar had forgotten, or God revealed it to him, with the interpretation thereof, immediately after the prayer he had offered. So effectual is the fervent prayer of the righteous, God will ſhew them ſecret things, which others cannot attain to.

4. No ſooner is the mercy granted, than his grateful heart overflows with deep acknowledgments. They who pray in faith, are ſure to praiſe with joyful lips. He adores and bleſſes God's great and glorious name for ever and ever; ſo worthy to be praiſed, and to be had in everlaſting remembrance. (1.) He aſcribes to him all wiſdom and might; wiſdom infinite to deſign, and power infinite to execute all his purpoſes. (2.) He acknowledges him as the ſovereign diſpoſer of all perſons and things. He changeth the times and ſeaſons; all the revolutions of ſtates and kingdoms are his work, as much as the various ſeaſons of the year. No chance or uncertainty is left in any of the things beneath the ſun, but all are fixed and come to paſs, according to his eternal counſels. He removeth kings, and ſetteth up kings; for he is King of kings, and they and their kingdoms ſtand or fall at his pleaſure. (3.) He is the giver of all wiſdom; the greateſt politicians and the wiſeſt ſtateſmen are wholly indebted to him for the abilities which they poſſeſs; for he giveth wiſdom to the wiſe, and knowledge to them that know underſtanding; and where the moſt enlarged minds muſt come ſhort, and all human ſcience be at a ſtand, he revealeth the deep and ſecret things; the myſteries of grace, and ſecrets of providence, particularly the dream of the king, which none but he could ever declare; for he knoweth what is in darkneſs, the inmoſt receſſes of men's hearts, the ſchemes laid with deepeſt ſecrecy, and the dreams of darkneſs, even thoſe that when men awake are fled from their memory; and the light dwelleth with him; no darkneſs conceals from his all-ſeeing eye, and all divine illumination flows from him, as rays from the ſun. (4.) He particularly adores him for the revelation he had now given him of this dream: I thank and praiſe thee, O thou God of my fathers, who haſt given me wiſdom, to underſtand this ſecret, and might, or courage, to go in to the king during his fury; and haſt made known unto me now what we deſired of thee, the revelation and interpretation of the king's dream, which they had ſought with their united prayers; for thou haſt made known unto us the king's matter, or word. Note, (1.) Whatever God beſtows upon us, to his glory muſt it be aſcribed. (2.) True humility will make us willing to communicate with our brethren the honour God puts upon us, and to aſcribe our mercies to the efficacy of their prayers, as much as of our own.

24. ¶ Therefore Daniel went in unto Arioch, whom the king had ordained to deſtroy the wiſe-men of Babylon: he went and ſaid thus unto him, Deſtroy not the wiſe-men of Babylon: bring me in before the king, and I will ſhew unto the king the interpretation. 25. Then Arioch brought in Daniel before the king in haſte, and ſaid thus unto him, I have found a man of [a] the captives of Judah, that will make known unto the king the interpretation. 26. The king anſwered and ſaid to Daniel, whoſe name was Belteſhazzar, Art thou able to make known unto me the dream which I have ſeen, and the interpretation thereof? 27. Daniel anſwered in the preſence of the king, and ſaid, The ſecret which the king hath demanded, [b] cannot the wiſe-men, the aſtrologers, the magicians, the ſoothſayers, ſhew unto the king; 28. But there is [c] a God in heaven [d] that revealeth ſecrets, and † maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar, [e] what ſhall be in the latter days. Thy dream, and the viſions of thy head upon thy bed, are theſe; 29. (As for thee, O king, thy thoughts came into thy mind, upon thy bed, what ſhould come to paſs hereafter: and [f] he that revealeth ſecrets, maketh known unto thee what ſhall come to paſs. 30. [g] But as for me, this ſecret is not revealed to me, for any wiſdom that I have more than any living, but ‡ for their ſakes that ſhall make known the interpretation to the king, and [h] that thou mighteſt know the thoughts of thy heart.

v. 24—30. No ſooner had Daniel returned due thanks to that God who had ſo graciouſly anſwered his prayers, than in haſte he applies to Arioch to be introduced to the king, and by giving him the ſatisfaction he deſired with regard to his dream, to prevent the execution of the raſh ſentence he had pronounced againſt his ſages. Arioch is eager to bring him to the preſence of the monarch, well-knowing how acceptable the ſervice would be, and, courtier-like, inſinuates, as if he had ſought for an interpreter, when he really only ſought for Daniel as his executioner. So ready are the crafty at improving incidents to their own advantage, where, inſtead of juſtly claiming merit, they really deſerved rebuke.

1. The king haſtily interrogates Daniel on the matter; Art thou able to make known unto me the dream, and the interpretation of the matter? which may expreſs either his doubt of his ability, where all the wiſe men of the court had before confeſſed their ignorance; or his admiration at the amazing underſtanding of ſo young a man; or his eagerneſs to hear the particulars of that dream which had ſo deeply affected him.

2. Daniel's anſwer is moſt noble, ſpirited, and pious.

(1.) He ſeeks to cover the magicians with confuſion, and to convince the king of the vanity of truſting on ſuch wretched guides: they deſerved not indeed to be deſtroyed, but ought to be deſpiſed. This ſecret baffled all their rules of art, and ſhewed how ill-grounded were their pretences to occult ſcience, and the folly of depending upon them. Note, The experience of diſappointment ſhould wean us from creature-confidences.

(2.) He would direct the king to the only proper object of his worſhip and truſt, even the God of heaven, who revealeth ſecrets; ſecrets which all the pretended deities of the Chaldeans could never teach their worſhippers, and which human reaſon never could diſcover.

(3.) He declares the matter in queſtion to be highly momentous; that the king's dream was from God, and the ſubject of it relative to the greateſt events of futurity, the exaltation and demolition of the ſucceſſive monarchies of the world, till in the latter day that kingdom ſhould be erected that ſhall never be deſtroyed. It ſhould ſeem as if the king, v. 29. was muſing upon the fate of the monarchy himſelf had erected, when God in viſion ſhewed him the things that ſhould afterwards come to paſs.

(4.) He humbly diſclaims all merit, and deſires that this diſcovery may not be aſcribed to any ſuperior ſagacity in him; but that the praiſe may be aſcribed purely to God, who revealed this ſecret to him, for their ſakes that ſhall make known the interpretation to the king, even for the ſake of all the Jewiſh people, as well as himſelf and his companions, that they might obtain favour in the ſight of the king, whoſe ſervants and captives they were; and for the king's ſake alſo, that thou mighteſt know the thoughts of thy heart, which he was ſo anxious to do, and in which the Lord condeſcended to gratify him. Note, (1.) Diſtinguiſhed abilities never appear ſo admirable, as when accompanied by diſtinguiſhed humility. (2.) A gracious ſoul deſires to diſclaim all merit, and to aſcribe to God's free grace all the excellence which is in him, and all the good done by him. (3.) The humble are ever ready to think, that what God doth for them and by them, is more for others ſakes than for their own.

31. ¶ Thou, O king, ſaweſt, and behold, a great image: this great image, whoſe brightneſs was excellent, ſtood before thee, and the form thereof was terrible. 32. [i] This image's head was of fine gold, his breaſt and his arms of ſilver, his belly and his † thighs of braſs, 33. His legs of iron, his feet part of iron, and part of clay. 34. Thou ſaweſt till that [k] a ſtone was cut out ‡ [l] without hands, which ſmote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. 35. Then was the iron, the clay, the braſs, the ſilver, and the gold [m] broken to pieces together, and became [n] like the chaff of the ſummer-threſhing-floors, and the wind carried them away; [o] that no place was found for them: and the ſtone that ſmote the image [p] became a great mountain, and [q] filled the whole earth. 36. ¶ This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king. 37. [r] Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for [s] the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and ſtrength, and glory. 38. [t] And whereſoever the children of men dwell, the beaſts of the field, and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all: thou art this head of gold. 39. And [u] after thee ſhall ariſe another kingdom [x] inferior to thee, and another [y] third kingdom of braſs, [z] which ſhall bear rule over all the earth. 40. And [a] the fourth kingdom [b] ſhall be ſtrong as iron: foraſmuch as iron breaketh in pieces, and ſubdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all theſe, ſhall it break in pieces, and bruiſe. 41. And whereas [c] thou ſaweſt the feet and toes, part of potters clay, and part of iron: the kingdom ſhall be divided, but there ſhall be in it of the ſtrength of the iron, foraſmuch as thou ſaweſt the iron mixed with miry clay. 42. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay; ſo the kingdom ſhall be partly ſtrong, and

v. 31—45. Having prefaced his diſcourſe with ſuch piety and humility, he proceeds to the point, to the king's entire ſatisfaction. We have,

1. The dream. An image, in a human form, ſtood before the king; the ſculpture admirable, the luſtre uncommon: the form tremendous; either its countenance breathed fury, or its Coloſſian ſize ſtruck the beholders with fear and awe. The head was gold, the breaſt and arms ſilver, the belly and thighs braſs, the legs iron, the feet part of iron, part of clay. Thus ſtood the mighty image, till, by an unſeen hand, a ſtone, hewn from the mountain, ſmote the feet, and ſudden the image fell, daſhed in pieces with the ſtroke, and beaten to duſt as the chaff of the ſummer threſhing-floors; whilſt the ſtone, that ſmote the ſtatue, ſwelled into a mountain, ſo vaſt and huge that it filled the whole earth.

2. The interpretation. In ſpeaking of which he joins his companions with himſelf, v. 36. to do them honour, and becauſe it was given in anſwer to their prayers.

[1.] The image repreſented the ſucceſſive monarchies of the world. 1. The head of gold was the Chaldean monarchy, over which Nebuchadnezzar then preſided; his dominion was vaſt, and he ruled with moſt deſpotic ſway, the lives and properties of his ſubjects being at his diſpoſal: but all his power, greatneſs, and glory, were derived from above; though he was a king of kings, he was but the miniſter of the God of heaven, who had given into his hand the kingdoms of the world, and to whom he was accountable; and of this the higheſt of the ſons of men ſhould be ever reminded. This monarchy was to be tranſmitted to his ſon Evilmerodach, and his ſon's ſon Belſhazzar, till the expiration of the ſeventy years propheſied of by Jeremiah, xxv. 9—11. xxvii. 5—7. 2. The breaſt and arms of ſilver ſignified the kingdom of the Medes and Perſians, inferior to the former, as ſilver is leſs precious than gold; for, though at firſt their dominions were as extenſive, they quickly declined from the ſummit of grandeur. This monarchy was founded by Cyrus, whoſe father was a Perſian, his mother a Mede, the two arms that met in him, and laſted, according to the computation of ſome, 130 years; though others extend it to 204 years. 3. The third kingdom, repreſented by the belly and thighs of braſs, was the Grecian monarchy under Alexander, who ſubdued the laſt Medo-Perſian king Darius Codomannus, and bore rule over all the earth, weeping, it is ſaid, that he had not more worlds to conquer. After his deceaſe his dominions were divided, and chiefly poſſeſſed by two of his ſucceſſors, whoſe deſcendants, the Seleucidæ and Lagidæ, who reigned in Egypt and Syria, are the thighs of braſs. 4. The fourth monarchy is the Roman, ſignified by the legs of iron, and the feet of iron and clay. Strong as iron, their armies broke in pieces the Grecian empire, and ſubdued moſt of the nations in the then known world; and the Jewiſh people eſpecially felt their terrible fury: but, in proceſs of time, this monarchy declined from its former ſplendor, and became broken and divided into ten different kingdoms by the irruption of the Goths and Vandals; like the feet and toes, part of iron and clay, ſome of theſe ſtates, that roſe out of the ruins of the empire, retaining much of the ſtrength of the iron, whilſt others were weak as miry clay: and though they ſhall mingle themſelves with the ſeed of men, the barbarous nations which broke in upon them, or endeavour to cement the divided kingdoms by intermarriages and alliances, yet the attempt will be as fruitleſs as to mix iron and clay together, the jarring intereſts and ambition of the ſeveral ſtates preventing their cordial union, and inducing them to weaken and deſtroy each other.

[2.] The ſtone, hewn out of the mountain without hands, prefigured the kingdom of the divine Meſſiah, not ſupported by human power, or promoted by human policy, but by the inviſible agency of the eternal Spirit eſtabliſhed beyond the malice of every enemy, and enduring for ever and ever. The God of heaven himſelf more immediately ſets up this kingdom, of which his own Son is the glorious head. It aroſe in the days of thoſe kings who reigned during the laſt monarchy, Chriſt being born under the reign of Auguſtus: and as it then began to ſpread, and hath continued to this day, ſo ſhall it be ſtill wider and farther extended, till all the oppoſing powers of earth are broken, and every enemy ſhall bow before it. A kingdom this, which ſhall not, as the former monarchies, be transferred from one people to another; but ſhall endure not only through the days of time, but be coeval with the ages of eternity.

Thus having declared the dream, with the interpretation, to the fulleſt ſatisfaction of the king, he cloſes with an aſſurance of the divine original of the dream, as coming from that great God who only can foreſee and foretel future events, and compared with whom the gods of the nations are leſs than nothing and vanity. His word is truth, and therefore the events here predicted will aſſuredly be fulfilled in their ſeaſon. The dream is certain, and the interpretation ſure.

46. ¶ Then the king Nebuchadnezzar fell upon his face, and [i] worſhipped Daniel, and commanded that they ſhould offer an oblation, [k] and ſweet odours unto him. 47. The king anſwered unto Daniel, and ſaid, Of a truth it is, that [l] your God is a God of gods, and a Lord of kings, and [m] a revealer of ſecrets, ſeeing thou couldſt reveal this ſecret. 48. Then the king made Daniel [n] a great man, and [o] gave him many great gifts, and made him ruler over the whole province of Babylon, [p] and chief of the governors over all the wiſe-men of Babylon. 49. Then Daniel requeſted of the king, and [q] he ſet Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego over the affairs of the province of Babylon: but Daniel ſat in the gate

v. 46—49. We have here,

1. This mighty king proſtrate before the prophet. He was overwhelmed with wonder and awe at what he heard, and as if a divinity had ſpoken; (for no other, he ſuppoſes, could reveal ſuch hidden things of futurity:) he falls down to worſhip his captive, and commands divine honours to be paid him; which, though no doubt Daniel utterly rejected, ſufficiently teſtified the high apprehenſions the king entertained of his ſurpaſſing excellence.

2. He aſcribes the higheſt honour to the God of Daniel, acknowledging his incomparable glory and greatneſs, as the God of Gods, infinitely ſuperior to all others; the Lord of kings, ſetting them up and removing them at his pleaſure; and a revealer of ſecrets which none beſides could ever have known.

3. He advanced Daniel to the higheſt poſt of honour, loaded him with gifts, made him governor of Babylon the metropolis of the empire, placed him at the head of all the wiſe men, and kept him in his court, probably as his prime miniſter. Nor were his companions forgotten; but, at his requeſt, they were raiſed to the dignity of chief rulers in the province of Babylon. Note, (1.) They, whom the providence of God advances, ſhould not forget their old friends. (2.) It is a ſupreme bleſſing and happineſs for any nation, when men of eminent abilities, joined with diſtinguiſhed piety, are put in truſt with the adminiſtration of affairs.

CHAP. III.

High places are ſlippery places, and kings favours a precarious poſſeſſion. v. 1—7. The king had lately made a noble confeſſion of the glory of Daniel's God; but the conviction is ſoon forgotten, and his attachment to idolatry prevails: and, as we too often ſee the dog return to his vomit again,

1. He erects a golden image of immenſe ſize, thirty yards high or upwards. At what time, or on what occaſion, this was done, is not ſaid: probably not long after the events recorded in the former chapter; and perhaps, as ſome have ſuggeſted, in order to clear himſelf from the imputation of Judaiſm, which, on the advancement of Daniel and his companions, might have been whiſpered by the envious courtiers. Though I rather incline to think he intended it as an image of himſelf, and in the pride of his heart affecting divine honours, would eſtabliſh this impious worſhip whilſt he was alive, in order the better to perpetuate it when he ſhould be dead.

2. A general ſummons is ſent to all the magiſtrates, governors, and officers, civil, military, and religious, throughout this vaſt empire, to attend the dedication of this image; who inſtantly aſſembled, ready to obey the king's injunction.

3. A proclamation is made to all the vaſt aſſembly of the king's pleaſure, that the moment they heard the burſt of inſtruments of muſick collected on that occaſion, to celebrate the praiſes of their deity, they ſhould unanimouſly proſtrate themſelves before him, on penalty, in caſe of refuſal, of being caſt into a burning fiery furnace. Thus hath the Devil prepared every engine to ſeduce or compel the ſinner into his ſervice, both the ſoft blandiſhments of ſenſe to allure, and fearful puniſhments threatned to extort a compliance.

4. All teſtified a ready ſubmiſſion. No ſooner was the ſignal given than the adoring aſſembly is proſtrate on the plain. When it is dangerous to be ſingular, and pleaſure invites, few will heſitate about the conſequences of yielding to the temptation.

8. ¶ Wherefore at that time certain Chaldeans came near and accuſed the Jews. 9. They ſpake and ſaid to the king Nebuchadnezzar, [h] O king, live for ever. 10. Thou, O king, haſt made a decree, that every man that ſhall hear the ſound of the cornet, flute, harp, ſackbut, pſaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of muſic, ſhall fall down and worſhip the golden image: 11. And whoſo falleth not down and worſhippeth, that he ſhould be caſt into the midſt of a burning fiery furnace. 12. [i] There are certain Jews whom thou haſt ſet over the affairs of the province of Babylon, Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego: theſe men, O king, † have not regarded thee, they ſerve not thy gods, nor worſhip the golden image which thou haſt ſet up. 13. ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar in his rage and fury commanded to bring Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego: then [k] they brought theſe men before the king. 14. Nebuchadnezzar ſpake and ſaid unto them, Is it ‡ true, O Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego? do not ye ſerve [l] my gods, nor worſhip the golden image which I have ſet up? 15. Now if ye be ready, that at what time ye hear the ſound of the cornet, flute, harp, ſackbut, pſaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of muſic, ye fall down and worſhip the image which I have made, well: but if ye worſhip not, ye ſhall be caſt that ſame hour into the midſt of a burning fiery furnace, [m] and who is that God that ſhall deliver you out of my hands? 16. Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego [n] anſwered and ſaid to the king, O Nebuchadnezzar, [o] we are not careful to anſwer thee in [p] this matter. 17. If it be ſo, our God, whom we ſerve, is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king. 18. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that [q] we will not ſerve thy gods, nor worſhip the golden image which thou haſt ſet up.

v. 8—18. We have here,

1. The malicious accuſation brought againſt Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, for diſobedience to the king's command. They had attended at his ſummons; but, inſtead of complying with ſuch groſs idolatry, reſolved to endure any torments rather than commit ſo great a crime. Many had, no doubt, envied their advancement, and gladly embraced this occaſion to ruin them. They therefore, with warmeſt wiſhes for his proſperity, addreſs the king as his moſt faithful and loyal ſubjects, who had the honour of his government moſt at heart, remind him of the decree he had iſſued, and inform him of the diſregard paid to it by theſe three men; a crime, they inſinuate, aggravated by their ingratitude herein ſhewn for the favours they had received, in being raiſed from captives to the higheſt poſts of the ſtate, and which, ſhould they be overlooked in this their contempt of the king's commands, would reflect diſhonour on his government, be of the worſt conſequence to the kingdom, and have a bad influence on the people. Daniel is not mentioned: it ſhould ſeem he was abſent, or too high in the king's favour to be meddled with.

2. The king, exaſperated at the information, in a rage commands theſe men to be ſeized, and dragged into his preſence. With fury ſparkling in his eyes, and terror in his voice, he demands of them an anſwer to the accuſation, whether it was true; or, as the words may be rendered, Is it of purpoſe that you have done this, contumaciouſly, in defiance of my authority and contempt of my Gods? Once more he offers to prove them; if they will now comply to worſhip the golden image, all ſhall be well; if not, the furnace is ready, and they ſhall inſtantly be caſt into the flames, from which he defies their God to ſave them, v. 15. A dire alternative! to bow or burn. How thankful ought we to be that we are not driven to this trying proof of our conſtancy; and that the fires, once kindled by popiſh idolaters in this land for the like purpoſe, are now extinguiſhed.

3 With unſhaken fortitude and ſedateneſs of mind, they mildly unite in their reply, not reproaching him as tyrannical, but meekly reſigning themſelves up to God in the way of duty, and with deliberate courage determined to abide by their reſolution, whatever the conſequence might be. They ſeek no evaſion, aſk for no reſpite; for, where duty is plain, to deliberate is ſinful, and to parley the prelude of compliance with the temptation. O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to anſwer thee in this matter. Carnal reaſon indeed might have ſuggeſted a thouſand palliatives to excuſe the ſin; but, where God's commandment was ſo expreſs, theſe gracious ſouls could not heſitate a moment whether they ſhould obey God or man. They want no time to word their anſwer. They cannot, dare not, do it. Their lives were dear to them; but death, with all its terrors, cannot ſhake their ſteady ſouls: they are content by faith to commit their lives to his care who gave them, and can preſerve them, if he pleaſes, in the burning fiery furnace, or deliver them from it. However, whether God was pleaſed miraculouſly to interpoſe for them or not, their purpoſe is fixed; they will not ſerve his gods nor worſhip his image. Note, (1.) In the way of duty we muſt never be careful about conſequences. (2.) If we have true faith in God, it will caſt out enſlaving fear, and enable us in the day of trial to commit our all into his hand, confident that he will ſupport us under our ſufferings, or deliver us out of them. (3.) The way to be ready for the ſevereſt conflicts is daily to deny ourſelves. They who firſt refuſed to eat of the king's meat were now enabled to refuſe to worſhip his gods.

19. ¶ Then was Nebuchadnezzar [r] full of fury, and the form of his viſage was changed againſt Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego: therefore he ſpake and [s] commanded that they ſhould heat the furnace one ſeven times more than it was wont to be heat. 20. And he commanded the † moſt mighty men that were in his army, to bind Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego, and to caſt them into the burning fiery furnace. 21. Then theſe men were bound in their ‡ coats, their hoſen, and their § hats, and their other garments, and were caſt into the midſt of the burning fiery furnace. 22. Therefore becauſe the king's commandment was urgent, and the furnace exceeding hot, the ‖ flame of the fire [t] ſlew thoſe men that took up Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego. 23. And theſe three men, Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego, [u] fell down bound into the midſt of the burning fiery furnace. 24. Then Nebuchadnezzar the king was aſtoniſhed, and roſe up in haſte, and ſpake and ſaid unto his † counſellors, did not we caſt three men bound into the midſt of the fire? They anſwered and ſaid unto the king, True, O king. 25. He anſwered and ſaid, Lo, I ſee four men looſe, walking in the midſt of the fire, and [x] they have no hurt, and the form of the fourth is like [y] the ſon of God. 26. ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar came near to the mouth of the burning fiery furnace, and ſpake and ſaid, Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego, ye ſervants of the moſt high God, [z] come forth, and come hither. Then Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego came forth of the midſt of the fire. 27. And the princes, governors, and captains, and the king's coun-

v. 31—45. Having prefaced his diſcourſe with ſuch piety and humility, he proceeds to the point, to the king's entire ſatisfaction. We have,

1. The dream. An image, in a human form, ſtood before the king; the ſculpture admirable, the luſtre uncommon: the form tremendous; either its countenance breathed fury, or its Coloſſian ſize ſtruck the beholders with fear and awe. The head was gold, the breaſt and arms ſilver, the belly and thighs braſs, the legs iron, the feet part of iron, part of clay. Thus ſtood the mighty image, till, by an unſeen hand, a ſtone, hewn from the mountain, ſmote the feet, and ſudden the image fell, daſhed in pieces with the ſtroke, and beaten to duſt as the chaff of the ſummer threſhing-floors; whilſt the ſtone, that ſmote the ſtatue, ſwelled into a mountain, ſo vaſt and huge that it filled the whole earth.

2. The interpretation. In ſpeaking of which he joins his companions with himſelf, v. 36. to do them honour, and becauſe it was given in anſwer to their prayers.

[1.] The image repreſented the ſucceſſive monarchies of the world. 1. The head of gold was the Chaldean monarchy, over which Nebuchadnezzar then preſided; his dominion was vaſt, and he ruled with moſt deſpotic ſway, the lives and properties of his ſubjects being at his diſpoſal: but all his power, greatneſs, and glory, were derived from above; though he was a king of kings, he was but the miniſter of the God of heaven, who had given into his hand the kingdoms of the world, and to whom he was accountable; and of this the higheſt of the ſons of men ſhould be ever reminded. This monarchy was to be tranſmitted to his ſon Evilmerodach, and his ſon's ſon Belſhazzar, till the expiration of the ſeventy years propheſied of by Jeremiah, xxv. 9—11. xxvii. 5—7. 2. The breaſt and arms of ſilver ſignified the kingdom of the Medes and Perſians, inferior to the former, as ſilver is leſs precious than gold; for, though at firſt their dominions were as extenſive, they quickly declined from the ſummit of grandeur. This monarchy was founded by Cyrus, whoſe father was a Perſian, his mother a Mede, the two arms that met in him, and laſted, according to the computation of ſome, 130 years; though others extend it to 204 years. 3. The third kingdom, repreſented by the belly and thighs of braſs, was the Grecian monarchy under Alexander, who ſubdued the laſt Medo-Perſian king Darius Codomannus, and bore rule over all the earth, weeping, it is ſaid, that he had not more worlds to conquer. After his deceaſe his dominions were divided, and chiefly poſſeſſed by two of his ſucceſſors, whoſe deſcendants, the Seleucidæ and Lagidæ, who reigned in Egypt and Syria, are the thighs of braſs. 4. The fourth monarchy is the Roman, ſignified by the legs of iron, and the feet of iron and clay. Strong as iron, their armies broke in pieces the Grecian empire, and ſubdued moſt of the nations in the then known world; and the Jewiſh people eſpecially felt their terrible fury: but, in proceſs of time, this monarchy declined from its former ſplendor, and became broken and divided into ten different kingdoms by the irruption of the Goths and Vandals; like the feet and toes, part of iron and clay, ſome of theſe ſtates, that roſe out of the ruins of the empire, retaining much of the ſtrength of the iron, whilſt others were weak as miry clay: and though they ſhall mingle themſelves with the ſeed of men, the barbarous nations which broke in upon them, or endeavour to cement the divided kingdoms by intermarriages and alliances, yet the attempt will be as fruitleſs as to mix iron and clay together, the jarring intereſts and ambition of the ſeveral ſtates preventing their cordial union, and inducing them to weaken and deſtroy each other.

[2.] The ſtone, hewn out of the mountain without hands, prefigured the kingdom of the divine Meſſiah, not ſupported by human power, or promoted by human policy, but by the inviſible agency of the eternal Spirit eſtabliſhed beyond the malice of every enemy, and enduring for ever and ever. The God of heaven himſelf more immediately ſets up this kingdom, of which his own Son is the glorious head. It aroſe in the days of thoſe kings who reigned during the laſt monarchy, Chriſt being born under the reign of Auguſtus: and as it then began to ſpread, and hath continued to this day, ſo ſhall it be ſtill wider and farther extended, till all the oppoſing powers of earth are broken, and every enemy ſhall bow before it. A kingdom this, which ſhall not, as the former monarchies, be transferred from one people to another; but ſhall endure not only through the days of time, but be coeval with the ages of eternity.

Thus having declared the dream, with the interpretation, to the fulleſt ſatisfaction of the king, he cloſes with an aſſurance of the divine original of the dream, as coming from that great God who only can foreſee and foretel future events, and compared with whom the gods of the nations are leſs than nothing and vanity. His word is truth, and therefore the events here predicted will aſſuredly be fulfilled in their ſeaſon. The dream is certain, and the interpretation ſure.

46. ¶ Then the king Nebuchadnezzar fell upon his face, and [i] worſhipped Daniel, and commanded that they ſhould offer an oblation, [k] and ſweet odours unto him. 47. 1. This mighty king proſtrate before the prophet. He was overwhelmed with wonder and awe at what he heard, and as if a divinity had ſpoken; (for no other, he ſuppoſes, could reveal ſuch hidden things of futurity:) he falls down to worſhip his captive, and commands divine honours to be paid him; which, though no doubt Daniel utterly rejected, ſufficiently teſtified the high apprehenſions the king entertained of his ſurpaſſing excellence.

2. He aſcribes the higheſt honour to the God of Daniel, acknowledging his incomparable glory and greatneſs, as the God of Gods, infinitely ſuperior to all others; the Lord of kings, ſetting them up and removing them at his pleaſure; and a revealer of ſecrets which none beſides could ever have known.

3. He advanced Daniel to the higheſt poſt of honour, loaded him with gifts, made him governor of Babylon the metropolis of the empire, placed him at the head of all the wiſe men, and kept him in his court, probably as his prime miniſter. Nor were his companions forgotten; but, at his requeſt, they were raiſed to the dignity of chief rulers in the province of Babylon. Note, (1.) They, whom the providence of God advances, ſhould not forget their old friends. (2.) It is a ſupreme bleſſing and happineſs for any nation, when men of eminent abilities, joined with diſtinguiſhed piety, are put in truſt with the adminiſtration of affairs.

[i] There are certain Jews whom thou haſt ſet over the affairs of the province of Babylon, Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego: theſe men, O king, † have not regarded thee, they ſerve not thy gods, nor worſhip the golden image which thou haſt ſet up. 13. ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar in his rage and fury commanded to bring Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego: then [k] they brought theſe men before the king. 14. Nebuchadnezzar ſpake and ſaid unto them, Is it ‡ true, O Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego? do not ye ſerve [l] my gods, nor worſhip the golden image which I have ſet up? 15. Now if ye be ready, that at what time ye hear the ſound of the cornet, flute, harp, ſackbut, pſaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of muſic, ye fall down and worſhip the image which I have made, well: but if ye worſhip not, ye ſhall be caſt that ſame hour into the midſt of a burning fiery furnace, [m] and who is that God that ſhall deliver you out of my hands? 16. Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego [n] anſwered and ſaid to the king, O Nebuchadnezzar, [o] we are not careful to anſwer thee in [p] this matter. 17. If it be ſo, our God, whom we ſerve, is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king. 18. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that [q] we will not ſerve thy gods, nor worſhip the golden image which thou haſt ſet up.

v. 8—18. We have here,

1. The malicious accuſation brought againſt Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, for diſobedience to the king's command. They had attended at his ſummons; but, inſtead of complying with ſuch groſs idolatry, reſolved to endure any torments rather than commit ſo great a crime. Many had, no doubt, envied their advancement, and gladly embraced this occaſion to ruin them. They therefore, with warmeſt wiſhes for his proſperity, addreſs the king as his moſt faithful and loyal ſubjects, who had the honour of his government moſt at heart, remind him of the decree he had iſſued, and inform him of the diſregard paid to it by theſe three men; a crime, they inſinuate, aggravated by their ingratitude herein ſhewn for the favours they had received, in being raiſed from captives to the higheſt poſts of the ſtate, and which, ſhould they be overlooked in this their contempt of the king's commands, would reflect diſhonour on his government, be of the worſt conſequence to the kingdom, and have a bad influence on the people. Daniel is not mentioned: it ſhould ſeem he was abſent, or too high in the king's favour to be meddled with.

2. The king, exaſperated at the information, in a rage commands theſe men to be ſeized, and dragged into his preſence. With fury ſparkling in his eyes, and terror in his voice, he demands of them an anſwer to the accuſation, whether it was true; or, as the words may be rendered, Is it of purpoſe that you have done this, contumaciouſly, in defiance of my authority and contempt of my Gods? Once more he offers to prove them; if they will now comply to worſhip the golden image, all ſhall be well; if not, the furnace is ready, and they ſhall inſtantly be caſt into the flames, from which he defies their God to ſave them, v. 15. A dire alternative! to bow or burn. How thankful ought we to be that we are not driven to this trying proof of our conſtancy; and that the fires, once kindled by popiſh idolaters in this land for the like purpoſe, are now extinguiſhed.

3. With unſhaken fortitude and ſedateneſs of mind, they mildly unite in their reply, not reproaching him as tyrannical, but meekly reſigning themſelves up to God in the way of duty, and with deliberate courage determined to abide by their reſolution, whatever the conſequence might be. They ſeek no evaſion, aſk for no reſpite; for, where duty is plain, to deliberate is ſinful, and to parley the prelude of compliance with the temptation. O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to anſwer thee in this matter. Carnal reaſon indeed might have ſuggeſted a thouſand palliatives to excuſe the ſin; but, where God's commandment was ſo expreſs, theſe gracious ſouls could not heſitate a moment whether they ſhould obey God or man. They want no time to word their anſwer. They cannot, dare not, do it. Their lives were dear to them; but death, with all its terrors, cannot ſhake their ſteady ſouls: they are content by faith to commit their lives to his care who gave them, and can preſerve them, if he pleaſes, in the burning fiery furnace, or deliver them from it. However, whether God was pleaſed miraculouſly to interpoſe for them or not, their purpoſe is fixed; they will not ſerve his gods nor worſhip his image. Note, (1.) In the way of duty we muſt never be careful about conſequences. (2.) If we have true faith in God, it will caſt out enſlaving fear, and enable us in the day of trial to commit our all into his hand, confident that he will ſupport us under our ſufferings, or deliver us out of them. (3.) The way to be ready for the ſevereſt conflicts is daily to deny ourſelves. They who firſt refuſed to eat of the king's meat were now enabled to refuſe to worſhip his gods.

v. 19—27. An anſwer ſo firm, and yet withal ſo ſedate, might have been expected to have wrought ſome relentings on the tyrant's mind, eſpecially after the confeſſions himſelf had made of the glory of that God to whom they ſo faithfully adhered: but we ſee it was quite otherwiſe.

1. The monarch, exaſperated, with fury in his looks, like a fiend of darkneſs, as if the furnace ſhould be the emblem of the rage with which his boſom burned, commanded it to be heated ſeven times hotter than uſual; which, if his paſſion would have admitted of deliberation, he muſt have ſeen would be a favour, inſtead of an aggravation of the puniſhment, and ſerve but the ſooner to diſpatch theſe martyrs for the truth: but God over-ruled the tyrant's rage to make his own glory more illuſtrious in their deliverance. In haſte they are hurried to the flames, caught up, as they ſtood, in their cloaths, bound by the mightieſt men of Nebuchadnezzar's army, and inſtantly caſt into the fiery furnace, which, being ſo intenſely heated, and the urgency of the king's command hurrying the men who bore them too near the mouth, the flame inſtantly ſlew them. A righteous judgment, it ſhould ſeem, upon them who were the ready inſtruments of this tyrant's cruelty, and probably the very perſons who had lodged the accuſation againſt theſe children of the Moſt High. Note, (1.) Could men ſee their own countenances, when rage foams in their lips and flaſhes from their eyes, they would ſtartle at themſelves as devils in a human form. (2.) Terrible was this furnace: we cannot look into it without horror: yet here a moment would end the martyrs ſufferings: but there is a fiercer fire kndled for ſinners in hell, that tortures eternally, where death brings no relief, but the ſmoak of the torment aſcendeth for ever and ever, and they have no reſt day nor night. (3.) Perſecutors of God's people may expect he will avenge their wrongs.

2. God is pleaſed aſtoniſhingly to interpoſe for the reſcue of his faithful ſervants. Struck with terror and aſtoniſhment at the death of his mighty warriors, the king haſtily aroſe; and how great his ſurprize, when, in the midſt of that furnace where the objects of his rage had fallen bound, he beholds four perſons looſe, walking unhurt in the midſt of the flames! He calls his counſellors, aſks them concerning the order for the execution of theſe men, and they declare it was punctually executed. He looks attentively on the ſight: three of the perſons are well known to him; the fourth he conceived to be like ſome heavenly meſſenger, a ſon of God; either one of the angelic hoſt, or, which he might have heard from Daniel, that uncreated angel of the covenant the Lord Chriſt, who had of old ſo often appeared to his people in a human form. Approaching then the mouth of the furnace, with high reſpect he now addreſſes thoſe ſervants of the moſt high God, whom he had treated ſo cruelly, and invites them by name to come forth: nor did they delay to obey him; and, to the aſtoniſhment of all thoſe princes and governours who ſurrounded the king, walked out of the midſt of the fire, with not a hair ſinged, nor ſo much as the ſmell of fire ariſing from them or their garments. Note, (1.) The afflictions into which God's people are caſt reſemble this furnace: far from being able to hurt them, they only conſume the cords of corruption which fettered them, and ſet them more at liberty to walk with God: and the preſence of Jeſus in the midſt of them not only prevents their trials from being painful, but enables them to count them all joy. (2.) They who are enabled confidently to truſt in God often experience wonderful deliverances. (3.) God will make thoſe proud men, who have perſecuted his people, bow at their feet and know that he hath loved them. (4.) Every redeemed ſinner comes into the preſence of the eternal King, as theſe three worthies, a brand plucked out of the burning.

28. Then Nebuchadnezzar ſpake, and ſaid, Bleſſed be the God of Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abed-nego, who hath ſent his angel, and [d] delivered his ſervants that truſted in him, and have changed the king's word, and [e] yielded their bodies [f] that they might not ſerve nor worſhip any god, except their own God. 29. [g] Therefore I make a decree, That every people, nation, and language, which ſpeak † any thing amiſs againſt the God of Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, ſhall be ‡ cut in pieces, and their houſes ſhall be made a dunghill, [h] becauſe there is no other god that can deliver after this ſort. 30. v. 28—30. Struck with deep conviction by what he had beheld,

1. This mighty monarch adores the power and grace of that glorious God, whoſe wondrous interpoſition appeared in the deliverance of theſe his faithful ſervants. It now was evident, that no other god could deliver as he had done, and that his care and kindneſs never deſerted thoſe who ſteadily adhered to him in the hour of trial. Thus can God change the voice even of perſecutors, and learn blaſphemers to bleſs and praiſe.

Before Chriſt 587.

2. He commends the courage and conſtancy of theſe three worthies, that dared contradict a king armed with fury, and, with a noble contempt of life, reſolved to cleave to their own God, in the face of a fiery furnace, committing themſelves with unſhaken confidence into his hands. Note, (1.) A ſteady adherence to the cauſe of God and truth will often extort approbation even from enemies, whilſt they who meanly deſert their principles will only render themſelves deſpicable even in the eyes of thoſe who ſeduced them. (2.) When ſin or death muſt be the alternative, we may emphatically ſay to die is gain. (3.) They who are enabled to truſt God, will aſſuredly prove true to him.

3. He iſſues an edict, forbidding, on the ſevereſt penalties, any of his ſubjects to ſpeak any thing amiſs of the God of Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego. As the Chaldeans had taken the Jews captives, they probably thought and ſpoke contemptuouſly and blaſpemouſly of their God; which muſt have grieved exceedingly the faithful in Babylon: but now, though they are not converts to his worſhip, they are taught to think highly of his glory, ſince, by the confeſſion of their king, none of their gods, not even their admired Bel, could deliver after this manner. Note, It is a mercy when the lips of adverſaries are ſealed up with conviction, though their hearts may be as far as ever from true converſion.

4. He highly promoted theſe three men in the province of Babylon: ſo that they received a preſent reward of their fidelity. For ſometimes God gives in this world, to thoſe who dare hazard all for his ſake, an hundred fold, and in the world to come life everlaſting.

CHAP. IV.

The penman of this chapter is Nebuchadnezzar himſelf; but Daniel, a prophet by inſpiration, inſerts it in his hiſtory, and ſo it is become a part of ſacred writ, and a very obſervable part. Here is, 1. The preface to his narrative, wherein he acknowledges God's dominion over him, ver. 1, 2, 3. 2. The narrative itſelf, wherein he relates, (1.) His dream, which puzzled the magicians, ver. 1—18. (2.) The interpretation of it by Daniel, who ſhewed him that it prognoſticated his own fall, and therefore adviſed him to repent, ver. 19—27. (3.) The accompliſhment of it in his running ſtark mad for ſeven years, and then recovering the uſe of his reaſon again, ver. 28—36. (4.) The concluſion of the narrative, with an humble acknowledgment and adoration of God as Lord of all, ver. 37. This was extorted from him by the over-ruling power of that God who hath all men's hearts in his hand, and ſtands upon record a laſting proof of God's ſupremacy, a monument of his glory, a trophy of his victory, and a warning to all not to think of proſpering, while they lift up or harden their hearts againſt God.

1. NEbuchadnezzar the king, [a] unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth, Peace be multiplied unto you. 2. † I thought it good to ſhew the ſigns and wonders [b] that the high God hath wrought toward me. 3. [c] How great are his ſigns! and how mighty are his wonders! his kingdom is [d] an everlaſting kingdom, and his dominion is from generation to generation.

v. 1—3. The introduction to this edict begins not with pompous titles, as was the uſal ſtile of eaſtern monarchs, but with that ſimplicity and humility which afflictions had taught the royal penman, Nebuchadnezzar the king.

It is directed to all people, &c. that dwell on the earth; who, whilſt he publiſhed his own ſhame, might admire and adore the greatneſs and the grace of God herein diſplayed. And he adds his cordial ſalutation, Peace be multiplied unto you.

The deſign of the writing is to acquaint them with the ſigns and wonders God had wrought towards him. The world in general had heard, no doubt, of the ſtrange events which had befallen him; his dream, his madneſs, and recovery: here he gives them an account of it from his own pen; content to bear his reproach, ſo that God may be glorified thereby. Note, What God hath done againſt us as the effect of our ſins, as well as what he hath done for us in mercy, ſhould be mentioned to his glory, and for our own humiliation.

In the contemplation of what had paſſed, he breaks forth into admiration of God's wondrous works; How great are his ſigns! and how mighty are his wonders! the more he reviewed the ſcene, the more he was loſt in amaze; convinced by fulleſt experience, his pride is mortified; he feels himſelf a worm, the creature of a day; he foreſees his own monarchy haſtening to ruin, but he beholds a kingdom about to be erected, which ſhould be eternal, and humbly acknowledges God's inconteſtable right to the univerſal ſovereignty and everlaſting dominion.

4. I Nebuchadnezzar was at reſt in mine houſe, [e] and flouriſhing in my palace: 5. I ſaw a dream which made me afraid, and the thoughts upon my bed, and the viſions of my head [f] troubled me. 6. Therefore made I a decree to bring in all the wiſe-men of Babylon before me, that they might make known unto me the interpretation of the dream. 7. Then came in the magicians, the aſtrologers, the Chaldeans, and the ſoothſayers: and I told the dream before them; [g] but they did not make known unto me the interpretation thereof. 8. ¶ But at the laſt Daniel came in before me ([h] whoſe name was Belteſhazzar, according to the name of my God, [i] and in whom is the ſpirit of the holy gods) and before him I told the dream, ſaying, 9. O Belteſhazzar, [k] maſter of the magicians, becauſe I know that the ſpirit of the holy gods is in thee, and no ſecret troubleth thee, tell me the viſions of my dream that I have ſeen, and the interpretation thereof. 10. Thus were the viſions of mine head in my bed, I ſaw, and behold, [l] a tree in the midſt of the earth, and the height thereof [m] was great. 11. The tree grew, and was ſtrong, and [n] the height thereof reached unto heaven, and the ſight thereof to the end of all the earth. 12. The leaves thereof were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all: [o] the beaſts of the field had ſhadow under it, and the fowls of the heaven dwelt in the boughs thereof, and all fleſh was fed of it. 13. I ſaw in the viſions of my head upon my bed, and behold, [p] a watcher, and [q] an holy one came down from heaven. 14. He cried † aloud, and ſaid thus, Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches, ſhake off his leaves, and ſcatter his fruit; let the beaſts [r] get away from under it, and the fowls from his branches. 15. Nevertheleſs, leave the ſtump of his roots in the earth, even with a band of iron and braſs, in the tender graſs of the field, and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beaſts in the graſs of the earth. 16. Let his heart be changed from man's, and let a beaſt's heart be given unto him, and let ſeven [s] times paſs over him. 17. This matter is [t] by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones: [u] to the intent that the living may know, that [x] the moſt High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomſoever he will, and ſetteth up over it [y] the baſeſt of men. 18. This dream I king Nebuchadnezzar have ſeen: now thou, O Belteſhazzar, declare the interpretation thereof, foraſmuch as [z] all the wiſe-men of my kingdom are not able to make known unto me the interpretation: but thou art able, for the ſpirit of the holy gods is in thee. 19. ¶ Then Daniel (whoſe name was Belteſhazzar) [a] was aſtoniſhed for one hour, and his thoughts [b] troubled him: the king ſpake, and ſaid, Belteſhazzar, let not the dream, or the interpretation thereof trouble thee. Belteſhazzar anſwered and ſaid, My lord, [c] the dream be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine enemies. 20. [d] The tree that thou ſaweſt, which grew, and was ſtrong, whoſe height reached unto the heaven, and the ſight thereof to all the earth; 21. Whoſe leaves were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all; under which the beaſts of the field dwelt, and upon whoſe branches the fowls of the heaven had their habitation: 22. [e] It is thou, O king, that art grown, and become ſtrong: for thy greatneſs is grown, and reacheth unto heaven, and thy dominion to the end of the earth. 23. And whereas [f] the king ſaw a watcher, and an holy one coming down from heaven, and ſaying, Hew the tree down, and deſtroy it, yet leave the ſtump of the roots thereof in the earth, even with a band of iron and braſs in the tender graſs of the field, and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and [g] let his portion be with the beaſts of the field, till ſeven times paſs over him; 24. This is the interpretation, O king, and this is the decree of the moſt High, which is come upon my lord the king: 25. That they ſhall [h] drive thee from men, and thy dwelling ſhall be with the beaſts of the field, and they ſhall make thee [i] to eat graſs as oxen, and they ſhall wet thee with the dew of heaven, and ſeven times ſhall paſs over thee, till [k] thou know that the moſt High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and [l] giveth it to whomſoever he will. 26. And whereas they commanded to leave the ſtump of the tree-roots; thy kingdom ſhall be ſure unto thee, after that thou ſhalt have known that [m] the heavens do rule. 27. Wherefore, O king, let my counſel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy ſins by righteouſneſs, and thine iniquities by ſhewing mercy to the poor; [n] if it may be ‡ a lengthening of thy tranquility.

v. 4—27. Returned victorious from his wars, a conquered world at his feet, the mighty Nebuchadnezzar after all his toils ſets himſelf down to reſt in his palace; flouriſhing in health of body and vigour of mind, crowned with glory and affluence, and no enemy able to trouble his repoſe. Then, when moſt he ſeemed ſecure, God's ſecret hand daſhed all his joys, and one dream filled him with terror and diſmay: ſo eaſily can God diſturb the joyous ſinner, and in a moment, even in the midſt of his worldly comforts, make him feel the beginning of ſorrows.

1. He ſummoned his magicians and aſtrologers to attend: repeated his dream, and demanded the interpretation. But though they had boaſted, chap. ii. 4, 7. that they wanted nothing more than to hear it, in order to explain it, now their rules of art or magic failed them, and they are obliged to confeſs their ignorance.

2. When none beſides could give the king any ſatisfaction, at laſt Daniel appears; whether ſent for expreſsly, or of his own accord coming in at this juncture, is not ſaid. He is called Belteſhazzar, from Bel, the god of the Chaldeans; and the king, who had before experienced his ſuperior wiſdom, addreſſes him with high reſpect, as the maſter of the magicians; not as being of their number, but excelling them in knowledge, or as appointed their preſident, chap. ii. 48. but that for which he moſt admired him was, that the ſpirit of the holy gods was in him: either he ſpeaks as a heathen, who believed a multitude of gods, or perhaps he might have learned from the Jews the knowledge of the Elohim, the three Perſons in one Godhead, and concluded from what he had experienced before, that under the teaching of God's ſpirit, every ſecret could by him be eaſily interpreted.

3. He declares to him the dream which troubled him. He beheld a lofty and ſpreading tree, which reached to the heavens, and was viſible to the ends of the earth; the leaves, or branches beautiful, and laden with fruit, affording ſhelter and food to all the beaſts of the earth, and the fowls of heaven. When lo! a watcher, and an holy one came down from heaven, and publiſhed aloud the decree of the moſt High, that the tree muſt be cut down, its branches broken, its fruit deſtroyed, and all the beaſts and fowls are bid to depart from under it. Yet is it not to be rooted up, but the ſtump muſt be left encircled with a band of iron; and this the holy meſſenger explains of a man, who ſhould be degraded into a brute, expoſed to the dew of heaven, and dwell among the beaſts during ſeven years, and this is by the immutable decree of the watchers, and the demand of the holy ones; and the end purpoſed in this whole tranſaction is to magnify the moſt High, to make his univerſal power and ſovereignty known; who at his pleaſure can humble the greateſt, and exalt the meaneſt of the ſons of men. Such was the dream, which ſince the magicians cannot interpret, he looks to Daniel to explain, confident that he is able to unfold the ſecret.

4. Daniel, at his command, addreſſes himſelf to the taſk aſſigned him.

(1.) He appeared at firſt exceedingly affected with what he heard, aſtoniſhed for one hour, ver. 19. at the heavy judgment contained in the viſion. Note, The miniſters of God behold, with deepeſt concern, the miſeries impending over the heads of the wicked, who ſeem unconcerned and unaffected with any ſenſe of their own danger.

(2.) He introduces with a moſt reſpectful compliment the unpleaſing interpretation. The king had obſerved his amazement, and bid him not fear to diſcloſe the ſecret, v. 19. deſireing, however terrible, to know the truth: and Daniel, not as a courtier, who meant to flatter, but as one who really wiſhed the proſperity of his prince, intimates how deſirous he was, if God ſo pleaſed, that the dire contents of this viſion had rather reſpected the king's enemies than himſelf. Note, When we are conſtrained to be the meſſengers of evil to ſinners, we muſt do it in ſuch a way as to evidence we have not deſired the woeful day, and wiſh the evil averted.

(3.) He declares plainly the purport of the dream, [1.] The tree repreſents this mighty monarch, It is thou, O king, whoſe conqueſts had ſpread on every ſide; whoſe growing greatneſs all admired; under whoſe government the nations enjoyed protection, and by him were rendered rich and flouriſhing. Thus ſhould the kings of the earth be the fathers of their people, protecting them from oppreſſion, and ſeeking to promote their wealth and proſperity: and they are great indeed who thus improve their divinely delegated power. [2.] His doom is read, which his pride had provoked, v. 23—25. The watcher and the holy one coming down from heaven, is uſually interpreted of the holy angels, whoſe miniſtry God employs in executing the decrees of his providence, and who approve and applaud them as altogether righteous, v. 17. or perhaps it may ſignify that watcher over his Iſrael, that holy One, the uncreated Angel of the covenant, to whom all judgment is committed, and who in the government of the world fulfills the eternal counſels of the holy Ones, the perſons of the undivided Godhead, the watchers over their peculiar people.

To vaſt proſperity was Nebuchadnezzar advanced, but the command is, Hew down the tree, and then his greatneſs and glory would all be laid in the duſt; ſo vain and tranſitory is all human grandeur, which one blaſt of the breath of God's diſpleaſure deſtroys in a moment. Fallen from his high eſtate, and ſtruck with madneſs, he ſhall be driven from the abode of men, and make his dwelling ſeven years with the beaſts, himſelf a brute in human ſhape, and eating graſs like the ox. Note, Among the moſt deplorable of all judgments is madneſs; may we never by our pride, and the abuſe of our reaſon, provoke God to deprive us of it!

The judgment is heavy, yet doth God in the midſt of wrath remember mercy. Though cut down, he is not utterly deſtroyed; though bound as a madman with a band of iron, the root remains, and recovery is not impoſſible. God's deſign in the viſitation, however ſevere, is gracious; even to humble his pride, and make him and all men know God's power, and own his ſovereignty who rules over all, and doth according to the counſels of his own will. And when it ſhall be thus made manifeſt that the heavens do rule, even the God whoſe throne is there, then ſhall his ſenſes return, he ſhall again reſume the reins of empire, and give to the moſt High the glory due unto his name.

5. The prophet finiſhes his diſcourſe with a word of faithful and ſeaſonable advice. He introduces it with great ſubmiſſion, and begs a kind reception from the king of what was meant purely for his good. Note, We muſt court ſinners to ſecure their own mercies. His ſins were the cauſe of the threatned judgments; theſe therefore he exhorts him without delay to forſake. As his deſpotic power had probably been in many inſtances abuſed, to the purpoſes of injuſtice and oppreſſion, he urges him to the practice of righteouſneſs, and ſhewing mercy to the poor; many of whom groaned probably under captive bonds, and cried for deliverance. And this he preſſes as a means, at leaſt, of lengthening his tranquility, though it might not be able to avert the threatned judgment. Note, Without repentance and amendment, there can be no hope of pardon and ſalvation.

v. 28—33. We find it was not long ere the divine decree took place, and behold here its exact accompliſhment.

1. One year God's patience waited; for he is long-ſuffering, even towards the moſt obſtinate offenders; but ſtill this monarch's heart remained unchanged. Walking on the roof of his palace, or on the terrace of thoſe amazing hanging gardens, which overlooked the city, his eyes beheld with conſcious pride the glorious proſpect full in his view; and whilſt his boſom glowed with ſelf-importance, his tongue betrayed the language of his heart. The king ſpake and ſaid, either to his nobles around him, or ſome foreigners whom he took with him, to ſurvey the vaſt metropolis, or in a ſecret whiſper of ſelf-applauſe, Is not this great Babylon that I have built? &c. He aſcribes the whole to his own power and might, and forgets the God who had given him the ability. No marvel therefore, that the end he propoſed was neither God's glory, nor his people's good, but the honour of his own majeſty. Such ſelf-ſeekers are all proud men: let us beware of contemplating with ſelf-complacency any thing we have done, leaſt God behold the robbery of his glory, and ſmite us for our pride, as he did Nebuchadnezzar.

2. Inſtantly as the words dropped from his lips, a voice from heaven pronounced his doom; that he is depoſed from his dignity, and the prophecy before ſpoken, immediately to take place, and this is no ſooner ſpoken than done. On a ſudden his reaſon is loſt; degenerated into a brute in human ſhape, he is driven from his palace, and herds with the beaſts of the foreſt, feeding with them upon graſs as the ox; his body expoſed to all the inclemencies of the ſky, his hair grown like eagles feathers, and his nails like birds claws. Note, God can ſoon humble the proudeſt, and make thoſe who were the envy and admiration of mankind, deſpicable as the worm that crawls.

v. 34—37. The prophecy of his humiliation we have ſeen fulfilled, and may expect in its ſeaſon to hear of his reſtoration.

1. At the end of the ſeven years he lifted up his eyes to heaven, not merely as a man reſcued from the herd of brutes, but as a humbled ſinner looking to a pardoning God. The return of reaſon itſelf had not been a bleſſing, if grace had not opened the eyes of his mind to a diſcovery of his provocations of the juſtice of his ſufferings, and the glory of the divine majeſty. To bring him to this, was the purpoſe of God's heavy hand upon him, and then even his madneſs was his mercy: he had never truly come to himſelf if he had not been thus beſide himſelf. Thus God ſometimes ſeems to work by contraries; and when, like the patriarch, we may think all theſe things are againſt me, they are then working together for our good.

2. The firſt exerciſe of his enlightned mind is adoration. I bleſſed the moſt High, &c. Note, They who live in the habitual neglect of prayer and praiſe, however wiſe they may be reputed among men, act more madly than he that eateth ſtraw like the ox. He acknowledges now the eternal dominion and ſovereignty of God, who for ever lives, for ever reigns; for his kingdom is from everlaſting to everlaſting. Before him all nations are as nothing, and the greateſt of men, in compariſon with him, inſignificant as the drop of the bucket, or the duſt of the balance. His kingdom is univerſal; angels as well as men acknowledge him their Lord, the creatures of his pleaſure, and wholly ſubject to his controul. His power is irreſiſtible, his arm omnipotent; whatever he wills is done, nor dare any arraign his proceedings, or challenge an account of any of his matters. Not that he ever doth, or can do wrong; his ways are judgment, perfectly righteous and wiſe, and his works truth, fulfilling with niceſt exactneſs whatever he hath ſpoken in his word; and thoſe who walk in pride he is able to abaſe, an eminent inſtance of which Nebuchadnezzar acknowledged himſelf to be, and wiſhes other proud men to be warned by his example; whilſt he extols and praiſes the king of heaven, who in wrath had ſtill remembered mercy.

3. With his returning reaſon his majeſtic countenance returned. He appeared in his former brightneſs and glory, his lords received him again as their ſovereign, probably acquainted by Daniel with the dream, and the expected recovery of their king. Once more he reſumed the reins of government, and under the divine benediction excellent majeſty was added unto him; he grew more reſpected than ever, and his latter end was greater than his beginning. He did not however long ſurvive this wondrous change; but, I would hope, continued in the ſame bleſſed ſentiments, and died a monument of ſovereign grace.

CHAP. V.

The deſtruction of the kingdom of Babylon had been long and often foretold when it was at a diſtance: In this chapter we have it accompliſhed, and a prediction of it the very ſame night that it happened. We muſt know, that about two years before this Cyrus king of Perſia, a growing monarch, came againſt Babylon with a great army, Belſhazzar the reigning monarch met him, fought him, and was routed by him in a pitched battle. He and his ſcattered tered forces retired into the city, where Cyrus beſieged him: They were very ſecure, becauſe the river Euphrates was their bulwark, and they had twenty years proviſions in the city; but in the ſecond year of the ſiege he took it, as is here related. We have in this chapter, 1. The riotous, idolatrous, and ſacrilegious feaſt which Belſhazzar made, ver. 1—4. 2. The alarm given him in the midſt of his jollity by a hand-writing on the wall, which none of his wiſe men could read or tell him the meaning of, ver. 5—9. 3. The interpretation of the myſtical characters by Daniel, ver. 10—28. 4. The immediate accompliſhment of the interpretation in the ſlaying of the king and ſeizing of the kingdom, ver. 30, 31.

539. 1. BElſhazzar the king made a great feaſt to a thouſand of his lords, and drank wine before the thouſand. 2. Belſhazzar, whiles he taſted the wine, commanded to bring the golden and ſilver veſſels, [a] which his † father Nebuchadnezzar had ‡ taken out of the temple which was in Jeruſalem, that the king and his princes, his wives and his concubines might drink therein. 3. Then they brought the golden veſſels that were taken out of the temple of the houſe of GOD, which was at Jeruſalem; and the king and his princes, his wives and his concubines drank in them. 4. They drank wine, [b] and praiſed the gods of gold, and of ſilver, of braſs, of iron, of wood, and of ſtone. 5. ¶ [c] In the ſame hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over againſt the candleſtick upon the plaiſter of the wall of the king's palace; and the king ſaw the part of the hand that wrote. 6. Then the king's ‖ countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, ſo that the § joints of his loins were looſed, and his knees ſmote one againſt another. 7. [d] The king cried † aloud to bring in the aſtrologers, the Chaldeans, and the ſoothſayers: and the king ſpake and ſaid to the wiſe-men of Babylon, Whoſoever ſhall read this writing, and ſhew me the interpretation thereof, ſhall be clothed with ‡ ſcarlet, and have a chain of gold about his neck, [e] and ſhall be the third ruler in the kingdom. 8. Then came in all the king's wiſe-men, but they could not read the writing, nor make known to the king the interpretation thereof. 9. Then was king Belſhazzar greatly troubled, and his countenance was changed in him, and his lords were aſtoniſhed.

v. 1—9. Belſhazzar, the ſubject of this chapter, was the grandſon of Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xxvii. 7. whoſe monarchy, according to the term fixed in the prophetic word, was now haſting to ruin. We have here,

1. An account of his impiety and profaneneſs. Unaffected with the perilouſneſs of his caſe, though a victorious army was at the gates of Babylon; on ſome returning ſolemnity in honour of his gods, or to celebrate his birth-day, he invites all the great men of his court, or officers of his army, to partake of a grand entertainment he had provided, and graciouſly condeſcends to make one at the feſtal board, and drank wine before them. In the midſt of mirth and jollity, the ſacred veſſels of the temple occurred to him; and in a frolick, or to expreſs his contempt of Iſrael's God, and to do honour to his own, he commands them to be brought, and all preſent drank out of them, and praiſed their idol gods, who had given them theſe ſpoils of their enemies: probably the report of the deliverance of Iſrael from Babylon might now be propagated, the ſeventy years being juſt at an end; ſome ſay that very night they expired; and this might be done in defiance of Iſrael's God, and in ridicule of the prophetic word. Note, (1.) Drunkenneſs is the door to every abomination. (2.) They are haſtening apace to ruin, who can make a jeſt of things ſacred. (3.) The joyous ſinner in the midſt of his carouſals is a moſt pitiable object, dancing and ſinging on the brink of the gulph where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

2. A ſudden event terribly interrupts their impious joys. In the midſt of their carouſals, a hand appears over againſt the candleſtick, and writes upon the plaiſter of the wall. Struck with terror at the ſight, Belſhazzar's countenance changed, his pallid cheeks, his quivering lips, his trembling knees, his tottering frame, beſpoke the horrors of his ſoul, and conſcious guilt awakened dire forebodings of the dreadful doom hereby portended. In haſte he calls aloud to bring the wiſeſt of his Chaldean ſages, and promiſes the higheſt rewards to the man who can read and interpret the writing, but in vain; for though the words were Chaldee, the manner or form of writing was ſuch as entirely baffled their ſkill: or by a divine judgment, to make the ſkill of Daniel more illuſtrious, God confounded their underſtandings: and this increaſed the more the anxiety of the monarch, and filled his lords with conſternation and aſtoniſhment. Note, (1.) The moſt daring ſinners God can reach; one touch of his hand, yea, their own thoughts let looſe upon them, are enough to make them a terror to themſelves. (2.) Shall an unknown writing thus trouble the conſcience of Belſhazzar, and ſhall not all the curſes ſo plainly written in the book of God, affect the careleſs and impenitent?

Before Chriſt 539.

10. ¶ Now the queen, by reaſon of the words of the king and his lords, came into the banquet-houſe; and the queen ſpake and ſaid, [f] O king, live for ever: [g] let not thy thoughts trouble thee, nor let thy countenance be changed. 11. [h] There is a man in thy kingdom, in whom is the ſpirit of the holy gods, and in the days of thy † father, light and underſtanding and wiſdom like the wiſdom of the gods, was found in him; whom the king Nebuchadnezzar thy father, the king, I ſay, thy father made [i] maſter of the magicians, aſtrologers, Chaldeans, and ſoothſayers; 12. Foraſmuch as [k] an excellent ſpirit, and knowledge, and underſtanding, interpreting of dreams, and ſhewing of hard ſentences, and diſſolving of ‡ doubts were found in the ſame Daniel, [l] whom the king named Belteſhazzar: now let Daniel be called, and he will ſhew the interpretation. 13. Then was Daniel brought in before the king; and the king ſpake and ſaid unto Daniel, Art thou that Daniel, which art of the children of the captivity of Judah, whom the king my father brought out of Jewry? 14. I have even heard of thee, that [m] the ſpirit of the gods is in thee, and that light, and underſtanding, and excellent wiſdom is found in thee. 15. And now the wiſe men, the aſtrologers have been brought in before me, that they ſhould read this writing, and make known unto me the interpretation thereof: [n] but they could not ſhew the interpretation of the thing. 16. And I have heard of thee, that thou canſt ‖ make interpretations, and diſſolve doubts: now if thou canſt read the writing, and make known to me the interpretation thereof, thou ſhalt be clothed with ſcarlet, and have a chain of gold about thy neck, [o] and ſhalt be the third ruler in the kingdom. 17. ¶ Then Daniel anſwered and ſaid before the king, [p] Let thy gifts be to thyſelf, and give thy rewards to another, yet I will read the writing unto the king, and make known to him the interpretation. 18. O thou king, [q] the moſt high GOD gave Nebuchadnezzar thy father a kingdom, and majeſty, and glory, and honour. 19. And for the majeſty that he gave him, [r] all people, nations, and languages, trembled and feared before him: whom he would he ſlew, and whom he would he kept alive, and whom he would he ſet up, and whom he would he put down. 20. But [s] when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardned § in pride, [t] he was † depoſed from his kingly throne, and they took his glory from him. 21. And he was [u] driven from the ſons of men, and his heart was made like the beaſts, and his dwelling was with the wild aſſes: they fed him with graſs like oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, [x] till he knew that the moſt high GOD ruled in the kingdom of men, and that he appointeth over it whomſoever he will. 22. And thou his ſon, O Belſhazzar, haſt not humbled thine heart, though thou kneweſt all this: 23. But haſt lifted up thyſelf againſt the LORD of heaven, and they have brought the veſſels of his houſe before thee, and thou and thy lords, thy wives and thy concubines have drunk wine in them, and thou haſt praiſed the gods of ſilver and gold, of braſs, iron, wood, and ſtone, [y] which ſee not, nor hear, nor know: and the GOD in whoſe hand thy breath is, and [z] whoſe are all thy ways, haſt thou not [a] glorified. 24. Then was the part of the hand ſent from him, and this writing was written. 25. ¶ And this is the writing that was written, MENE MENE, TEKEL UPHARSIN. 26. This is the interpretation of the thing; MENE, God hath numbered thy kingdom, [b] and finiſhed it. 27. TEKEL, [c] thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting. 28. PERES, thy kingdom [d] is divided, and given to [e] the Medes and [f] Perſians. 29. Then commanded Belſhazzar, and they clothed Daniel with ſcarlet, and put a chain of gold about his neck, and made a proclamation concerning him, [g] that he ſhould be the third ruler in the kingdom.

v. 10—29. In this ſtate of diſmay and confuſion we have,

1. The advice of the queen; who had not been preſent at the feaſt; but, on hearing what had paſſed, had come to the banquetting-houſe. She is ſuppoſed to be not the wife of Belſhazzar, but of his father Evilmerodach, called by Herodotus Nitocris, and greatly famed for her prudence: though others think her to be Amytis, the grandmother of the king, and wife of Nebuchadnezzar. It appears ſhe was well acquainted with the tranſactions of former time, and knew the abilities of Daniel, and therefore is bold to ſay, though the wiſe men of Babylon were at a ſtand, that the king need not fear but an interpreter could be found. Probably Daniel's intereſt had long ſince declined at court, and he ſeems now to have lived in obſcurity among the reſt of his captive countrymen. So ready often, in a new reign, are the beſt and moſt faithful of the ancient counſellors to be thrown by and neglected. But the high character the queen gives of this now forgotten ſage could not but excite a deſire to have him called. She ſpeaks of him as ſomething more than human, poſſeſſed of wiſdom, approaching omniſcience and penetration ſo deep, that no ſecrets or difficulties whatever puzzled him; and by experience the king Nebuchadnezzar had proved him to be poſſeſſed of a ſpirit far excelling all the magicians and aſtrologers of his kingdom. In conſequence of which, he had advanced him to be maſter of all the ſages, and named him Belteſhazzar, in honour of his god. The queen deſires therefore he may be ſent for, and doubts not but he will give the king full ſatisfaction.

2. Daniel is inſtantly ſummoned, and appears before the king, unknown to him by perſon, as appears by Belſhazzar's queſtion, v. 13. But having heard ſuch high encomiums of his wiſdom, he is deſirous to try whether he can read and interpret the writing, of which the magicians confeſs their ignorance, and promiſes him the ſame rewards as he had offered to them, if he could clearly explain the matter: even that he ſhould be arrayed in richeſt robes of honour, and promoted to the third place for dignity in his kingdom.

3. Daniel undertakes to read and interpret the writing, but prefaces his diſcourſe with ſome ſtriking remarks and admonitions.

(1.) The proffered gifts he nobly diſdains, as the reward of his interpretation; he neither wanted nor ſought them. At his age, advancement would be but a burden, and when the whole government was ſo quickly to be overturned, ſuch honours were not worth acceptance Yet he will freely ſatisfy the king, if that can be called ſatisfaction, which, inſtead of relieving his fears, muſt increaſe his diſtreſs. Note, A ſenſe of the near approaching end of all things ſhould make us ſit looſe to the trifles of this changing and periſhing world.

(2.) He recounts God's diſpenſations towards his father, or, as is moſt commonly ſuppoſed, his grandfather, Nebuchadnezzar, it being not unuſual in ſcripture to term a more remote anceſtor father. By the providence and gift of the moſt high God, from whom all good things come, and to whoſe bleſſing all our proſperity ought ever to be aſcribed, Nebuchadnezzar had acquired ſuch dominion, honour, and authority, as perhaps no prince before had ever attained to: ſo irreſiſtible his power, that none dared contend with him; and trembling at his feet, all nations bowed before him. His government deſpotic, his authority abſolute; the liberty and property, the life or death of all his ſubjects hung on his breath; his will was law, his orders obeyed without remonſtrance or heſitation: a dangerous power to be veſted in the boſom of a fallen creature, a curſe upon the land where ſuch arbitrary monarchs rule. Abuſing his authority, Nebuchadnezzar had acted with that tyranny and oppreſſion which lawleſs power, directed by caprice, naturally produced; and hardened in pride, he not only behaved unjuſt to man, but inſolent towards the moſt high, aſcribing to his own proweſs his ſucceſſes, and affecting independence of every ſuperior. For theſe things the God of heaven hurled him from his throne, and degraded him not merely to the loweſt ſtate of human meanneſs, but to a level with the brute creation, to be the companion of wild aſſes, ver. 21. juſtly depriving him of the reaſon he had abuſed, and for his ſavageneſs and oppreſſion, ſending him to dwell with the beaſts he choſe to imitate; till humbled in the duſt, he was brought to acknowledge the government of the moſt High, and own himſelf the ſubject of his pleaſure.

(3.) He arraigns Belſhazzar for his crimes, aggravated by the neglect of all the warnings God had given him in his father's caſe. He knew all that had paſſed, yet neverthele ſs,

[1.] He had not humbled his heart, ver. 22. but continued impenitent in the ſame pride and rebellion againſt God. Note, It is an aggravation of children's ſins, if inſtead of being admoniſhed by their fathers miſeries, they perſiſt to follow their deſtructive ways.

[2.] He had exceeded in impiety his ungodly ſire. Thou haſt lifted up thyſelf againſt, or above the Lord of heaven, with more daring blaſphemy, defying his power and diſhonouring his name, as if he was his ſuperior, and ſhewing the contempt in which he held him, by his horrid profanation of the veſſels of the temple, whilſt he praiſed his idol gods, ſenſeleſs as the veſſels from which he poured out the libation to them.

[3.] The God in whoſe hands thy breath is, and whoſe are all thy ways, haſt thou not glorified; a charge, before which who need not tremble! our breath is from him, it is momentarily preſerved by him, our ways under his controul, every event at his diſpoſal. To glorify him is the great end of our being, our duty, and ſhould be our delight; but we have failed and gone aſtray every one in his own way, caſting off his government, and negligent of his glory. The Lord humble us for this, that we may not meet Belſhazzar's doom.

4. Having thus proved his crimes, Daniel pronounces his doom, according to the tenor of the writing on the wall, the explication of which he had demanded. Then when his iniquity was at the height, at this impious feaſt, came this hand from God, and wrote theſe words, MENE MENE, TEKEL UPHARSIN. The words are Chaldee, and ſignify, He hath numbered, he hath numbered, he hath weighed, and they divide; the ſeveral particulars of which he explains:

MENE, God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finiſhed it; the term of the monarchy is expiring, its ruin is near, and the word is repeated to ſhew its certainty.

TEKEL, Thou art weighed in the balances, and found wanting; God, who weighs in the balances of exact juſtice the actions and characters of men, pronounces him worthleſs and reprobate.

PERES, the ſingular of Pharſin, (U being the copulative) And thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Perſians; ſuch is the irreverſible decree of the Almighty; and Belſhazzar, convinced in his conſcience that Daniel had ſpoken the truth, though ſo fearful the ſentence, immediately confers on him the promiſed reward. Withering honours! the pageantry of an hour, and all this world's honours viewed in their true light, are no better.

The ſinner and the hypocrite's doom is like Belſhazzar's. At death their days are numbered; in judgment they will be weighed in the balance of God's holy law, and found wanting; and then be given up to the devil and his angels, to be tormented to eternity.

† Chald. The ſon of, &c.

v. 30, 31. The writing is ſcarce ſooner interpreted than verified. That very night the city was taken, and Belſhazzar ſlain: taking advantage of this debauch of the king, hiſtory informs us, that Cyrus entered the city by the bed of the river, the waters of which he had cut off; and the guards being faſt aſleep, and overcome with wine, made no reſiſtance; ſo that all the gates being opened, Gadates and Gobryas, two great men, who being ill uſed by Belſhazzar, had revolted to Cyrus, went directly to the palace, and ſlew the king with all his attendants. Thus ended the Babyloniſh empire; and Darius the Mede, called alſo Cyaxares, the uncle of Cyrus, aſcended the throne, the firſt king of the ſecond monarchy. He was ſixty-two years old, and conſequently was born the year Jechoniah was carried captive, 2 Kings xxiv. 12. God ſo ordering, that at the very time his people were ſent into Babylon, their deliverer ſhould be provided. Cyrus reigned in conjunction with his uncle; though being the younger, he is not mentioned, and after two years ſucceeded him in the ſole government of the empire, concerning whom ſo many prophecies had gone before, all which we find he moſt exactly fulfilled. Thus though God viſit his people for their ſins, he will not be wroth for ever; and in the darkeſt day of affliction there is ſtill hope in the end.

CHAP. VI.

It is a very obſervable and improvable ſtory that we have in this chapter, how Daniel, by faith, ſtopped the mouths of lions, and ſo obtained a good report, Heb. xi. 33. The three children were caſt into the fiery furnace for not committing a known ſin, Daniel was caſt into the lions den for not omitting a known duty, and God's miraculous delivering both them and him is left upon record for the encouragement of his ſervants in all ages, to be reſolute and conſtant both in their abhorrence of that which is evil, and in their adherence to that which is good, whatever it coſt them. In this chapter we have, 1. Daniel's preferment in the court of Darius, ver. 1—3. 2. The envy and malice of his enemies, ver. 4, 5. 3. The decree they obtained againſt prayer for thirty days, ver. 6—9. 4. Daniel's conſtancy in prayer notwithſtanding, ver. 10. 5. Information given againſt him for it, and the caſting of him into the den of lions, ver. 11—17. 6. His miraculous preſervation and deliverance out of it, ver. 18—23. 7. The caſting of his accuſers into the den, and their deſtruction there, ver. 24. 8. The decree which Darius made upon this occaſion in honour of the God of Daniel, and the proſperity of Daniel afterwards, ver. 25—28.

over the whole kingdom; 2. And over theſe, three preſidents (of whom Daniel was firſt) that the princes might give accounts unto them, and the king ſhould have no damage. 3. Then this Daniel was preferred above the preſidents and princes, [b] becauſe an excellent ſpirit was in him; and the king thought to ſet him over the whole realm. 4. ¶ Then [c] the preſidents and princes ſought to find occaſion againſt Daniel concerning the kingdom, [d] but they could find none occaſion nor fault: foraſmuch as he was faithful, [e] neither was there any error or fault found in him. 5. Then ſaid theſe men, We ſhall not find any occaſion againſt this Daniel, except we find it againſt him concerning [f] the law of his God.

v. 1—5. Daniel had been highly advanced by Belſhazzar, and on a reverſe of government he might have expected a reverſe of ſtation; but it happened quite otherwiſe.

1. He is preferred to the firſt poſt in the kingdom by the new emperor Darius, who probably had heard of his predictions and uncommon wiſdom, and was glad to have ſo great a man to employ under him. In the new diſtribution of the empire into one hundred and twenty provinces, under the care of ſo many princes, three preſidents were appointed to inſpect the conduct of theſe governors, and their accounts: of theſe Daniel was chief. His excellent ſpirit was his commendation to Darius; and ſo well ſatisfied was he of his abilities and integrity, that he meditated his farther advancement, deſigning as viceroy to ſet him over the whole realm. Daniel muſt now be very aged, it being above ſeventy years ſince he was carried captive to Babylon; but his natural force, it ſeems, was not abated, and his experience was increaſed. It was a proof of the wiſdom of Darius to make ſuch a choice, and it was a noble teſtimony to the uprightneſs of the miniſter, that no fault was to be found in him, v. 4. Happy the nation bleſſed with ſuch wiſe princes, and upright miniſters.

2. His greatneſs naturally provoked the envy of the courtiers, who, though his merit ſtood confeſſed, could not bear to ſee a foreigner, a Jew, a captive, thus preferred before them. Thus will ſuperior excellence, however ſpotleſs the character, awaken the malignant paſſions of the corrupted heart. They eyed him with malicious acuteneſs, and hoped, but hoped in vain, to find ſome flaw in his management, which might afford a handle for accuſation. Deſpairing at laſt of being able to attack him on account of his civil conduct, they can think of no method of ruining him, unleſs it be on account of his religion. Note, (1.) It is an honourable teſtimony when even enemies own our integrity, and, except concerning the law of our God, have no evil thing juſtly to ſay of us. (2.) The more the eyes of malignant obſervers are fixed upon us, the more careful ſhould we be in the minuteſt particulars to walk circumſpectly, and cut off occaſion from thoſe that deſire occaſion againſt us. (3.) Our fidelity to God will often expoſe us to the perſecution of the world; but when we thus ſuffer, we need be neither afraid nor aſhamed.

6. Then theſe preſidents and princes † aſſembled together to the king, and ſaid thus unto him, [g] King Darius, live for ever. 7. [h] All the preſidents of the kingdom, the governors, and the princes, the counſellors, and the captains, have conſulted together to eſtabliſh a royal ſtatute, and to make a firm decree, that whoſoever ſhall aſk a petition of any god or man for thirty days, ſave of thee, O king, he ſhall be caſt into the den of lions. 8. Now, O king, eſtabliſh the decree, and ſign the writing, that it be not changed, according to the law of the Medes and Perſians, [i] which ‡ altereth not. 9. Wherefore [k] king Darius ſigned the writing and the decree. 10. ¶ Now when Daniel knew that the writing was ſigned, he went into his houſe; and [l] his windows being open in his chamber [m] toward Jeruſalem, he kneeled upon his knees [n] three times a day, [o] and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, [p] as he did aforetime.

v. 6—10. Since there was no probability of finding matter of accuſation againſt Daniel, but on account of his religion, and no law then in being ſeems to have reſtrained him from worſhipping God in his own way, they craftily contrive a new one to enſnare him.

1. They make a ſolemn application to Darius for his approbation of a new edict, which ſeemed indeed to contain in it an uncommon reſpect for the king, but was really big with evils. They came in a body, and pretended it was the unanimous ſuffrage, after mature deliberation of all the preſidents, &c. though probably many of the princes excepted to it, and all the preſidents were but two; for Daniel, their chief, certainly conſented not to it. But if the concurrence had been never ſo general, the matter of the requeſt was utterly wrong, that no man ſhould aſk a petition of God or man, ſave of the king, for thirty days, on penalty of being caſt into the lions den. Had it only forbid religious worſhip for ſo long a time, it had been highly impious; but to extend the prohibition to all civil requeſts between man and man, muſt have been to the higheſt degree inconvenient, abſurd, and unreaſonable: yet as it ſeemed to put ſuch diſtinguiſhed honour on the king, and ſet him in a ſort even above the gods, this court to his pride blinded his reaſon, and he conſents and ſeals the decree, then become unalterable by the law of the Medes and Perſians. Note, (1.) The malicious care not what miſchief is done, ſo their vile ſpirit be gratified; let deareſt friends ſuffer, ſo the object of their enmity be but ruined. (2.) It is the unhappineſs of kings, that they can hardly know the truth, and compaſſed with flatterers, often are acceſſary to evils they never meant. (3.) Pride is our weak ſide; when that is attacked by flattery, we had need double our guard.

Before Chriſt 537.

2. Daniel perſiſted in his ſtated practice of devotion. Though he knew the decree was ſigned, and the penalty ſo fearful, he went as uſual to his houſe, and prayed and gave thanks unto his God upon his knees three times a day, turning his face towards the temple, though in ruins, and hoping God would remember its deſolations, 1 Kings viii. 48, 49. nor did he ſeek concealment, his windows were open. Whatever precautions or excuſes coward fear and ſelfiſh prudence might have dictated, he dared not ſubmit to any thing which might diſhonour God, diſgrace his profeſſion, or diſcourage his people: any ſuffering, or death itſelf in his eyes were preferable to but the appearance of unfaithfulneſs. Note, (1.) In time of danger to be aſhamed of Chriſt, or afraid to ſuffer for him, is the ſure way to be diſowned by him in the day of his appearing. (2.) What lukewarm chriſtians ſo carefully inculcate under the ſpecious name of prudence, is for the moſt part baſe ſelfiſhneſs, and a treacherous betraying the cauſe of God and truth. (3.) A gracious ſoul cannot live a day without prayer and praiſe; and though he never kneels or ſings to be ſeen or heard of men, he is never aſhamed to be known to do ſo. (4.) Thrice a day Daniel prayed, notwithſtanding all his occupations and engagements; can we then have a plea for a leſs frequent attendance on the throne of grace?

11. Then theſe men † aſſembled, and found Daniel praying and making ſupplication before his God. 12. Then they came near, and ſpake before the king, concerning the king's decree, Haſt thou not ſigned a decree, that every man that ſhall aſk a petition of any God or man within thirty days, ſave of thee, O king, ſhall be caſt into the den of lions? The king anſwered and ſaid, The thing is true, according to the law of the Medes and Perſians, which altereth not. 13. Then anſwered they and ſaid before the king, That Daniel [q] which is of the children of the captivity of Judah, [r] regarded not thee, O king, nor the decree that thou haſt ſigned, but maketh his petition three times a day. 14. Then the king when he heard theſe words, [s] was ſore diſpleaſed with himſelf, and ſet his heart on Daniel to deliver him: and he laboured till the going down of the ſun to deliver him. 15. Then theſe men aſſembled unto the king, and ſaid unto the king, Know, O king, that the law of the Medes and Perſians is, that no decree nor ſtatute which the king eſtabliſheth may be changed. 16. Then the king commanded, and they brought Daniel, and caſt him into the den of lions: now the king ſpake and ſaid unto Daniel, Thy God whom thou [t] ſerveſt continually, he will deliver thee. 17. And [u] a ſtone was brought and laid upon the mouth of the den, and the king ſealed it with his own ſignet, and with the ſignet of his lords; that the purpoſe might not be changed concerning Daniel.

v. 11—17. The ſnare was ſo laid, that it could not but ſucceed. Accordingly we have here,

1. Daniel diſcovered acting in diſobedience to the law. They knew probably his ſtated hours of devotion, and aſſembling tumultuouſly, as the word ſignifies, broke in upon him in the very act of prayer.

2. Without delay an impeachment is laid againſt him before the king. After having gained a recognition of the edict on which it was founded, they bring their accuſation; and not content with the proof of the fact, they ſeek by the manner of their charge to exaſperate the king againſt him. They call Daniel one of the captivity of Judah, as if the deſpicable condition of his people, from among whom he had been preferred to ſuch high honour, aggravated the crime of diſobedience with ingratitude; and they inſinuate that he did this in proud contempt of the king's authority, He regardeth not thee, O king, nor the decree that thou haſt ſigned, and thus is conſcientious adherence to God in the way of duty ſtill frequently branded as obſtinacy and contempt of authority, but we believe that thou ſhalt come to judge the world.

3. Too late the king perceived the fatal tendency of this impious edict, and the malicious intent of thoſe who propoſed it; and ſore diſpleaſed at himſelf for what he had done, ſet his heart to deliver Daniel from the penalty he had incurred, and laboured all day by every means to perſuade his accuſers to drop the proſecution, but in vain. His enemies inſiſt the law muſt have its courſe, according to the fundamental maxim of their government, v. 18. and, though with deep reluctance, Darius is compelled to order the execution of this venerable ſaint, this aged ſage, this upright miniſter, for no real crime, but for doing that which was his higheſt honour, and worthy the greateſt commendation. To make ſure work, that no eſcape ſhould be practicable, a ponderous ſtone is laid on the den's mouth; and as if the king's ſignet thereon afforded not ſufficient ſecurity, the lords added theirs alſo, to prevent all poſſibility of colluſion. Thus the precautions taken to ſecure the body of Jeſus rendered his reſurrection more undeniable and notorious, ſo eaſily can God take the wiſe and malicious in their own craftineſs.

4. The king encourages Daniel to truſt in God. Thy God whom thou ſerveſt continually, he will deliver thee; ſince for no crime, but purely for fidelity to his God he ſuffered, he was as able now to deliver him from the lions, as he had ſaved his ſervants of old from the devouring fire. Note, Let us but be faithful, and then we may ſafely truſt our all with God.

18. ¶ Then the king went to his palace, and paſſed the night faſting: neither were inſtruments of muſic brought before him, and his ſleep went from him. 19. Then the king aroſe very early in the morning, and went in haſte unto the den of lions. 20. And when he came to the den, he cried with a lamentable voice unto Daniel, and the king ſpake and ſaid to Daniel, O Daniel, ſervant of the living GOD, [x] is thy GOD, whom thou ſerveſt continually, able to deliver thee from the lions? 21. Then ſaid Daniel unto the king, [y] O king, live for ever. 22. [z] My GOD hath ſent his angel, [a] and hath ſhut the lions mouths that they have not hurt me: foraſmuch as [b] before him innocency was found in me; and alſo [c] before thee, O king, have I done no hurt. 23. Then was the king exceeding glad for him, and commanded that they ſhould take Daniel up out of the den: ſo Daniel was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him, [d] becauſe he believed in his GOD. 24. ¶ And the king commanded, and they brought [e] thoſe men which had accuſed Daniel, and they caſt them into the den of lions, them, [f] their children, and their wives; and the lions had the maſtery over them, and brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came at the bottom of the den.

v. 18—24. We are told,

1. The melancholy night Darius paſſed. He returned to his palace, overwhelmed with grief, vexation, and ſelf-reproach: his appetite was gone, his ears incapable of reliſhing one chearful note, faſting he paſſed the night, and ſleepleſs waited in ſuſpenſe the return of day—a troubled conſcience puts a thorn even in a downy pillow.

2. At early dawn he ſprings from his bed, and eager to know what he dreaded to aſk, with a lamentable voice addreſſes the faithful ſufferer, O Daniel, ſervant, &c. which ſome make his queſtion as fluctuating between hope and deſpair; but ſeems rather expreſſive of his aſtoniſhment and admiration, when, on the nearer approach to the den, and hearing his voice, he perceived Daniel was yet alive.

3. Daniel addreſſing the king, recounts his miraculous deliverance. He does not upbraid Darius with giving him up into the hand of his enemies, but expreſſes his warmeſt wiſhes for his proſperity, O king, live for ever. My God, in whom I truſted, hath ſent his angel, and ſtopped the lions mouths that they have not hurt me; and herein God bore teſtimony to his innocence. Nor could the king in conſcience imagine that Daniel deſigned him either injury or affront in what he had done. Note, God will ſtand by his faithful people in the hour of temptation; and though their ſouls may be among lions, he can not only keep them ſafe, but make their conſolations abound. Daniel in the den, with the preſence of that heavenly viſitant, was happier far than Darius in his palace.

4. Daniel is immediately diſcharged. The king, tranſported with joy, orders him to be taken out of the den, and not a blemiſh was found on him, ſo carefully had that God, in whom he believed, preſerved him: nor ſhall any who boldly truſt in him have ever reaſon to be aſhamed of their confidence.

5. Daniel's perſecutors are juſtly conſigned to that den from which he is delivered. Darius was now fully aſſured that it was of mere malice they had accuſed him, and will avenge the innocent blood they meant to ſhed; and by a fearful example of ſeverity, to deter others from the like conſpiracies, their wives and children ſhare their fate: when, lo! theſe ravening lions, who mildly crouched at the prophet's feet, with open mouths ſeized theſe miſcreants as they fell, and broke all their bones ere they touched the bottom of the den. Note, God's juſtice in this world is ſometimes eminently ſeen in ſuffering the malicious to fall into the pit they have digged for others.

25. ¶ [g] Then king Darius wrote unto all people, nations and languages, that dwell in all the earth, Peace be multiplied unto you. 26. v. 25—28. Darius, exceedingly affected with the miracle,

1. Iſſues an edict throughout his kingdom, enjoining the higheſt reverence and veneration for Daniel's God; that in all provinces of his empire men ſhould fear and tremble before him, for he is the living God, ſelf-exiſtent, the author of life to all his creatures, and ſtedfaſt for ever, himſelf unchangeable and everlaſting, his decrees immutable, his promiſes inviolable; and his kingdom that which ſhall not be deſtroyed, and his dominion ſhall be even unto the end; unlike the kingdoms of the world, it can neither be ſhaken by external violence, nor is ſubject to internal decay, but enduring as the days of eternity. He delivereth and reſcueth his faithful from the deepeſt afflictions, and he worketh ſigns and wonders in heaven and in earth, controuling at his pleaſure the courſe of nature; an eminent inſtance of which had now appeared; who hath delivered Daniel from the power of the lions.

2. Daniel is reſtored to all his former honours and dignity, and during his whole reign continued greatly in favour with the king; and his ſucceſſor Cyrus ſhewed him the ſame reſpect: ſo wonderfully can God over-rule the events which ſeemed moſt grievous for our good; and make, if he pleaſes, a priſon like Joſeph's, or a den of lions as Daniel's, the means of our greateſt proſperity.

CHAP. VII.

The ſix former chapters of this book were hiſtorical; we now enter, with fear and trembling, upon the ſix latter, which are prophetical, wherein are many things dark, and hard to be underſtood, which we dare not poſitively determine the ſenſe of, and yet many things plain and profitable, which I truſt God will enable us to improve. In this chapter we have, 1. Daniel's viſion of the four beaſts, ver. 1, 8. 2. His viſion of God's throne of government and judgment, ver. 9, 14. 3. The interpretation of theſe viſions given him by an angel, ver. 15—28. Whether thoſe viſions look as far forward as the end of time, or whether they were to have a ſpeedy accompliſhment, is hard to ſay, nor are the moſt judicious interpreters agreed concerning it.

v. 1—8. The date of this viſion is in the firſt year of Belſhazzar. It was revealed to Daniel on his bed in a dream, and when he awoke he wrote it down, and communicated it to his brethren whom it ſo nearly concerned. They were about to be delivered from their long captivity; but muſt not expect uninterrupted tranquility, as they perhaps flattered themſelves, in the land to which they were about to return.

In the viſion he obſerved,

1. The four winds ſtrove upon the great ſea, and the effect of ſuch a furious ſtorm muſt needs be the moſt violent agitation. This ſea is the world with its inhabitants, the winds the monarchs of the earth contending for maſtery, and filling it with violence and confuſion.

2. From this foaming ocean came up four great beaſts, in figure different from each other, repreſenting the four great monarchies, and the different genius of the people by whom they were erected.

[1.] The firſt was like a lion, which was the Babyloniſh monarchy, ſtrong and deſpotic; and had eagles wings, intimating the rapidity of Nebuchadnezzar's conqueſts; but the wings were ſoon pluckt with which it was lifted up from the earth; for under his ſucceſſors the empire began to be diſmembered and weakened; they loſt their courage and intrepidity, and the lion's heart was changed into a man's.

2. The ſecond beaſt was like unto a bear, repreſenting the Medo-Perſian monarchy, fierce and ſavage; and it raiſed itſelf up on one ſide, on the ſide of Perſia, from whence Cyrus the conqueror came; and it had three ribs in the mouth of it, between the teeth of it, ſo many diſmembered provinces, probably, of the Babyloniſh empire, which it firſt devoured; and they ſaid thus unto it, Ariſe, devour much fleſh; either the generals of the Perſian army encouraged their troops to ſlay their enemies, or theſe are the orders of the Divine Providence to Cyrus, ſending him to devour the ſpoils of the conquered Chaldeans.

3. The third beaſt, that next aroſe, was like a leopard, prefiguring the Grecian monarchy under Alexander, agile, crafty, ſpotted, a compound of vices and virtues; or this may refer to the motley people of this vaſt empire. It had upon the back of it four wings like a fowl; ſo ſwift were his marches, ſo rapid his conqueſts. The beaſt alſo had four heads; the empire, on Alexander's deceaſe, being divided into four parts: Macedonia fell to Antipater, or, as others, to Caſſander; Aſia to Antigonus, or, as ſome ſay, to Lyſimachus; Syria to Seleucus; and Egypt to Ptolemy. And dominion was given to it; God's hand being ſtrongly evident in the ſucceſſes of the Grecian conqueror.

4. The fourth beaſt differed from all the reſt, being dreadful and terrible, and ſtrong exceedingly, which moſt interpret of the Roman empire; and it had great iron teeth, devouring, breaking in pieces, and ſtamping down all who ſtood in its way; as the Roman generals and armies did, till they had erected univerſal monarchy. And it had ten horns; the empire, on its decline, being divided into ſo many kingdoms. The little horn, v. 8. is by the beſt interpreters ſuppoſed to be the antichriſtian power, which roſe from ſmall beginnings, and from an eccleſiaſtic the biſhop of Rome became a temporal prince, and ſeized on conſiderable territories, diſpoſſeſſing three of the other horns. And in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, intimating the vigilance and craft of the Romiſh court and emiſſaries; and a mouth ſpeaking proud things, boaſting of infallibility, power to remit ſin, and other ſuch like proud blaſphemies. Some interpret this of the kingdom of Syria, and the little horn of Antiochus; but the former ſenſe is preferable, and more agreeable to the viſion, as that kingdom rather belonged to the viſion of the third beaſt.

9. ¶ [p] I beheld till the thrones were caſt down, and [q] the ancient of days did ſit, [r] whoſe garment was white as ſnow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool: his throne was like the fiery flame, [s] and his wheels as burning fire. 10. [t] A fiery ſtream iſſued and came forth from before him: [u] thouſand thouſands miniſtred unto him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtood before him: the judgment was ſet, and [x] the books were opened. 11. I beheld then, becauſe of the voice of the great words which the horn ſpake: I beheld, even till the beaſt was ſlain, and his body deſtroyed, and given [y] to the burning flame. 12. As concerning [z] the reſt of the beaſts, they had their dominion taken away: yet their lives were prolonged for a ſeaſon and time. 13. I ſaw in the night-viſions, and behold, [a] one like the ſon of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before him.
14. [b] And there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, [c] that all people, nations, and languages ſhould ſerve him: his dominion is [d] an everlaſting dominion, which ſhall not paſs away, and his kingdom that which ſhall not be deſtroyed.

v. 9—14. Very glorious things are here recorded, for the comfort of the people of God under all the perſecutions they may be called to ſuffer in this wicked world.

1. An awful judge makes his appearance. I beheld till the thrones were caſt down; all theſe monarchies ſucceſſively overturned: or it may be read till the thrones were ſet up; the thrones of judgment, the thrones of God and the Lamb: and this may point either at his providential judgments on all the enemies of his church in this world, or his final and eternal judgment at the great day of his appearing and glory. And the ancient of days did ſit; God the Father, the Judge of all: his garment was white as ſnow, denoting his perfect righteouſneſs, and that his boſom is the ſeat of juſtice; and the hair of his head like pure wool, venerable and majeſtic: his throne was as the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire; ſo piercing his ſcrutiny, ſo ſwift the execution of his ſentence, and ſo terrible his wrath: a fiery ſtream iſſued and came forth before him, to conſume his adverſaries; thouſand thouſands miniſtred unto him, angels and archangels; and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtood before him, waiting from his lips their eternal doom. The judgment was ſet, the court ready to hear and determine; and the books were opened, the book of revelation, the book of omniſcience, the book of conſcience, in alluſion to proceedings in courts of human judicature.

2. The priſoner at the bar is condemned and executed. I beheld then, becauſe of the voice of the great words which the horn ſpake, his pride and blaſphemies being proved, and condign puniſhment decreed; I beheld, even till the beaſt was ſlain, which ſome interpret of the fall of the Syrian empire after Antiochus; but much better may be applied to the Romiſh power, both pagan and papal; and his body deſtroyed, and given to the burning flame; Rome, the ſeat of the antichriſtian tyranny, being, very probably, doomed, as Sodom, to be devoured with fire from heaven, and the beaſt and the falſe prophet will together at laſt be caſt into the burning lake. See Rev. xvii. xviii. xix. As concerning the reſt of the beaſts, the other three monarchies, they had their dominion taken away, ſucceſſively giving place to each other; yet their lives were prolonged for a ſeaſon and a time; tho' the ſovereign power departed from them, they each continued in being as a people; whereas, when judgment paſſes on the fourth, he will periſh at once and utterly.

3. The kingdom of the Meſſiah is to be ſet up on the ruin of his enemies. I ſaw in the night-viſions, and behold one like the ſon of man, like the ſons of men in his incarnation, but more than man in the glory of his divine perſon, came in the clouds of heaven, with great majeſty, to take poſſeſſion of his kingdom, and came to the ancient of days, his eternal Father, either at his aſcenſion, or rather it refers to the future day of his glory, when he ſhall take to himſelf his great power and reign; and they brought him near before him; and there was given him dominion, and power, and glory, and a kingdom, his mediatorial kingdom, which, as the man Chriſt Jeſus, he receives from his Father; and this kingdom, we doubt not, will be more eminent and extenſive upon earth hereafter than it hath ever yet been; ſo that all people, nations, and languages, ſhall ſerve him, made obedient to the faith, and become his loyal ſubjects: and, as his kingdom will be univerſal in its extent, it will, for the comfort of God's people, be eternal in duration; for his dominion is an everlaſting dominion, and his kingdom that which ſhall not be deſtroyed. Bleſſed and happy are they who have their lot and portion among the favoured ſubjects of this divine Redeemer!

15. ¶ I Daniel [c] was grieved in my ſpirit in the midſt of my body, and the viſions of my head troubled me.
16. I came near unto one of them that ſtood by, and [d] aſked him the truth of all this: ſo he told me, and [e] made me know the interpretation of the things. 17.
Theſe great beaſts, which are four, are four kings, which ſhall ariſe out of the earth. 18. But [f] the ſaints of the † moſt High ſhall take the kingdom, and poſſeſs the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever. 19.
Then I would know the truth of the fourth beaſt, which was divers from all the others, exceeding dreadful, whoſe teeth were of iron, and his nails of braſs, which devoured, brake in pieces, and ſtamped the reſidue with his feet.
20. And of the ten horns that were in his head, and of the other which came up, and before whom three fell, even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that ſpake very great things, [g] whoſe look was more ſtout than his fellows. 21. I beheld, and [h] the ſame horn made war with the ſaints, and prevailed againſt them; 22. Until the ancient of days came, and [i] judgment was given to the ſaints of the moſt High; and [k] the time came that the ſaints poſſeſſed the kingdom. 23. Thus he ſaid, The fourth beaſt ſhall be [l] the fourth kingdom upon earth, which ſhall be divers from all kingdoms, and [m] ſhall devour the whole earth, and ſhall tread it down, and break it in pieces. 24. And [n] the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that ſhall ariſe: and another ſhall ariſe after them, and he ſhall be divers from the firſt, and he ſhall ſubdue three kings. 25. And [o] he ſhall ſpeak great words againſt the moſt High, and ſhall wear out the ſaints of the moſt High, [p] and think to change times and laws: and they ſhall be given into his hand, [q] until a time and times, and the dividing of time. 26. [r] But the judgment ſhall ſit, and they ſhall take away his dominion, to conſume, and to deſtroy it unto the end. 27. And [s] the kingdom and dominion, and the greatneſs of the kingdom under the whole heaven, ſhall be given to the people of the ſaints of the moſt High, whoſe kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom, [t] and all ‡ dominions ſhall ſerve and obey him. 28. Hitherto is the end of the matter. As for me Daniel, [u] my cogitations much troubled me, and my countenance changed in me: but [x] I kept the matter in my heart.

v. 15—28. The viſions ſo affected the prophet that his mind was much troubled; and, earneſtly deſirous to be informed of the meaning of what he ſaw, he enquires of one of the celeſtial attendants on the throne concerning them; who readily relieved him from his ſuſpence, and explained the particulars of his prophetic dream. Note, (1.) When we are ignorant, we ſhould never be aſhamed to enquire of thoſe who can teach us. (2.) The truths of God ſhould engage our diligent attention; and what we read or hear we ſhould, by prayer and meditation, endeavour fully to underſtand.

The interpretation given is,

1. That the four beaſts are four kings, or kingdoms, which ſhould ariſe out of the earth, and, ſpringing from the duſt, ſhould return thither again: but a fifth ſhould ſucceed them, of heavenly original, and endure for ever and ever; as he more fully afterwards explains.

2. As Daniel was moſt ſollicitous to have a fuller explication of the meaning of the fourth beaſt, which ſeemed the fierceſt of them all, and of the ten horns, and the little horn that ſprung up afterwards, that had eyes, and a mouth that ſpake great things, and his look more ſtout than his fellows; which made war againſt the ſaints of the moſt High, and prevailed, till the Ancient of days came, vindicated their cauſe, and ſlew their adverſary, v. 21. the angel informs him, that this terrible beaſt is the fourth kingdom; concerning the meaning of which interpreters are divided, ſome ſuppoſing it the kingdom of the Seleucidæ, others the Turkiſh empire; but I moſt incline to thoſe who think it the Roman monarchy, pagan and papal, to which the characters given ſeem moſt exactly to agree. It was diverſe from all the other kingdoms in its form of government; it trod down and devoured the whole earth, by long and bloody wars ſubduing the nations which refuſed to ſubmit. The ten horns are ten kings, or kingdoms, which aroſe on the decline of the empire, when the Huns, Goths, Alans, and other northern nations, ſucceſſively diſmembered the empire, and erected theſe ten ſeparate kingdoms: which though learned interpreters reckon differently, in the grand points they agree, that theſe ten kingdoms were erected by them, and here repreſented by the ten horns. The little horn they ſuppoſe the papal power, ariſing to its height after this diviſion of the empire, ſpeaking great things, pretending to be Chriſt's vicar upon earth, and aſſuming the incommunicable prerogatives of the moſt High; and in look more ſtout than his fellows, the head of that power aſſuming authority, not only over all his fellow biſhops, but over all kings and princes. He is diverſe from the other monarchs, having the eccleſiaſtical as well as civil dominion, and ruling over the conſciences as well as perſons of his ſubjects. He ſhall ſubdue three kings; which Mr. Mede reckons were the kingdoms of the Greeks, Lombards, and Franks. Sir Iſaac Newton ſuppoſes them to be the kingdom of the Lombards, the exarchate of Ravenna, and the dukedom of Rome. The biſhop of Clogher interprets them of the Campagnia of Rome, the exarchate of Ravenna, and the region of Pentapolis, which are called St. Peter's patrimony, and under the civil juriſdiction of the biſhop of Rome. And he ſhall ſpeak great words againſt the moſt High, the words of blaſphemy, affecting ſuch authority and ſpiritual powers as if he was God upon earth, and the rival of the eternal Majeſty. By wars and perſecutions, and inquiſitorial dungeons, he ſhall wear out the ſaints of the moſt High, endeavouring to weary out their patience and bring them under his yoke; and he ſhall think to change the times and laws, affecting to depoſe and ſet up kings at his pleaſure, to alter the conſtitution of kingdoms, conſecrating particular times and ſeaſons, diſpenſing with the laws of God and man, and binding his own upon the conſciences of men: and they ſhall be given into his hand; he ſhall for a while ſucceed in his uſurpations; until a time and times, and the dividing of time; three years and a half; the ſame with the 1260 days, and the forty-two months, Rev. xi. 2, 3. xii. 14. xiii. 5. during which the tyranny of Antichriſt ſhall prevail. But God will at laſt judge this perſecuting power, and utterly deſtroy it, ſetting up on its ruins the kingdom of his Chriſt, whoſe people ſhall then for ever reign with him, enjoying freely all privileges and ordinances, without diſturbance, and ſeeing all their enemies made their footſtool. And this ſome refer to a temporal reign of the ſaints upon earth, under Chriſt their head; others to the reign of grace in the ſouls of the redeemed of the Lord, and the univerſal ſpread of the goſpel in the world at the latter day; others to the kingdom of the Redeemer in heaven, when, after the laſt judgment, his ſaints ſhall reign with him in glory everlaſting. In whichever ſenſe it be taken, the proſpect is truly glorious, and ſuited to ſupport the faith, the patience, and conſtancy of his people, who may be aſſured, in the darkeſt times, that the enemy ſhall not be able finally to prevail.

3. Daniel appears much impreſſed and affected with what had been told him: his very look was altered by it; but he kept the matter in his heart, pondering thereupon, and ſeeking thoroughly to underſtand the meaning, that he might tranſmit the viſion, with the interpretation, to ſucceeding generations. Note, It is good thus to ſtore up in our hearts the bleſſed words of truth we hear, ready to produce them, on every proper occaſion, for the edification and comfort of our brethren.

CHAP. VIII.

In this chapter we have, 1. The viſion of the ram, and the he-goat, and the little horn that ſhould fight and prevail againſt the people of God for a certain limited time, ver. 1—14. 2. The interpretation of this viſion by an angel, ver. 15—27.

1. IN the third year of the reign of king Belſhazzar, a viſion appeared unto me, even unto me Daniel, after that which appeared unto me [a] at the firſt. 2. And I ſaw in a viſion (and it came to paſs when I ſaw, that [b] I was at Shuſhan in the palace, which is in the province of Elam) and I ſaw in a viſion, and I was by the river of Ulai. 3. Then I lifted up mine eyes, and ſaw, and behold, there ſtood before the river, [c] a ram which had two horns, and the two horns were high: but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up laſt. 4. I ſaw the ram [d] puſhing weſt-ward, and north-ward, and ſouth-ward: ſo that no beaſt might ſtand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand, but [e] he did according to his will, and became great. 5. And as I was conſidering, behold, [f] an he-goat came from the weſt, on the face of the whole earth, and † touched not the ground: and the goat had ‡ a notable horn between his eyes. 6. And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had ſeen ſtanding before the river, and ran unto him in the fury of his power. 7. And I ſaw him come cloſe unto the ram, and [g] he was moved with choler againſt him, and ſmote the ram, and brake his two horns, and [h] there was no power in the ram to ſtand before him, but he caſt him down to the ground, and ſtamped upon him: and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand. 8. Therefore the he-goat waxed very great, and [i] when he was ſtrong, the great horn was broken: and for it came up four notable ones, [k] towards the four winds of heaven. 9. And [l] out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great, [m] toward the ſouth, and toward the eaſt, and toward [n] the pleaſant land. 10. [o] And it waxed great, even § to the hoſt of heaven, [p] and it caſt down ſome of the hoſt, and of the ſtars to the ground, and ſtamped upon them. 11. Yea, [q] he magnified himſelf even ‖ to [r] the prince of the hoſt, and [s] by him [t] the daily ſacrifice was taken away, and the place of his ſanctuary was caſt down. 12. And † an hoſt was given him againſt the daily ſacrifice [u] by reaſon of tranſgreſſion, and it [x] caſt down the truth to the ground, and it practiſed [y] and proſpered. 13. ¶ Then I heard [z] one ſaint ſpeaking, and another ſaint ſaid unto ‡ that certain ſaint which ſpake, How long ſhall be the viſion concerning the daily ſacrifice, and [a] the tranſgreſſion of deſolation, to give both the ſanctuary and the hoſt to be trodden under foot? 14. And he ſaid unto me, Unto two thouſand and three hundred days; then ſhall the ſanctuary be ‖ cleanſed.

v. 1—14. This ſecond viſion is dated in the third year of Belſhazzar's reign. The ſcene is laid in Shuſhan, which was one of the royal palaces of the kings of Perſia by the river Ulai. Daniel was now in Babylon; but he ſeemed to be there, near the monarch whom the viſion chiefly concerned.

1. He ſaw a ram, the emblem of the ſecond monarchy, having two very high horns, the nations of Medes and Perſians, and one horn, which roſe the laſt, was higher than the other, the Perſians under Cyrus taking the lead, though at firſt inferior to the Medes. This animal ſeemed to puſh furiouſly, weſtward, northward, and ſouthward, extending his conqueſts on every ſide, none of the nations being able to ſtand before him; ſo that he did as he pleaſed, and became great, roſe to univerſal empire. But ſuch is the periſhing nature of all ſublunary things, that the ſeeds of corruption and ruin are ripening when a nation's outward proſperity ſeems moſt eſtabliſhed: for,

2. A he-goat attacks and overcomes the ram. This repreſents the Grecian monarchy under Alexander: he came from the weſt, from Macedon, on the face of the whole earth, ſweeping it with his victorious arms, and weeping, it is ſaid, that he had not another world to conquer: and he touched not the ground; ſo rapid were his marches, that he rather ſeemed to fly than walk: and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes, deſcriptive of Alexander, the firſt founder of the monarchy; ſo eminent a conqueror, ſo ſagacious a general, and attended by his father's wiſeſt counſellers. He came to the ram with two horns, the Perſian monarch Darius Codomannus, then in poſſeſſion of the kingdom, and ran unto him in the fury of his power, eager to engage, and furious in the attack he made; highly exaſperated by the meſſage of contempt Darius had ſent him, he came cloſe to the ram, joined battle with him and ſmote him in three general engagements, at the Granicus, at Iſſus, and Arbela, and brake his two horns, overthrew his armies, and ſo entirely deſtroyed the force of the Perſian empire, that there was no power in the ram to ſtand before him, but he caſt him to the ground and ſtamped upon him, quite ſubdued the whole kingdom of Perſia; and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand, his allies all falling with him. Thus the he-goat waxed very great; the Grecian monarchy being eſtabliſhed through the greateſt part of the then known world.

3. In this flouriſhing ſtate of the new empire, a ſudden ſtroke divides it into four parts. The great horn was broken: Alexander, at thirty two or three years of age, was cut off ſuddenly, by a drunken debauch, as ſome ſay; or by poiſon, as others; and for it, in his room, came up four notable ones, his four captains, who divided his dominions among them, ſee chap. vii. 6. towards the four winds; Syria lying eaſtward, Macedonia to the weſt, leſſer Aſia to the north, and Egypt to the ſouth. Note, Many take great pains, whilſt others reap the fruit of their labours.

4. The principal thing intended in the viſion, as what more immediately concerned the Jewiſh people, is the little horn coming out of one of theſe kingdoms, Antiochus Epiphanes, the king of Syria, who had been a hoſtage at Rome, and, making his eſcape, ſeized the throne, in prejudice of his elder brother's ſon. He waxed exceeding great toward the ſouth, ſubduing part of Egypt, and, but for the interpoſition of the Romans, would have vanquiſhed the whole; and toward the eaſt, invading Armenia and Perſia, with the countries beyond the Euphrates, ſee 1 Mac. iii. 31. vi. 42. and toward the pleaſant land of Judea, which he ravaged; and it waxed great, even to the hoſt of heaven, the people of God, his church militant on earth; and it caſt down ſome of the hoſt, and of the ſtars, to the ground, and ſtamped on them, perſecuting ſome of them unto death, even the moſt eminent, as Eleazar and the ſeven brethren, 2 Mac. vi. 7. and prevailing on others, by threatnings, tortures, or flatteries, to renounce their holy profeſſion. Yea, he magnified himſelf to the prince of the hoſt, diſpoſſeſſing Onias the high-prieſt of his dignity; or rather affronting God himſelf, their king, by his blaſphemies, profaning his temple, and aboliſhing his worſhip; and by him the daily ſacrifice was taken away, the altar being deſtroyed; and the place of his ſanctuary was caſt down; though the temple was not demoliſhed, it was ſo profaned and plundered that the ſervice utterly ceaſed, 1 Mac. i. 22. iii. 45—52. And an hoſt was given him againſt the daily ſacrifice, a watch being ſet to prevent it, or a number of apoſtates joining him to aboliſh the worſhip of God: or it may be rendered, the hoſt was delivered into his hands, becauſe of tranſgreſſion againſt the daily ſacrifice, God puniſhing the Jewiſh people for their ſins, and giving them into the hands of this enemy; ſo that he caſt the truth to the ground, deſtroying all the ſacred writings he could ſeize; and he practiſed and proſpered, being the rod of God's indignation. Note, (1.) If God's people ſuffer, their ſins are ſurely the cauſe. (2.) The wicked perſecutor can have no power but what the Lord permits, and therefore we are to acknowledge God's hand in all the church's calamities. (3.) They who ſlight or abuſe the privileges of the ſanctuary, which they enjoy, juſtly deſerve to be deprived of them.

5. The time limited for the expiration of this tyranny is intimated. Then I heard one ſaint ſpeaking, the ſubject of his diſcourſe being probably this viſion; and another ſaint ſaid unto that certain ſaint that ſpake, or unto Palmoni that ſpake, to him who hath all ſecrets numbered, as the word is by ſome tranſlated, the Lord Jeſus, to whom we muſt apply if we would know the mind of God. The queſtion put was, how long the daily ſacrifice ſhould be interrupted, the tranſgreſſion of deſolation, the image of Jupiter, ſtand in the holy place, the ſanctuary and hoſt be trodden under foot? The anſwer is, unto 2300 days, being ſix years, three months, and eighteen days, which ſome compute from the 15th of the month Ciſleu, in the 145th year of the Seleucidæ, when the abomination was ſet up, 1 Mac. i. 57. to the victory obtained by Judas Maccabeus over Nicanor, Antiochus's general, on the 13th of Adar, 151, which is juſt 2300. Others begin from the defection of Menelaus in 141. to the purifying the altar by Judas Maccabeus on the 25th of Ciſleu, 148. ſee 1 Mac. iv. 52. The time of the ſufferings of God's people may be long, and the trial ſevere; but the iſſue is certain, they ſhall have peace at the laſt: let them only with faith and patience wait for it.

15. ¶ And it came to paſs when I, even I Daniel, had ſeen the viſion, and [b] ſought for the meaning, then behold, there ſtood before me as the appearance of a man. 16. And I heard a man's voice [c] between the banks of Ulai, which called, and ſaid, [d] Gabriel, make this man to underſtand the viſion. 17. So he came near where I ſtood: and when he came, I was afraid, and [e] fell upon my face: but he ſaid unto me, Underſtand, O ſon of man; for at the time of the end ſhall be the viſion. 18. [f] Now as he was ſpeaking with me, I was in a deep ſleep on my face toward the ground: but [g] he touched me, and ſet me upright. 19. And he ſaid, Behold, I will make thee know what ſhall be in the laſt end of the indignation: for [h] at the time appointed the end ſhall be. 20. [i] The ram which thou ſaweſt having two horns, are the kings of Media and Perſia. 21. And [k] the rough goat is the king of Grecia, and the great horn that is between his eyes, [l] is the firſt king. 22. [m] Now that being broken, whereas four ſtood up for it, [n] four kingdoms ſhall ſtand up out of the nation, but not in his power. 23. And in the latter time of their kingdom, [o] when the tranſgreſſors are come to the full, a king [p] of fierce countenance, and underſtanding dark ſentences, ſhall ſtand up. 24. And his power ſhall be mighty, [q] but not by his own power: and he ſhall deſtroy wonderfully, [r] and ſhall proſper and practiſe, and ſhall deſtroy the mighty and † the holy people. 25. And through his policy alſo he ſhall cauſe craft to proſper in his hand, and [s] he ſhall magnify himſelf in his heart, [t] and by peace ſhall deſtroy many: he ſhall alſo ſtand up againſt the prince of princes, but [u] he ſhall be broken without hand. 26. And the viſion of the evening and the morning, which was told, [x] is true, [y] wherefore ſhut thou up the viſion, for it ſhall be for many days. 27. [z] And I Daniel fainted and was ſick certain days; afterward I roſe up, [a] and did the king's buſineſs, and I was aſtoniſhed at the viſion, but none underſtood it.

v. 15—27. The viſion he had ſeen excited in the prophet a great deſire to know the meaning of it; and whilſt in his own mind he pondered what he had ſeen and heard, God graciouſly orders one of his angels to explain the particulars to him. Note, When, in God's appointed ways, we are earneſtly deſiring to know his mind and will, he will enlighten our minds, and lead us in the right way. We have,

1. The deep impreſſion made on Daniel by the approach of the heavenly meſſenger. Overpowered with his glory, he trembled, and fell at his feet as in a ſwoon, and a deep ſleep came upon him, v. 18. The ſpirit is ſometimes willing, when the fleſh is weak.

2. The angel gently raiſes him from the duſt, and ſets him on his feet, bidding him attend to and underſtand the explication he was about to give concerning what ſhall be in the laſt end of the indignation; for at the time of the end ſhall be the viſion, or the end of the viſion is for a time, fixed by the divine decree, when the troubles of God's people ſhould ceaſe, and his indignation be removed from them, at the time appointed. Note, All the ſufferings of God's people have their bounds and limits, and by faith and patience they ſhall be enabled with comfort to ſee their end.

3. He gives the interpretation of the viſion, mentioned before, v. 3—14. The ram repreſents the kings of Media and Perſia; the he-goat the Grecian empire; the great horn Alexander; the four horns the captains who divided his dominion, who were not at all equal to him in power and greatneſs. On the decline of the Grecian empire, a king would ariſe in the kingdom of Syria, whoſe character and exploits are more largely inſiſted upon, as they more nearly concerned the people of Iſrael, whoſe tranſgreſſions being come to the full, God would raiſe up this ſcourge to puniſh them. He is repreſented as a king of fierce countenance, ſavage and brutiſh, neither fearing God or man; and underſtanding dark ſentences, crafty, politic, and of conſummate diſſimulation; and his power ſhall be mighty, raiſed to the throne of Syria; but not by his own power, being ſupported by Eumenes king of Pergamus, and Attalus his brother, in his uſurpation; he ſhall deſtroy wonderfully, making a dreadful havoc among the mighty, the Egyptians, whom he invaded, and the holy people the Jews, who were ſuch by profeſſion, whom he harraſſed dreadfully; and God ſuffers him to proſper and practiſe. Craft is his grand engine, and by policy he ſhall ſucceed: thus he robbed his nephew of his kingdom, and under pretence of friendſhip ſeized upon Egypt: and he ſhall magnify himſelf in his heart, be filled with pride on his ſucceſs; and by peace ſhall deſtroy many, under the cloak of treaties and ſpecious profeſſions, he ſhall encroach on his neighbours, as he did in Egypt and Judea; or in peace, ſurprizing them by an unprepared and unexpected attack in the midſt of profound ſecurity. And he ſhall ſtand up againſt the Prince of princes, the moſt high God, erecting an idol in his temple, and putting a ſtop to his worſhip; but he ſhall be broken without hand, not by any outward enemy, but by the ſecret hand of God, who ſtruck him with a diſeaſe in his bowels; and in his body the worms bred ſo faſt, that his fleſh rotted on him, and the ſtench was intolerable, 1 Mac. vi. 8. 2 Mac. ix. 5—9. ſo that he died a dreadful monument of divine vengeance; confeſſing, it is ſaid, the judgment of God, and owning himſelf vanquiſhed. And the viſion of the evening and of the morning, the 2300 days, v. 14. is true, ſo long the ſanctuary ſhall be defiled: wherefore ſhut thou up the viſion from the Chaldeans, whoſe ruin approached; or the Perſian, whoſe deſtruction would in its ſeaſon follow; for it ſhall be for many days, it being upwards of three hundred years from the time of the prophecy, to the death of Antiochus. Note, (1.) Whatever God decrees, though the fulfilment be diſtant, it is ſure. (2.) They who magnify themſelves againſt God, ſhall by death be made to know they are but men.

Laſtly, The viſion left a deep impreſſion upon him. He fainted on the view of the terrible ſufferings his people were to endure, and he was ſick certain days, could not recover from the diſtreſs into which the viſion had thrown him. Afterwards I roſe up, from his bed, to which he had been confined, and did the king's buſineſs, according to the duty of his place; and I was aſtoniſhed at the viſion, at the awful contents of it, but none underſtood it; he either kept the whole quite a ſecret, or if he told the viſion, he mentioned not the interpretation, ſhutting it up as he was commanded. Note, (1.) The diſtreſs of God's people cannot but deeply affect every gracious ſoul. (2.) Our grief muſt never be ſo inordinate as to diſable us from the duties of our ſtation.

CHAP. IX.

In this chapter we have, 1. Daniel's prayer for the reſtoration of the Jews who were in captivity; in which he confeſſeth ſin, acknowledgeth the juſtice of God in their calamities, but pleads God's promiſes of mercy which he had yet in ſtore for them, ver. 1—19. 2. An immediate anſwer ſent him by an angel; in which, (1.) He is aſſured of the diſcharge of the Jews out of their captivity preſently, ver. 20—23. and is informed concerning the redemption of the world by Jeſus Chriſt, of which that was a type; what ſhould be the nature of it, and when it ſhould be accompliſhed, ver. 24—27. And it is the cleareſt prophecy of the Meſſiah in all the Old Teſtament.

1. IN the firſt year of [a] Darius the ſon of Ahaſuerus, of the ſeed of the Medes, which was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans; 2. In the firſt year of his reign, I Daniel underſtood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the LORD came to [b] Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accompliſh ſeventy years in the deſolations of Jeruſalem. 3. ¶ And I ſet my face unto the Lord GOD, [c] to ſeek by prayer and ſupplications, with faſting, and ſackcloth, and aſhes.

v. 1—3. The date of this prophecy is in the firſt year of Darius, when the ſeventy years of the Jewiſh captivity ended, reckoning from the third of Jehoiakim.

1. Daniel had been diligently ſearching the Scriptures, and out of the book of Jeremiah underſtood that the time was at hand for the accompliſhment of God's promiſes in the reſtoration of his people. Note, They who diligently ſearch the Scriptures will find there what will amply compenſate their pains.

2. He became an earneſt interceſſor for the accompliſhment of the promiſed mercy. In faſting and ſackcloth he deeply humbled himſelf, under a ſenſe of the ſins which had provoked God's diſpleaſure, and as a mourner over the deſolations of Zion; and with faith and importunity ſet his face to the Lord, to ſeek by prayer and ſupplications the haſtening their deliverance in his good time. Note, (1.) What God promiſes ſhould be the matter of our prayers. (2) They who have the intereſts of God's church at heart, cannot but be deeply affected with its deſolations, and earneſt ſupplicants that God would revive his work in the midſt of the years.

Before Chriſt 538.

4. And I prayed unto the LORD my God, and made my confeſſion, and ſaid, O [d] Lord, the great and dreadful God, keeping the covenant, [e] and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments: 5. [f] We have ſinned, and have committed iniquity, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled, even by departing from thy precepts, and from thy judgments. 6. [g] Neither have we hearkned unto thy ſervants the prophets, which ſpake in thy name, to our kings, our princes, and our fathers, and to all the people of the land. 7. O Lord, [h] righteouſneſs † belongeth unto thee, but unto us [i] confuſion of faces, as at this day: to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and unto all Iſrael that are near, and that are far off, through all the countries whither thou haſt driven them, becauſe of their treſpaſs that they have treſpaſſed againſt thee. 8. O Lord, [k] to us belongeth confuſion of face, to our kings, to our princes, and to our fathers, becauſe we have ſinned againſt thee. 9. [l] To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgiveneſſes, though we have rebelled againſt him. 10. Neither have we obeyed the voice of the LORD our God, to walk in his laws which he ſet before us by his ſervants the prophets. 11. Yea, [m] all Iſrael have tranſgreſſed thy law, even by departing, that they might not obey thy voice, therefore the curſe is poured upon us, and the oath [n] that is written in the law of Moſes the ſervant of God, becauſe we have ſinned againſt him. 12. And [o] he hath confirmed his words which he ſpake againſt us, and againſt our judges that judged us, by bringing upon us a great evil: [p] for under the whole heaven hath not been done, as hath been done upon Jeruſalem. 13. [q] As it is written in the law of Moſes, all this evil is come upon us: [r] yet made we not our prayer before the LORD our God, that we might turn from our iniquities, and underſtand thy truth. 14. Therefore hath the LORD [s] watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us: for [t] the LORD our God is righteous in all his works which he doth: for we obeyed not his voice. 15. And now, O LORD our God, [u] that haſt brought thy people forth out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, and haſt gotten thee [x] renown as at this day: [y] we have ſinned, we have done wickedly. 16. ¶ O LORD, [z] according to all thy righteouſneſs, I beſeech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city Jeruſalem, [a] thy holy mountain: becauſe for our ſins, [b] and for the iniquities of our fathers, [c] Jeruſalem and thy people [d] are become a reproach to all that are about us. 17. Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy ſervant, and his ſupplications, [e] and cauſe thy face to ſhine upon thy ſanctuary [f] that is deſolate, [g] for the LORD's ſake. 18. [h] O my God, incline thine ear, and hear; open thine eyes, [i] and behold our deſolations, and the city [k] which is called by thy name: for we do not preſent our ſupplications before thee [l] for our righteouſneſſes, but for thy great mercies. 19. O LORD hear, O LORD forgive, O LORD hearken and do, defer not, [m] for thine own ſake, O my God: for thy city and thy people are called by thy name.

v. 4—19. We have here Daniel's effectual fervent prayer.

1. He opens with a moſt reverential addreſs to the great and dreadful God; terrible to the ſinner, and a conſuming fire, yet full of mercy towards thoſe who love and ſerve him, and faithful to all the promiſes of that everlaſting covenant he hath eſtabliſhed with them, v. 4.

2. He makes his humble confeſſion of ſin, the cauſe of all their ſufferings. They had provoked God by every poſſible aggravation of their iniquities; they had rebelled againſt him, rejected his government, broken all his precepts, poſitive and moral; and from the king upon the throne, to the meaneſt of the people, notwithſtanding their peculiar obligations, all had joined in the revolt, and were alike deaf to the admonitions of God's prophets, the corrections of his providences, and the threat-threatnings of his word: and this is repeatedly acknowledged, 9—11, 14. as the burden which lay on the prophet's heart, as it ever will on all true penitents, when they begin in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity to return to God.

3. He juſtifies God in the puniſhments inflicted upon them. God was righteous, and they could not in the leaſt except to his diſpenſations; heavy as his hand was upon them in all the countries of their diſperſion, it was leſs than their iniquities deſerved; and with confuſion of face they muſt bow into the duſt, and kiſs the rod that ſmote them; all from the king to the beggar, muſt join in the acknowledgment of God's juſtice, and take deepeſt ſhame to themſelves for their provocations, for they had the faireſt notice of the conſequences of their iniquities; nor could God, conſiſtent with the honour of his government, overlook ſuch flagrant offences: the curſe under which they groaned had been foretold by Moſes, and God's faithfulneſs was glorified in the infliction of it upon them, v. 11. Their ſufferings were ſingular as their crime, enough it might be thought to have long ſince bowed the moſt obdurate heart; but they had continued incorrigibly impenitent, never thought of returning to God; nay, they did not ſo much as direct one prayer to him to ſanctify their afflictions, or to remove his terrible indignation from them. No marvel therefore that he ſtill watched over them for evil. Note, (1.) In all our ſufferings, however ſevere, we muſt own God is righteous, and take to ourſelves deſerved ſhame. (2.) If ſinners continue incorrigible, God's wrath will abide upon them. (3.) In our anguiſh our firſt recourſe ſhould be to God in prayer.

4. Though the iniquities of the people were ſo inconteſtibly evident and aggravated, the prophet ſtill had recourſe to the divine mercy, v. 9. it was God's diſtinguiſhed glory, that to him belonged mercies and forgiveneſſes, his patience infinite, his compaſſions boundleſs: and this is the only hope of the miſerable ſinner, elſe he muſt for ever deſpair. Wondrous had been the inſtances of the divine interpoſition in time paſt; the fame of his delivering his people from Egypt, was to that day heard to his glory: what he had done before, therefore, the prophet hopes he will do again, and by delivering them now from Babylon, exalt yet more abundantly his own great name, and once more magnify his power and grace towards them, Jer. xvi. 14. As if to excite the Divine commiſeration, he ſpreads their preſent wretchedneſs before him; they were become the contempt of the heathen, and a reproach to the neighbouring nations; their holy city of Jeruſalem laid in ruins, and that once glorious ſanctuary, their boaſt and honour, now deſolate and profaned. Note, (1.) They who have made themſelves wicked, may expect that God will make them vile. (2.) Nothing afflicts the gracious heart ſo much as the deſolations of the ſanctuary, and the triumphs of the wicked over it.

5. He concludes with importunate ſupplications, urged with the greateſt vehemence and moſt engaging pleas. He founds all his hopes upon the covenant relation God yet ſtood in towards them, O our God; and therefore is emboldened to aſk, [1.] The forgiveneſs of their ſins, the cauſe of their calamities: and this is the ſinner's firſt concern, the pardon of his guilt being more deſirable than the removal of all his afflictions. [2.] He begs that he would turn away his wrath from Jeruſalem, under the dire tokens of which the city at preſent lay, and cauſe his face to ſhine upon the deſolate ſanctuary; reſtoring it from the ruins, ſetting up again his worſhip there, and favouring them once more with a ſenſe of his gracious preſence in the midſt of them. [3.] He entreats that the Lord would not defer their deliverance and recovery. They ſeemed at the laſt gaſp, and the time of the promiſe was now come, ſo that he could with faith plead for a preſent and immediate anſwer of peace; and he urges theſe his requeſts,

(1.) With an abſolute renunciation of any truſt and dependance on themſelves, as deſerving the leaſt notice or regard, v. 18. and this every humbled ſinner who approaches God unfeignedly doth.

(2.) With an entire dependance on God, drawing their pleas for mercy from the conſideration of his own glory. It muſt be for his own ſake, not theirs, v. 19. to magnify the riches of his grace; for the Lord's ſake, v. 17. the Lord Jeſus, the ſinner's atonement, righteouſneſs and advocate, in and thro' whom alone any covenant mercies can be beſtowed. His righteouſneſs, v. 16. would be herein diſplayed, when he ſhould execute vengeance on their cruel enemies, and prove his faithfulneſs to his promiſes; and his mercy, v. 18. would in the moſt eminent manner be evidenced, when thus exerciſed towards objects ſo utterly unworthy, and withal ſo exceedingly miſerable. And finally, the ſanctuary was his own, v. 17. and the city and people called by his name, v. 19. He had an intereſt therefore in their recovery and reſtoration; and they had, by virtue of their relation to him, a peculiar claim upon him, to help them, even for his own glory; the moſt effectual plea we can make in any of our prayers.

20. ¶ And [n] whiles I was ſpeaking, and praying, and confeſſing [o] my ſin, and the ſin of my people Iſrael, and preſenting my ſupplication before the LORD my God, for the holy mountain of my God: 21. Yea, whiles I was ſpeaking in prayer, even the man [p] Gabriel, whom I had ſeen in the viſion at the beginning, being cauſed to fly † ſwiftly, [q] touched me [r] about the time of the evening oblation. 22. And [s] he informed me, and talked with me, and ſaid, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee ſkill and underſtanding. 23. [t] At the beginning of thy ſupplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to ſhew thee; for [u] thou art ‡ greatly beloved: therefore underſtand the matter, and conſider the viſion. 24. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to § finiſh the tranſgreſſion, and to ‖ make an end of ſins, and [x] to make reconciliation for iniquity, and [y] to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs, and [z] to ſeal up the viſion and † prophecy, and [a] to anoint the moſt Holy. 25. [b] Know therefore and underſtand, that [c] from the going forth of the commandment to ‡ reſtore and to build Jeruſalem, unto the Meſſiah [d] the Prince, ſhall be ſeven weeks; and threeſcore and two weeks the ſtreet ſhall be built again, and the § wall, [e] even in troublous times. 26. And after threeſcore and two weeks [f] ſhall Meſſiah be cut off, [g] but not for himſelf: and the people of the prince that ſhall come, ſhall [h] deſtroy the city, and the ſanctuary, and [i] the end thereof ſhall be [k] with a flood, and unto the end of the war deſolations are determined. 27. (And [l] he ſhall confirm ‖ the covenant with many for one week: and in the midſt of the week he ſhall cauſe the ſacrifice and the oblation to ceaſe, and † for the overſpreading of [m] abominations, he ſhall make it deſolate, even until [n] the conſummation, and that determined ſhall be poured upon the ‡ deſolate.

v. 20—27. Very memorable is the anſwer here given to the prophet's prayer, and it contains one of the moſt remarkable prophecies of the Meſſiah which is to be found in the book of God. We have,

1. The time when this anſwer was given him, whilſt he was ſpeaking and praying; confeſſing his own ſins and thoſe of his people, and making ſupplication before God for pardon, and the reſtoration of God's ſanctuary. The hour he had choſen for theſe devotions, was that of the evening oblation, when the lamb was offered; which prefigured him who ſhould appear in the end of the world to take away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf, and for whoſe ſake this revelation was now made to the prophet. Note, (1.) God is pleaſed ſome times to return immediate and ſenſible anſwers to the prayers of his faithful people. (2.) Daniel, though ſo diſtinguiſhed a ſaint, does not approach God, but with the humiliation of a ſinner; the beſt of men are no better. Wo! to thoſe whoſe pride leads them to entertain higher conceits of their attainments.

2. The meſſenger is an angel, Gabriel, the mighty One of God, appearing in a human form, the ſame Daniel had ſeen before, chap. viii. 16. He came with haſte to deliver the meſſage on which he was ſent from on high, and touched him to engage his attention, and give him an intimation to deſiſt from prayer, and hearken to what he was about to deliver; talking familiarly with him, as a man with his friend, v. 22. He informs Daniel, that the moment he began to ſeek the Lord, the commandment came forth; either from the Lord, diſpatching him on his errand, or at that very time the proclamation for the Jews releaſe was ſigned by Cyrus. He lets him know how highly he was regarded of God; Thou art greatly beloved, or art deſires; exceeding amiable in the eyes of God and all his ſaints: and as the Lord intended to reveal to him his ſecrets, he muſt attend to, and conſider the following viſion. Note, (1.) Angels, though great in power and might, are but the ſervants of God's pleaſure, and miniſters to the heirs of ſalvation. (2.) God's ſaints are greatly beloved by him, and he makes them know it by the viſits of his grace; not to raiſe in them a conceit of themſelves, but to humble them under a ſenſe of their unworthineſs, and engage a large return of love and gratitude. (3.) They who would underſtand the things of God, muſt conſider them attentively and ſeriouſly.

3. The meſſage which he brought: Seventy weeks of years, as they are generally interpreted, containing 490 years, are determined upon thy people, and the holy city; ſo long God had decreed their polity ſhould laſt, or the moſt remarkable events concerning them ſhould fall within that ſpace of time; to finiſh the tranſgreſſion, and to make an end of ſins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs, and to ſeal up the viſion and prophecy, and to anoint the moſt Holy. Theſe are the grand matters which ſhall be tranſacted within that period by the Meſſiah, the hope of Iſrael: he came to finiſh tranſgreſſion, by taking upon himſelf the iniquities of his people, and thereby compleatly ſatisfying the juſtice of God on their behalf; that ſo he might be reconciled to them, no ſin be any longer imputed to them, no condemnation ever more be ſuffered to light upon them, but that their redemption ſhould be perfect and eternal, obtained by the oblation of his body once for all; and to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs, or the righteouſneſs of ages; that divine righteouſneſs, which in his own perſon, by his obedience to death, even the death of the croſs, he ſhould work out for his people; which ſhould be brought in for their uſe and benefit, imputed to them as their own; and in virtue of which, the redeemed in all ages ſtand juſtified before God, and are enabled to claim the reward of eternal life, which God hath promiſed to perfect obedience: and to ſeal up the viſion and prophecy, which ſhould receive their full accompliſhment in Chriſt Jeſus; and to anoint the moſt Holy, the Meſſiah; moſt holy both in his divine and human nature; and appointed to, and qualified for the office of mediator by that oil of gladneſs, the gift of the Spirit, which the Father without meaſure imparted to him. Though this may alſo be applied to the people of God, who have an unction from the Holy One, and are ſanctified by his ſpirit, which in the days of the Meſſiah ſhould be poured out in the moſt abundant manner. Know therefore and underſtand, that from the time of the going forth of the commandment to reſtore and to build Jeruſalem, unto Meſſiah the Prince, ſhall be ſeven weeks, and threeſcore and two weeks: this is the period fixed, from whence the ſeventy weeks are to be dated; which ſome ſuppoſe commenced from that very day of Cyrus's proclamation, and exactly ended at Chriſt's death; but in order to make the intermediate time correſpond herewith, they allow but 130 years to the Perſian monarchy; which, according to the beſt hiſtorians, continued more than two hundred: others, and which ſeems the more approved way of computing theſe weeks, ſuppoſe the commencement of the time not to be from Cyrus's permiſſion of the Jews to return, but from the edict of Artaxerxes, in his ſeventh year, Ez. vii. 8—12. or from that given to Nehemiah, in the twentieth year of his reign, Neh. xi. 1—8. wherein expreſs mention is made of rebuilding Jeruſalem; and this will make the expiration of the ſixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, fall juſt at the year thirty-three, being generally ſuppoſed the year of Chriſt's death. The dividing of the weeks into different periods of ſeven, threeſcore and two, and one, ſeems to have reſpect to the different events, peculiar to theſe ſeveral ſpaces of time. The firſt ſeven weeks, or forty-nine years, includes the troublous times when the city was rebuilding; during which Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geſhem, ſo oppoſed the work. And the like oppoſition may they expect who zealouſly ſtand up in every age to build the walls of Chriſt's church; but againſt them no enemy ſhall finally prevail. And after threeſcore and two weeks ſhall Meſſiah be cut off; at the expiration of 483 years; but not for himſelf, but for the ſins of his people, which were laid upon him: and the people of the prince that ſhall come, ſhall deſtroy the city and the ſanctuary, as the Roman emperor did with his armies; and the end thereof ſhall be with a flood, ſo irreſiſtibly ſhould they ſweep the land, and unto the end of the war deſolations are determined; from the beginning of the war to the end, God had in righteous judgment given the Jewiſh people up to be conſumed. And he ſhall confirm the covenant with many for one week: which, as ſome ſuppoſe, refers to Meſſiah the Prince, confirming the covenant of grace, and by his own oblation of himſelf putting a period to the ceremonial ſervices; but rather reſpects the prince of the Romans, who ſhould come, having for that purpoſe made peace with other nations, as he did, in order to be more diſengaged to wreak his vengeance on the Jews: and in the midſt of the week he ſhall cauſe the ſacrifice and the oblation to ceaſe; thro' the ſtraitneſs of the ſiege, the famine which prevailed, and the tumults which were in the city, before it was taken they had ceaſed to offer the daily ſacrifice; for the overſpreading of abominations, for the wickedneſs of the Jewiſh people, who had filled up the meaſure of their iniquities, he ſhall make it deſolate; God giving the land into the hand of the Romans: ſome read the words, upon the wing, or battlement, ſhall be the idols of the deſolator; the Roman enſigns, with their idols thereon pourtrayed, ſhould be fixed on the walls, or in the ſanctuary; even until the conſummation, and that determined ſhall be poured upon the deſolate; either theſe armies with their abominations ſhould beſiege the city, till the determined conſumption ſhould be made, and the land utterly deſolate, or theſe deſolations ſhould remain till the time prefixed in the Divine decree, when the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhould come in, Luke xxi. 24. Some render the words, upon the deſolator; meaning the Romans, who ſhould themſelves be at laſt cut off, and then the deſalations of Zion ſhall ceaſe.

This laſt week, according to the interpretation given, is ſeparated from the reſt, and the events contained in it, through the forbearance of God, deferred for a time, till about thirty years after the expiration of the ſixty-nine weeks. On the whole, we have here an irrefragable argument againſt the Jews, who reject the true Meſſiah; it being evident, according to theſe prophecies, that he muſt have appeared many hundred years ago; and all the things predicted of him, exactly correſponding with our adored Lord's appearing in the fleſh; we are aſſured that this is he that ſhould come, nor look for another.

CHAP. X.

This chapter and the two next (which conclude this book) make up one entire viſion and prophecy, which was communicated to Daniel for the uſe of the church, not by ſigns and figures as before, chap. vii. and viii. but by expreſs words; and this was about two years after the viſion in the foregoing chapter. This chapter ſhews us, 1. Daniel's ſolemn faſting and humiliation, ver. 1—3. 2. A glorious appearance of the Son of God, and the deep impreſſion it made upon him, ver. 4—9. 3. The encouragement that was given him to expect ſuch a diſcovery of future events, as ſhould be ſatisfactory and uſeful both to others and to himſelf; and that he ſhould be enabled both to underſtand the meaning of this diſcovery, though difficult, and to bear up under the luſtre of it, though dazzling and dreadful, ver. 10—21.

Before Chriſt 534.

1. IN the third year of Cyrus, king of Perſia, [a] a thing was revealed unto Daniel, ([b] whoſe name was called Belteſhazzar) and [c] the thing was true, but the time appointed was long, and [d] he underſtood the thing, and had underſtanding of the viſion. 2. In thoſe days I Daniel was [e] mourning three † full weeks. 3. I ate no ‡ pleaſant bread, [f] neither came fleſh nor wine in my mouth, neither did I anoint myſelf at all, till three whole weeks were fulfilled. 4. And in the four and twentieth day of the firſt month, as I was by the ſide of the great river, which is [g] Hiddekel: 5. Then I lift up mine eyes, and looked, and behold, [h] a certain man clothed in linen, whoſe loins were [i] girded with [k] fine gold of Uphaz: 6. His body alſo was like the beryl, and [l] his face as the appearance of lightning, [m] and his eyes as lamps of fire, and his arms, [n] and his feet like in colour to poliſhed braſs, [o] and the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude. 7. And I Daniel [p] alone ſaw the viſion, for the men that were with me ſaw not the viſion: but a great quaking fell upon them, ſo that they [q] fled to hide themſelves. 8. Therefore I was left alone, and ſaw this great viſion, [r] and there remained no ſtrength in me: for [s] my § comelineſs was turned in me into corruption, and I retained no ſtrength. 9. Yet heard I the voice of his words: and [t] when I heard the voice of his words, then was I in a deep ſleep on my face, and my face toward the ground.

v. 1—9. In the third year of Cyrus, this laſt of Daniel's prophecies bears date. He was now a very aged man, and high in God's favour, who revealed to him another ſcene of events, which would certainly come to paſs in their appointed ſeaſon; though the time was long, at the diſtance of three hundred years: and this viſion was not couched under any emblematical figures, as the former, but in direct words declared; ſo that he had a clear underſtanding of the facts related, and of the things that ſhould come to paſs.

We have an account,

1. Of the ſituation in which the prophet was when this viſion appeared to him: he had been mourning three full weeks, and ate no pleaſant bread; what he uſed was coarſe as well as ſcanty; he neither taſted fleſh nor wine, nor anointed himſelf during the whole time, but ſpent it in deep humiliation of ſoul and body before the Lord. The cauſe, ſome ſuggeſt, was the wickedneſs of the Jews he had foreſeen in cutting off the Meſſiah, and the deſolations which would follow: or, as others, the backwardneſs of many in Babylon to return to Jeruſalem; or the obſtruction and difficulties they met with who were returned to Judea. But whatever was the cauſe, it ſhewed the mortified ſpirit of this holy ſaint of God, and the concern he bore towards his people.

2. A glorious perſonage appears to him: he was by the river Hiddekel, with others probably aſſembled for the purpoſes of devotion, when lifting up his eyes, he ſaw a man, the man Chriſt Jeſus, who in the fulneſs of time ſhould become incarnate: he was cloathed in ſacerdotal garments of linen, as the great high prieſt of our profeſſion, in ſpotleſs innocence, girt with a girdle of the gold of Uphaz; intimating his own excellence and perfection, and his readineſs to fulfil the work which was given him to do: his body was like the beryl, beautiful and poliſhed; his countenance bright as the lightning, and full of awful majeſty, and his eyes ſhone as lamps of fire, piercing into the ſecrets of the ſoul, and ſpeaking terror to his enemies: his arms and feet like poliſhed braſs, denoted his almighty power and ſtability to uphold his church and people, and tread down their foes; and his voice like the voice of a multitude, loud and heard afar off; the voice of his judgments, and eſpecially of his goſpel. Juſt in the ſame manner he afterwards appeared to John, Rev. i. 13—15.

3. This glorious perſon was viſible to him, but not to thoſe who were with him; yet they heard and ſaw enough to fill them with deep conſternation, ſo that they fled to hide themſelves, whilſt Daniel remained alone before the Lord, and overwhelmed with the brightneſs of his glory, he fell into a ſwoon at his feet, pale as death, and his ſtrength utterly gone; ſo unable are the beſt of men, in this frail ſtate of mortality, to bear the diſco-

veries of the Divine glory: yet, though proſtrate on the ground, and his bodily ſenſes locked up in ſleep, he heard the voice of his words; the Lord having other ways of conveying his mind to us than through the organs of ſenſe; he can ſpeak immediately to the ſoul.

10. ¶ And [u] behold, an hand touched me, which ſet me upon my knees, and upon the palms of my hands. 11. v. 10—21. From this debilitated ſtate of body, the prophet is by degrees reſtored, and raiſed up to hear the words of the viſion.

1. An hand touched me, not the hand of Chriſt, but one of his miniſtring ſervants in a human form, v. 16. and raiſed him upon his hands and knees, then bid him ſtand upright, which he did, though ſtill trembling, v. 11. Thus the Lord raiſes up dejected ſouls from the depths of deſpair; a beam of hope and comfort firſt breaks in: improving the little ſtrength God beſtows, they begin to ſtand up; yet notwithſtanding, their fears and doubts for a while ſtill keep them trembling.

2. The angel kindly encourages him: he aſſures him of God's great regard to him, v. 11. bids him not fear, v. 12. but receive with attention what he was about to declare to him, v. 11. for God had heard his ſupplications from the moment he began to ſpeak, had reſpect unto his humiliations, and had ſent on purpoſe to inform him of what ſhould befal his people in the latter days; in the days of Antiochus: and the prophecy extends alſo to more diſtant events, even to the reign of Antichriſt, the reſurrection of the dead, and the end of time; for the viſion is for many days. The angel farther informs him, that he was detained in the court of Perſia one and twenty days, the time of Daniel's mourning, to counteract the devices of the prince of the kingdom of Perſia, either Cambyſes, or rather an evil angel, who had been endeavouring at the court of Perſia to do ſome miſchief to the people of God; but the enemy was diſappointed, for Michael, a chief archangel, or rather the prince of angels, the Lord Jeſus, came to Gabriel's help, ſtrengthened him to diſappoint the deſigns that were forming; for which end he had abode ſo long with the king and nobles of Perſia. Note, (1.) A ſenſe of God's love to our ſouls, is the grand barrier againſt terrifying fear. (2.) The moment God's people begin to ſpeak, his ear is attentive to their prayers, and ready to grant their petitions. (3.) Whatever plots devils or men form againſt Chriſt's people, he is able to baffle their attempts, and ſave his choſen from the power of evil. (4.) Though we need not pry curiouſly into the nature and employment of angels, much leſs pay them adoration, we may be thankful to the prince who employs them, for unnumbered kind offices we owe them, when ourſelves were not apprehenſive of the leaſt danger.

3. The prophet, though raiſed upon his feet, with downcaſt eyes, dumb with amazement and reverential awe, ſtood ſtatue-like and motionleſs at theſe words, till the ſame kind hand that raiſed him from the duſt, touched his lips, and gave him liberty of ſpeech: when, with deepeſt reſpect addreſſing the heavenly meſſenger, the prophet owns his terrors, and acknowledges their cauſe. The viſion had overpowered him, conſcious of his own defilement and impurity; for ſaith he, How can the ſervant of this my lord, I who am but duſt and aſhes, talk with this, or, that my lord; the glorious perſonage who had appeared to him, and probably ſtill was near him: no marvel his ſtrength failed him, and that his breath even now ſcarce ſufficed to tell his fears, v. 17. Note, (1.) A ſenſe of the infinite diſtance between a holy God and a ſinful worm, ſhould juſtly overwhelm us with reverential awe, and make us own when we approach him, how unable we are to order our ſpeech, by reaſon of darkneſs. (2.) Till God, by the effectual hand of his grace, touch our lips and looſe the ſtring of our tongue, we can neither ſpeak of him nor to him aright.

4. To remove all his fears, the third time the angelic meſſenger drew near, and by a touch communicated ſtrength, both to the prophet's body and mind, that he might be capable of converſing with him, and attending to the meſſage he was ſent to bring him. To remove all his fears, the angel repeats the aſſurances of God's love; encourages him to reſume his wonted peace; wiſhes him all proſperity in body and ſoul; bids him be ſtrong in the Lord and the power of his might, and caſt away every diſtreſſing apprehenſion, ſince God ſo highly regarded him. Power accompanied his word; and Daniel, now ſenſible of an increaſe of ſtrength, and acknowledging the favour, is ready, with deepeſt reſpect, to hear whatever his honoured viſitant ſhall ſay. Note, (1.) God ſpeaks peace to the troubled conſciences of his people, and by his ſpirit ſeals the word in their hearts. (2.) Though we of ourſelves are weak as infancy, we can do all things through Chriſt ſtrengthening us.

5. He gives him in general a hint of what he more fully explains afterwards. Then ſaid he, Knoweſt thou wherefore I am come unto thee? it was, as he had told him, in anſwer to his prayers, and to inform him concerning his people, v. 12, 14. and now will I return to fight with the prince of Perſia; to continue to baffle his malice againſt the people of God: and when I am gone forth, having finiſhed his work ſucceſsfully, lo! the prince of Grecia ſhall come; under the Grecian monarchy, which ſhould ſucceed the Perſian, the ſame evil ſpirit would ſeek to raiſe up a ſpirit of perſecution againſt the Jewiſh people, eſpecially by means of Antiochus. But I will ſhew thee that which is noted in the ſcripture of truth, in the decrees of God, concerning theſe future events: and there is none that holdeth with me in theſe things, but Michael your prince; even Chriſt, the prince and head of his church, by whoſe upholding ſtrength the miniſtry of his ſervants becomes effectual, and who will be the everlaſting protector and defender of his people, from all the malice and enmity of earth or hell.

CHAP. XI.

The angel Gabriel in this chapter performs his promiſe. Here is a prediction, 1. Of the ſetting up of the Grecian upon the ruins of the Perſian monarchy, ver. 1—4. 2. Of the affairs of the two kingdoms of Egypt and Syria, with reference to each other, ver. 5—20. 3. Of the riſe of Antiochus Epiphanes, and his actions and ſucceſſes, ver. 21—29. 4. Of the great miſchief he ſhould do to the Jewiſh church and nation, and his contempt of all religion, ver. 30—39. 5. Of his ruin at laſt, when in the heat of his purſuit, ver. 40—45.

1. ALSO I, [a] in the firſt year of [b] Darius the Mede, even I ſtood to confirm and to ſtrengthen him.

v. 1. This firſt verſe properly belongs to the foregoing chapter, and declares how inſtrumental Gabriel had been already in furthering the reſtoration of the Jewiſh people: he ſtood to confirm and ſtrengthen Darius as ſoon as he had aſcended the throne, in conjunction with Cyrus, in his purpoſe of releaſing the captive Jews, when probably many oppoſed it. God's people have friends they often little think of, and more and mightier are with them, than can be againſt them.

2. And now will I ſhew thee the truth, Behold, there ſhall ſtand up yet three kings in Perſia, and the fourth ſhall be far richer than they all: and by his ſtrength [c] through his riches he ſhall ſtir up all againſt the realm of Grecia. 3. And [d] a mighty king ſhall ſtand up, that ſhall rule with great dominion, and do according to his will. 4. And when he ſhall ſtand up, [e] his kingdom ſhall be broken, and ſhall be divided toward the four winds of heaven; [f] and not to his poſterity, rity, [g] nor according to his dominion which he ruled: for his kingdom ſhall be pluckt up, even for others beſides thoſe.

v. 2—4. The angel, as he had promiſed, here leads the prophet into futurity.

1. He begins with the Perſian monarchy, which had juſt ariſen: three others ſhould ſucceed Darius, then on the throne; Cyrus, his ſon Cambyſes, and Darius Hyſtaſpes; a fourth, richer than all the reſt, ſhould ariſe, Xerxes, who by his ſtrength and riches ſhould ſtir up all his own provinces and confederates, to raiſe an army the moſt numerous that probably was ever aſſembled, in order to invade the Grecian territories. Of which expedition heathen hiſtorians are full, and of his ſhameful defeat.

2. He paſſes on to the Grecian monarchy: to avenge this attack, a mighty king ſhould ariſe, even Alexander, and having ſubdued the Perſian empire, ſhould ſet up his own deſpotic throne, and govern with abſolute ſway: but his kingdom muſt be quickly broken and divided, not among his poſterity, none of whom ſucceeded him, but among others, his four great generals; who neither ruled ſuch extenſive dominions, nor with ſo abſolute a ſway as Alexander had alone. So poor and tranſitory are human poſſeſſions: he that layeth up riches, cannot tell who ſhall gather them.

5. ¶ And the king of the ſouth ſhall be ſtrong, and one of his princes, and he ſhall be ſtrong above him, and have dominion: his dominion ſhall be a great dominion.
6. And in the end of years they ſhall † join themſelves together; for the king's daughter of the ſouth ſhall come to the king of the north to make an agreement:
but ſhe ſhall not retain the power of the arm, neither ſhall he ſtand, nor his arm; but ſhe ſhall be given up, and they that brought her, and ‡ he that begat her, and he that ſtrengthned her in theſe times. 7. But out of a branch of her root ſhall one ſtand up in his § eſtate, which ſhall come with an army, and ſhall enter into the fortreſs of the king of the north, and ſhall deal againſt them, and ſhall prevail: 8. And ſhall alſo carry captives into Egypt [h] their gods, with their princes, and with ‖ their precious veſſels of ſilver and of gold, and he ſhall continue more years than the king of the north.
9. So the king of the ſouth ſhall come into his kingdom, and ſhall return into his own land. 10. But his ſons † ſhall be ſtirred up, and ſhall aſſemble a multitude of great forces: and one ſhall certainly come, [i] and overflow, and paſs through: then ſhall he ‡ return, and be ſtirred up, [k] even to his fortreſs. 11. And the king of the ſouth ſhall be moved with choler, and ſhall come forth and fight with him, even with the king of the north: and he ſhall ſet forth a great multitude, but the multitude ſhall be given into his hand. 12. And when he hath taken away the multitude [l] his heart ſhall be lifted up, and he ſhall caſt down many ten thouſands:
but he ſhall not be ſtrengthned by it. 13. For the king of the north ſhall return, and ſhall ſet forth a multitude greater than the former, and ſhall certainly come (§ after certain years) with a great army and with much riches. 14. And in thoſe times there ſhall many ſtand up againſt the king of the ſouth: alſo ‖ the robbers of thy people ſhall exalt themſelves to eſtabliſh the viſion, but they ſhall fall. 15. So the king of the north ſhall come, and caſt up a mount, [m] and take the moſt fenced cities, and the arms of the ſouth ſhall not withſtand, neither his choſen people, neither ſhall there be any ſtrength to withſtand. 16. But he that cometh againſt him, [n] ſhall do according to his own will, and none ſhall ſtand before him: and he ſhall ſtand in the † glorious land, which by his hand ſhall be conſumed. 17.
He ſhall alſo ſet his face to enter with the ſtrength of his whole kingdom, and ‡ upright ones with him:
thus ſhall he do, and he ſhall give him the daughter of women corrupting her: but ſhe ſhall not ſtand on his ſide, neither be for him. 18. After this ſhall he turn his face unto the iſles, and ſhall take many:
but a prince for his own behalf ſhall cauſe § the reproach offered by him to ceaſe; without his own reproach he ſhall cauſe it [o] to turn upon him. 19. Then he ſhall turn his face towards the fort of his own land: but he ſhall ſtumble and fall, [p] and not be found. 20. Then ſhall ſtand up in his ‖ eſtate † a raiſer of taxes in the glory of the kingdom; but within few days he ſhall be deſtroyed, neither in ‡ anger, nor in battle.

v. 5—20. The angel proceeds with the account of thoſe events in two of theſe divided kingdoms, with which the people of the Jews were more nearly concerned. He foretels,

1. That two kingdoms ſhall ariſe: The king of the ſouth, Ptolemy Lagus, ſhall be ſtrong, reigning over Egypt, Libya, Cyrene, Ethiopia, Arabia, Phœnicia, Cœlo-Syria, Cyprus, ſeveral iſlands in the Ægean ſea, and divers cities in Greece; and one of his princes, of Alexander's captains, Seleucus Nicanor, or the conqueror, the king of Syria, ſhall be ſtrong above him, being the moſt powerful of the ſucceſſors of Alexander, and poſſeſſing the largeſt dominions. By theſe two kingdoms the Jewiſh people were by turns miſerably harraſſed.

2. An attempt ſhould be made, after ſome years, to unite theſe kingdoms by marriage: Antiochus Theos, the third king of Syria, marrying Berenice, the daughter of Ptolemy Philadelphus, in order thereby to put an end to the wars, wherewith the two kingdoms had been harraſſed; but the deſign would prove abortive; ſhe ſhall not retain the power of the arm: on the death of her father, Antiochus diſmiſſed Berenice, and took his former wife Laodice, whom he had divorced; neither ſhall he ſtand, nor his arm; Laodice getting Antiochus poiſoned, and Berenice, with all her Egyptian attendants, and her infant ſon, whom ſhe brought forth, as it is in the margin, inſtead of him that begat her, being given up to Callimicus, Laodice's ſon, were murdered, and he that ſtrengthened her in theſe times; her brother, who ſet out to her aſſiſtance, came too late.

3. A war hereupon will enſue. A branch from the ſame root, Ptolemy Evergetes, Berenice's brother, to revenge his ſiſter's death, ſhall invade Syria, defeat Callimicus, ſeize his fortreſſes, plunder his country, and return laden with priſoners and ſpoil into Egypt; whither he was recalled by a ſedition, which prevented him from entirely ſubduing the kingdom of the Seleucidæ. He ſhould continue longer than the king of the north, ſurviving him, as Dr. Prideaux remarks, about four years.

4. The ſons of Seleucus Callimicus, Ceraunus and Antiochus, ſhall raiſe a vaſt army to recover what their father had loſt: and one of them, Antiochus, whoſe brother was murdered or poiſoned, having now the ſole command, marched his army againſt the king of Egypt, bearing down at firſt all before him; overunning Cœlo-Syria, and part of Arabia, and laying ſiege to the fortreſs of Raphia on his return, v. 10. There the king of Egypt, exaſperated by his ravages, met him with his army. The forces of both the combatants, according to Polybius, were prodigious, and a bloody battle was fought; in which the army of Antiochus was utterly routed, and vaſt multitudes ſlain and taken priſoners, v. 11. Elated with this victory, the Egyptian monarch's heart was filled with pride, and forcing his way into the temple, he offered ſacrifice in the holieſt of all for his ſucceſs. But though he had caſt down ſo many thouſands, he was not ſtrengthened by it; neglecting to improve his advantages, and returning in ſecurity to the enjoyment of his pleaſures, v. 12. Dying about fourteen years after, Antiochus took advantage of the minority of his infant ſon Ptolemy Epiphanes, and raiſing a larger army than before, and collecting vaſt wealth, invaded the kingdom of Egypt, v. 13. and was ſeconded in the attempt by many powerful allies: among the reſt a lawleſs band of Jewiſh banditti, taking advantage of the feeble ſtate of Egypt, ſought to eſtabliſh the viſion, and help forward its accompliſhment by their inroads, but they ſhall fall. Some interpret this of the apoſtates, who had joined the king of Egypt, but were cut off by Antiochus when he took Jeruſalem, v. 14. Advancing with his army, the king of Syria beſieged and took the fenced cities of Phœnicia and Cœlo-Syria; and after defeating Scopas, the Egyptian general, Ptolemy was unable to make head againſt him, v. 15. But at his will the conqueror ravaged the country without oppoſition, and the Jews voluntarily ſubmitting, he ſtood in the glorious land, which his numerous forces eat up and conſumed; or, by his hand it was perfected; they being taken under his protection, and on account of their ready ſurrender, obtaining many privileges, v. 16. Puſhing on his ambitious deſigns, he purpoſed entring Egypt with all his forces; among which were many Jews, the upright ones: and under a pretence of alliance, giving his beautiful daughter Cleopatra in marriage to Ptolemy, he thought by corrupting her to induce her to betray her huſband; but his politicks deceived him, for ſhe took part with her huſband, and diſappointed his hopes, v. 17. Hereupon he turned his arms to the iſles in the Ægean ſea; many of which he took. But the Romans, whom he inſulted by invading their allies, and treating their ambaſſadors with contempt, ſtopped his career, and after many ſhameful defeats, obliged him to quit Leſſer Aſia, pay all the expences of the war, and give his own ſon for an hoſtage. Thus the reproach he had caſt on them, was turned upon himſelf, v. 18. Retiring now to his own land, probably to Antioch, his capital, he ſet himſelf to collect the money, ſtipulated by treaty to be paid to the Romans; in order to which, he attempted to rob the the temple of Jupiter at Elymais: but the people, exaſperated, roſe and ſlew him, v. 19. His ſon Philopator ſucceeded him, a raiſer of taxes, obliged to oppreſs his people to levy the tribute impoſed on his father by the Romans. His reign laſted not many years, and he fell not in anger or in battle, but by poiſon, thro' the treachery of Heliodorus his treaſurer, v. 20. So paſſing are the kingdoms of this world; bleſſed be God for that which never fadeth away, where no wars diſturb, nor enemies enter; but an eternal reſt remaineth for the people of God.

21. And in his eſtate [q] ſhall ſtand up a vile perſon, to whom they ſhall not give the honour of the kingdom:
but he ſhall come in peaceably, and [r] obtain the kingdom by flatteries. 22. And [s] with the arms of a flood ſhall [t] they be overflown from before him, and ſhall be broken; [u] yea, alſo the prince of the covenant. 23.
And after the league made with him, he ſhall work deceitfully; for he ſhall come up, and ſhall become ſtrong 171.
with a ſmall people. 24. He ſhall enter † peaceably even upon the fatteſt places of the province, and he ſhall do that which his fathers have not done, nor his fathers fathers, [x] he ſhall ſcatter among them the prey and ſpoil, and riches: yea, and he ſhall [y] forecaſt his devices againſt the ſtrong-holds, even for a time. 25.
And he ſhall ſtir up his power and his courage againſt 170.
the king of the ſouth with a great army, and the king of the ſouth ſhall be ſtirred up to battle with a very great and mighty army; but he ſhall not ſtand: for they ſhall forecaſt devices againſt him. 26. Yea, they that feed of the portion of his meat, ſhall deſtroy him, and his army ſhall overflow: and many ſhall fall down ſlain. 27. And both theſe kings hearts ſhall be to do 169.
miſchief, and they ſhall [z] ſpeak lies at one table; [a] but it ſhall not proſper: for [b] yet the end ſhall be at the 168. time appointed. 28. Then ſhall he return into his land with great riches, and [c] his heart ſhall be againſt the holy covenant: and he ſhall do exploits, and return to his own land. 29. At the time appointed he ſhall return, and come toward the ſouth, but it ſhall not be [d] as the former, or [e] as the latter. 30. ¶ For [f] the ſhips of Chittim ſhall come againſt him: therefore he ſhall be grieved and return, and have indignation [g] againſt the holy covenant: ſo ſhall he do, he ſhall even return, [h] and have intelligence with them that forſake the holy covenant. 31. And arms ſhall ſtand on his part, and [i] they ſhall pollute the ſanctuary of ſtrength, and ſhall take away the daily ſacrifice, [k] and they ſhall place the abomination that ‡ maketh deſolate. 32. [l] And ſuch as do wickedly againſt the covenant, ſhall he corrupt by flatteries: but [m] the people that do know their God, ſhall be ſtrong, and do exploits. 33. And [n] they that underſtand among the people, ſhall inſtruct many: yet they ſhall fall by the ſword, and by flame, by captivity and by ſpoil many days. 34. Now when they ſhall fall, [o] they ſhall be holpen with a little help: [p] but many ſhall cleave to them with flatteries. 35. And ſome of them of underſtanding ſhall fall, [q] to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, [r] even to the time of the end: [s] becauſe it is yet for a time appointed. 36. And the king ſhall do according to his will, and he ſhall exalt himſelf, [t] and magnify himſelf above every god, [u] and ſhall ſpeak marvellous things [x] againſt the God of gods, and ſhall proſper [y] till the indignation be accompliſhed: for that that is determined, ſhall be done. 37. Neither ſhall he regard the god of his fathers, [z] nor the deſire of women, [a] nor regard any god: for he ſhall magnify himſelf above all. 38. But in his eſtate ſhall he honour the God of § forces: and a god whom his fathers knew not, ſhall he honour with gold and ſilver, and with precious ſtones, and pleaſant things. 39. Thus ſhall he do in the ‖ moſt ſtrong-holds with a ſtrange god, whom he ſhall acknowledge and increaſe with glory: and he ſhall cauſe them to rule over many, and ſhall divide the land for † gain. 40. And [b] at the time of the end ſhall the king of the ſouth puſh at him, and the king of the north ſhall come againſt him like a whirlwind, with chariots, [c] and with horſemen, and with many ſhips, and he ſhall enter into the countries, [d] and ſhall overflow and paſs over. 41. He ſhall enter alſo into the ‡ glorious land, and many countries ſhall be overthrown: but theſe ſhall eſcape out of his hand, [e] even Edom, and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon. 42 He ſhall ſtretch forth his hand
alſo upon the countries, and the land of Egypt ſhall not eſcape. 43. But he ſhall have power over the treaſures of gold, and of ſilver, and over all the precious things of Egypt: and the Libyans, and the Ethiopians ſhall be at his ſteps. 44. But tidings out of the eaſt, and out of the north ſhall trouble him: therefore he ſhall go forth with great fury to deſtroy, and utterly to make away many. 45. And he ſhall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the ſeas in [f] the § glorious holy mountain; [g] yet he ſhall come to his end, [h] and none ſhall help him.

v. 21—45. We have here a long prophecy concerning Antiochus Epiphanes, the ſucceſſor of Seleucus Philopater, and the inveterate perſecutor of the Jewiſh people.

1. He is deſcribed as a vile perſon. He had been a hoſtage at Rome, and by his immoralities, debaucheries, and extravagancies, had rendered himſelf deſpicable, and gained the title of Epimanes the madman, though on his coming to the crown he aſſumed that of Epiphanes the illuſtrious.

2. By fraud he gained the crown of Syria: none ever thought of advancing him to the throne; but pretending only to take the adminiſtration, on the death of his brother, till his brother's ſon, who was an hoſtage at Rome, ſhould return to his kingdom, he met with no oppoſition. But when he had once ſeized the reins, he reſolved to keep them: by flatteries and preſents he won the nobles and citizens to eſpouſe his cauſe, and prevailed on Eumenes, the king of Pergamus, and Attalus, to aſſiſt him againſt the uſurper Heliodorus, v. 1. whom he utterly routed with his forces, and entering Judea, depoſed Onias the prieſt, the prince of the covenant; though others think this refers to Demetrius, the lawful heir of Syria, to whom he was under an engagement to reſign the kingdom, v. 22. but by his cunning got him detained at Rome; till, with a ſmall body of adherents, he poſſeſſed himſelf of all the fortreſſes and principal cities of Syria, and, by his munificence, ſtrongly attached his followers to his intereſts, v. 23, 24. Some however ſuppoſe this refers to Ptolemy Philometor, whoſe friend and guardian he pretended to be; and entering Egypt with a ſmall but faithful band, he ſeized the ſtrong-holds of Egypt, and thus got the power of the kingdom into his hands. This was his firſt expedition into Egypt, 1 Mac. i. 18. he afterwards entered it in a more hoſtile way, 2 Mac. v. 1. defeated Ptolemy, who oppoſed him, and over-ran the country, the king of Egypt being betrayed by his courtiers and general, v. 26. On this a treaty of peace was ſet on foot, and both the kings meeting at one table, either as friends at an entertainment, or in conſultation, as if deſigning to eſtabliſh firm peace and amity, endeavoured to impoſe on each other, neither intending to obſerve the terms of their agreement, and at the time appointed by the Divine Providence, the war broke out afreſh, v. 27.

In his return from Egypt, laden with ſpoils, he took Jeruſalem in his way, and hating the Jews for their covenant-relation to God, v. 28. and being provoked by ſome commotions in his abſence, he maſſacred eighty thouſand, men, women, and children; and as many more he led captive or ſold; entered the temple, plundered it of all its veſſels, and adding theſe to the ſpoils of Egypt, arrived at Antioch, 2 Mac. v. 5—21. Note, The peculiarities of God's people, and his diſtinguiſhing love to them, provoke the world's hatred againſt them.

A third war with Egypt enſued: Antiochus again invaded the land, but his ſucceſs was not at all anſwerable to his former expeditions, v. 29. The Romans eſpouſing the cauſe of Ptolemy, ſent their ambaſſadors, commanding him to retire, on peril of their declaring war againſt him; which, though reluctantly, he was obliged to do; and not being able to accompliſh his deſigns upon Egypt, reſolved to wreak his vengeance on the Jews, as he did moſt inhumanly, being aſſiſted by many apoſtates, who had forſaken the God of Iſrael, ſuch as Jaſon, Menelaus, and others, See 1 Mac. i. 11—15. Note, Apoſtates from the truth are uſually the bittereſt perſecutors. Having the power in his hand, and armies at his beck, he entered the ſanctuary, polluted it with every abomination, prohibited the daily ſacrifice, ſet up an idol in the temple, and dedicated it to Jupiter Olympius, 2 Mac, vi. 2.

To court the favour of the tyrant, many of the wicked Jews conſented to abandon their profeſſion of the true religion, and worſhipped idols, v. 32. for they whoſe lives are wrong, muſt needs be deſtitute of true principles, and ready to embrace any religion which promiſes them moſt advantage. But the faithful were alike proof againſt flattery and threatning, and dared endure the ſevereſt torments, 1 Mac. i. 63—66. 2 Mac. vii. Whilſt compelled by deſpair, ſome took to arms, and, under their valiant leader Judas Maccabæus, did great exploits, v. 32. In theſe days of fearful apoſtacy, they who knew God, by their inſtructions, and their examples of patient ſuffering, zealouſly inſtructed their brethren; but they were perſecuted to death, ſome ſlain with the ſword, others burnt, others enſlaved, and their ſubſtance plundered. This perſecution laſted during three years and a half, v. 33. when the noble efforts of the Maccabees obtained a little reſpite, v. 34. with whom many of the apoſtate Jews joined, when they appeared victorious; but they received the puniſhment of their perfidy, See 2 Mac. xii. 40. To try the faith and patience of the ſaints, and to brighten their crown, ſome of them alſo were ſuffered to fall into great affliction, 1 Mac. i. 60, 61. for this furnace is often needful for God's deareſt children, and they are brought into it to purge away their remaining droſs: but however great the ſufferings of the faithful may be, there is a time appointed for their end, v. 35.

The following verſes many good interpreters ſuppoſe to refer not to Antiochus, but to the Romans, particularly to the power of the papal Antichriſt, of which Antiochus was the figure. Thus the pope aſſumes deſpotic power, v. 36. diſpenſing with the laws of God and man, depoſing princes, &c. and exalteth himſelf above every God, either angels or civil magiſtrates, See 2 Theſ. ii. 4. ſpeaking great ſwelling words of blaſphemy, and proſpering till the period of his uſurpations ſhall end, See Rev. xi. 2, 3. xiii. 5. forbidding marriage, v. 37. and ſhewing an utter diſregard of God and his ordinances; ſetting up Mahuzzim, departed ſaints and angels, as guardians and protectors, and worſhipping them, v. 38. paying adoration to a breaden god, or conſecrated wafer, with great pageantry of worſhip; erecting the images of Mahuzzim in the temples, and the people aſcribe divine honours to them, and take them for patrons, as St. George for England, &c. and the pope makes gain of their ſuperſtition, v. 39. From the ſouth and north, at the time appointed, the Turks and Saracens came, and ſpread deſolation over part of this antichriſtian empire, v. 40. The glorious land of Judea alſo fell into their poſſeſſion, with many other countries; Moab and Edom, with Ammon, only eſcape, ſuppoſed to ſignify Arabia, which is ſtill independent of the Turkiſh government, v. 41. Egypt, with its treaſures, are poſſeſſed by them, v. 42, 43. and the Libyans and Ethiopians at their command; till in future times ſome powers from the eaſt and north ſhall ſpread an alarm in the Ottoman empire, and the Turks ſhall aſſemble their forces, v. 44, 45. and pitch their tents in the land of Judea, where they ſhall utterly be deſtroyed, See Ezek. xxviii. xxix. In this way many interpret the prophecy; but I rather incline to thoſe who reſer the whole to Antiochus, whoſe pride, inſolence, and blaſphemies were notorious. He regarded no God; ſet himſelf above them; introduced new deities; in his brutal executions made no diſtinction of age or ſex, but murdered women and infants. In the fortreſs of the temple he erected the ſtrange god Jupiter, honoured him with gold and ſilver, cauſed his prieſts to bear rule, and gave them a rich revenue out of the land, v. 39. doing juſt as he pleaſed, till the time appointed of God came to ſtop his mad career.

On ſome attack of Ptolemy, v. 40. Antiochus once more with fury marched againſt him, ſweeping the countries which lay in his way, particularly the land of Judea, whilſt Moab, Edom, and Ammon eſcaped his ravages, v. 40. Egypt was plundered, the treaſures carried off, and the Libyans and Aſſyrians favoured this invaſion. But in the midſt of his ſucceſſes, the tidings of the revolt of the Perſians and Parthians, v. 44. called him back to Syria; and in a rage at the diſappointment, and the embarraſſment of his affairs, to which the Jews had contributed, he threatned to exterminate them; but when he thought of gratifying his full revenge, God ſmote him, See chap. viii. 25. and he died miſerably, v 45. So will God in the time of need interpoſe for his people; and, however their enemies may ſeem for a while to prevail, they ſhall be rooted out at laſt.

CHAP. XII.

After the prediction of the troubles of the Jews under Antiochus, prefiguring the troubles of the Chriſtian church under the antichriſtian power, we have here, 1. Comforts for the ſupport of God's people in thoſe times of trouble, ver. 1—4. 2. A conference between Chriſt and an angel, concerning the time of the continuance of theſe events, ver. 5—7. 3. Daniel's enquiry for his own ſatisfaction, ver. 8. and the anſwer he received to that enquiry, ver. 9—13.

1. AND at that time ſhall [a] Michael ſtand up, the great prince which ſtandeth for the children of thy people, [b] and there ſhall be a time of trouble, ſuch as never was ſince there was a nation, even to that ſame time: and at that time thy people ſhall be delivered, [c] every one that ſhall be found written in [d] the book. 2.
And many of [e] them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth
ſhall awake, [f] ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to ſhame, [g] and everlaſting contempt. 3. And [h] they that be † wiſe, [i] ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament, and [k] they that turn many to righteouſneſs, [l] as the ſtars for ever and ever. 4. [m] But thou, O Daniel, [n] ſhut up the words, and ſeal the book, even to the time of the end: many ſhall run to and fro, and [o] knowledge ſhall be increaſed.

v. 1—4. When the troubles of God's people are at their height, the power and grace of their Redeemer ſhall be the more magnified in their deliverance.

1. Chriſt, the great Prince, ſhall ſtand up in the time of great tribulation; either to ſave the Jews from the perſecutions of Antiochus; or to ſave his church from the antichriſtian tyranny; or at the great day, when he ſhall come to compleat the redemption of his people, and to execute final vengeance on their enemies, when all that are written among the righteous, and found in the book of life of the Lamb, ſhall be delivered from the power of evil for ever.

2. In this great day of the appearing of our God and Saviour, an awful diſtinction will be made between the perſons who ſhall awake from the duſt of death; ſome of them ariſing to everlaſting life, while others, who died impenitent, ſhall awake to ſhame and everlaſting contempt; which would be a glorious encouragement for the ſufferers under the perſecution of Antiochus, See Heb. xi. 35. as it is to all the ſuffering ſaints of God to the end of time.

3. The reward of the faithful will then be great. The wiſe, who know and believe in Jeſus to the ſaving of their ſouls, deep read in their own ſinful ſtate, and the ſufficiency of the Redeemer's blood and righteouſneſs; theſe ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament, perfectly holy, and happy, and glorious as their Lord; and they that turn many to righteouſneſs, the miniſters of the goſpel, and others who laboured for this bleſſed purpoſe, to bring men to the knowledge of a Redeemer's righteouſneſs, as the alone ground of their acceptance with God, and to convert their ſouls to the love and practice of holineſs, they ſhall ſhine as the ſtars for ever and ever, with undiminiſhed luſtre through the ages of eternity. A powerful engagement this, to thoſe who are put in truſt with the goſpel, to labour with fidelity and zeal in the bleſſed cauſe, when every ſoul converted by their miniſtry ſhall add a jewel to their crown.

4. Daniel is commanded to ſeal up the book unto the time of the end; either he was to keep the viſion ſecret, or it would not be underſtood or regarded till the times of trial came, which were at a diſtance; or it intimates the darkneſs and obſcurity of the book, till the accompliſhment of the events ſhould diſcover the meaning of the prophetic word. Many ſhall run to and fro, at the end of time, when the things here ſpoken of begin to be fulfilled; earneſtly ſearching into this ſealed book: and knowledge ſhall be increaſed; light will then be caſt on the prophecies, ſo that the diligent enquirer ſhall be able to underſtand them more fully than they had ever been underſtood before. Note, (1.) They who would draw knowledge from the deep well of prophetic truth, muſt diligently examine and compare ſpiritual things with ſpiritual, and in prayer fervently aſk divine illumination. (2.) However dark and obſcure the prophecies may now be, the time will come, when they will be clear as if written with a ſun-beam.

5. ¶ Then I Daniel looked, and behold, there ſtood other two, the one on this ſide of the bank of the river, and the other on that ſide of the † bank of [p] the river.
6. And one ſaid to [q] the man clothed in linen, which was ‡ upon the waters of the river, [r] How long ſhall it be to the end of theſe wonders? 7. And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when [s] he held up his right hand, and his left hand unto heaven, and ſware by him [t] that liveth for ever, [u] that it ſhall be for a time, times, and an half:
and [x] when he ſhall have accompliſhed to ſcatter the power of the holy people, all theſe things ſhall be finiſhed.
8. And I heard, but [y] I underſtood not: then ſaid
I, O my Lord, what ſhall be the § end of theſe things?
9. And he ſaid, Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are cloſed up, and ſealed [z] till the time of the end. 10.
[a] Many ſhall be purified, and made white, and tried:
[b] but the wicked ſhall do wickedly: and none of the wicked ſhall underſtand, but [c] the wiſe ſhall underſtand, 11. And from the time that [d] the daily ſacrifice ſhall be taken away, and ‖ the abomination that maketh deſolate ſet up, there ſhall be a thouſand two hundred and ninety days. 12. Bleſſed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thouſand three hundred and five and thirty days. 13. But go thou thy way till the end be: † for [e] thou ſhalt reſt, and [f] ſtand in thy lot [g] at the end of the days.

v. 5—13. The myſterious things before ſpoken naturally excited in the prophet's mind the deſire to know when the end of

of theſe things ſhould be, and what would be the ſign of their concluſion.

1. How long ſhall it be to the end of theſe wonders? This queſtion is put by one of the angels who ſtood by the river, in the prophet's hearing, to the glorious perſonage who ſtood upon, or above, the waters of the river, the Lord Jeſus, deſcribed before, chap. x. 5. Daniel probably feared to be too inquiſitive; and though he wiſhed to know, yet dared not aſk. The anſwer is uſhered in with great ſolemnity: Lifting up his hands to heaven, the great High-prieſt of our profeſſion, by a ſolemn oath, v. 7. for the confirmation of the faith of his ſervant, (See Rev. x. 5, 6.) declares that the troubles will continue for a time, times, and half: and when he ſhall have accompliſhed to ſcatter the power of the holy people, all theſe things ſhall be finiſhed. This ſome explain of the concluſion of the troubles under Antiochus, who for three years and a half held Jeruſalem, and quite diſperſed and broke the Jewiſh people. Others apply it to the reign and fall of Antichriſt, where the ſame numbers are uſed, Rev. xi. 2, 3. xii. 6—14. when the diſperſion of the Jews ſhall end, and they ſhall be gathered out of all lands; which bleſſed event may the Lord haſten in his time!

2. What ſhall the end of theſe things be? Encouraged by what he had heard of Chriſt's condeſcenſion in anſwering the former queſtion, and not underſtanding the meaning of what he heard, Daniel himſelf is emboldened to aſk, what events would more diſtinctly mark the concluſion of theſe troubles; or, as the words may be rendered, what is the laſt of theſe things? Note, (1.) Through the darkneſs of their minds, the greateſt ſaints are often at a loſs in their enquiries, and humbly own their ignorance. (2.) We have one to apply to under all our doubts and difficulties, who is able to ſolve them. (3.) When we ſee the prevalence of iniquity, and the triumphs of the ungodly, we are ready in amaze to cry, What will be the end of theſe things? as if the cauſe of Chriſt was utterly overwhelmed; but it ſhall prevail at laſt over all oppoſition.

The anſwer Chriſt gives to the prophet's enquiry is very gracious: He ſhall know as much as he needs, and is bid to be content about the reſt. Go thy way, Daniel; be ſatisfied with what thou haſt heard, and prepare for eternity; for the words are cloſed up, and ſealed unto the end of time; will continue till then dark and obſcure, when time would interpret the viſion. Many ſhall be purified, and made white, and tried, by their afflictions, and come like ſilver from the furnace: but the wicked ſhall do wickedly; perſiſting in their impenitence, and given up to judicial blindneſs of heart. None of the wicked ſhall underſtand, neither the word nor providences of God; but the wiſe ſhall underſtand both, and improve thereby. And, as to the immediate ſolution of the queſtion, he gives him ſome dates by which it might be known: from the time that the daily ſacrifice ſhall be taken away, and the abomination which maketh deſolate, there ſhall be a thouſand two hundred and ninety days; which ſome refer to what Antiochus did, and confine the prophecy to the Jewiſh people. Others ſuppoſe it to refer to Antichriſt, the antitype, who, in oppoſition to the one ſacrifice of Chriſt, hath ſet up the merits of man, eſtabliſhed the worſhip of ſaints and images, and other abominations. The length of this ſtate of trouble is declared to be a thouſand two hundred and ninety days, See Rev. xiii. 5. The days here added to the number there given are, as ſome think, the ſpace allotted for the converſion of the Jews. Bleſſed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thouſand three hundred and five and thirty days, at the end of which all the enemies of Chriſt and his people will, it is ſuppoſed, be utterly deſtroyed, and times of the greateſt happineſs and joy ſucceed. The period of theſe events indeed ſtill remains a ſecret; but of this the people of God may be ſure, that the end of all the ſuffering of his church is fixed; that we are called with patience to wait for the bleſſed day; and that our happineſs will then be compleat and everlaſting.

The concluſion of our Lord's anſwer is a word of comfort, particularly addreſſed to Daniel himſelf. Go thy way till the end be; prepare for death, and wait for the reſurrection morn; for thou ſhalt reſt, dying in the Lord, and delivered for ever from all the burdens of mortality; and ſtand in thy lot at the end of the days; raiſed to a glorious inheritance at the laſt, and put in poſſeſſion of that eternal kingdom God hath prepared for thoſe who are faithful unto death. Note, (1.) Whilſt God continues us upon earth, our buſineſs is to be found in the work he hath given us to do, waiting for our diſmiſſion, and ever ready to receive it with joy. (2.) A child of God, like Noah's dove, muſt not expect his reſt in this tempeſtuous world; but when his head reſts upon a pillow of duſt, then ſhall his ſoul find reſt in the Saviour's boſom. (3.) Whatever our lot or portion may be in this world, we have an inheritance before us incorruptible, undefiled, which fadeth not away, the believing proſpect of which will effectually ſupport us under all the trials of life, and carry us triumphant through all the terrors of death. (4.) We know, (for every believer hath the infallible promiſe of the unchangeable God to ſupport his confidence) to our everlaſting comfort we know, the day is near, when Jeſus ſhall appear, and then ſhall we appear with him in glory. Even ſo, Amen! come, Lord Jeſus, come quickly!

OR, A
PRACTICAL COMMENT
Upon the PROPHECY of HOSEA.

THE twelve minor prophets, are ſo called, not from any inferiority in their inſpiration, or as if their writings were of leſs value and authority than thoſe of their brethren, but becauſe their prophecies were ſhorter, and contained in a leſs volume.

Hoſea is the firſt of them, as they ſtand in the order of our Bibles, though not the oldeſt; Jonah, Joel, and Amos, being thought to have propheſied before him. His ſtile is conciſe and ſententious, in ſome places very obſcure, in others clear and pathetic. He chiefly addreſſed himſelf to the ten tribes, exhorting, admoniſhing, rebuking, warning them, and foretelling the dire conſequences of their impenitence. He lived very long, and ſaw the accompliſhment of his own prophecies in the ruin and captivity of Iſrael; for not one jot or tittle ſhall ever fail of the divine word till all be fulfilled.

CHAP. I.

The mind of God is revealed to his prophet, and by him to the people, in the three firſt chapters by ſigns and types; but afterwards by diſcourſe. In this chapter we have, 1. The general title of the whole book, ver. 1. 2. Some particular inſtructions he was ordered to give to the people of God. (1.) He muſt convince them of their ſin in going a whoring from God, by marrying a wife of whoredoms, ver. 2, 3. (2.) He muſt foretel the ruin coming upon them for their ſin in the names of his ſons, which ſignified God's diſowning and abandoning them, ver. 4, 5, 6, 8, 9. (3.) He muſt ſpeak comfortably to the kingdom of Judah, which ſtill retained the pure worſhip of God, and aſſure them of the ſalvation of the Lord, ver. 7. (4.) He muſt give an intimation of the great mercy God had in ſtore both for Iſrael and Judah, in the latter days, ver. 10, 11. for in this prophecy many precious promiſes of mercy are mixed with the threatnings of wrath.

1. THE word of the LORD that [a] came unto † Hoſea, the ſon of Beeri, in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh king of Iſrael.

v. 1. The prophet opens with an account of his name and parentage. He was called Hoſea, the ſame as Jeſus or Joſhua, a Saviour, the great buſineſs of his miniſtry being to promote the ſalvation of his people. His father's name is mentioned, but of what tribe or place he was, is not ſaid.

He propheſied during the reigns of four kings of Judah, and their cotemporaries, who ruled in Iſrael, though but one of them is mentioned. Their lives were ſo bad perhaps, that their very names were odious.

So he went and took † Gomer the daughter of ‡ Diblaim, which conceived and bare him a ſon. 4. And it ſhall come to paſs at that day, that [e] I will break the bow of Iſrael in the valley of Jezreel. 6. ¶ And ſhe conceived again, and bare a daughter; and God ſaid unto him, Call her name † Lo-ruhamah: for I will no more have mercy upon the houſe of Iſrael; ‡ but I will [f] utterly take them away. 7. But I will have mercy upon the houſe of Judah, and [g] will ſave them by the LORD their God, [h] and will not ſave them by bow, nor by ſword, nor by battle, by horſes, nor by horſemen.

2—7. The firſt revelation of God's will to Hoſea, was a fearful threatning againſt a rebellious people, under the figure of a man taking a wife of whoredoms, whom the prophet perſonates, to convince them of their abominations, and of the juſt judgments of God coming upon them.

Some indeed have ſuppoſed, that Hoſea literally did this which is here ſpoken; and married a woman of infamous conduct, Gomer, a noted ſtrumpet, the daughter of Diblaim, by whom he had the children after mentioned: but it can hardly be ſuppoſed the Lord would command him to do an action which muſt make him ſcandalous in the eyes of the people, and eſpecially when he would be ſo unqualified thereby to reprove their whoredom. The ſenſe therefore above given ſeems much more eligible, which would fully anſwer the intention of rebuking their wickedneſs, who ſhould have been a holy people, but had turned from God to idols; a ſin more deteſtable and odious, than if a woman ſhould treacherouſly depart from her huſband's bed, commit adultery, and bring a ſpurious brood into his family. In the names of the children born of this adultereſs, the prophet is commiſſioned to foretel the approaching ruin of that devoted people.

1. In the name of the firſt ſon, who is called Jezreel, God ſhews Jeroboam the deſtruction determined againſt his family, and the cauſe of it. Jezreel ſignifies the ſeed of God, or ſcattered of God; and this is explained, for yet a little while, in a few years, under his ſon Jechoniah, and I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the houſe of Jehu; the blood of Ahab, and his ſons and kinsfolks, which Jehu ſhed; for tho' the action was right, and God commended it, 2 Kings x. 30. yet the temper with which Jehu did it was evil, intending not God's glory, but the gratification of his own pride, ambition, and cruelty, as afterwards evidently appeared; for tho' he pretended zeal for God, when he ſeized the throne, he ſtill kept the calves in Dan and Bethel. Thus many of the good works of pride and ſelf-righteouſneſs become evil from the temper with which they are done, and bring down a curſe inſtead of a bleſſing. And I will cauſe to ceaſe the kingdom of the houſe of Iſrael, in the family of Jehu, as was ſoon fulfilled, 2 Kings xv. 8—10. Or this may relate to the deſtruction of the ten tribes by Salmaneſer, 2 Kings xvii. 6—23. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, that I will break the bow of Iſrael in the valley of Jezreel; which refers to Menachem's ſlaughter of Shallum, 2 Kings xv. 14—16. or to ſome battle fought there with Salmaneſer, before he ſubdued the country, 2 Kings xvii. 6. Note, They who depart from God, weaken their own arms, and ſin brings certain ruin in its train.

2. In the name of the ſecond child, Lo-ruhamah, God foretels his entire rejection of the whole nation. The word ſignifies not having obtained mercy, 1 Pet. xi. 10. intimating, as the prophet from God explains it, that God would have no more mercy on the Iſraelites, but would utterly take them away, as was done by the king of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xvii. Wo to the ſinner with whom God's mercies are at an end!

3. A promiſe of mercy is made to the houſe of Judah, that had preſerved the true worſhip of God; for he hath ever a choſen remnant, who, when others apoſtatiſe, ſtill approve their fidelity. I will have mercy upon the houſe of Judah, and will ſave them by the Lord their God, not by any human power or weapons; which may refer to the deliverance of the Jews from Sennacherib's army, 2 Kings xix. 35. or perhaps to the greater ſalvation which the Lord Jeſus ſhould accompliſh, ſubduing all the ſpiritual foes of his people, and by his own arm making them more than conquerors. Note, (1.) All our ſalvation comes not from any merit in us, but the mere mercy of our God. (2.) They who cleave to God as their God, ſhall find he will own them in the day of trouble, and interpoſe for their reſcue. (3.) Thoſe whom God will ſave, not all the wicked on earth, nor all the devils in hell ſhall be able to deſtroy.

8. ¶ Now when ſhe had weaned Lo-ruhamah, ſhe conceived and bare a ſon. 9. Then ſaid God, Call his name † Lo-ammi: for [i] ye are not my people, and I will not be your God. 10. ¶ Yet [k] the number of the children of Iſrael ſhall be as the ſand of the ſea, which cannot be meaſured nor numbered; [l] and it ſhall come to paſs, that ‡ in the place where it was ſaid unto them, [m] Ye are not my people, there it ſhall be ſaid unto them, Ye are the ſons of the living God. 11. [n] Then ſhall the children of Judah, and the children of Iſrael be gathered together, and appoint themſelves one head, and they ſhall come up out of the land: § for great ſhall be the day of Jezreel.

v. 8—11. The decree gone forth againſt this wicked nation is here confirmed in the name of a ſon, the third child, called Lo-ammi, after Lo-ruhamah was weaned; which may ſignify the patience of God for a while bearing with them, or that firſt captivity, when many of Gilead and Galilee were carried away by Tiglath-pileſer, 2 Kings xv. 29.

1. God rejects Iſrael from being his people, as the name Lo-Ammi ſignifies, ye are not my people; have caſt off my government and worſhip: and I will not be your God, to bleſs, protect, and ſave you. Note, (1.) They who revolt from God, are juſtly rejected by him. (2.) Many claim a relation to God in name, whoſe works deny him, and whom he will therefore diſown.

2. In wrath God remembers mercy, and a gracious promiſe is made of their reſtoration. He that wounds will heal. Yet the number of the children of Iſrael ſhall be as the ſand of the ſea, which cannot be meaſured nor numbered; which prophecy, whatever primary reſpect it might have to the return of the Iſraelites from their captivity with their brethren; or whatever ground of comfort it might afford to the pious captives there; yet we are aſſured, Rom. ix. 24—26. was to have its glorious accompliſhment, when Jews and Gentiles ſhould be converted to the faith of Chriſt; as was eminently the caſe, when by the preaching of the goſpel at the firſt, multitudes were added to the church; and daily we obſerve the innumerable hoſt increaſing, till the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall be come in at the laſt day, and ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved. And it ſhall come to paſs, that in the place where it was ſaid unto them, Ye are not my people, there it ſhall be ſaid unto them, Ye are the ſons of the living God; adopted into the family, and admitted to all the great and diſtinguiſhed privileges of the children of God. Then ſhall the children of Judah and the children of Iſrael be gathered together; which ſome interpret of the union of theſe divided kingdoms, on their return from Babylon; but rather reſpects the times of the goſpel, when Galileans, Samaritans, and Jews, converted by the preaching of Chriſt and his apoſtles, were joined in one Chriſtian church, and the Gentiles afterwards incorporated therein. And ſome alſo ſuppoſe particular reſpect is had to the times when the Jews ſhall be collected from their preſent diſperſion, and be univerſally turned to the Lord, and appoint themſelves one head, the Divine Meſſiah, to whom they ſhall be gathered at the laſt, willingly ſubmitting themſelves to his bleſſed government: and they ſhall come up out of the land, or the earth, collected from all parts of it; or as experiencing a kind of reſurrection from the ſtate of miſery, like death, in which they lay; for great ſhall be the day of Jezreel; after all the affliction they have endured, their latter end ſhall be full of glory, and Jezreel, the ſeed of God, the faithful, ſhall be ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation. Note, (1.) Every believer is diſtinguiſhed with the eminent dignity of being a child of the living God; and however he may be deſpiſed of men, is glorious in the eyes of the Moſt High and Moſt Holy, and ſhall be acknowledged by him in the laſt great day. (2.) The people of God have Chriſt for their living head, deriving from him all vital influence; yielding themſelves up to him, to be directed and governed; and through him maintaining mutual communion with each other, being all one in Chriſt Jeſus. (3.) They who have Chriſt for their head, muſt come up from the earth, and ſet their affections on things above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God.

CHAP. II.

The ſcope of this chapter ſeems to be much the ſame with that of the foregoing. As there, ſo here, 1. God by the prophet diſcovers and charges ſin home upon them, particularly their idolatry, and forgetting God, and their obligations to him, ver. 1, 2, 5, 8. 2. He threatens to take away from them that plenty of all good things with which they had ſerved their idols, and to abandon them to ruin without remedy, ver. 3, 4, 6, 7, 9—13. 3. Yet he promiſeth at laſt to return in ways of mercy to them for his own ſake, ver. 14. to reſtore them to their former plenty, ver. 15. to cure them of their inclination to idolatry, ver. 16, 17. to renew his covenant with them, ver. 18—20. and to bleſs them with all good things, ver. 21—23.

1. SAY ye unto your brethren, † Ammi, and to your ſiſters, ‡ Ruhamah. 2. Plead with your mother, plead: for [a] ſhe is not my wife, neither am I her huſband: let her therefore put away [b] her whoredoms out of her ſight, and her adulteries from between her breaſts; 3. Leſt I ſtrip her naked, and ſet her [c] as in the day that ſhe was born, and make her as a wilderneſs, and ſet her like a dry land, and ſlay her with thirſt. 4. And I will not have mercy upon her children; for they be the children of whoredoms. 5. For [d] their mother hath played the harlot: ſhe that conceived them hath done ſhamefully: for ſhe ſaid, [e] I will go after my lovers [f] that give me my bread, and my water, my wool and my flax, mine oil and my § drink.

v. 1—5. The firſt words of this chapter may be either taken in connection with the latter part of the preceding, as ſpeaking comfort to the people of God, thoſe faithful ones, who, having choſen Chriſt for their head, are reſtored to God's favour, acknowledged by him, as Ammi my people, and Ruhamah, having obtained mercy: or they have reſpect to thoſe Jewiſh converts, who in the times of the goſpel being turned to Chriſt Jeſus, and become the children of God by faith in him, are exhorted to rebuke and expoſtulate with their mother, the Jewiſh church, for her rejection of the true Meſſiah.

1. God threatens utterly to ſeparate himſelf from her. She is not my wife; hath behaved unworthy of that relation: ſhe hath played the harlot, v. 5. hath broken the marriage-covenant, caſting off all obedience, and committing ſpiritual adultery againſt the Lord. She that conceived them hath done ſhamefully; ſerving dumb idols, and going a whoring after ſtocks and ſtones: or, ſhe hath made aſhamed; has been a ſcandal to her huſband and her family; and therefore he will no more own her: neither am I her huſband, to protect, cheriſh, or provide for her: he thruſts her out, gives her a divorce, and ſeparates her from all the honour and comfort of the relation in which ſhe ſtood. Note, (1.) They who treacherouſly depart from God, will provoke him to depart from them, and wo unto the ſoul that is in ſuch a caſe. (2.) Sin is not only the abominable thing God hates, but the ſhameful thing that will ſooner or later cover the ſinner with everlaſting confuſion and contempt.

2. He invites her to repent and return. Though offended, he was not inexorable; Let her therefore put her whoredoms out of her ſight, and her adulteries from between her breaſts: as theſe were the occaſion of the fatal ſeparation between God and them, when the cauſe was removed, the effect would ceaſe. Note, (1.) God delighteth not in the death of a ſinner, but rather that he ſhould return and live. (2.) They who would truly return to God, muſt not only put away the groſſer acts of ſin, but ſeek to root out of their boſoms the love of it, that they may be pure within.

3. The conſequences of her impenitence, if perſiſted in, would be fatal. God waits upon ſinners long, but if they will not turn, he whets his ſword as he here threatens; leaſt I ſtrip her naked, and ſet her as in the day that ſhe was born; alluding to the wretched ſtate of a new-born infant. So deſtitute and miſerable were they when firſt God took them for his people in Egypt, Ezek. xvi. 4. and to a like ſtate of wretchedneſs ſhould they be reduced: and make her a wilderneſs, and ſet her as a dry land, and ſlay her with thirſt; he will bring them into circumſtances as deplorable as their fathers in the wilderneſs, or utterly deſtroy and ruin their nation, as the carcaſes of thoſe who fell in that barren land. And I will not have mercy on her children, but the curſe ſhall fatally reſt upon them, as it doth to this day for the rejection of the Meſſiah, for they are children of whoredoms, imitating the ill example of their parents, and therefore ſharing their puniſhment.

4. He upbraids her ingratitude and folly. She played the harlot, committing idolatry, that ſhameful thing; for ſhe ſaid, I will go after my lovers, her idols, on which ſhe doated, and to whom ſhe aſcribed all the good things ſhe enjoyed, that gave me my bread, &c. robbing God of the glory of his gifts, and giving this honour unto ſtocks and ſtones, or the hoſts of heaven, Jer. xliv. 17, 18. Note, (1.) The folly, as well as baſeneſs of ſin, is prodigious. (2.) They who make their belly their God, and the delights of ſenſe their happineſs, are in the broad way of ruin. (3.) Worldly proſperity and abundance have been the fatal ſnare by which many an immortal ſoul hath been ruined.

6. ¶ Therefore behold, [g] I will hedge up thy way with thorns, and † make a wall, that ſhe ſhall not find her paths. 7. And ſhe ſhall follow after her lovers, [h] but ſhe ſhall not overtake them; and ſhe ſhall ſeek them, but ſhall not find them: then ſhall ſhe ſay, I will go and return to [i] my firſt huſband, for [k] then was it better with me than now. 8. For ſhe did not know that I gave her corn, and ‡ wine, and oil, and multiplied her ſilver and gold, § which they prepared for Baal. 9. Therefore will I return and [l] take away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the ſeaſon thereof, and will ‖ recover my wool and my flax given to cover her nakedneſs. 10. And now [m] will I diſcover her † lewdneſs in the ſight of her lovers, and none ſhall deliver her out of mine hand. 11. I will alſo cauſe all her mirth to ceaſe, her feaſt-days, her new-moons, and her ſabbaths, and all her ſolemn feaſts. 12. And I will deſtroy her vines, and her fig-trees, whereof ſhe hath ſaid, [n] Theſe are my rewards that my lovers have given me: and [o] I will make them a foreſt, and the beaſts of the field ſhall eat them. 13. And I will viſit upon her the days of Baalim, wherein ſhe burnt incenſe to them, and ſhe decked herſelf with her ear-rings and her jewels, and ſhe went after her lovers, and forgat me, ſaith the LORD.

v. 6—13. They who go on obſtinately in their evil ways, may aſſuredly expect that vengeance, though ſlow, will ſurely overtake them. Thus God threatens the Iſraelites,

1. He will compaſs them with troubles, out of which they ſhall ſee no way to eſcape I will hedge up thy way with thorns, and make a wall that ſhe ſhall not find her paths; as when they were beſieged, however much they deſired it, v. 7. they could neither go to ſeek help from their allies, nor viſit their idols at Dan and Bethel. Or elſe this implies, that all their endeavours to extricate themſelves from their troubles would but the more involve and torment them, and their pretended friends prove to them no better than a broken reed. Note, (1.) They who depart from God, will find the curſe purſue them as cloſe as their ſhadow; and the more they perſiſt in theſe froward ways, the more miſery they ſhall find in them. (2.) When God arreſts the ſinner by the afflictions of his providence, it is to convince him of the evil of his purſuits, and to turn him back from ruin.

2. Theſe troubles ſhall have a bleſſed effect, on many of them at leaſt; then ſhall they ſay, when every other hope proves deſperate, I will go and return to my firſt huſband, the Lord God of Iſrael, for then it was better with me than it is now. Note, (1.) It is well if deſpair of creature-comforts and confidences drives the ſinner to God, and even then he will not caſt him out. (2.) Whoever hath once taſted the bleſſedneſs of God's ſervice, and hath unfaithfully departed from it, will find by the longeſt experience, that none of the pleaſures of ſin are to be compared with a ſenſe of God's love, and the teſtimony of a good conſcience. (3.) Returning backſliders, who do their firſt works, ſhall be reſtored again to their firſt love.

3. Becauſe they had abuſed the plenty God had given them, unleſs they repented thus and returned to him, he threatens them with famine, poverty, and nakedneſs. More ſtupid than the ox that knows his owner, they did not acknowledge God the author of the mercies ſo liberally beſtowed on them, but diſhonoured him by laviſhing their riches on their hated idols, v. 8. Moſt juſtly therefore he threatens to reſume the gifts they thus abuſed, and make them know by the miſeries he will inflict, the wickedneſs and ingratitude of their conduct. Note, They who profuſely ſpend their ſubſtance in pride, luxury, gaming, and the ſervice of diverſe luſts and pleaſures, are as criminal as if they prepared it for Baal.

[1.] God will take from them their corn and wine, and make them know want and hunger. Their harveſt ſhall become a heap of chaff, and their vintage diſappoint their expectations. And thoſe vines and fig-trees ſhall be deſtroyed by their invaders, or by inclement ſeaſons, which they regarded as the gifts of their idols, v. 15. He calls them my corn, my wine, for we are but ſtewards, the property is ſtill in him; by whatever title we hold our creature-comforts, to him we muſt be accountable for them. To abuſe them is the ſure way to provoke God to deprive us of them in time, or worſe, to puniſh us for our unfaithfulneſs in eternity.

[2.] He will ſtrip them naked to their ſhame. Now will I diſcover her lewdneſs in the ſight of her lovers, when ſcattered among the nations, who ſhall treat them with inſult and contempt, as an infamous ſtrumpet, ; and none ſhall deliver her out of my hands; neither the idols, nor the allies in whom they truſted. Note, None can ſave that ſoul which God determines to deſtroy.

[3.] God will turn her mirth into mourning. Though they had forſaken the temple at Jeruſalem, they ſtill kept up the days of feaſting, not in honour of God, but of their calves, and turned theſe ſacred ſeaſons into times of carnal merriment and riot, utterly perverting the holy deſign of their inſtitution. But now when famine had cut off all their proviſions, or their victorious enemies had ravaged their country, and led them captive into a ſtrange land, theſe ſolemnities muſt ceaſe of courſe, and they be ſunk in miſery and mourning. Note, (1.) Holy days and ſeaſons, by unholy men perverted, are often turned into an occaſion of more than ordinary drunkenneſs, lewdneſs, and riot. (2.) When we abuſe God's inſtitutions, it is juſt with him to rob thoſe of the form, who have loſt the power of godlineſs.

4. All this miſery coming upon them, was owing to their idolatry and apoſtacy from God. I will viſit upon her the days of Baalim; puniſhing them for their long courſe of idolatry from the days of the Judges, ever ſince which they had burnt incenſe to one deity or another, and decked themſelves in their beſt attire on their holy days, to do honour to theſe dunghill-gods; and forgat me, ſaith tho Lord; which is the origin and aggravation of all their other ſins. Note, Forgetfulneſs of God is at the bottom of all our ſins, and the chief of them.

14. ¶ † Therefore behold, [p] I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderneſs, and ſpeak ‡ comfortably unto her. 15. And I will give her her vineyards from thence, and [q] the valley of Achor for a door of hope, and ſhe ſhall ſing there, [r] as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when ſhe came up out of the land of Egypt. 16. And it ſhall be at that day, ſaith the LORD, that thou ſhalt call me § Iſhi; and ſhalt call me no more ‖ Baali. 17. For [s] I will take away the names of Baalim out of her mouth, and they ſhall no more be remembred by their name. 18. And in that day will I make [t] a covenant for them with the beaſts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground: and [u] I will break the bow, and the ſword, and the battle out of the earth, and will make them to [x] lie down ſafely. 19. And I will betroth thee unto me for ever, yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteouſneſs, and in judgment, and in loving-kindneſs, and in mercies. 20. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulneſs, and [y] thou ſhalt know the LORD. 21. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, I will hear, ſaith the LORD, [z] I will hear the heavens, and they ſhall hear the earth, 22. And the

v. 14—23. The threatnings in the foregoing verſes were not more tremendous, than the promiſes in theſe are reviving. When we might have expected, from the concluſion of the laſt verſe, to have heard the moſt fearful curſes reiterated, as the juſt vengeance of their idolatry and forgetfulneſs of God, amazing inference! Therefore, ſays God, will I allure her; as if to magnify the triumphs of his grace: or it intimates his boundleſs patience, determined to try every method before he abandoned them to ruin. Some render the word, Nevertheleſs all theſe provocations ſhall not ſtay the current of my mercy. Where ſin hath abounded, there ſhall grace much more abound, and appear to be free grace indeed!

1. God will revive and comfort them, v. 14, 15. The alluſion is to the bringing them out of Egypt, through the wilderneſs, into the land flowing with milk and honey, which they entered through the valley of Achor. And with like mercy will he again viſit them; either by his goſpel calling many of them into the church of the Redeemer at the firſt, or finally by recovering them from their preſent diſperſion, and converting them to the faith of Chriſt in the laſt day. I will allure her with the kindeſt words of tender affection, by the great and gracious promiſes of his word, and the ſweetly conſtraining influences of his Spirit; and bring her into the wilderneſs; either ſeparating them from the reſt of the world for himſelf, or by the afflictive diſpenſations of his providences humbling their ſouls, or convincing them of their miſery and guilt, in order to lead them more earneſtly to ſeek the riches of his grace; and ſpeak comfortably unto her, encouraging the dejected hearts of his poor people, burdened with guilt and heavy laden with trouble, and ſhewing them, in Chriſt Jeſus, that peace, pardon, and plenteous redemption, which miſerable ſinners ſo exceedingly need, and which are to them tidings of great joy: and I will give her vineyards from thence; either the abundance of temporal bleſſings which they had loſt, or rather the graces and conſolations of his Spirit, which are more refreſhing than wine to the weary; and the valley of Achor, where Achan was ſtoned, for a door of hope, this being their firſt entrance into the promiſed land, and the pledge of their poſſeſſing the reſt. Thus, when God converts the ſouls of his people to himſelf, the accurſed thing ſin is put away, a door of hope is opened to them after their darkneſs and diſtreſs, and, in the preſent grace they receive, they have the pledge of that eternal glory which is prepared for them: and ſhe ſhall ſing there as in the days of her youth, as in the day when ſhe came up out of Egypt, when they beheld the Egyptians dead on the ſea-ſhore; ſo ſhall the people of God rejoice in the complete victory of their Redeemer, and triumph in the God of their ſalvation; happy in the preſent poſſeſſion of his love, and the aſſured proſpect of eternal bleſſedneſs. Note, (1.) Nothing hath ſo powerful an effect upon the ſinner's conſcience as the alluring promiſes of goſpel grace. (2.) A ſoul brought into the wilderneſs of conviction is ready to fear that deſtruction is before him; but the gate of life lies in this valley of the ſhadow of death.

2. God will cleanſe them from all their idols. They ſhall not only no more worſhip Baal, but not even take his name in their lips. And it ſhall be in that day, ſaith the Lord, when the Jews ſhall be turned to him, thou ſhalt call me Iſhi, my huſband, by faith embracing the Lord Jeſus as the bleſſed bridegroom of their ſouls; and ſhalt call me no more Baali, which ſignifies my huſband alſo, or my Lord; but was a name which had been ſo much abuſed in worſhipping their idols, that the very mention of it ſhould be abhorred, and the memory of it ſtamped with oblivion; for I will take away the names of Baalim out of her mouth, and they ſhall no more be remembered by their name, idolatry of every kind being utterly aboliſhed; as will be fully accompliſhed in the latter day, when every idol, papal as well as pagan, ſhall fall for ever. Note, (1.) The endearing relation God is pleaſed to aſſume, as the huſband of his people, ſhould engage our warmeſt affection and moſt unſhaken fidelity. (2.) It is a ſure ſymptom of God's gracious deſigns towards the ſinner's ſoul, when he ſeparates him from his beloved idols and luſts. (3.) When a thing, innocent in itſelf, is abuſed to the purpoſes of ſuperſtition and idolatry, it ſhould from thenceforth be avoided.

3. God will be their protector from every foe, whether the ſavages of the foreſt, or the more dangerous ſavages, wicked men, or fiends of darkneſs. The beaſts of the earth, as bound by a covenant, ſhall no more hurt nor deſtroy God's redeemed people; and all their brutal perſecutors, with the old lion their ruler, ſhall be for ever diſabled from hurting them. Then wars ſhall ceaſe in all the earth, and, quiet from fear of evil, they ſhall lie down ſafely, under the guardian care of their almighty Lord and Saviour. Note, (1.) When God is our friend, who can harm us? (2.) Whether we lie down on beds of ſleep, or in the duſt of death, alike ſerene we may quietly repoſe on Jeſus, and be aſſured that under his wings we muſt be ſafe.

Before Christ 786.

4. God will anew take them into a covenant of marriage, notwithſtanding their former divorce. I will betroth thee unto me for ever; which may refer to the Jews in particular, who at laſt ſhall be brought again into the viſible church of the redeemed; or may be applied to every particular believer, whether Jew or Gentile, who have not choſen Chriſt, but he hath choſen them, and by his grace engages them to chuſe him as their Lord and huſband, and to cleave to him in love and faithfulneſs. And this endeared relation ſhall ſubſiſt for ever, the gifts and callings of God being without repentance; they cannot be caſt away, becauſe he cannot change. Yea I will betroth thee unto me in righteouſneſs, dealing with them in the moſt aſſured ſincerity, or adorning them with the ſpotleſs robes of righteouſneſs, which he their Redeemer hath wrought out for them as their wedding-garment, arrayed in which they are all fair in his eyes; and in judgment, in ſuch a way as is moſt perfectly conſiſtent with his juſtice, though they are in themſelves polluted, and deſerve his wrath inſtead of his love; and in loving-kindneſſes, to ſhare his warmeſt regard; and in mercies, beſtowing on them every bleſſing a ſinful ſoul can need; and this purely flowing not from any merit in them but from his undeſerved favour; and in faithfulneſs, engaging to fulfil every promiſe of the covenant to them; and not only true to his part of the contract, but keeping them alſo faithful to theirs; and thou ſhalt know the Lord, his excellence and glory; ſuch a knowledge as ſhall effectually engage their love and duty to him, and ſecure to them, as the conſequence, eternal life. Bleſſed and happy is the ſoul that is in ſuch a caſe!

5. God will enrich them with the bleſſings of the baſket and the ſtore; or perhaps the better ſpiritual bleſſings of grace are repreſented by the corn and wine. They had before, v. 12. been threatned with the deſtruction of their worldly comforts; but now, being reſtored to God's favour, they ſhall regain the creature good they had forfeited; and this is repreſented by a beautiful figure, wherein the prayers of the whole creation, which groans under the curſe of ſin, are repreſented as aſcending into the ears of the Lord of ſabaoth. I will hear the heavens, or anſwer their cry, deſiring permiſſion to drop down the dew, without which they are as braſs over the ſinner's head; and the heavens ſhall hear the earth, gaſping for want of rain; and the earth ſhall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oil, withering for drought; and they ſhall hear Jezreel, furniſhing an abundant ſupply for the famiſhed people. And thus doth the dew of heavenly influences deſcend on the thirſty ſoul, and under the diſpenſation of the word and ordinances of Chriſt ſuch quickening, comforting, and ſtrengthening grace is diſpenſed, that God's choſen grow up, and bring forth the abundant fruits of righteouſneſs and true holineſs.

6. God will greatly increaſe the number of his Iſrael. I will ſow her unto me in the earth; either the diſperſed Iſraelites, that had been ſcattered in all lands, and in their days of captivity ſeemed buried as ſeed beneath the clods of the valley, but ſhall at laſt ſpring up more numerous than ever; or, by the preaching of the word of goſpel grace, that divine ſeed ſhould be ſown, from whence a glorious harveſt ſhould be gathered of Iſraelites indeed, of true believers, the ſeed of God, as the word Jezreel ſignifies.

7. God will reverſe the ſentence pronounced upon them, and change their ominous names. They ſhall no more be called Lo-ammi and Lo-ruhamah; for I will have mercy on her that had not obtained mercy, both Jews and Gentiles, to whom the apoſtle expreſly applies this promiſe, Rom. ix. 25. and I will ſay to them which were not my people, the Gentiles before the goſpel came unto them, and the Jews who for a while are cut off from their relation to God till the fulneſs of the Gentiles is come in, Thou art my people, reſtored and recovered, through Jeſus Chriſt, to his love and protection; and they ſhall ſay, Thou art my God, enabled by faith to embrace the promiſes, and to approve their fidelity to him. Note, (1.) The ſalvation of the ſinner is an act of God's infinite mercy. (2.) None are ſo bad as to be beyond the reach of this mercy whilſt on this ſide eternity, and therefore never to be deſpaired of. (3.) The greateſt of all mercies is to have God for our own God; every poſſible bleſſing is comprehended in that relation. (4). They who can truly claim a covenant-relation to God will own, at leaſt for themſelves, that they owe it to the election of grace; for we had never choſen him, if he had not firſt choſen us.

v. 1—5. The prophet ſtill perſonates the character of a man who had betrothed a woman and loved her, though an adultereſs, and her affections placed upon another; and this in order to reproach the baſeneſs and ingratitude of the people of Iſrael, who had thus treacherouſly departed from God.

1. The prophet repreſents their baſeneſs and ingratitude, and God's amazing love to them, notwithſtanding they had played the harlot and gone after idols, looking to them for help and comfort, delighting in drunkenneſs and intemperance; and the better pleaſed with their abominable deities becauſe their feaſts were thus celebrated. Note, A drunkard will ever pay his adorations where there are flagons of wine. Such infamous conduct might well provoke God's abhorrence; yet, aſtoniſhing to tell! he was ſtill Iſrael's friend, and loved her, though an adultereſs. Note, The ſoul which is brought to a real ſight of his own vileneſs ſtands amazed at God's grace, that he ſhould ever reſpect a wretch, where there was nothing to engage his love, but every thing to excite his loathing.

2. He deſcribes the gracious methods God took to bring them home to himſelf. By the price the prophet pays for this adultereſs, v. 2. is repreſented the vileneſs and worthleſſneſs of that ſinful people. It was but half as much as was paid for a ſlave, Exod. xxi. 32. and the barley may ſignify the wretched ſtate to which, during their captivity, the Iſraelites ſhould be reduced. So I bought her, &c. and I ſaid unto her, Thou ſhalt abide for me many days, as a widow in ſolitude, and lamenting their paſt ill conduct: and thou ſhalt not be for another man, not commit adultery any more; ſo will I alſo be for thee; after proper trial and correction God will again own the relation of an huſband. Note, (1). Though God has deſigns of grace towards a ſinful ſoul, he is often pleaſed to leave us for a while under deep convictions and ſad apprehenſions of our ſtate, the more to endear the mercy when he receives us into the boſom of his love. (2.) When God ſeparates a ſinner for himſelf, from the moment his grace is revealed to him, the ſinner begins to ſeparate himſelf from his iniquities. (3.) God waits to be gracious: when we deſire to return and be for him alone, he is ready to receive us, and engages to be ours for ever.

This parable is particularly applied to the people of Iſrael.

[1.] They ſhall be left deſolate as a widow. They ſhall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, &c. which hath been the caſe with the ten tribes ſince their captivity by Salmaneſer, and is at preſent the ſtate of the whole Jewiſh nation, and hath been theſe ſeventeen hundred years. They are without any form of civil government; have no ſacrifice; are without an image, being entirely cured of idolatry; without an ephod, their prieſthood is no more, nor have they any method of enquiring at God's mouth as formerly; and without teraphim, which ſome ſuppoſe to be the ſame as Urim and Thummim, and render it, without manifeſtations; though others ſay they were little images, which they conſulted about future events, of which no methods they ſhould take, during their diſperſion, whether lawful or unlawful, would inform them: and woful is the ſtate of that people thus cut off from all communion with God.

[2]. They ſhall at laſt be received again as a wife. Afterwards, when the days of their ſeparation are ended, ſhall the children of Iſrael return from their long apoſtacy, and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king, the rejected Meſſiah, whom they will then receive for their Lord and King, earneſtly ſolliciting to be admitted into his church; and ſhall fear the Lord and his goodneſs in the latter days, with filial fear of offending any more a God ſo gracious. Which prophecy, whatever reference it may have to thoſe Jews who were converted by the firſt preaching of the goſpel, ſeems to look to ſome glorious future day for its full accompliſhment. Note, (1.) They who would return to God and find mercy, muſt diligently ſeek him through the Son of his love. (2.) If Chriſt be our king, we muſt prove our loyalty by our fidelity. (3.) A ſenſe of God's goodneſs, and of the baſeneſs of ingratitude, more powerfully reſtrains a faithful ſoul from offending than any ſervile fears of wrath.

v. 1—5. Iſrael's ſins are the cauſe of all her miſeries.

1. The prophet in God's name ſummons the people to attend the charge he is about to lay againſt them. Hear the word of the Lord, ye children of Iſrael: for the Lord hath a controverſy with the inhabitants of the land. Sin was the high offence, the cauſe of all their miſeries and ours; and in God's own people it is more exceeding ſinful.

2. Their indictment charges them with many high crimes and miſdemeanors, for one of a thouſand of which they cannot anſwer him. There is no truth: hypocritical towards God, and faithleſs towards men, their profeſſions were deceit, and their promiſes falſehood: nor mercy; for where honeſty is baniſhed, charity cannot ſubſiſt. They paid no regard to the diſtreſſes of the indigent; and, wrapped up in themſelves, with unfeeling diſregard beheld the miſeries of others. Nor knowledge of God in the land: they deſired not to know him, their hearts were averſe from his teachings; and this wilful ignorance was at once the cauſe and aggravation of their other ſins. By ſwearing they increaſed their load of guilt, wantonly profane, and taking God's name in vain: and lying; they added perjury to profaneneſs, and in their ordinary converſation copied cloſely after their father the Devil, who was a liar from the beginning. And by a complication of all the moſt enormous crimes filled up the meaſure of their iniquities, by killing, and ſtealing, and committing adultery, they break out, with lawleſs violence, unreſtrained by the laws of God or man, as a torrent, that ſweeps away every mound and deluges the country. And blood toucheth blood; ſo vaſt is the effuſion of it, occaſioned by the frequency of murders; or the dreadful maſſacres of the ſucceſſive kings, each graſping at the crown over the corpſe of his predeceſſor, 2 Kings xv. 8—30.

3. An awful ſentence is paſſed upon them: for ſuch ſins, where-ever they are found, are ſure to meet a juſt recompenſe of reward. Therefore ſhall the land mourn, laid waſte and deſolate with famine and the ſword; and every one that dwelleth therein ſhall languiſh, with the beaſts of the field and the fowls of heaven, pining for want, or conſumed with war and peſtilence; yea the fiſhes of the ſea ſhall be taken away, that no food may remain to ſatisfy their hunger. Note, God can quickly conſume a ſinful land: he hath only to withdraw his mercies, and we periſh immediately.

4. Their caſe is deſperate. Yet let no man ſtrive, nor reprove another: either theſe are the words of the incorrigible people, ſilencing their reprovers; or of God to the prophet, enjoining him and other good men to deſiſt from their labours, and abandon them to ruin: for thy people are as they that ſtrive with the prieſt; they are ſo impudent in ſin, that they would fly in the face even of the prieſts of God who admoniſhed them; or all were become ſo bad, that, if a prieſt dared reprove them, they retorted on him, Phyſician heal thyſelf. Therefore ſhalt thou fall in the day, the day of vengeance approaching; or to-day, immediately the wrath ſhall go forth; and the prophet alſo, the falſe prophets who deceived them with lying divinations, ſhall fall in the night of deep adverſity, which approaches; and I will deſtroy thy mother, either Samaria the metropolis, or the nation in general; for both are doomed to utter ruin. Note, (1.) They who are deaf to rebuke are on the precipice of ruin. (2.) We are bound not to ſuffer ſin upon our brethren, without friendly admonition; but when we perceive them exaſperated, inſtead of humbled, ſilence becomes duty. (3.) When ſinners ſtrive with their faithful miniſters, and refuſe to hear, their blood is on their own heads. (4.) They who have contributed to ſeduce others ſhall meet the heavieſt vengeance in the day of recompenſe.

6. ¶ [f] My people are † deſtroyed for lack of knowledge: [g] becauſe thou haſt rejected knowledge, I will alſo reject thee, that thou ſhalt be no prieſt to me: ſeeing thou haſt forgotten the law of thy God, I will alſo forget thy children. 7. [h] As they were increaſed, ſo they ſinned againſt me: [i] therefore will I change their glory into ſhame. 8. They eat up the ſin of my people, and they ‡ ſet their heart on their iniquity. 9. And there ſhall be [k] like people, like prieſt: and I will puniſh them for their ways, and § reward them their doings. 10. For [l] they ſhall eat, and not have enough: they ſhall commit whoredom, and ſhall not increaſe: becauſe they have left off to take heed to the LORD. 11. 1. They rejected the knowledge of God, and ſuffered the people to periſh for lack of it. And though this will be no excuſe for the people, who choſe darkneſs rather than light, yet will their blood be required at the negligent watchman's hands. I will alſo reject thee, that thou ſhalt be no prieſt to me, cut off both from the office and benefit of the prieſthood. Note, (1.) Ignorance in a prieſt is doubly ſcandalous, and wilful ignorance the more atrociouſly criminal, as thereby not only their own ſouls but the ſouls of others are deſtroyed. (2.) Ignorance in the people is ſo far from being the mother of devotion, that it is the forerunner of deſtruction. (3.) Though, in ſuch careleſs days as ours, men unqualified by ignorance, and ſcandalous by immoralities, are too often permitted to call themſelves miniſters of God, he will with abhorrence reject their pretenſions, and in the great day drive them from his throne with a Depart, accurſed, I never knew you.

2. They forgat the law of God, v. 6. took no pains to remember it themſelves or inculcate it upon others; therefore God threatens, I alſo will forget thy children, the children of the prieſts, who ſhould be degraded, and not ſucceed their fathers in the prieſthood; or the people, whom they ſhould have regarded and taught as their ſpiritual fathers; but becauſe they had neglected them God will diſown them. Wicked parents thus bring a curſe upon their own offspring.

3. The abuſe of their bleſſings ſhall prove their bane. As they were increaſed in numbers, wealth, and power, ſo they ſinned againſt me with more daring profaneneſs and inſolent ingratitude; therefore will I change their glory into ſhame, when, led into a wretched captivity, they ſhould be ſtripped of all their poſſeſſions and honours, and mingle with the ignominious herd.

4. They were luxurious. They eat up the ſin of my people, feaſting on the ſin-offerings; and, whilſt they were careleſs about inſtructing the people concerning the nature and deſign of the ſacrifices, they fattened themſelves upon the choiceſt part of them; they ſet their heart on their iniquity, wholly given up to the indulgence of their appetites; or lifted up their ſoul thereunto, well pleaſed the people ſhould continue to ſin, becauſe this would multiply the ſacrifices, and provide food for their gluttony. And there ſhall be like people, like prieſt, equally ignorant, intemperate, and profane; for when prieſts ſhew ſuch ill examples, no marvel a general profligacy of manners enſues. And I will puniſh them for their ways: they who were companions in ſin ſhall ſuffer together; and reward them their doings, pouring out that vengeance upon them which they have provoked: for they ſhall eat, and not have enough; either their inſatiable appetites ſhould ever be craving, and find no ſatisfaction; or during the famine, or in captivity, they ſhould know the pinchings of hunger, and pine away for very want of ſuſtenance.

5. They committed whoredom, and thought to have a numerous iſſue by theſe unlawful means; but they ſhall not increaſe; God will diſappoint their deſires, or ſlay their children: becauſe they have left off to take heed to the Lord; apoſtate from his ſervice, and open violaters of his law. Note, (1.) When God is diſregarded, men ſtick at no abominations. (2.) God's curſe will blaſt all unlawful ways of increaſe.

6. They had given their hearts to wine and women. Whoredom and wine, and new wine, take away the heart, utterly eſtrange it from God; or ſuch ſins ſtupify the conſcience, and rob men of their reaſon, ſo that they act as if infatuated. Thus doth the curſe ever follow the ſin, cloſe as the ſhadow doth the body.

12. ¶ My people aſk counſel at their ſtocks, and their ſtaff declareth unto them: for [n] the ſpirit of whoredoms hath cauſed them to err, and they have gone a whoring from under their God. 13. [o] They ſacrifice upon the tops of the mountains, and burn incenſe upon the hills under oaks and poplars, and elms, becauſe the ſhadow thereof is good: [p] therefore your daughters ſhall commit whoredom, and your ſpouſes ſhall commit adultery. 14. † I will not puniſh your daughters when they commit whoredom, nor your ſpouſes when they commit adultery: for themſelves are ſeparated with whores, and they ſacrifice with harlots: therefore the people that doth not underſtand ſhall fall. 15. ¶ Though thou Iſrael play the harlot, yet let not Judah offend, and come not ye [q] unto Gilgal, neither go ye up to [r] Beth-aven, [s] nor [t] ſwear, The LORD liveth. 16. For Iſrael [u] ſlideth back, as a backſliding heifer: now the LORD will feed them as a lamb in a large place. 17. Ephraim is joined to idols: [x] let him alone. 18. Their drink is ‡ ſour: they have committed whoredom continually: [y] her § rulers with ſhame do love, Give ye. 19. The wind hath bound her up in her wings, and [z] they ſhall be aſhamed becauſe of their ſacrifices.

v. 12—19. The prophet goes on to charge upon the people of Iſrael thoſe atrocious crimes which cried for vengeance.

1. Their ſins were,

[1.] Idolatry. The ſpirit of whoredoms hath cauſed them to err: their hearts were violently bent upon their idols, with ſuch raging deſires as the lewd ſeek the embraces of an harlot; and ſo aſtoniſhingly beſotted, that they leave the living God, who would have been their huſband, father, friend, almighty to help, all-wiſe to direct them, to aſk counſel at their ſtocks; as if the log they had ſquared and planed could teach them: and their ſtaff declareth unto them; either ſome little image engraved on them, to which they paid their devotions; or they uſed the divinations of the heathen, ſee Ezek. xxi. 21. and by the falling of their ſtaff took directions for their conduct. To theſe ſenſeleſs idols they offered their ſacrifices and incenſe, on the tops of mountains, under oaks and poplars, and elms, becauſe the ſhadow thereof is good; copying the manners of their heathen neighbours, and chuſing the ſame places for the ſcene of their impure rites and ceremonies.

[2.] Adultery. They are ſeparated with whores, and ſacrifice with harlots, the worſhip of their gods being celebrated with ſuch abominations; and this continually, v. 18. theſe crimes were their habitual practice.

[3.] Bribery, and perverſion of juſtice. Her rulers with ſhame do love, Give ye. Nothing could be obtained of them without a fee, who ſhould have adminiſtered juſtice freely; and gain, not right, ſwayed their deciſions.

[4.] They obſtinately perſiſted in their wicked ways, v. 16. Iſrael ſlideth back, as a backſliding heifer, or refractory, that no fence can keep in; or that will not ſuffer the yoke, and, when goaded to draw, goes backward. So had they been, refuſing to be reſtrained by God's law, or kicking againſt the pricks of the prophetic warnings and afflictive providences; and ſo wedded were they to their idols, v. 17. ſins theſe, which, wherever they are found, will aſſuredly, as here, provoke God's wrath and indignation againſt the guilty ſoul: for the people that doth not underſtand the danger and evil of their ways ſhall fall, v. 14. and periſh in their iniquities.

2. God threatens them with a variety of evils, as the righteous puniſhment of their tranſgreſſions.

[1.] Your daughters ſhall commit whoredom, and your ſpouſes ſhall commit adultery, led by the bad examples of their huſbands and fathers; and permitted with impunity to do ſo, v. 14. as a puniſhment for the like crimes, which they had committed.

[2.] They ſhall be given as ſheep to the ſlaughter. The Lord will feed them as a lamb in a large place, and their proſperity ſhall haſten their perdition; or as one lamb, ſeparated from the flock and in a deſart, falls a prey to the devouring wolves, ſo ſhould they be given up to the hand of the Aſſyrians, and diſperſed in their vaſt empire.

[3.] God will abandon them to their own hearts, v. 17. and a heavier curſe cannot fall upon the ſinner, than when God withdraws all his grace, and ſaith, Let him alone; let my Spirit no more ſtrive, nor miniſters rebuke, nor conſcience check, nor providences reſtrain, nor mercies affect him: then his doom is fixed.

[4.] God will make their ſins their puniſhment, as the drunkard often proves. Their drink is ſour, their ſtomachs overcharged, and ſickneſs like death ſeizing them, till every table is filled with vomit.

[5.] They ſhall be hurried away captives. The wind hath bound her up in her wings: the Aſſyrians, like a whirlwind, ſhall carry all before them; and then, too late, they ſhall be aſhamed of their ſacrifices, when their folly, in truſting to idols and departing from God, will be made manifeſt.

3. Judah is admoniſhed to take warning by Iſrael's ſin. Tho' thou Iſrael play the harlot, yet let not Judah offend. Some interpreters ſuppoſe this is rather a caution to Iſrael, among all their other ſins, not to draw their brethren of the houſe of Judah to offend with them, which would aggravate their guilt. I rather incline to ſuppoſe it addreſſed to Judah, who might be tempted to join with the houſe of Iſrael in idolatry, which would be more criminal in them, who had the temple in the midſt of them, and had not yet apoſtatiſed from God; and therefore they are forbidden to meet the Iſraelites in their places of idolatrous worſhip, Come not ye unto Gilgal, the chief ſcene of their wickedneſs, ſee chap, ix. 15. xii. 11. neither go ye up to Bethaven: once the name was Bethel, the houſe of God; but, ſince the golden calf hath been erected there, it is Bethaven, a houſe of iniquity, and to be ſhunned as the plague: nor ſwear, The Lord liveth; profanely, or falſely, or thoughtleſsly taking this awful name into their lips. Note, (1.) The more advantages we enjoy to know God, and the more obligations we are under to cleave to him, the more will every departure from him bring aggravated guilt. (2.) They who would abſtain from ſin muſt ſhun the company of evil men, and never venture into the places of temptation: when we are out of the path of duty we may not expect protection. (3.) They who ſhew no ſacred reverence for God's name, evidently declare the profaneneſs and impiety of their hearts.

CHAP. V.

The ſcope of this chapter is the ſame with the foregoing, to diſcover the ſin both of Iſrael and Judah, and to denounce the judgments of God againſt them. 1. They are called to hearken to the charge, ver. 1, 8. 2. They are accuſed of many ſins, which are here aggravated. [1.] Perſecution, ver. 1, 2. [5.] The tyranny of the princes, and the tameneſs of the people in ſubmitting to it, ver. 10, 11. 3. They are threatned with God's diſpleaſure for their ſins; he knows all their wickedneſs, ver. 3. and makes known his wrath againſt them for it, ver. 9. (1.) They ſhall fall in their iniquity, ver. 5. (2.) God will forſake them, ver. 6. (3.) Their portions ſhall be devoured, ver. 7. (4.) God will rebuke them and pour out his wrath upon them, ver. 9, 10. (5.) They ſhall be oppreſſed, ver. 11. (6.) God will be as a moth to them in ſecret, ver. 12. and as a lion in public judgments, ver. 14. 4. They are blamed for the wrong courſe they took under their afflictions, ver. 13. 5. It is intimated that they ſhall at length take a right courſe, ver. 15.

1. HEAR ye this, [a] O prieſts, and hearken, ye houſe of Iſrael, and give ye ear, O houſe of the king; for judgment is toward you, becauſe ye have been a ſnare on Mizpeh, and a net ſpread upon Tabor. 2. And the revolters are [b] profound to make ſlaughter, † though I have been ‡ a rebuker of them all. 3. [c] I know Ephraim, and Iſrael is not hid from me: for now, O Ephraim, thou committeſt whoredom, and Iſrael is defiled. 4. They will not § frame their doings to turn unto their God: for [d] the ſpirit of whoredoms is in the midſt of them, and they have not known the LORD. 5. And [e] the pride of Iſrael doth teſtify to his face: therefore ſhall Iſrael and Ephraim fall in their iniquity: Judah alſo ſhall fall with them. 6. [f] They ſhall go with their flocks, and with their herds to ſeek the LORD: but they ſhall not find him, he hath withdrawn himſelf from them. 7. [g] They have dealt treacherouſly againſt the LORD: for they have begotten ſtrange children: now ſhall [h] a month devour them with their portions.

v. 1—7. Again the prophet returns to the charge, and cites the king, prieſts, and people of Iſrael, to hear their accuſation and doom from God, who knew all their wickedneſs, however hypocritically covered, or committed in ſecret. Note, (1.) No ſinner is ſo great as to be above God's judgments, or ſo mean as to be overlooked by him (2.) God knoweth the hidden things of darkneſs; nor can the ſhadow of death hide the workers of iniquity.

1. He charges a variety of crimes upon them: [1.] They ſtudied to draw their neighbours to join in their idolatries: Ye have been a ſnare on Mizpeh, and a net ſpread upon Tabor; two mountains, where probably their idol altars ſtood near the borders of Judah, as ſnares ſet by hunters to entrap their game. Some have ſuggeſted, that here Jeroboam placed ſpies to ſee who went up to Jeruſalem at the ſolemn feaſts, that they might be proſecuted for it on their return. Note, They who under the cloak of friendſhip would entice us into ſin, are our moſt mortal enemies. [2.] The revolters are profound to make ſlaughter; apoſtates being the bittereſt perſecutors; they who had themſelves revolted from God, laid ſnares to murder thoſe who refuſed to comply with their wicked ways: or, as the words may be interpreted, they offered vaſt ſacrifices with a ſhew of devotion; to provide noble entertainments, in order to ſeduce the unwary to join with them; though I have been a rebuker of them all; God by his prophet had awfully and repeatedly warned them of their wickedneſs, yet they ſtill perſiſted in it; and this greatly aggravated their guilt. [3.] They committed whoredom: the ſpirit of whoredom poſſeſſed their hearts, and the acts of it defiled their bodies; this God ſaw, who ſearcheth the heart, and whoſe eye no deeds of darkneſs, however ſecretly committed, can eſcape. Let guilty ſinners know it and tremble. [4.] They were wilfully ignorant, and obſtinately perverſe: They will not frame their doings to turn unto their God; utterly averſe to all the means and methods which might lead to their converſion; and they have not known the Lord; for indeed they deſired not the knowledge of his ways. [5.] The pride of Iſrael doth teſtify to his face; ſo open, avowed, and notorious, they were grown inſolent in ſin, and paſt ſhame, as their very looks declared. [6.] They dealt treacherouſly againſt the Lord; as a wife that leaves her huſband for another: they have begotten ſtrange children; intermingling in marriages with the heathen, or bringing up their children in the ſame idolatries they themſelves committed; and dreadful is that parent's guilt, whoſe children's murdered ſouls, deſtroyed by his example, or bad inſtructions, ſhall cry for vengeance againſt him.

2. He pronounces ſentence upon them: Judgment is towards you, v. 1. God is ready to call them to his bar, and make them know his terrible wrath. They ſhall fall in their iniquity; under the load of unrepented guilt: and Judah ſhall fall with them; who copying their wicked ways, ſhall partake of their ruin, led captive with them into the ſame ſtrange land. So ſurely ſhall companions in ſin ſuffer together; and they who perſiſt in their iniquities, ſhall in them aſſuredly periſh: nor ſhall their forced return to God in the day of their diſtreſs, ſtand them in any ſtead. Though they go with their flocks and their herds to ſeek the Lord, their hearts being unhumbled, and their prayers merely extorted by the apprehenſion of danger, God will pay no regard to them; they ſhall not find him, ſo as to obtain any favour or protection; he hath withdrawn himſelf from them, and left them to their deſerved ruin. There is a time when God will be no more entreated; and they who will not know the day of their viſitation, ſhall be diſregarded when they cry in the day of their calamity: and now their ſwift deſtruction approaches, a month ſhall devour them with their portions; they, and all they poſſeſs, ſhall be ſhortly ruined. Or this may refer to their new-moons and ſacrifices, on which they truſted; but ſo far from being of uſe to them, their hypocritical ſervices added but to their guilt, and haſtened the wrath of God upon them. Note, (1.) The ſinner's day is near, when vengeance will overtake him. (2.) They who take up with their portion in this world, will find to their ſorrow how wretched a choice they have made.

8. [i] Blow ye the cornet in Gibeah, and the trumpet in Ramah: cry aloud at [k] Beth-aven: after thee, O Benjamin. 9. Ephraim ſhall be deſolate in the day of rebuke: among the tribes of Iſrael have I made known that which ſhall ſurely be. 10. The princes of Judah were like them that [l] remove the bound: therefore I will pour out my wrath upon them like water. 11. Ephraim is oppreſſed, and broken in judgment: becauſe he willingly walked after [m] the commandment. 12. Therefore will I be unto Ephraim [n] as a moth: and to the houſe of Judah as † rottenneſs. 13. When Ephraim ſaw his ſickneſs, and Judah ſaw his wound, then [o] went Ephraim to the Aſſyrian, and ſent to [p] king ‡ Jareb: yet could he not heal you, nor cure you of your wound. 14. For [q] I will be unto Ephraim as a lion, and as [a] young lion to the houſe of Judah: I, even I will tear and go away; I will take away, and none ſhall reſcue him. 15. ¶ I will go and return to my place, till [r] they § acknowledge their offence, and ſeek my face: [s] in their affliction they will ſeek me early.

v. 8—15. The judgment was denounced, and lo! it is even now at the door.

1. The alarm is ſounded: Blow ye the cornet in Gibeah, and the trumpet in Ramah; the frontier towns of Judah, to let them know the approach of the enemy: cry aloud at Beth-aven: after thee, O Benjamin; the enemy is on thy back, and ready to advance from the conqueſt of Iſrael to invade Judea. When our neighbour's houſe is on fire, it is high time to look to our own. The ruin of thoſe who are cut off in their ſins, ſhould be a warning to the ſurvivors.

2. The deſtruction of Ephraim had been long foretold: Ephraim ſhall be deſolate in the day of rebuke; led captive by Salmaneſer: among the tribes of Iſrael have I made known that which ſhall ſurely be; the prophets repeatedly gave them notice of what would be the conſequence of their ſins; but they rejected their admonitions, and diſbelieved their prophecies, and therefore were were without excuſe. Note, Sinners turn a deaf ear to the denunciations of God's wrath, and would fain treat them as mere chimæras, but they will find them terrible realities, and things that ſhall ſurely be.

3. The princes of Judah took no warning by their neighbours fall, but equalled them in iniquity, and therefore muſt periſh together with them. The princes of Judah were like them that remove the land mark; paid no regard to property, but oppreſſed their inferiors, and ſeized their poſſeſſions: or figuratively taken, they refuſed to be kept within any bounds by God's law, and broke through every reſtraint: therefore I will pour out my wrath upon them like water; which, as the deluge, ſhall ſweep them away. Note, They who abuſe their power to oppreſſion, ſhall be made to know there is a judge above, the patron of the injured, and the avenger of their wrongs.

4. Ephraim's ſin and ruin are again mentioned. [1.] Their ſin: They willingly walked after the commandment; obeying the orders of Jeroboam and his idolatrious ſucceſſors, who enjoined the worſhip of the calves: and far from oppoſing theſe impious commands, the people, very well pleaſed with the idolatrous worſhip, readily complied with them. For this God threatens, [2.] To puniſh them. Ephraim is oppreſſed, and broken in judgment; this was a part of their immediate ſufferings, being ruled by tyrants, and broken with the oppreſſion and injuſtice of their princes and magiſtrates; and this was a juſt judgment upon them. They who willingly became ſlaves to their princes humour, deſerved the galling yoke laid upon them. Servility invites the exerciſe of tyranny. Therefore will I be unto Ephraim as a moth; ſilently, and by degrees weakening them, and bringing them to deſtruction: and to the houſe of Judah as rottenneſs in the bones, that ſpreads and deſtroys the ſubſtance; or a worm, that eats into the heart of the tree, and it withers away. Note, Vengeance comes ſlowly, that ſinners may have ſpace to repent; but if they neglect the warnings given them, they are ſure to be undone at the laſt.

5. The methods they took to help their weakneſs were ſinful, and proved ineffectual: When Ephraim ſaw his ſickneſs, and Judah his wound, then went Ephraim to the Aſſyrian, and ſent to king Jareb; probably the ſame with Pul, or Tiglath-pileſer, ſee 2 Kings xv. 19. xvi. 7. xvii. 3. yet could he not heal you, nor cure you of your wound; on the contrary, he increaſed inſtead of relieving their malady, and helped forward their ruin, 2 Kings xv. 29. 2 Chron. xxviii. 20. So ſurely will they, who fly to creature dependances, and forſake God, find them miſerable comforters, and rue their fooliſh choice. And thus alſo, when a ſoul, under conviction of ſins, flies to his ſorrows, repentance, prayers, duties, for help, inſtead of Chriſt, he will find, inſtead of growing better, the evil will but be exaſperated.

6. Provoked by ſuch conduct, God threatens them with heavier judgments; before he was but as a moth; but now I will be unto Ephraim as a lion, and as a young lion to the houſe of Judah; devouring and deſtroying them by his judgments, and by the ſword of the Aſſyrians: I, even I will tear and go away as a lion, fearleſs of being purſued; I will take away, as that ravenous beaſt drags the prey to his den, and none ſhall reſcue him; thoſe who ſurvived of the people of Judah and Iſrael, ſhould be carried captives, and none be able to releaſe them from this afflictive diſpenſation, till he ſhould return in mercy unto them. I will go and return to my place, abandoning them for a ſeaſon to their miſeries, till his chaſtiſements had humbled their ſtubborn hearts, and they acknowledge their offence, taking ſhame for their abominations, and confeſſing the juſtice of their puniſhment, and ſeek my face for pardon and reſtoration: for in their affliction, brought to a ſenſe of their ſins, by the ſufferings they endure, they will ſeek me early; with fervent importunity, riſing up betimes, and crying for mercy; and then there is hope their miſeries may come to an end. Note, (1.) When leſſer chaſtiſements are ineffectual, God will make ſinners feel his heavy hand. (2.) If he departs from the ſoul, then nothing but miſery is left behind him. (3.) Though God ſometimes appears utterly to forſake his people, he waits only for their humiliations and prayers, in order to return and be gracious unto them. (4.) True penitents are always liberal in acknowledgments and ſelf-reproaches. (5.) The afflictions, however ſevere, that drive the ſinner to ſeek God's face, are in reality the greateſt mercies.

CHAP. VI.

Some among the people are really penitent; and we have, 1. Their reſolution to return unto God; in which they encourage their brethren to join them, ver. 1—3. 2. Many who made a fair profeſſion, proved hypocritical; they ſhall be ſeverely puniſhed, ver. 4—11.

f Job xxix. 23.

v. 1—3. Their prayers promiſed a ſpeedy return to God, in the cloſe of the laſt chapter, and therefore the prophet, with the faithful ſouls among them, is repreſented exciting and encouraging them to put in execution the gracious purpoſes they had formed; for good deſires ſhould never be ſuffered to cool.

1. The matter of their exhortation is, Come, and let us return unto the Lord, from whom we have ſo greatly departed, renouncing now all other confidences and idol worſhip, and depending on him alone for help.

2. The motives on which they preſs ſuch a return, are many and powerful.

(1.) They are aſſured of his help and healing. They had felt by dire experience his power to deſtroy, v. 1. and the ſame hand was as able to ſave them, and would aſſuredly be ſtretched out to raiſe them from their depreſſed and wretched ſtate. After two days will he revive us, in the third day will he raiſe us up, and we ſhall live in his ſight; though we lie as dead corpſes in our graves during the captivity, he will not ſuffer us utterly to periſh, but after a ſhort time will reſtore us again to our own land, and give us again a ſenſe of his favour, and the light of his countenance. And this may refer to their reſtoration from the Babyloniſh captivity, or look forward perhaps to their recovery from their preſent diſperſion. Some have ſuppoſed theſe words to relate to Chriſt riſing on the third day from the dead; in whom alſo his people are riſen, by virtue of their union with him. But though this be a great and glorious truth, I doubt much whether it be referred to in this prophecy. Note, (1.) If we are torn and ſmitten, whatever be the inſtrument, God's hand is to be acknowledged. (2.) Whatever the hurt of the ſinner may be, however deep the wounds of his conſcience, they are not paſt the divine phyſician's cure. (3.) Nothing is ſo encouraging a ground to return to God, as a believing view of the riches of his grace in Chriſt Jeſus.

(2.) They ſhall have their knowledge of God increaſed: Then ſhall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord; or, as the words may be rendered, we ſhall know, we ſhall follow on to know the Lord; ſhall know his power, grace, and love; and encouraged by what we have attained, ſhall be reaching after greater meaſures of divine knowledge. Note, (1.) The moſt deſirable of all attainments, is the knowledge of God, for with this eternal life is inſeparably connected, John xvii. 3. (2.) They who have any true knowledge of God, deſire by prayer, the word, and ordinances, to increaſe it yet more abundantly, till they come where they ſhall know even as they are known.

(3.) They ſhall enjoy the richeſt conſolations: His going forth is prepared as the morning; though God had left them to a dark night of affliction, like the returning ſun, he was ready to ariſe upon them with healing in his wings; and ſure as the return of the morning, and chearing as the light of day, would be the return of his favour and grace to them, whenever they truly ſought him: and he ſhall come unto us as the rain; as the latter and former rain unto the earth; in the abundance of his bleſſings, as theſe ſeaſonable ſhowers cauſed the barns to be filled with corn, and their vats to overflow with wine and oil. And theſe promiſes, whatever particular reſpect they had to the recovery of the Jews from Babylon, ſeem to look forward to the Meſſiah's days, the glorious ſun of righteouſneſs, whoſe bleſſed goſpel, like the dew of heaven, ſhould drop upon the ſouls of ſinners, and fill the face of the world with fruit.

For [k] I deſired mercy, and [l] not ſacrifice; and the knowledge of God, more than burnt-offerings. 7. But they § like men [m] have tranſgreſſed the covenant: there have they dealt treacherouſly againſt me. 8. [n] Gilead is a city of them that work iniquity; and is ‖ polluted with blood. 9. v. 4—11. There appeared promiſing hopes that a reconciliation would be effected: but we have here,

1. Their hypocriſy, and the concern God expreſſed thereat: O Ephraim, &c. O Judah, what ſhall I do unto thee? what could be done that he had not done to reclaim them; and though it had been hitherto ineffectual, he ſpeaks with reluctance, as yet unwilling to give them up, though they had ſo juſtly deſerved it; for your goodneſs is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away, ſo ſhort-lived was the reformation under Jehu, and in the days of Hezekiah and Joſiah. Note, (1.) God's compaſſions to ſinners is amazing, and his patience and dealings with them muſt leave them without excuſe. (2.) Many begin well, and for a while make a fair religious profeſſion, whoſe goodneſs hath no more abidance than the morning cloud, and vaniſhes as the early dew before the ſun of perſecution, or the blaſts of temptation.

2. God had ſeverely rebuked them for their unfaithfulneſs. Therefore have I hewed them by the prophets, ſharply reproving their hypocriſy, and cutting them to the heart with denunciations of wrath: I have ſlain them by the words of my mouth, devoting them to death, and then it is as ſure as if every word was a drawn ſword, and thy judgments are as the light that goeth forth; God's warnings were clear and plain, and the afflictions they ſuffered evidently came from his hand, ſo that their impenitence was inexcuſable, and all that came upon them muſt needs appear altogether righteous and juſt. Note, (1.) The hearts of ſinners are hard as the rock, and knotty as the rigid oak; God's miniſters muſt therefore uſe the ſharp two-edged ſword, and hew them by the terrors of the Lord, and with the remonſtrances of their baſeneſs and ingratitude. (2.) The threatnings God pronounces againſt the ungodly, if they do not repent, are ſure to be executed, they are already as dead men.

3. He tells them what he required of them. For I deſired mercy, not ſacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings; for theſe had in themſelves no intrinſic value, their only uſe was to point out the neceſſity of an atonement, and to lead them to a Saviour; and when they reſted in the form of godlineſs, whilſt they neglected the power of it, the moſt expenſive ſacrifices were of no avail. The thing God required was their hearts, not their beaſts; that they ſhould know, acknowledge, worſhip and ſerve him as their Lord and God, and exerciſe mercy, cheſed, rendered goodneſs, ver. 4. comprehending the whole ſcope of practical godlineſs, and proceeding from the divine principle of the love of God and man in the heart; and this muſt ever be remembered, ſince without it all profeſſions of religion are but an empty name.

4. They ſhamefully tranſgreſſed the covenant like Adam the firſt ſinner, or like men, the wicked ones in the old world, or the multitude of the ungodly who ſtill abound; there have they dealt treacherouſly againſt me; even in the very ſacrifices they offered, and their other religious acts, they played the hypocrite; their hearts were wrong, and their very ſervices therefore an abomination. And this was evident from their practice; Gilead is a city of them that work iniquity, the whole country was given up to it, or that particular city Ramoth-Gilead, inhabited by prieſts and Levites, whoſe wickedneſs was more criminal, and the influence of their bad examples more extenſively fatal; for none do ſuch irreparable hurt to men's ſouls, or wound the cauſe of God ſo deeply, as profligate worldly idolatrous prieſts; and is polluted with blood, for ungodly prieſts are the bittereſt perſecutors. Probably, this being a city of refuge, a bribe would protect wilful murderers, and for filthy lucre the innocent were delivered into the hands of the avenger of blood. Nor is it a wonder to ſee them ſell men's bodies, when we daily ſee the more criminal ſale of men's ſouls. And as troops of robbers wait for a man, ſo the company of prieſts murder in the way by conſent; the general body of them was corrupt, and they connived at and upheld each other in their wicked ways, and were ever ready to aſſiſt each other to perſecute or oppreſs thoſe againſt whom they bore enmity: or they murder in the way to Shechem, lying in wait for thoſe pious Iſraelites who turned their backs on the calves, and went up to Jeruſalem to worſhip. They commit lewdneſs, or enormity, the moſt infamous crimes, with deep contrivance, as the word ſignifies; I have ſeen an horrible thing in the houſe of Iſrael; there is the whoredom of Ephraim, corporal and ſpiritual; Iſrael is defiled, the whole nation addicted to idolatry and lewdneſs. Alſo, O Judah, he hath ſet an harveſt for thee, the time is fixed, and thou art ripe for ruin: or the words may be rendered to another ſenſe, and then the prophecy cloſes with a promiſe of mercy, But, O Judah, he hath ſet an harveſt for thee, God hath joy in ſtore for thee, when I returned, or return, the captivity of my people from Babylon, which would occaſion great gladneſs through all the tribes. Note, (1.) Sin is a horrible thing; it ſhould ſhock us wherever we ſee it committed. (2.) God's grace triumphs over the provocations of his people, and when we deſerve puniſhment, his thoughts towards us are thoughts of peace and not of evil.

v. 1—7. We have here,

1. What God had done for his people. I would have healed, or I healed Iſrael; reſtoring their civil ſtate under Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh to a flouriſhing condition, 2 Kings xiv. 25, 26, or under Jehu, deſtroying the worſhip of Baal, 2 Kings x. 25—30. and thus by his mercies he called upon them to forſake all their idolatries, and turn to him with their whole hearts.

2. They refuſed to be healed, when God had dealt with them in ſo much mercy; then the iniquity of Ephraim was diſcovered, and the wickedneſs of Samaria, the golden calves, were ſtill kept, and their idolatries grew more open and infamous, and with them a train of iniquities entered.

[1.] They commit falſhood in their tranſactions with men, perfidious and deceiving, and in their profeſſions to God hypocritical.

[2.] They were a ſet of banditti; the thief cometh in, and the troop of robbers ſpoileth without; ſome interpret this of the judgment of God upon them, who, for their perfidy to each other, were given up to be devoured one of another.

[3.] They left God far above out of their ſight. They conſider not in their hearts that I remember all their wickedneſs, either careleſs about it, or infidel, as if God did not ſee, or would not puniſh them; though he is the jealous God, who will in no wiſe ſpare the guilty, and from whom nothing is hid, nothing is ſecret. Now their own doings have beſet them about, their ſins are open, multiplied, notorious; which every obſerver may diſcover, and much more God's all-ſeeing eye; they are before my face: ſome underſtand this of the puniſhment their ſins ſhould bring upon them; as when Samaria was beſieged, then it would be paſt doubt that God obſerved, and would puniſh them for their iniquities. Note, (1.) Every ſin has for its root infidelity. We promiſe ourſelves impunity in our diſregard of God's threatnings, and then dare to offend. (2.) Sooner or later God will convince the ſinner that he remembers his ways.

[4.] They make the king glad with their wickedneſs, and the princes with their lies. The people readily conformed to their ordinances, and worſhipped the calves, whilſt the prieſts flattered them with aſſurances, that God was as well ſerved at Dan or Bethel, as at Jeruſalem: or, to curry favour, they were ever ready to blacken thoſe whom the princes diſliked, and with lying praiſes to cry up their favourites.

[5.] They are all adulterers, king, princes, prieſts, and people, both corporally and ſpiritually inflamed with luſt, as an oven heated by the baker, v. 4—7. who waiteth till his dough is leavened, and the oven thoroughly heated, and then puts in the loaves: ſo do theſe adulterers entertain their corrupt deſires, and contrive how to gratify them; and when their ſchemes are ripe, they lie in wait, ver. 6. to perpetrate their wickedneſs. Note, They who thus burn in their luſts, may expect ſhortly to burn in hell.

[6.] They were given up to drunkenneſs and revelling. In the day of our king, his birth-day, or the anniverſary of his coronation, or ſome feſtival inſtituted by him, then they carouſed without reſtraint, the princes have made him ſick with bottles of wine, for this is one of the curſes attendant upon drunkenneſs; he ſtretched out his hand with ſcorners; they grew daring over their cups, and with the king at their head made a jeſt of religion, and blaſphemed the moſt High; for when men are intoxicated with liquor, they ſtick at no impiety or wickedneſs.

They have made their hearts like an oven, their drunkenneſs hath ſet fire to their luſts, they lie in wait to ſeize their prey. As the baker kindles the fire, and ſleeping till morning finds his oven hot, ſo burned their lewd hearts, every one neighing after his neighbour's wife, Jer. v. 8. Note, Drunkenneſs is not only highly criminal in itſelf, but it is the door at which every enormity enters uncontrouled.

[7.] They have devoured their judges, hot as an oven in wrath againſt them, and killing thoſe magiſtrates who attempted to puniſh them for their crimes. All their kings are fallen; they were regicides, and joined with ſucceſſive uſurpers, to murder one monarch after another.

[8.] They were ſunk in hardened ſtupidity. There is none among them that calleth unto me; neither the ravages committed at home, nor the inroads of their enemies from abroad, nor any of the diſtreſſes in which they were involved, turned their thoughts to God, or brought them to their knees. Note, They who live without prayer, muſt continue hardened, and periſh in their ſins.

8. Ephraim, he hath [h] mixed himſelf among the people, Ephraim is a cake not turned. 9. [i] Strangers have devoured his ſtrength, and he knoweth it not: yea, gray hairs are † here and there upon him, yet he knoweth not. 10. And [k] the pride of Iſrael teſtifieth to his face, and [l] they do not return to the LORD their God, nor ſeek him for all this. 11. ¶ Ephraim alſo is like a ſilly dove without heart: [m] they call to Egypt, they go to Aſſyria. 12. When they ſhall go, [n] I will ſpread my net upon them, I will bring them down as the fowls of the heaven, I will chaſtiſe them as their congregation hath heard. 13. Wo unto them, for they have fled from me: deſtruction unto them, becauſe they have tranſgreſſed againſt me: though [o] I have redeemed them, yet they have ſpoken lies againſt me. 14. And [p] they have not cried unto me with their heart, when they howled upon their beds: they aſſemble themſelves for corn and wine, and they rebel againſt me. 15. Though I have bound, [q] and ſtrengthened their arms, yet do they imagine miſchief againſt me. 16. [r] They return, but not to the moſt High: [s] they are like a deceitful bow: their princes ſhall fall by the ſword for [t] the rage of their tongue: this ſhall be their deriſion in the land of Egypt.

v. 8—16. The ſins and puniſhments of Iſrael are here interwoven.

1. They were mingled among the heathen, v. 8. either by intermarriages contrary to God's law, or by their alliances with them, and ſollicitations of aſſiſtance from them; or worſt of all, by learning their idolatries, and conforming to their cuſtoms. Ephraim is a cake not turned, burnt on one ſide, and dough on the other, and therefore unfit for uſe: the mixture of heathen ſuperſtition deſtroyed all the acceptableneſs of their worſhip to God. Note, (1.) Bad company is ever corrupting; they who mingle with ſuch, will grow like them. (2.) Many profeſſors are made up of inconſiſtences, and like a cake not turned, are ever ſwinging to extremes.

2. They were inſenſible of the decays under which they were haſting to diſſolution. Strangers have devoured his ſtrength, See 2 Kings xiii. 7. xv. 19, 20, 29. and he knoweth it not, is not ſenſible of the loſs ſuſtained; yea, grey hairs are here and there upon him, the ſpeaking ſymptoms of old age and death approaching, yet he knoweth not, is not aware of his danger, nor ſenſible how near he is to the precipice of ruin. Note, Declenſions in religion, like theſe grey hairs, ſteal inſenſibly on many; and though others perceive them diſtinctly, the backſlider himſelf is not aware of them.

3. They were proud and unhumbled, all the mortifying providences they had undergone did not bring down their high thoughts of themſelves, nor engage their penitent return to God. Notwithſtanding their growing weakneſs and haſtening ruin, they do not return to the Lord their God, nor ſeek him for all this; and this is the worſt ſymptom of a ſinner's caſe, when he ſtill reſtrains prayer before God.

4. They were like a ſilly dove without heart, both fooliſh and timorous, and inſtead of ſeeking to God in their diſtreſs, they call to Egypt for aſſiſtance, 2 Kings xvii. 4. They go to Aſſyria for help, the people who had ever been the implacable enemies of their nation, and waited only an opportunity to devour them. So ſenſeleſs is the ſinner, and courts thoſe as his beſt friends who are his tempters and deſtroyers; but God will make them rue their folly; when they ſhall go, I will ſpread my net upon them, and bring them into difficulties inextricable; I will bring them down as the fowls of heaven from the height of pride, I will chaſtiſe them as their congregation hath heard, ſending upon them the judgments which they had heard ſo often read in his word, Lev. xxvi. Deut. xxviii. Note, (1.) They who leave the good ways of God, will ſoon find themſelves intangled in miſery. (2.) Pride muſt come down in humiliation, or be caſt down by divine judgments. (3.) We ſhould well obſerve the warnings of God's word, for not one jot or tittle of that ſhall fail.

5. They were revolters, rebellious, hypocritical, and ungrateful, notwithſtanding all that God had done for them. Wo unto them! they ruſh on their own ruin, for they have fled from me; rejected his ſervice, deſerted his worſhip, and placed no dependance upon him; following their calves, and ſeeking to their neighbours in time of trouble, inſtead of God. Deſtruction unto them, ſure and inevitable, becauſe they have tranſgreſſed againſt me, violating his laws by the moſt atrocious crimes, and theſe aggravated by all the wondrous mercies they had received at God's hands; though I have redeemed them of old ſo often, and of late ſo eminently out of the hands of their enemies, 2 Kings xiv. 25. yet have they ſpoken lies againſt me, ſetting up their idols, or hypocritically pretending reformation; or denying his word in the mouth of his prophets, or atheiſtically diſbelieving his being or his providence. And they have not cried unto me with their heart, even when their ſufferings extorted prayers from their lips, when they howled upon their beds under God's heavy hand, or in their idol temples the beds of their adultery. They wanted to be rid of their ſufferings, not of their ſins; and then their loudeſt roarings were no better than the howlings of dogs, for no prayer can be acceptable to God, whilſt unrepented iniquities are ſtill embraced. They aſſemble themſelves for corn and wine, theſe were the grand objects of their deſires; they ſought no ſpiritual bleſſings, but only aſked meat for their luſts; no marvel therefore ſuch ſupplications were rejected. And they rebel againſt me, rejecting his government, and ſeeking to dethrone him, in order to exalt their idols in his ſeat. Though I have bound and ſtrengthened their arms, healing their breaches under Joaſh and Jeroboam, yet they imagine miſchief againſt me, perſecuting his prophets, who rebuked them in God's name for their ſins, or giving to their idols the honour of their ſucceſſes, and charging God as the author of all their evils; with baſeſt ingratitude thus requiting him. They return, they made a ſhew of doing ſo, as in the times of Jehu, but not to the moſt High, they quickly relapſed into idolatry; or not on high, their affections are not led up to high and heavenly things, but grovel ſtill on earth; they are like a deceitful bow, whoſe arrow miſſes the mark, or breaks in the archer's hand as he draws the ſtring; ſo did they diſappoint the expectations which their profeſſions had raiſed. Therefore their princes ſhall fall by the ſword of the Aſſyrians, or of conſpirators, for the rage of their tongue, their blaſphemies againſt God, and reviling of his prophets: this ſhall be their deriſion in the land of Egypt, who will mock at their calamities, inſtead of bringing them aſſiſtance. Note, (1.) The ſinner's tongue ſhall at laſt fall upon him. (2.) They who by their wickedneſs bring themſelves into trouble, inſtead of pity juſtly meet with deriſion.

v. 1—7. The prophet is here commanded to ſpread the alarm, Set the trumpet to thy mouth, and deliver at leaſt his own ſoul, if he may not ſave theirs.

1. He charges them in general as rebels and traitors againſt the Lord their king; they have tranſgreſſed my covenant, and treſpaſſed againſt my law, by a variety of crimes, in direct violation of it, and by a general apoſtacy of heart from God, and diſregard of his worſhip and ſervice. Iſrael hath caſt off the thing that is good, or him that is good, even God, juſtly therefore are they rejected by him.

2. Becauſe of this, the enemy ſhall purſue him, ver. 3. Salmaneſer, the Aſſyrian king; as an eagle he ſhall come againſt the houſe of the Lord, ſo they called themſelves, and thought their relation to him as his family would be their protection; but when they had turned out ſuch undutiful and rebellious children, God gave them into the enemy's hand, and ſwift as an eagle haſteth to her prey, ſhould he ſeize their country, and ſpread deſolation on every ſide. Note, No external relation to God can profit us, if our hearts are alienated from him.

3. In their diſtreſs they will plead for help, as God's people. Iſrael ſhall cry unto me, but in vain, My God, we know thee, claiming an intereſt in him, and profeſſing to know him as the true God; but their profeſſions are hypocritical, and therefore their prayers are rejected.

4. Several particular crimes are charged upon them. (1.) They have ſet up kings, but not by me; they took the government at firſt out of his hands, when he was their king; revolted from the houſe of David, and ſet up Jeroboam; and about this time ſeveral had mounted the throne ſucceſſively on the murder of their predeceſſors, 2 Kings xv. 8. and herein the people had not conſulted God at all, but followed their own humour, and gratified their own paſſions; they have made princes, and I knew it not, without his approbation or conſent, affecting independance, and ſhewing an utter diſregard to God's honour and pleaſure: and they may not hope to proſper who thus take their affairs into their own hands, and leave God far above out of their ſight. (2.) They not only made themſelves kings, but gods alſo; of their ſilver and their gold have they made their idols, and to this day the covetous do the ſame, that they may be cut off by their enemies, the Aſſyrians, when their gods of gold could yield them no aſſiſtance. Thy calf, O Samaria, hath caſt thee off, was the cauſe of their being rejected of God, and given to the ſword and to captivity; or hath deſerted thee, failed their hopes in the day of trouble, and was ſeized among other ſpoils, and carried away by the king of Aſſyria. Probably when Samaria became the capital, another calf might be erected there, or one of thoſe from Dan or Bethel was removed thither: mine anger is kindled againſt them, the idolaters, who worſhipped the work of their own hands. From Iſrael was it alſo, erected with the approbation of the people, and molten out of their treaſures; the workman made it, therefore it is not God, a moſt concluſive and irrefragable argument; but the calf, or for the calf, of Samaria ſhall be broken to pieces, a ſure proof of its vanity; ſo far from helping them, it could not reſcue itſelf from the hands of the enemy.

5. The prophet expoſtulates with them on their folly and obſtinacy. How long will it be ere they attain unto innocency? leaving theſe wretched dependancies, and returning to the pure worſhip of God, nor any longer provoke the fierce anger of the Lord. Note, It is the grief of miniſters to behold the perverſeneſs of ſinners, and they cannot but warmly remonſtrate againſt their provocations.

6. He warns them of the fatal iſſue of their ways. For they have ſown the wind, in the fruitleſs labours of their idolatrous worſhip, and their expectation of help from theſe vanities, and they ſhall reap the whirlwind; they ſhall not merely be diſappointed of their harveſt, but reap their own deſtruction, ſwept away by the Aſſyrian army, as by a reſiſtleſs whirlwind: it hath not ſtalk, their ſeed produces nothing, the bud ſhall yield no meal, withered with blaſting and mildew; and if ſo be it yield, the ſtrangers ſhall ſwallow it up, ſo far would it be from a bleſſing to them, that they proſpered and grew wealthy in their ſinful and idolatrous courſes, their riches would be a temptation to their enemies to come and plunder them. And thus will every ſinner and hypocrite's hope periſh; they will reap as they ſow, and find by dire experience that the wages of ſin is death.

8. Iſrael is ſwallowed up: now ſhall they be among the Gentiles, [i] as a veſſel wherein is no pleaſure. 9. For they are gone up to Aſſyria, a wild aſs alone by himſelf: Ephraim [k] hath hired † lovers. 10. Yea, though they have hired among the nations, now [l] will I gather them, and [m] they ſhall ſorrow a little for the burden of [n] the king of princes. 11. Becauſe Ephraim hath made many altars to ſin, altars ſhall be unto him to ſin. 12. [o] I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as a ſtrange thing. 13. [p] They ſacrifice fleſh ‡ for the ſacrifices of mine offerings, and eat it; but [q] the LORD accepteth them not: now will he remember their iniquity, and viſit their ſins: [r] they ſhall return to Egypt. 14. For Iſrael hath forgotten [s] his maker, and buildeth temples; and Judah hath multiplied fenced cities: but I will ſend [t] a fire upon his cities, and it ſhall devour the palaces thereof.

v. 8—14. They who forſake God, forſake their own mercies.

1. Iſrael's ruin is foretold. Iſrael is ſwallowed up, their whole country ſhall be devoured, and themſelves led captive by the Aſſyrians: now ſhall they be among the Gentiles, as a veſſel wherein is no pleaſure, diſperſed, contemptible, and mean. They had profaned the crown of their glory, and therefore juſtly were trodden under foot. Note, They who diſhonour their holy profeſſion, deſerve to be made deſpicable.

2. The cauſe of their deſolations is their departure from God. For they are gone up to Aſſyria, to engage their aſſiſtance, 2 Kings xv. 19. a wild aſs alone by himſelf, ſo obſtinate, unruly, and headſtrong were they in their ways, or ſuch they ſhould become when carried captive, they ſhould experience every hardſhip in a ſtrange land. Ephraim hath hired lovers, by expenſive preſents endeavouring to purchaſe the friendſhip of the neighbouring nations; thus deſerting God, and changing a rock for a reed. Note, The ſinner is as fooliſh as he is wicked; and inſtead of the happineſs he expects, really courts his own ruin.

3. Their lovers whom they courted will prove their deſtroyers. Though they have hired among the nations, now will I gather them, either their enemies againſt them, or themſelves into the midſt of their beſieged cities, as ſheaves in the floor, Mic. iv. 8. and they ſhall ſorrow a little for the burden of the king of princes; the tribute impoſed upon them by the king of Aſſyria, which is the prelude to greater evils approaching, and which ſhould bring more bitter ſorrows along with them. God thus gives warning before he ſtrikes, and brings ſinners firſt into leſſer troubles, to ſee if that will lead them to repentance, before he pours out the vials of his wrath.

4. Their multiplied temples, altars, and ſacrifices, ſhall ſtand them in no ſtead. Becauſe Ephraim hath made many altars to ſin, to offer ſin-offerings upon them with great ſhew of devotion, altars ſhall be unto him for ſin; ſo far from expiating his crimes, the very altars would aggravate them, as being reared contrary to the divine preſcription, Deut. xii. 3—5. and dedicated to the honour of the calves, and other idols. I have written to him the great things of my law, wherein all the great things which pertain unto life and godlineſs were clearly ſet forth; what God required of them, in what manner he would be worſhipped and ſerved, what ſacrifices ſhould be offered, and where; and what was the great end of the ſacrifices, even to lead them to that atoning blood that ſhould be ſhed in the fulneſs of time; but they were counted as a ſtrange thing, they paid no regard to the inſtitutions of God; and after long diſuſe, counted the prophets who would bring them back to the true worſhip and ſervice of God, as ſetters forth of ſtrange doctrines. They ſacrifice fleſh for the ſacrifice of mine offerings, and eat it; inſtead of offering it to God, they feaſted upon it themſelves, and made their devotions miniſter to their luxury; no marvel therefore the Lord accepteth them not, neither them nor their offerings; now will he remember their iniquities, and viſit their ſins; ſo far from pardoning them, that the very ſacrifices of atonement which they offered, ſhould only add to their iniquities: they ſhall return into Egypt, whither many fled on the Aſſyrian invaſion, and miſerably periſhed, chap. ix. 3, 6. or their captivity in Babylon ſhould be as another Egyptian bondage. For Iſrael hath forgotten his maker, his worſhip and ways, and buildeth temples to idols, and Judah hath multiplied fenced cities, placing their confidence on theſe feeble bulwarks, inſtead of the arm of Omnipotence; but I will ſend a fire upon his cities, and it ſhall devour the palaces thereof, which we ſee fearfully accompliſhed, Jer. lii. Note, (1.) God's own word, not our fancies, muſt be the directory of our worſhip. (2.) The law of God contains great things to the enlightened mind, even the way to pardon, peace, life, and glory everlaſting. If the things contained therein, to any appear ſtrange and unaccountable, it is owing to the corruption, blindneſs, and ignorance of their fallen minds. (3.) Let not that which God hath written for our learning, be ſuffered to become ſtrange through our neglect. (4.) Sacrifices for ſin, whilſt the love of it is unmortified, are abominable; they who think by their duties thus to commute for their iniquities, will find the works in which they chiefly truſted, turned into ſin. (5.) They who think to fence againſt God's judgments, only build Babel walls.

CHAP. IX.

In this chapter, 1. God threatens to deprive this degenerate people of all their worldly enjoyments, becauſe by ſin they had forfeited their title to them; ſo that they ſhould have no comfort either in receiving them themſelves, or offering them to God, ver. 1—5. 2. He dooms them to utter ruin, for their own ſins and the ſins of their prophets, prophets, ver. 6—8. 3. He upbraids them with the wickedneſs of their fathers before them, in whoſe ſteps they trod, ver. 9, 10. 4. He threatens them with the deſtruction of their children, and the rooting out of their poſterity, ver. 11—17.

v. 1—6. Iſrael's guilt and ruin are ſtill the burden of the prophetic word.

1. They are forbidden to rejoice as other people. Though now perhaps their affairs might be flouriſhing, as under Jeroboam ; or their harveſt plenteous ; yet, whilſt their ſins were ſo many, they ought to weep and lament, for judgment hung over their heads. Note, The joys of the impenitent ſinner are as unſeemly as ſongs of mirth in the mouth of a dying malefactor.

2. Their iniquities, which witneſſed againſt them, ſhould damp their mirth, and bring them to mourning. For thou haſt gone a whoring from thy God ; committing ſpiritual adultery with ſtocks and ſtones : thou haſt loved a reward upon every corn-floor ; proſtituting themſelves, as an harlot for hire, to their idols, regarding their corn and wine as their gifts, See chap. xi. 5, 12. and offering their tithes and firſt fruits at their idols ſhrines, inſtead of the ſanctuary at Jeruſalem. Note, (1.) They who place their affections on earthly goods, commit the ſame ſpiritual adultery, as if they worſhipped an idol. (2.) Many ſpend freely on their luſts, what they would greatly grudge to employ in the ſervice of God.

3. Wrath is gone forth againſt them for their wickedneſs.

(1.) Their earthly goods ſhall periſh. Their land ſhall be curſed with barrenneſs ; the floor and the wine-preſs ſhall not feed them, and the new wine ſhall fail in her ; blaſting, mildew, or the ravages of an enemy, ſhall rob them of their abuſed bleſſings, and leave them pining for want : ſo poor and periſhing a poſſeſſion is every earthly good.

2. They ſhall not dwell in the Lord's land : ſince they have broken the covenant on which they held poſſeſſion, he, as proprietor, will reſume the grant, and ſend them into a miſerable captivity. They ſhall return to Egypt, as fugitives and vagabonds flying from the ſword of the Aſſyrians : and they ſhall eat unclean things in Aſſyria ; led captives thither, and driven through hunger to eat food forbidden by the law, and ſuch as was unfit for men's uſe, as the prodigal's huſks. Note, They who will not be governed by God's laws, ſhall not dwell in his land. The wicked ſhall be caſt into hell, with all the nations that forget God.

(3.) In their diſperſion they ſhould be deprived of the poſſibility of keeping up any profeſſion of religion, and have neither altar nor ſacrifice. They ſhall not offer wine-offerings to the Lord ; much leſs any other oblations : neither ſhall their ſacrifices be pleaſing unto him, if they had power to offer them, their impenitence and hypocriſy would render them an abomination. Their ſacrifices ſhall be unto them as the bread of mourners, inſtead of purging them from their ſins, all that eat thereof ſhall be polluted, See Lev. xxi. 1. Deut. xxvi. 14. for their bread for their ſoul, either the common bread, that which fed them, or the Minchah, the portion of bread or flower which accompanied the ſin-offerings, ſhall not come into the houſe of the Lord, that glorious temple being deſtroyed ; nor, if it ſtood, would their oblations be accepted. What will ye do in the ſolemn day, and in the day of the feaſt of the Lord ? the ſabbaths, new moons, &c. when groaning under their burdens, they ſhould neither have ſacrifices to ſlay, nor an altar to offer them, nor permiſſion to obſerve theſe ſolemn ſeaſons. Note, They who ſlight and abuſe the means of grace they enjoy, ſhall know, by dire experience in their loſs, the value of the mercies they diſregarded.

(4.) They and their land ſhall be utterly deſtroyed. For lo, they are gone, becauſe of deſtruction ; thinking to find refuge in Egypt from the ſword of the Aſſyrians ; but they are miſtaken : Egypt ſhall gather them up, Memphis ſhall bury them ; one of the chief cities whither they fled, and probably died with the peſtilence, or through want. The pleaſant places for their ſilver, nettles ſhall poſſeſs them : thorns ſhall be in their tabernacles : ſo utterly ſhall all their cities be demoliſhed, and their land be deſolate without inhabitant. Note, There is no eſcaping from God : the ſinner may fly to him, and find mercy ; to attempt to fly from him is madneſs, and muſt end in miſery.

7. The days of viſitation are come, the days of recompenſe are come, Iſrael ſhall know it : the prophet is a fool, [i] the † ſpiritual man is mad, for the multitude of thine iniquity, and the great hatred. 8. [k] The watchman of Ephraim was with my God : but the prophet is a ſnare of a fowler in all his ways, and hatred in the houſe of his God. 9. [l] They have deeply corrupted themſelves, as in the days of [m] Gibeah : therefore [n] he will remember their iniquity, he will viſit their ſins. 10. I found Iſrael like grapes in the wilderneſs : I ſaw your fathers [o] as the firſt ripe in the fig-tree at her firſt time :
but [p] they went to Baal-peor, and [q] ſeparated themſelves unto [r] that ſhame ; and their abominations were according as they loved.

v. 7—10. To awaken their conſciences God threatens them,

1. With the ſpeedy execution of his judgments. The days of viſitation are come, the days of recompenſe are come ; they are ſurely coming, and near, even at the door : Iſrael ſhall know it, by dire experience, and feel the wrath they would not believe or fear. Note, A day of recompenſe for ſinners is at hand, when God will viſit upon them all their iniquities.

2. They would then change their ſentiments, both concerning the falſe prophets and the true. They ſaid in the days of their proſperity, concerning the true prophets who warned them of theſe judgments, The prophet is a fool, the ſpiritual man is mad ; treating their perſons with contempt, and their preaching as madneſs : but now it will appear that the falſe prophets in whom they truſted, who propheſied to them of peace, were the fools ; their pretences to ſpirituality and inſpiration, mere phrenſies of the brain ; and their promiſes of proſperity to a wicked people, direct madneſs ; and to theſe deluſions they were given up, for the multitude of their iniquities, and for their great hatred ; they hated God, his word, his miniſters, and therefore he juſtly left them to themſelves, to fill up the meaſure of their iniquities, and haſten their own deſtruction. The watchman of Ephraim was with my God ; was formerly on the Lord's ſide, and received directions from him, and ſhould be ſo now ; but the prophet, the falſe prophet, is a ſnare of a fowler in all his ways ; leading the people wrong by his example and his preaching ; and hatred in the houſe of his God : his lies being detected, he becomes execrable even at Beth-el : or, his hatred is bitter againſt thoſe who cleave to the true worſhip of God, whom neverthéleſs the deceiver calls his God, and pretends inſpiration from him. Note, (1.) It is no new thing for the true prophets to be branded as fools or madmen. (2.) They who hate the truth, are juſtly given up to ſtrong deluſions to believe a lie. (3.) Hatred and contempt of God's faithful miniſters will be ſhortly ſeverely puniſhed.

3. Their iniquities ſhall be diſcovered and recompenſed. They have deeply corrupted themſelves ; not only the falſe prophets, but the people in general, as in the days of Gibeah, See Judg. xix. advanced to the higheſt pitch of lewdneſs, cruelty, and contempt of God ; therefore he will remember their iniquity, he will viſit their ſins ; taking exemplary vengeance on them, as of old on that devoted city. I found Iſrael like grapes in the wilderneſs ; took delight in them there, as a traveller who had found ſuch refreſhment in a barren place. I ſaw your fathers as the firſt ripe in the fig-tree at her firſt time ; pleaſed with their flouriſhing eſtate, delighting in them as his choſen, ſhowering down upon them his bleſſings, and watching over them with conſtant care ; which aggravated the baſeneſs of their ingratitude, when they went unto Baal-peor, See Numb. xxv. and ſeparated themſelves unto that ſhame ; joining in the obſcene rites with which this idol was worſhipped : and their abominations were according as they loved ; the daughters of Moab, whoſe embraces they ſought, drew them into this abominable idolatry. Note, (1.) The ſinner's iniquity will certainly ſooner or later prove his ſhame. (2.) When the inordinate love of women rages in the heart, to pleaſe them the infatuated ſlave ſticks at no abominations.

11. As for Ephraim, their glory ſhall fly away like a bird ; from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception. 12. [s] Though they bring up their children, yet will I bereave them, that there ſhall not be a man left : yea, wo alſo to them when I depart from them.
13. Ephraim, [t] as I ſaw Tyrus, is planted in a pleaſant place : but Ephraim ſhall bring forth his children to the murderer. 14. Give them, O LORD : what wilt thou give ? give them [u] a † miſcarrying womb, and dry breaſts. 15. All their wickedneſs [x] is in Gilgal ; for

v. 11—17. The wrath of God is revealed from heaven againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men, and here we ſee it ſcarfully lighting upon the tranſgreſſors.

God threatens them with a variety of miſeries:

1. Death ſhall ſpread its ravages among them, and their children ſhall periſh before their eyes; ſome dying in the cradle; others carried from the womb to the grave; others periſhing even from the conception. And though ſome ſhould be ſpared to grow up, yet, by the ſword, the famine, or peſtilence, they would be conſumed, or carried captives, till not a man be left: yea, wo alſo to them, when I depart from them; for this is the heavieſt of judgments: the ſinner is wretched indeed whom God abandons. At preſent indeed theſe judgments ſeemed to be far away; Ephraim, as Tyre, was in proſperity, well fortified, and repleniſhed with inhabitants, v. 13. but the murderer, the Aſſyrian army, ſhall devour his children. Already Ephraim is ſmitten, v. 16. with tokens of God's diſpleaſure, and ſoon ſhall be utterly deſtroyed. Their root is dried up, they ſhall bear no fruit; like a tree withered and blaſted: yea, though they bring forth, a few of them at leaſt, yet will I ſlay even the beloved fruit of their womb; ſo that when the prophet would intercede for them, he could not but think the barren womb a bleſſing. Give them, O Lord: what wilt thou give? give them a miſcarrying womb, and dry breaſts: better far have no children, than only to bring them up for the ſlaughter. Note (1.) Death makes no diſtinction, nor pays regard to infants cries or parents tears. (2.) The children parents moſt doat upon, are often ſnatched from their arms, to teach them the folly and ſin of creature-idolatry. (3.) Thoſe who are written childleſs need not murmur; the croſſes children occaſion to us, often more than counterbalance all the comfort of them.

2. In hatred God will caſt them off, and caſt them out. They had given him indeed abundant provocation to do ſo: All their wickedneſs is in Gilgal, which was become the chief place of their idolatrous worſhip, and from thence it ſpread through the land. There I hated them for their abominations, profaning that place where once God's tabernacle had been pitched. For the wickedneſs of their doings I will drive them out of my houſe; from the place where he had ſettled them in Canaan, the type and figure of his church; expulſion from the one implying they were excommunicate from the other. I will love them no more; at leaſt, for a long while they ſhall not enjoy any tokens of his favour and regard. All their princes are revolters; they, who ſhould have reſtrained the people's wickedneſs, were chief in the tranſgreſſion, and emboldened them in ſin by their evil examples. No wonder therefore that my God will will caſt them away, as reprobate, and thruſt them from his preſence as abominable, becauſe they did not hearken unto him, rejecting the commands of his law, and the warnings of his prophets: and they ſhall be wanderers among the nations; diſperſed into all lands, and, like Cain, vagabonds in the earth; as was the caſe at their firſt captivity, and is awfully verified in their poſterity to this day. Note, (1.) Of all miſeries none can be greater than to be hated of God; and they who perſiſt in malicious wickedneſs may aſſuredly expect it. (2.) It is a diſtinguiſhing mercy to the few faithful, that when others are abandoned and forſaken, they can ſtill ſay, My God.

v. 1—8, Still the ſins of the people, and the judgments of God, are the burden of the prophecy.

1. Their ſins are charged upon them.

[1.] They are deſtitute of all goodneſs. Iſrael is an empty vine, of no profit to the owner: he bringeth forth fruit unto himſelf; he thinks not of advancing God's glory, but his own; and his earthly good things are ſpent not in God's ſervice, but conſumed on his luſts, or in the worſhip of idols; and perhaps he is therefore an empty vine, being thus impoveriſhed and exhauſted.

[2.] They are devoted to idolatry. According to the multitude of his fruit, as his riches increaſed, he hath increaſed the altars, &c. turning thus God's gifts againſt him, and abuſing his bleſſings to the vileſt purpoſes. Note, We too often ſee an increaſe of wealth abuſed to the increaſe of wickedneſs, inſtead of being employed as a more enlarged opportunity put into men's hands of ſerving God's cauſe, and doing good in their generation.

[3.] Their heart is divided; among themſelves factions rage, and ſects diſpute about the preference of idols: or rather, their heart is divided between God and the calves. Now ſhall they be found faulty, this halting between both being highly criminal; for a divided heart God abhors: or, they ſhall be deſolated, with his judgments.

[4.] They have ſpoken words, ſwearing falſly in making a covenant; perjured and prophane, making no conſcience of oaths or leagues; and on the very ſeat of judgment, injuſtice and oppreſſion ſat enthroned. Thus judgment, which ſhould have been adminiſtred with impartiality as a medicine, through falſe witneſſes, and a corrupt magiſtracy, ſpringeth up as hemlock in the furrows of the field; baleful and poiſonous, perverted to the greater loſs or ruin of the injured: and God will viſit for theſe things, and avenge the quarrel of thoſe who are oppreſſed with wrong.

2. Their puniſhments are denounced.

[1.] They ſhall ſay, We have no king; as bad as none, when juſtice was ſo ill adminiſtered; or really without a king, through the frequent aſſaſſinations of their monarchs; or having none able to protect them from their enemies; or, as at the laſt, when they and their king together were led captives into Aſſyria: becauſe we feared not the Lord, which was the ſource of all their miſeries; what then ſhould a king do to us? if they had one, he could afford them no protection from the judgments of the eternal King which they had provoked. As for Samaria, the metropolis of Iſrael, her king is cut off as the foam upon the water. In prophetic language, what ſhall be, is ſpoken of as already done; Hoſhea, the laſt king, being doomed to fall, weak as the froth which flies on the ſurface, and eaſily broken as the bubbles before the Aſſyrian army.

[2.] Their idols ſhall be deſtroyed, and be as little able to help them as their king. He ſhall break down their altars; he ſhall ſpoil their images: the Aſſyrian monarch ſhall do it, the rod of God's indignation. The inhabitants of Samaria ſhall fear becauſe of the calves of Beth-aven; for them, leſt they ſhould be ſeized by the enemy; or for themſelves, as if now they were taken the land would be left defenceleſs: for the people thereof ſhall mourn over it; of Beth-aven, or the worſhippers of the calves in general ſhall lament their loſs; and the prieſts thereof that rejoiced in it, who ſhall grieve, as particularly intereſted, for the glory thereof, becauſe it is departed from it, and no more ſurrounded with crouds of worſhippers: or the glory of Beth-aven is now departed, their calf being gone. It ſhall alſo be carried unto Aſſyria for a preſent to king Jareb, as a trophy of victory over Samaria and her gods. Ephraim ſhall receive ſhame, when they ſee their idols demoliſhed, and their folly in truſting them manifeſted: and Iſrael ſhall be aſhamed of his own counſel, in paying divine worſhip to ſuch vanities. The high places alſo of Aven, of iniquity, the ſcenes where their idolatries were committed, the ſin of Iſrael ſhall be deſtroyed: the thorn and the thiſtle ſhall come up on their altars, being left in ruins, and unfrequented; and in their bitter diſtreſs they, the people who were wont to worſhip there, ſhall ſay to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us; as if ſeeking even under them a covert from their miſeries, and deſiring to be hid from the wrath of God. Note, (1.) When we make any creature our idol, God juſtly breaks it down, and leaves us to mourn our folly. (2.) When the day of vengeance comes, in vain doth the ſinner cry to rocks and mountains to hide him from the wrath of the Lamb.

9. [m] O Iſrael, thou haſt ſinned from the days of Gibeah: there they ſtood: the battle in Gibeah againſt the children of iniquity [n] did not overtake them. 10. It is in my deſire that I ſhould chaſtiſe them: and [o] the people ſhall be gathered againſt them, † when they ſhall bind themſelves in their two furrows. 11. And Ephraim is as an heifer that is taught, and loveth to tread out the corn, but I paſſed over upon ‡ her fair neck: I will make Ephraim to ride: Judah ſhall plow, and Jacob ſhall break his clods. 12. [p] Sow to yourſelves in righteouſneſs, reap in mercy: [q] break up your fallow ground: for [r] it is time to ſeek the LORD, till he come and rain righteouſneſs upon you. 13. [s] Ye have plowed wickedneſs, ye have reaped iniquity, ye have eaten the fruit of lies: becauſe thou didſt truſt in thy way, [t] in the multitude of thy mighty men. 14. Therefore ſhall a tumult ariſe among thy people, and [u] all thy fortreſſes ſhall be ſpoiled, as Shalman ſpoiled [x] Beth-arbel in the day of battle: the mother was daſhed in pieces upon her children. 15. So ſhall Beth-el do unto you, becauſe of § your great wickedneſs: in a morning [y] ſhall the king of Iſrael utterly be cut off.

v. 9—15. The prophet here,

1. Reminds them of their wickedneſs, committed in a conſtant ſeries from the days of their predeceſſors. From the days of Gibeah, when the Levite's concubine was ſo atrociouſly abuſed, thou haſt ſinned; continued in the practice of ſuch abominations; or, more than the day of Gibeah, exceeding them in iniquity: there they ſtood, with daring effrontery, on their defence. The battle in Gibeah againſt the children of iniquity did not overtake them: in the two firſt engagements they were victorious, and at laſt ſix hundred men made their eſcape: but as the ſin of Iſrael now exceeded theirs, the battle ſhould overtake them, notwithſtanding their preſent proſperity in iniquity.

2. God will viſit them. It is my deſire that I ſhould chaſtiſe them: on this he determined, and would take delight in their ſufferings: and the people ſhall be gathered againſt them, as Iſrael was of old againſt Benjamin; when they ſhall bind themſelves in their two furrows, fortified with a double intrenchment: or, they ſhall bind them; their enemies ſhall yoke them as oxen, to plow their ground: or, when I ſhall bind them for their two tranſgreſſions; their forſaking God for idols, and their corporal and ſpiritual adultery. And Ephraim is an heifer that is taught to plow, and bear the yoke, to ſubmit to God's commands; but with reluctance yielded her neck: and loveth rather to tread out the corn, where ſhe can eat to the full, than labour in the furrows of obedience: but I paſſed over upon her fair neck; put a yoke upon it. I will make Ephraim to ride, or cauſe to ride on Ephraim; the Aſſyrians ſhall have dominion over them. Judah ſhall plow, and Jacob ſhall break the clods, being brought into bondage by their conquerors. Some give a very different ſenſe of the words, as ſpeaking the kind care of God in teaching his people, and the gentle methods he took to engage their obedience; as one ſtrokes the heifer's neck to encourage her, and bring her to the yoke. He laid then his inſtitutions upon them, and ſet them to their work, that they might bring forth fruit abundantly to his glory and their own comfort. And to this ſenſe the following words ſeem applicable, which contain,

3. An exhortation to righteouſneſs, prayer, and penitence. Sow to yourſelves in righteouſneſs; walk in all holy converſation and godlineſs, in the practice of every good word and work, which will bring their own reward: reap in mercy; everlaſting life being the reward, not of debt, but of grace: break up your fallow ground; for ſuch is the heart of man; being naturally hard, unprofitable for any good fruit, over-run with the briars and thorns of corrupt affections, and needs continually to be broken up by a humbling conviction of our ſinfulneſs, guilt, and miſery, that the ſeed of divine grace may ſpread and grow, and bring forth abundantly: for it is time to ſeek the Lord, whoſe bleſſing alone can proſper the ſeed ſown, till he come and rain righteouſneſs upon you; give us that righteouſneſs which he demands of us, for without him we have no power to produce it. And this ſome apply to Chriſt, who ſhould come as the rain, Pſ. lxxii. 6. and bring in that everlaſting righteouſneſs, in which all his redeemed people ſhould find acceptance with God. Ye have plowed wickedneſs; toiled hard in the ſervice of ſin, and an Egyptian taſk-maſter had they found it. Ye have reaped iniquity; a plenteous harveſt of evil, both of guilt and puniſhment: ye have eaten the fruit of lies; diſappointed in their expectations, and finding nothing of that ſweetneſs and ſatiſfaction they promiſed themſelves; becauſe thou didſt truſt in thy way, on idol confidences, or heathen alliances; and in the multitude of thy mighty men; their own armies and garriſons, which were poor defences againſt the wrath of God which they had provoked; and thus will all the confidences and comforts of the ſinner aſſuredly diſappoint his hopes.

4. An utter deſtruction awaits them. Therefore, becauſe of their ſins and vain confidences, ſhall a tumult ariſe among thy people; from inſurrections at home, and the invaſion of the Aſſyrian army: and all the fortreſſes ſhall be ſpoiled, ſo that they ſhould find no place of refuge; as Shalman, (the ſame probably as Salmaneſer), ſpoiled Beth-arbel in the day of battle; a well-known tranſaction in that day, where the place was ſacked, the people moſt inhumanly maſſacred; the mother was daſhed in pieces with her children; and ſuch would be their caſe; ſo ſhall Beth-el do unto you, becauſe of your great wickedneſs; particularly their idolatry committed at Beth-el, which would bring down the like fearful vengeance upon them. Or, ſo will he do unto you, O Beth-el; commit the ſame ravages in this chief ſeat of idolatry. In a morning ſhall the king of Iſrael be utterly cut off; certainly and ſpeedily as the morning returns; or, when they think the day of proſperity and liberty is dawning upon them, then ſhall their king Hoſhea be cut off, and all the nation periſh with him. Note, Whatever miſeries we feel or fear, whether national or perſonal, reſpecting our bodies or our ſouls, they all ſpring from the ſame cauſe; ſin, ſin is the deadly root of bitterneſs.

v. 1—7. God puts the people of Iſrael in mind,

1. Of the grace and mercy he had ſhewn them. When Iſrael was a child, then I loved him; in their weak and helpleſs ſtate, when firſt God took them for a people; and called my ſon out of Egypt, from that houſe of their priſon: and prophetically this declares what ſhould be the caſe with Chriſt, God's own incarnate Son, to whom, Mat. xi. 15. the words are expreſly applied, and in and through whom the people of God have obtained a deliverance from the bondage of guilt and corruption, infinitely more intolerable than that of Egypt. I taught Ephraim alſo to go, with all the tenderneſs and care of the fondeſt mother; taking them by the arms; giving them his holy law to direct them, and by a pillar and cloud guiding their marches in the trackleſs wilderneſs. And thus God ſtill upholds his choſen, teaching them by his word and ſpirit; carrying them through their trials and temptations; ſtrengthening their ſouls for his work and ſervice; and ſuffering none to pluck them out of his hand. I healed them of their diſeaſes and plagues; as he doth the ſouls of his people, when wounded by ſin, or pining with ſpiritual decays. I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love; by every endearing motive, and the powerfully conſtraining influence of his love ſhed abroad in their hearts, by which God ſtill draws his people, not only perſuading, but obliging them with pleaſing conſtraint to come unto him. I was to them as they that take off the yoke on their jaws; as the huſbandman unmuzzles the ox, or looſes the yoke from its neck, ſo had God delivered them from the ſervitude of Egypt, as he doth his people in general from the bondage of corruption: and I laid meat unto them; the manna and quails wherewith he fed them in the wilderneſs, the emblems of the better ſpiritual bread that cometh down from heaven, with which God ſtrengthens and comforts his redeemed people in their way through this deſart world to the land of eternal reſt.

2. Of the baſe ingratitude with which they had requited him. As they, the prophets of the Lord, called them to their duty, and to return from their ſinful backſlidings; ſo they went from them:

them : the more importunately they were ſollicited, the more obſtinate and refractory they grew. They ſacrificed to Baalim, and burnt incenſe to graven images, the abominable thing againſt which they were ſo particularly warned. All God's kindneſs was thrown away upon them : they knew not that I healed them, but aſcribe to their idols all their mercies : and my people are bent to backſliding from me ; both under a conſtant propenſity to depart from him, and wilfully ſet upon their abominations, though his people, which relation aggravated their guilt exceedingly. They refuſed to return, v. 5. whether courted or threatned, they perſiſted in evil : though they called them to the moſt High, to leave their idols, and return to the worſhip of the true God, none at all would exalt him, give him the glory due unto his name ; or lift up their prayers to him for mercy, or their hearts from earthly vanities to high and heavenly things. Note, (1.) Such is the natural heart of man, ever prone to evil, perverſe and obſtinate, and the beſt have much to lament over the remainder of this inbred corruption. (2.) Much pains are often ſpent to little purpoſe by God's faithful miniſters; yet, though ſinners will not hear, God is thereby glorified in leaving them without excuſe.

3. Heavy wrath is denounced againſt them. He ſhall not return into the land of Egypt, but the Aſſyrian ſhall be his king, whoſe yoke would be ſo much heavier, that they would wiſh rather for the taſk-maſters of Egypt again : or ſo ſtraitly ſhould they be beſieged, or ſo far carried away captives, that they would be able to ſend no ambaſſadors to Egypt for aſſiſtance. And the ſword ſhall abide on all their cities ; the deſtruction ſhall be long-continued, as well as univerſal ; and ſhall conſume his branches, and devour them ; the villages and country around, or the inhabitants thereof ; becauſe of their own counſels, which were their ruin. Note, Sinners have none to blame but themſelves : they chuſe thoſe ways which neceſſarily lead to their own perdition.

8. [i] How † ſhall I give thee up, Ephraim? how † ſhall
I deliver thee, Iſrael? how † ſhall I make thee as [k] Admah?
how ſhall I ſet thee as Zeboim? [l] mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together.
9. [m] I will not execute the fierceneſs of mine anger, I will not return to deſtroy Ephraim; [n] for I am God, and not man, the holy One in the midſt of thee, and I will not enter into the city. 10. [o] They ſhall walk after the LORD: [p] he ſhall rore like a lion: when he ſhall rore, then the children ſhall tremble from the weſt. 11. They ſhall [q] tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and [r] as a dove out of the land of Aſſyria: and I will place them in their houſes, ſaith the LORD. 12. Ephraim compaſſeth me about with lies, and the houſe of Iſrael with deceit: but Judah yet [s] ruleth with God, and is faithful ‡ with the ſaints.

v. 8—12. We have here,

1. The reluctance a gracious God expreſſes in giving up the once choſen people of Iſrael to ruin. How ſhall I give thee up, Ephraim? &c. Juſtice might well plead for their total exciſion, and that, like the cities which were conſumed with fire, Deut. xxix. 23. Iſrael ſhould be given up to the ſame terrible vengeance; but mercy pleads for ſome mitigation or reſpite, if not for pardon ; and God, as a father, with bowels of tendereſt compaſſion, appears moſt backward to ruin even this rebellious ſon ; and mercy prevails ; mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together ; not that God's mind is capable of change, or that he knows repentance with regard to any of the diſpenſations of his providence or grace ; but he ſpeaks after the manner of men, and will change his manner of acting towards them, as we do when we alter our mind, and repent of our purpoſes. And moſt aſtoniſhing do theſe compaſſions of our God appear ! Oh that the ungrateful ſinner would for a moment pauſe, and think of them : ſurely they muſt ſoften his obdurate heart.

Some give the words a different ſenſe, How might I give thee up? &c. how juſt would it be to do ſo ? not the ſins of Sodom and her daughter cities were greater : but, to magnify his grace to Iſrael, though he ſpared not the one, he will have mercy on the other. Thus every redeemed ſoul as juſtly in himſelf deſerved to periſh as thoſe who are cut off in their iniquity, but ſovereign grace will be magnified in them.

2. God's determination to ſpare them. I will not execute the fierceneſs of mine anger, in blotting out their name from under heaven ; I will not return to deſtroy Ephraim ; though I viſit them in a little wrath, I will not enter into the city ; though Jeruſalem, Samaria, and the other cities, lie waſte for a time, their deſolations ſhall not be perpetual, as thoſe of Admah and Zeboim : for I am God, and not man : human compaſſions indeed would long ago have failed ; but the divine are everlaſting : or, though man is fickle and changeable, God is faithful, and true to his covenant, and will perform it notwithſtanding all their provocations. The holy One in the midſt of thee. Chriſt is his people's protector : for his ſake, who ſtands in the midſt of them to plead for them, they are ſpared ; and, though they deſerve puniſhment, through him they obtain mercy. They ſhall walk after the Lord, the Meſſiah their Saviour, their Leader and Commander, the Captain of their ſalvation, being effectually drawn to him by the great and precious promiſes of his goſpel. He ſhall rore like a lion ; his word ſhall be heard far and near : when he ſhall rore, then the children ſhall tremble from the weſt ; the children of God, whoſe hearts ſhall be deeply affected with the preaching of the goſpel : and this may reſpect the Gentiles, as well as the Jews, the goſpel having chiefly ſpread that way hitherto. They ſhall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Aſſyria, flying ſwiftly, as the timorous dove when purſued by a bird of prey, to the covert of redeeming grace : and I will place them in their houſes, ſaith the Lord ; in the church of God below, and ſhortly in the eternal manſions of glory above. Note, (1.) When we are moſt diſcouraged with the ſenſe of our own deſerts, we ſhould ſtill remember with whom we have to do : he is God, and not man ; and as his majeſty is, ſo is his mercy. (2.) The trembling of the ſinner is uſually the firſt ſymptom of his return to God. (3.) When Chriſt is our captain, and we walk after him, we cannot fail of victory over every foe.

Before Christ 740.

3. A heavy complaint ſtill lies againſt Ephraim : He compaſſeth me about with lies, and the houſe of Iſrael with deceit. This ſeems to be a new diſcourſe, and moſt properly ſhould begin the next chapter. Their ſervices were hypocritical, and their profeſſion deceitful, and therefore an abhorrence in the ſight of the heart-ſearching God.

4. Judah is highly commended : Judah yet ruleth with God. The two tribes ſubmitted to that Theocracy God had eſtabliſhed among them, and their kings ruled according to God's law, and received their directions from him in their emergencies ; which was their trueſt honour and higheſt dignity : and he is faithful with the ſaints, cleaving to the worſhip of the ſanctuary, and treading in the ſteps of their pious progenitors ; and, while they do ſo, they may aſſuredly expect God will be faithful to his promiſes, and preſerve them to his everlaſting kingdom. Note, (1.) They who make God their king ſhall be exalted to reign with him. (2.) The faithful will be rewarded with manſions in glory, when the hypocrite and unbeliever ſhall receive their portion in everlaſting burnings.

v. 1—6. We have here,

1. The folly of Ephraim ; he feedeth on wind, and followeth after the eaſt-wind, entertaining fallacious hopes, and courting his idols, or his heathen neighbours, for aſſiſtance ; a labour as vain as purſuing the wind : he daily increaſeth lies and deſolation, his ſtrange gods and foreign alliances, which will prove a lie in his right hand, and bring ruin upon him ; and they do make a covenant with Aſſyria, 2 Kings xv. 19. thinking to ſecure their ſafety thereby ; and oil is carried into Egypt, to purchaſe their favour and help ; but neither ſhall be of any ſervice to them, but will help to impoveriſh them and haſten their deſtruction. Note, They who truſt on creature confidences will find them not only deceitful, but ruinous.

2. The Lord hath alſo a controverſy with Judah, who now began to degenerate and fall into idolatry, and therefore he will puniſh Jacob according to his ways ; according to his doings will he recompenſe him, diſcovering his ſins and taking vengeance for them.

3. Their degeneracy from the piety of their forefathers was a great aggravation of their guilt. He, Jacob, took his brother by the heel, ſo ſoon did he begin to ſtruggle for the birthright, whilſt they had bowed down their necks to idols, and ſubjected themſelves to the heathen; and by his ſtrength he had power with God, yea he had power over the angel, and prevailed, when he wreſtled with him in the way, Gen. xxxii. 24. the ſon of God in human form coming to prove his faith and conſtancy, and ſtrengthening him for the conflict: he wept and made ſupplication unto him, and thus prevailed; theſe being the moſt potent arms we can uſe to obtain every bleſſing from the Angel of the covenant, whoſe eternal power and Godhead here appear, being the object of the patriarch's adoration and prayers. His faithleſs ſeed had given up the ſtruggle, and, having revolted from God's worſhip, had forfeited all intereſt in him, and communion with him; as all muſt do who live a prayerleſs life. He found him at Bethel, both before and after this, Gen. xxviii. 10. xxxv. 9. and there renewed the covenant with him, and in him with his poſterity, there he ſpake with us: but they had apoſtatized, and turned Bethel, the houſe of God, into Bethaven, the houſe of iniquity, and therefore had juſtly forfeited the promiſed mercies. And this perſon, with whom Jacob wreſtled, and who ſpake to him, was the true Jehovah, even the Lord God of hoſts, the Lord Jehovah is his memorial, his name, expreſſive of his ſelf-exiſtence, eternity, and immutability, who ſhould by right be worſhipped, adored, and ſerved by all, and by them eſpecially to whom he had appeared ſo gracious. Their neglect of him therefore and diſobedience were the more criminal.

4. They are exhorted yet to return to God. Therefore turn thou to thy God, to this glorious Jehovah, from whom they had ſo greatly departed; and, whenever they did ſo, they would prove his covenant mercies ſtill ſure to them, and he will own his relation to them as their God. Keep mercy and judgment, the two grand pillars of vital Godlineſs, comprehending every act of kindneſs to men's bodies or ſouls, and that integrity and uprightneſs which in every word and deed ſhould be obſerved; and wait on thy God continually, in every appointed means of grace, for thoſe ſupports of his Spirit which alone can enable us for the exerciſe of charity and juſtice to men, and that unreſerved obedience and reſignation we owe to his bleſſed Self.

7. ¶ He is † a merchant, [k] the balances of deceit are

v. 7—14. In theſe words there is a change of perſon from Judah to Ephraim.

1. Ephraim is charged with deceit in trade. He is a merchant, or a Canaanite, more like ſuch a one than a deſcendant from Iſrael; the balances of deceit are in his hand, impoſing by falſe weights and meaſures on thoſe with whom he dealt: he loveth to oppreſs, takes delight in ſuch wickedneſs, and pleaſes himſelf with the thought of his own ingenuity. Note, Fraudulent tradeſmen are the vileſt of robbers.

2. Ephraim vindicates himſelf from the accuſation. Yet I am become rich, I have found me out ſubſtance; as if his ſucceſs ſanctified the means by which he acquired his riches; and that his proſperity, notwithſtanding the warnings of the prophets, ſecured his impunity. In all my labours they ſhall find none iniquity in me, that were ſin, none ſuch as deſerved that name, ſo fair and upright they pretended their dealings had been, and that, if their trade was ſubmitted to ſevereſt ſcrutiny, it would ſtand the teſt; whilſt to their own labour, not God's bleſſing, they impiouſly aſcribe their gain. Note, (1.) A carnal heart regards his riches as his moſt ſubſtantial good. (2.) Many pride themſelves on their fair character among men, who in the day of God will be found very different from what they appear. (3.) Self-deceivers will not call their iniquity ſin: it is the way of trade; every body does ſo; one could not live without it: theſe are plauſible excuſes; but God is not mocked. All unrighteouſneſs is ſin, and the wages of it death eternal.

3. Idolatry is charged upon them. Is there iniquity in Gilead? in that pleaſant land, in a city of prieſts, a city of refuge too? ſurely they are vanity; the inhabitants, like the other Iſraelites, are devoted to idolatry, they ſacrifice bullocks in Gilgal, to their idols, yea their altars are as heaps in the furrows of the field, ſo thick they ſtood; or, as ſome ſuppoſe, ſo ſhould they be beaten in pieces, and become a heap of rubbiſh.

Before Chriſt 725.

4. Notwithſtanding theſe provocations God gives ſome intimations of mercy in ſtore for them. And I, that am the Lord thy God, ſtill owning the relation, from the land of Egypt, from that time having taken them for his people, will yet make thee to dwell in tabernacles, as in the days of the ſolemn feaſt; which might refer to their return from Babylon; or rather reſpects the times of the goſpel, when the converted Jews ſhould rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have a place in his church: perhaps it may alſo look forward to their expected day of grace. I have alſo ſpoken to the prophets in time paſt, or I will ſpeak, ſending forth paſtors and teachers to preach his goſpel; and I have multiplied, or will multiply, viſions; I have done ſo, and will again under the goſpel diſpenſation; and I have uſed, or will uſe, ſimilitudes, as was the caſe in the Jewiſh church, where the whole ſervice was figurative, and was eſpecially fulfilled in the parables which Chriſt ſo frequently delivered. Note, The Lord hath uſed every gracious method to communicate to us the meſſages of his grace. If, after all, we continue wilfully ignorant, ſin lieth at our door.

5. What God had done for their forefathers was a ſtrong proof of his kindneſs to them, and ſerved to ſhew their ingratitude. And Jacob fled into the country of Syria, to Laban; and Iſrael ſerved for a wife ſeven years; and, being then deceived by Laban, who gave him Leah inſtead of Rachel, on receiving her alſo the following week, for a wife he kept ſheep, ſeven years more; which is inſtanced both as a proof of the meanneſs of their original, for a Syrian ready to periſh was their father, and as a mark of God's favour to them, in raiſing them from ſo low a beginning to be a mighty nation; and reflected highly on their ingratitude. And by a prophet God brought Iſrael out of Egypt, and by a prophet was he preſerved, by Moſes, who was the figure of Chriſt, the great Redeemer and Saviour, the Deliverer of his people from the bondage of ſin, ſatan, death, and hell. Now God having ſo wonderfully dealt with them, and ſaved them from their enemies, they were bound by every tie of love and duty to ſerve him; but they made the baſeſt returns when they rebelled againſt him, and rejected his prophets, to one of whom they had ſuch unſpeakable obligations. Note, All God's goodneſs to the ſinner will be remembered at the laſt, to convince him of his ingratitude and leave him without excuſe.

6. They having made the moſt baſe returns to God for his kindneſs, he is juſtly provoked to puniſh them ſeverely. Ephraim provoked him to anger moſt bitterly by his ſins, and eſpecially idolatry: therefore ſhall he leave his blood upon him; either the innocent blood ſhed by him ſhall be required of him, or his own blood ſhall be poured upon him, ſhed by the ſword of vengeance for all his crying ſins; and his reproach ſhall the Lord return upon him; the reproaches caſt upon God by his idolatry, and on the prophets who teſtified againſt it, ſhall return into his own boſom, when he ſhall be a poor, wretched, deſpicable captive in a ſtrange land. Note, The ſinner ſhall ſurely bear the ſhame of his iniquities, either in time covered with penitent confuſion, or in eternity with everlaſting contempt.

CHAP. XIII.

1. The people of Iſrael are reproved and threatned for their idolatry, ver. 1—4. 2. They are reproved and threatned for their wantonneſs, pride, and luxury, and other abuſes of their wealth and proſperity, ver. 5—8. 3. The ruin that is coming upon them, for theſe and their other ſins, is foretold as very terrible, ver. 12, 13, 15, 16. 4. Thoſe that yet retain a reſpect for their God are encouraged to hope that he will yet appear for their relief, though their kings and princes, and all their other ſupports, fail them, ver. 9, 10, 11, 14. Note, Far better is it to hear the rebuke of ſin now, and repent of it, than eternally to periſh under it.

1. WHEN Ephraim ſpake † trembling, he exalted himſelf in Iſrael; but when he offended in Baal, he died. 2. And now [a] they ‡ ſin more and more, and [b] have made them molten images of their ſilver, and idols according to their own underſtanding, all of it the work of the craftſmen: they ſay of them, Let § the men that ſacrifice, [c] kiſs the calves. 3. Therefore they ſhall be [d] as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that paſſeth away, [e] as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind

v. 1—3. The ſin which above all others filled up the meaſure of Iſrael's crimes was their idolatry, and this is here eſpecially reproved.

1. It had been the bane of their proſperity, and the cauſe of all their miſeries. When Ephraim ſpake trembling, with deep veneration towards the Divine Majeſty, and with filial fear before him, he exalted himſelf in Iſrael, grew diſtinguiſhed and great among the tribes; or when he ſpake there was trembling, all heard him with reſpect and honour; but when he offended in Baal, he died, they went apace to ruin, and at laſt periſhed as a nation for their idolatry. Note, As Godlineſs is the honour and ſtabi-lity of a nation, ſo is ſin the ſhame, and, ſooner or later, will be the ruin of any people.

2. They had multiplied their abominations. And now they ſin more and more; having once offended in Baal, they grew worſe and worſe; and have made them molten images of their ſilver, and idols according to their own underſtanding, all of it the work of the craftſmen; miſerable gods! which ſilver could make, and craftſmen deify. They ſay of them, Let the men that ſacrifice kiſs the calves, in token of religious adoration, when they brought their offerings; or, as ſome read the words, Let thoſe that ſacrifice a man kiſs the calves, as if they offered human ſacrifices to theſe hated idols.

3. God's wrath is denounced upon them for their idolatries. Therefore they ſhall be as the morning cloud, that vaniſhes before the ſun; and as the early dew that paſſeth away, as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, light, worthleſs, and weak; and as the ſmoke out of the chimney, that is ſcattered as it riſes. So eaſily, ſpeedily, and univerſally, would their ruin come upon them by the army of the Aſſyrians.

4. Yet [f] I am the LORD thy God from the land of Egypt, and thou ſhalt know no God but me: for [g] there is no ſaviour beſide me. 5. ¶ I did know thee in the wilderneſs, [h] in the land of † great drought. 6. [i] According to their paſture, ſo were they filled: they were filled, and their heart was exalted: therefore [k] have they forgotten me. 7. Therefore [l] I will be unto them as a lion; as [m] a leopard by the way will I obſerve them. 8. I will meet them [n] as a bear that is bereaved of her whelps, and will rent the caul of their heart, and there will I devour them like a lion: ‡ the wild beaſts ſhall tear them.

v. 4—8. We may obſerve here,

1. The obligations God had laid upon them. Yet, notwithſtanding their provocations, I am the Lord their God from the land of Egypt; from the day he took them from thence he declared his regard to them, and to this day was ready to own the relation on their penitent return to him. And thou ſhalt know no God but me: they ought to have known no other, and would find by experience none but he able to ſave them; for there is no ſaviour beſides me: on whatever elſe they placed their confidence, they would be aſſuredly diſappointed. I did know thee in the wilderneſs, when reduced to the greateſt diſtreſs, in the land of great drought, where every neceſſary of life was wanting; yet he liberally provided for them, brought water from the rock, rained manna from heaven, and fed them by daily miracles.

2. Their ingratitude to God for theſe Mercies. According to their paſture, ſo were they filled: they rioted in luxury when he brought them into Canaan: they were filled with the plenty there provided for them, and their heart was exalted; their ſenſuality made them proud and ſecure: therefore have they forgotten me. Note, Worldly proſperity is very apt to ſeduce the heart from God; and ſuch is our vileneſs, that the mercies which ſhould excite our love, and quicken our thankfulneſs, too often make us forget the giver in the gift, and abuſe in pride and luxury the bleſſings he beſtows.

3. The wrath denounced againſt them for their baſeneſs. Therefore I will be unto them as a lion, &c. By all theſe beaſts of prey the Lord deſigns to ſhew the ſeverity of his vengeance, and the terrible ravages which ſhall be made amongſt them: with the lion's ſtrength, the lynx or leopard's eye, and the fury of a bear bereaved of her whelps, ſhall the Aſſyrians, the beaſts he ſends among them, mark them out for the ſlaughter, ruſh on them, unable to reſiſt, and tear them in pieces without remorſe or pity. So fearful a thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God, if his wrath be kindled, yea but a little. Sinner, how can thine heart endure when God ſhall thus deal with thee?

9. ¶ O Iſrael, thou [o] haſt deſtroyed thyſelf, but [p] in me is thine help. 10. † I will be thy king: [q] where is any other that may ſave thee in all thy cities? and thy judges of whom thou ſaidſt, [r] Give me a king and princes? 11. [s] I gave thee a king in mine anger, and took him away in my wrath. 12. [t] The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up: his ſin is hid. 13. [u] The ſorrows of a travailing woman ſhall come upon him, he is an unwiſe ſon, for he ſhould not ſtay long in the place of [x] the breaking forth of children. 14. [y] I will ranſom them from the power of the grave: I will redeem them from death: [z] O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy deſtruction; [a] repentance ſhall be hid from mine eyes. 15. ¶ Though [b] he be fruitful among his brethren, [c] an eaſt-wind ſhall come, the wind of the LORD ſhall come up from the wilderneſs, and his ſpring ſhall become dry, and his fountain ſhall be dried up, he ſhall ſpoil the treaſure of all ‡ pleaſant veſſels. 16. [d] Samaria ſhall become deſolate, for ſhe hath rebelled againſt her God: they ſhall fall by the ſword; [e] their infants ſhall be daſhed in pieces, and their women with child ſhall be ript up.

v. 9—16. The prophet pathetically laments the miſeries of his people; O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thyſelf: their ſins were the cauſe of all the threatned judgments, and they had only themſelves to blame for their ſufferings. And this is moſt applicable to every fallen creature, who by his ſins hath moſt juſtly provoked God's wrath and indignation againſt him, and muſt periſh eternally if ſovereign grace do not interpoſe. But in me is thy help: deſperate as their caſe appeared, God was ſtill able and willing to ſave them when they truly turned to him. The moſt guilty need not deſpair of pardon, nor the moſt helpleſs of deliverance, ſince God hath laid help on one mighty to ſave. Though in and of ourſelves not a ray of hope appears, nor the leaſt ability remains of working out our own ſalvation, they who look to him ſhall hear his atoning blood ſpeak peace to their conſciences, and find his almighty grace effectual to ſubdue the power of their corruptions.

1. The firſt ſtep which led to their deſtruction was caſting off the divine government and aſking a king. And where is thy king now, that he may ſave thee in all thy cities? Unable to protect them, he is a captive himſelf: ſo fooliſh as well as ſinful an exchange had they made, when God had ſaid, I will be thy king, whom they rejected. And where are thy judges, of whom thou ſaidſt, Give me a king and princes? They are now no longer able to ſupport the ſinking ſtate. I gave them a king in mine anger; for God ſometimes is pleaſed to gratify the deſires of the wicked, and make the thing they aſk their heavieſt curſe and plague; and I took him away in my wrath, either Saul, or, as the words may be rendered, I will take him away, that is Hoſhea, the laſt king of Iſrael, with whom the whole nation was deſtroyed, or carried into captivity. Thus God in wrath takes away what he gave in anger, and leaves us to mourn in bitterneſs our perverſeneſs and folly.

2. Their other ſins were many, and ready to be produced againſt them. The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up, his ſin is hid. The ſinner himſelf is little apprized of the black catalogue of ſins ready to be produced againſt him; but they are all upon record, treaſured up againſt the day of wrath. The ſorrows of a travaling woman ſhall come upon him, diſtreſs and anguiſh the moſt agonizing and painful. He is an unwiſe ſon, that will neither learn of God's word nor be taught by his judgments; for he ſhould not ſtay long in the place of the breaking forth of children. He conſiders not how to extricate himſelf from his troubles, or by repentance to prevent them, ſtruggling no more than a ſtillborn child. Or the words may be rendered, For he will not ſtay the time for the breaking forth of children: they would not wait for the Meſſiah, who ſhould bring many ſons unto glory; but turned from him to ſerve idols: and thus were cut off in their ſins, becauſe they rebelled againſt their God, v. 16.

3. Their judgment is threatned. Though he be fruitful among his brethren, as the name Ephraim ſignifies, increaſed in numbers, and abounding in wealth and honour, an eaſt-wind ſhall come, the army of the Aſſyrians marching rapidly and irreſiſtibly; the wind of the Lord, as being ſent and commiſſioned by him, ſhall come up from the wilderneſs, hot and ſcorching, as it ſometimes blew in the ſandy deſarts; and his ſpring ſhall become dry, and his fountain ſhall be dried up, their country laid utterly deſolate; and he ſhall ſpoil the treaſure of all pleaſant places; the Aſſyrian monarch ſhall ſeize all their richeſt and moſt valuable poſſeſſions: Samaria ſhall become deſolate, her palaces laid in the duſt, her houſes without inhabitants; for ſhe hath rebelled againſt her God, by her idolatries and other ſins. They ſhall fall by the ſword of the enemy, their children ſhall be daſhed to pieces, and their women with child ſhall be ripped up: ſuch inhuman maſſacres ſhould the Aſſyrians commit, in revenge of their perfidy, and the long ſiege they ſuſtained. With horror, whilſt we read, let it be remembered, ſuch is man: and nothing but the reſtraints of grace prevent the world from being an Aceldama, a field of blood.

4. One gracious promiſe ſerves to brighten up this dark ſcene. Though they had rejected God's government and worſhip, yet ſtill ſays he, I will be their king, to reſcue and ſave them from the hand of their enemies: I will ranſom them from the power of the grave; not merely from their ſtate of captivity, in which they ſeemed as buried, but theſe promiſes look forward to the great ſalvation of Jeſus, who gave his life a ranſom for many; I will redeem them from death, raiſing their ſouls from the death of ſin to a life of righteouſneſs, in virtue of the price he hath paid for his people, and at the laſt day coming to bring their bodies forth from their graves, faſhioned like to his glorious body: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy deſtruction. Death is already a vanquiſhed foe, through the reſurrection of Jeſus, and ſhortly it will be entirely ſwallowed up in victory, when its very being ſhall be deſtroyed, and the grave no more devour, becauſe there ſhall be no more death. Well may the Apoſtle triumph in the proſpect, and every faithful ſoul exult in this glorious hope! Repentance ſhall be hid from mine eyes: the decree is gone forth, the promiſe is unchangeable, the victory is ſure: for with God there is no variableneſs or ſhadow of turning. Therefore we may confidently truſt, and not be afraid.

CHAP. XIV.

The ſtrain of this chapter differs much from that of the foregoing chapters. Thoſe were generally made up of reproofs for ſin and threatnings of wrath, but this is made up of exhortations to repentance and promiſes of mercy, and with theſe the prophet cloſeth; for all the foregoing convictions and terrors he had ſpoken were deſigned to prepare and make way for theſe: he wounds that he may heal; the Spirit convinceth that he may comfort. We have here, 1. Directions in repenting, what to do and what to ſay, ver. 1—3. 2. Encouragement to repent, taken from God's readineſs to receive returning ſinners, ver. 4, 8. and the comforts he has treaſured up for them, ver. 5—7. 3. A ſolemn recommendation of theſe things to our ſerious thoughts, ver. 9.

1. O Iſrael [a] return unto the LORD thy God; [b] for thou haſt fallen by thine iniquity. 2. [c] Take with you words, and turn to the LORD, ſay unto him, [d] Take away all iniquity, and † receive us graciouſly: ſo [e] will we render the calves of our lips. 3. [f] Aſhur ſhall not ſave us, [g] we will not ride upon horſes, neither will we ſay any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods: for in thee the fatherleſs findeth mercy.

v. 1—3. A door of hope is here opened for God's people. He is not inexorable: he waiteth to be gracious.

1. They are called upon and enjoined to come to him. O Iſrael, return unto the Lord, who is ſtill ready to receive the periſhing ſinner, to pardon and ſave him; and, though ſo long rejected, will not refuſe to be called thy God: for thou haſt fallen by thine iniquity, which then, now, and ever, was, is, and will be the cauſe of all our miſeries; but when we ſee, feel, and lament it, and turn to God, then ſhall not iniquity be our deſtruction.

2. Words are ſuggeſted to them, ſuitable to their ſtate and condition. Take with you words, and turn unto the Lord; ſay unto him, Take away all iniquity, this being the firſt great want of the ſinner's ſoul. His guilt lies upon him as a heavy burden, which he longs to have removed; his corruptions thruſt ſore at him, and he is without power to help himſelf: earneſtly therefore he prays for a ſenſe of God's pardoning love, to deliver him from the condemnation of ſin, of all ſin, as blotted out through the blood of Jeſus; and for power againſt iniquity, againſt every iniquity, that it may be mortified and ſubdued by divine grace: and receive us graciouſly; for we have no deſert to plead, but the very reverſe: or receive good; accept us and our ſervices as well-pleaſing in Chriſt Jeſus: or give good, every bleſſing which we need, and the ability for that goodneſs thou doſt enjoin; for from him alone cometh every good and perfect gift, whilſt in our fleſh there dwelleth no good thing: ſo will we render the calves of our lips, thoſe ſacrifices of praiſe which ſhall pleaſe the Lord better than a bullock that hath horns and hoofs. Aſhur ſhall not ſave us, we will not ride upon horſes, ſeeking to Aſſyria or Egypt for help; neither will we ſay any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods, their idols being renounced and abhorred; and thus the returning ſinner, who in ſimplicity approaches a pardoning God, feels his heart conſtrained to part with every idol; to renounce his moſt eaſily beſetting ſin; to diſclaim all dependance upon his own doings and duties, and every truſt upon creature help, that he may ſolely reſt on the blood, the righteouſneſs, the Spirit of a Redeemer, and expect his whole ſalvation from the ſovereign grace of God. For in thee the fatherleſs findeth mercy. It is God's great honour and glory, that he doth not deſpiſe nor reject the prayer of the poor deſtitute: nay, though our diſtreſſes ariſe from our own folly and perverſeneſs, he will not therefore caſt us out; but the more magnify the wonders of his mercy in the depths of our miſery, and in the views of our utter unworthineſs.

4. ¶ I will heal their backſliding, I will love them [h] freely: for mine anger is turned away from him. 5. [i] I will be as the dew unto Iſrael: [k] he ſhall grow as the lily, and † caſt forth his roots as Lebanon. 6. v. 4—7. Great and precious are the promiſes here recorded, in anſwer to the prayer of real penitence. God aſſures them,

1. Of the removal of that wrath they dreaded: mine anger is turned away from him. There is no wrath in God againſt the ſinner that returns to him through Jeſus Chriſt, and pleads the full atonement and perfect righteouſneſs of his divine ſubſtitute.

2. I will love them freely. Sin, the cauſe of his diſpleaſure, being through the Redeemer forgiven and blotted out, he can, conſiſtently with his own glory, love them; and he will do it freely, not in conſideration of any deſert in them, for they have none, but according to the good pleaſure of his own will. The only reaſon which we can aſſign for his favour to us is, that he hath mercy becauſe he will have mercy.

3. I will heal their backſliding. Recover them from their ſinful departures, apply the ſuitable medicines of grace to their wounds, and deliver them from the power of all that iniquity againſt which they pray.

4. He will quicken, comfort, ſtabliſh, ſtrengthen, ſettle them. I will be as the dew to Iſrael, refreſhing the parched ground; and ſo doth his word and Spirit revive the drooping heart of the poor dejected ſinner. He ſhall grow as the lily, in the beauty of a gracious profeſſion, and the unſullied exemplarineſs of a good converſation; and caſt forth his roots as Lebanon, firm rooted on the rock Chriſt, enabled to withſtand every ſtormy blaſt of temptation, and never to be plucked up by the united force of earth or hell. In the believer the purity of the lily and the ſtrength of the cedar are united. His branches ſhall ſpread, the goſpel church being enlarged with converts, and each redeemed ſoul increaſing in the knowledge and love of God; and, abounding in every good word and work, his beauty ſhall be as the olive-tree, whoſe leaves are ever green; ſo pleaſing and perſevering in the beauty of holineſs ſhall God's people appear; and his ſmell as Lebanon, the graces he exerciſes, and the acceptable ſacrifices he offers, fragrant as the odoriferous trees that grew on that famed mountain. They that dwell under his ſhadow ſhall return, under the ſhadow of Jeſus, that covers the faithful from the ſcorching heat of a fiery law, and refreſheth the ſoul of the weary, and to him ſhall they continually return for ſhelter and conſolation; they ſhall revive as the corn, that at the ſpring vegetates ſtrongly after the nipping blaſts of winter's cold; ſo belivers riſe from their afflictions and temptations, fairer and ſtronger than before; and grow as the vine, ſupported by the divine power, and fruitful in all good works, to the praiſe and glory of God; and the ſcent thereof ſhall be as the wine of Lebanon, diffuſing their fragrance, and by their examples and gracious diſcourſe ſerving as cordials to revive the dejected and diſconſolate.

1. Penitent Ephraim's final determination. Ephraim ſhall ſay, What have I to do any more with idols? with abhorrence caſting them away, and purpoſing in the ſtrength of divine grace to return to them no more. Thus doth the converted ſoul renounce, with deteſtation, his once moſt beloved ſins, and this for ever; not that we can fulfil the leaſt of theſe reſolutions in our own ſtrength: no. It is God that promiſes he will make Ephraim ſpeak thus; and he will give him the ability to perform his purpoſes.

2. God's gracious regard towards him. I have heard him, and obſerved him; heard his prayers, and ſeen his tears, and noted all the gracious purpoſes his heart hath formed; for God delights to behold the returning prodigal, and looks with tendereſt compaſſion and warmeſt affection on him that is poor and of a contrite ſpirit, ready to anſwer and relieve all his complaints.

3. The Lord will bleſs, protect, and ſave him. I am like a green fir-tree. Under the ſhadow of Jeſus his people ſit with great delight, ſafe from the ſultry beams of day, and protected from ſtorm and rain, from every ſpiritual enemy, and from the power of evil; and the leaves are ever green, Chriſt being the ſame yeſterday, to-day, and for ever; ever living to make interceſſion for them: from me is thy fruit found; all our ſpiritual bleſſings being derived from him, and all our fruits of grace ſpringing from the ſupplies miniſtered by him the living root, and are therefore to be aſcribed entirely to his praiſe and glory.

4. The prophet cloſes with recommending theſe words to our moſt ſerious attention. Who is wiſe, and he ſhall underſtand theſe things? prudent, and he ſhall know them? ſuch will be inquiſitive into the mind of God, and, ſearching the Scriptures daily, ſhall be enlightened with the knowledge of the truth: for the ways of the Lord are right, all his diſpenſations of providence and grace being conſonant to the ſtricteſt rules of eternal juſtice, and the more they are truly underſtood, the more ſhall we acknowledge them to be ſo; and the juſt ſhall walk in them, obedient to his will, ſubmiſſive to his providences: but the tranſgreſſors ſhall fall therein; the ſame word, which is a ſavour of life unto life to ſome, will prove the ſavour of death unto death to others, through their diſobedience to God's word, or their abuſe of the moſt glorious truths contained therein; the ſame doctrines of goſpel grace affording the ſweeteſt conſolations, and ſuggeſting to the faithful the ſtrongeſt arguments for all holy converſation; whilſt the hypocrite and apoſtate ſuck from them deadly poiſon, and make that which ſhould have been for their help an occaſion of falling.

JOEL.

WE are altogether uncertain concerning the time when this prophet propheſied: it is probable he was cotemporary with Amos, as he ſpeaks of the ſame judgments of locuſts, and drought, and fire, that Amos laments, which is an intimation that they appeared about the ſame time; Amos in Iſrael, and Joel in Judah. Hoſea and Obadiah propheſied about the ſame time; and it appears that Amos propheſied in the days of Jeroboam the ſecond king of Iſrael, Amos vii. 10. God ſent variety of prophets, that they might ſtrengthen the hands one of another, and out of the mouth of two or three witneſſes every word might be eſtabliſhed. In this prophecy, 1. The deſolation made by hoſts of noxious inſects is deſcribed, chap. i. and part of chap. ii. 2. The people are hereupon called to repentance, chap. ii. 3. Promiſes are made of the return of mercy upon their repentance, chap. ii. and promiſes of the pouring out the Spirit in the latter days. 4. The cauſe of God's people is pleaded againſt their enemies, whom God would in due time reckon with, chap, iii. and glorious things are ſpoken of the Goſpel Jeruſalem, and of the proſperity and perpetuity of it.

CHAP. I.

This chapter is a deſcription of a lamentable devaſtation made in Judea by locuſts and caterpillars: ſome think the prophet ſpeaks of it as a thing to come, and gives warning of it beforehand, as uſually the prophets did; others think it was now preſent, and his buſineſs is to affect the people with it, and awaken them by it to repentance. 1. It is ſpoken of as a judgment which had no precedent in former ages, ver. 1—7. 2. All ſorts of people ſharing in the calamity are called upon to lament it, ver. 8—13. 3. They are directed to look up to God in their lamentations, and to humble themſelves before him, ver. 14—20.

v. 1—7. The prophet opens his diſcourſe,

Before Chriſt 800.

1. With an addreſs to all the inhabitants of Judea, old and young, whoſe attention he demands to the meſſage he was about to deliver: a meſſage of judgment, ſuch as the oldeſt could not remember, nor the tradition of former ages produce, and which ought to be handed down to the lateſt poſterity, v. 3. that, warned by the ſufferings of their forefathers, they may avoid their ſins.

2. The judgment itſelf is an invaſion from a terrible enemy. And is by many applied to the Aſſyrians, who ravaged and deſolated the country; but may literally be better referred to the armies of locuſts and other inſects, which, in ſwarms ſucceeding each other, devoured all the fruits of the earth, and left the whole land barren as the ſcorched deſart. Deſpicable as they might ſeem apart, their multitudes made them formidable: not the ravages of the lions from the foreſt could be more fatal: not only the vine-leaves are eaten up, but the very fig-trees are barked and deſtroyed by them. Note, God never wants inſtruments of vengeance: the moſt inſignificant inſect can in his hand be made the ſevereſt ſcourge; and a locuſt terrible as a lion.

3. The drunkards are admoniſhed to lament the judgment, which their ſins had provoked, and by which they would be particularly affected, becauſe the new wine is cut off from their mouths. And juſtly doth God puniſh thoſe who abuſed his favours, by depriving them of their good things, and leaving them in want and wretchedneſs to lament their baſeneſs.

8. ¶ Lament like a virgin girded with ſackcloth for the huſband of her youth. 9. [f] The meat-offering, and the drink-offering, is cut off from the houſe of the LORD; the prieſts the LORD's miniſters mourn. 10. The field is waſted, [g] the land mourneth; for the corn corn is waſted: the new wine is † dried up, the oil languiſheth. 11. Be ye aſhamed, O ye huſbandmen, howl, O ye vine-dreſſers, for the wheat and for the barley; becauſe the harveſt of the field is periſhed. 12. The vine is dried up, and the fig-tree languiſheth, the pomegranate-tree, the palm-tree alſo, and the apple-tree, even all the trees of the field are withered: becauſe [h] joy is withered away from the ſons of men. 13. Gird yourſelves, and lament, ye prieſts: howl, ye miniſters of the altar: come, lie all night in ſackcloth, ye miniſters of my God: for the [i] meat-offering and the drink-offering is withholden from the houſe of your God.

v. 8—13. The whole nation, deeply affected with the calamity, is called upon to mourn in ſackcloth, as a virgin that is robbed of her betrothed ſpouſe, on whom her warmeſt affections were fixed, and whoſe loſs fills her heart with bittereſt anguiſh. Note, They who are wedded to worldly comforts find it death to part from them.

The corn, wine, and oil, are periſhed; the trees ſtripped of leaves and fruit, and withered away; the very earth looks dark, and mourneth over the deſolations; becauſe joy is withered away from the ſons of men; the ſongs of harveſt and the ſhouting of the vintage are ſilent, and nothing is heard but howling and groans. Particularly;

1. The huſbandmen and vine-dreſſers are called to bewail the dreadful devaſtations: their labours are ruined, their hopes diſappointed, themſelves and families left to pine in want and periſh by famine.

2. The prieſts of the ſanctuary are commanded to join the general cry, and mourn over the deſerted altars, where no ſacrifice ſmoaked, no oblation was preſented. They are called miniſters of the altar, as bound to a conſtant attendance there; and miniſters of my God, this being their diſtinguiſhed honour, and the motive to their indefatigable labour. They would now be peculiar ſufferers, and be deſtitute of that maintenance with which the altar uſed to ſupply them; but a nobler concern muſt fill their minds, and grief to ſee God's worſhip neglected muſt ſwallow up every other concern that is merely their own. Note, A true miniſter of God hath his glory more at heart than every other conſideration: compared with this, he counts not even his own life dear unto himſelf.

14. ¶ [k] Sanctify ye a faſt, call [l] a † ſolemn aſſembly, gather the elders, and all the inhabitants of the land into the houſe of the LORD your God, and cry unto the LORD. 15. [m] Alas for the day! for [n] the day of the LORD is at hand, and as a deſtruction from the Almighty ſhall it come. 16. Is not the meat cut off before our eyes, yea, [o] joy and gladneſs from the houſe of our God? 17. The ‡ ſeed is rotten under their clods, the garners are laid deſolate, the barns are broken down; for the corn is withered. 18. How do the beaſts groan? the herds of cattle are perplexed, becauſe they have no paſture; yea, the flocks of ſheep are made deſolate. 19. [p] O LORD, to thee will I cry: for [q] the fire hath devoured the § paſtures of the wilderneſs, and the flame hath burnt all the trees of the field. 20. v. 14—20. To avert the heavy wrath upon them, the prophet points out to them the propereſt means to be purſued. As their ſufferings came from God's diſpleaſure, to remove this muſt be their firſt concern.

1. Let a ſolemn faſt be proclaimed. A day of deep humiliation ſanctified and ſet apart, that with united ſupplications they might ſurround the throne of grace; and whilſt, by a ſtrict abſtinence from meat and drink, they acknowledged themſelves unworthy of every mercy, and, proſtrate in the courts of the Lord's houſe, confeſſed the juſtice of the judgments he had inflicted, they might with prayers and tears cry unto a pardoning God, that ſin, the cauſe of their calamity, being forgiven, their ſufferings, the dire effects thereof, might be removed. Note, (1.) National judgments call for national humiliation. (2.) When we are found in God's appointed ways, we may humbly hope he will meet us in mercy. (3.) Affliction then anſwers the end for which it was ſent, when it brings us to our knees, and raiſes the cry of fervent importunate prayer.

2. Abundant reaſon there is for this humiliation.

[1.] What they ſuffered already was grievous. If they looked into their garners, they were empty; if to God's houſe, no ſacrifice or oblation was ſeen; if to the country, deſolate it mourned, the ſeed under the clod is rotten, and the very beaſts groan, perplexed for want of food, and pining away. Note, (1.) How terrible is famine: how thankful ought we to be for the plenty we have ſo long enjoyed; and how ſhould we fear to provoke God, by our abuſe of his mercies, to withhold them! (2.) The very earth mourns, the very beaſts groan under men's ſins, and ſhall we ourſelves be the only inſenſible beings in the whole creation?

[2.] What they feared was yet more terrible: for the day of the Lord is at hand. What they felt was but the beginning of ſorrows, and a foretaſte of the greater evil approaching; as deſtruction from the Almighty it ſhall come; which may refer to the ruin of the nation at firſt by the Chaldeans, or afterwards by the Romans, ſent of God to puniſh them for their iniquities, whoſe arm of omnipotence is irreſiſtible. And more generally this may be applied to every ſinner, whoſe judgment advances, whoſe damnation ſlumbereth not, whoſe everlaſting deſtruction is at the door: unleſs he repents without delay, he periſhes eternally. Well may we therefore cry, Alas for the day!

3. The prophet urges them hereunto by the examples before them.

[1.] His own. O Lord, to thee will I cry: as deeply affected with their ſins and their ſufferings, he earneſtly addreſſes his prayer to God; to him who wounds, and alone is able to heal; the fire of whoſe wrath, whatever inſtruments were employed, had conſumed them; and he only, who had kindled, could quench it. Note, They who call others to faſting and prayer, muſt themſelves lead the way in the fervency of their own devotions.

[2.] Of the beaſts. The beaſts of the field cry unto thee alſo: with ſounds inarticulate indeed, but which the Lord can hear and pity. They are parched with thirſt and famiſhed with hunger; for the rivers of water are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the paſtures of the wilderneſs, ſcorched up with the exceſſive drought. Note, The very lowing of the oxen, yea the ravens cries, ſhall riſe up in judgment to reproach the ſtupidity of the ſinner who reſtrains prayer before God.

They ſhall run to and fro in the city: they ſhall run upon the wall, they ſhall climb up upon the houſes: they ſhall enter in at the windows like a thief, 10. The earth ſhall quake before them, the heavens ſhall tremble, [m] the ſun and the moon ſhall be dark, and the ſtars ſhall withdraw their ſhining; 11. v. 1—11. The heavy judgment coming upon the people of Iſrael is here ſet forth.

1. The alarm is ſpread. Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and ſound an alarm in my holy mountain, to give notice of the invading foe, and to prepare them for the approaching danger. This was the prieſt's office, who, as the watchman upon Zion's walls, muſt warn ſinners of the wrath of God ready to light upon them, and urge them, whilſt there is hope, to flee from it. The judgments at the door ſhould make the people tremble, and the fatal day is nigh, fixed in the divine decree, to puniſh the tranſgreſſors, a day of darkneſs, &c. when the very ſun ſhould be obſcured with clouds of locuſts; or, as theſe phraſes may ſignify, the deepeſt calamities would overtake them; as the morning ſpread upon the mountains, coming ſuddenly, and ſpreading univerſally and irreſiſtibly; or the air ſhould be ſo darkened with the ſwarms of inſects, that at mid-day the light ſhould not exceed the dawning of the morning.

2. The army is marſhalled in battle array, v. 2. A great people and a ſtrong, ſupplying by multitude what they ſingly want in might; nor were there ever before, nor ſhall there be hereafter, ſuch ravages committed by them in Judea. As they advanced they ſwept the land as with the beſom of deſtruction, and behind them the country looked black and barren as if fire had devoured it; ſo that what was as the garden of Eden before them quickly appeared as a deſolate wilderneſs, nothing eſcaping their devouring jaws. Swift and bold as horſes, they ruſhed on; and, as rattling chariots over the rugged mountains, the ſound was heard afar off, leaping as they advanced, and terrible as the roaring of devouring fire, that ſpreads reſiſtleſs on every ſide; marching firm, embodied in exact battalion, as ſoldiers keep their ranks, v. 7, 8. In vain againſt them the ſword is drawn, they elude the ſtroke, or thoſe that fall are not found wanting, ſo vaſt is their multitude. Not only the country is devoured by them, but the cities are covered, the houſes are filled with them, v. 9. and theſe were the forerunners and emblems of the Chaldean armies, that ſhould in like manner ſpread deſolations on every ſide, deſtroy the country, ſack the cities, plunder and captivate the inhabitants, and leave Judea a wilderneſs, without man or beaſt. Note, (1.) There is no fence againſt God's judgments. (2.) The ſound of them in other lands ſhould be to us loud calls to repentance.

3. Great would be the terror ſpread through the land by theſe invaders. The people, ſeized with pangs as a woman in travel, would be in the deepeſt conſternation, and every face gather blackneſs, livid as the corps from which the ſpirit is fled. The very earth ſhall quake before them, the heavens tremble, and the luminaries thereof be darkened, v. 10. obſcured by the locuſts; or, figuratively, it beſpeaks the deep diſtreſs of the inhabitants, from the king upon the throne to the loweſt of the people. And well may they indeed tremble who ſee thus the wrath of God revealed againſt them. For,

4. This is his doing. It is his army, that marches under his direction, and animated by his voice, who, as their captain, leads them on to victory. Too numerous to be oppoſed, too ſtrong to be reſiſted, ſince they are ſent to execute his word. For the day of the Lord is great, and very terrible, and who can abide it? Note, The impenitent ſinner muſt needs periſh, unable to oppoſe the arm of Omnipotence, or bear up under the ſtrokes of his fierce anger.

12. ¶ Therefore alſo [q] now, ſaith the LORD, [r] turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with faſting, and with weeping, and with mourning. 13. And [s] rent your heart and not your garments, and turn unto the LORD your God: for [t] he is gracious and merciful, ſlow to anger, and of great kindneſs, and repenteth him of the evil. 14. [u] Who knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave [x] a bleſſing behind him, even [y] a meat-offering, and a drink-offering unto the LORD your God? 15. ¶ [z] Blow the trumpet in Zion, [a] ſanctify a faſt, call a ſolemn aſſembly. 16. Gather the people: [b] ſanctify the congregation: aſſemble the elders: gather the children, and thoſe that ſuck the breaſts: [c] let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her cloſet. 17. Let the prieſts, the miniſters of the LORD, weep [d] between the porch and the altar, and let them ſay, Spare thy people, O LORD, and give not thine heritage to reproach; that the heathen ſhould † rule over them: wherefore ſhould they ſay among the people, [e] Where is their God? 18. ¶ Then [f] will the LORD be jealous for his land, and pity his people. 19. Yea, the LORD will anſwer and ſay unto his people, Behold, [g] I will ſend you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye ſhall be ſatisfied therewith: and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen. 20. But [h] I will remove far off from you the northern [i] army, and will drive him into a land barren and deſolate, with his face toward the eaſt ſea, and his hinder part towards the utmoſt ſea; and his ſtink ſhall come up, and his ill favour ſhall come up, becauſe he hath ‡ done great things.

v. 12—20. To oppoſe theſe deſolating judgments, when they come, were vain; to avert them, before they arrived, was yet poſſible: and the way is here preſcribed.

1. By a penitent return to God.

[1.] Let a ſolemn faſt be proclaimed, ſee chap. i. 14. and all ſummoned to appear before God, from the higheſt to the loweſt, from the hoary head to the babe that ſucks the breaſt; the univerſal judgment called for deep and univerſal abaſement: nor muſt the bridegroom or bride be abſent. In public calamities all private joys muſt be ſwallowed up.

[2.] Let the prieſts, with deepeſt mourning and moſt fervent ſupplications, pour forth their complaints to God, and, ſtanding between the porch and the altar, on which now no ſacrifices ſmoaked, with tears of heartfelt woe cry unto God, if mercy yet is to be found, Spare thy people, O Lord: they plead that relation which, though an aggravation of their ſin, yet miniſters a ground for hope, that yet the Lord would not utterly caſt them off; and give not thine heritage to reproach, by driving them into ſtrange countries to ſeek for food, or ſuffering them, thus impoveriſhed, to fall an eaſy prey into the hands of their enemies, that the heathen ſhould rule over them: Wherefore ſhould they ſay among the people, Where is their God? Not only their lives and characters but God's glory was concerned, and for his own great name's ſake, though they deſerved no favour, they muſt plead for his interpoſition. Note, (1.) The miniſters of God muſt themſelves be deeply affected, if they would affect the hearts of their people. (2.) Mercy is all a miſerable ſinner can aſk at God's hand. (3.) Our moſt powerful pleas in prayer are to be drawn from God's own glory, as intereſted in our ſalvation.

[3.] Let the people join their miniſters with prayers and tears, and heartfelt humiliation, v. 12, 13. and, without which every outward expreſſion of diſtreſs is but hypocriſy, turn unto the Lord their God in ſimplicity and truth, deeply convinced of the evil of their ſins, and truly abhorring themſelves in the view of them; putting away the accurſed thing, and cleaving to the Lord with full purpoſe of heart, through his grace, to approve henceforward their unſhaken fidelity to him. In this way, ſinners as we are, a door of hope will yet be opened for us.

2. The moſt powerful arguments are ſuggeſted to engage them hereunto. He is called the Lord your God, who hath not diſclaimed yet his relation to them, for he is gracious and merciful; and though highly provoked, he is not inexorable; he delights not in the death of a ſinner; ſlow to anger, unwilling, even after repeated offences, to deſtroy the guilty; waiting with aſtoniſhing patience; and of great kindneſs, ready to receive him the moment he relents and returns; and repenteth him of the evil, changing the afflictive diſpenſations of his providence towards the penitent, and, inſtead of wrath, thinketh upon mercy. And ſurely nothing can break the obdurate heart, if ſuch tender pity and undeſerved compaſſion lead us not to repentance. Who knoweth if he will return and repent, averting the heavy temporal calamities threatened, of which they might entertain good hope if they truly turned to him, and leave a bleſſing behind him, not as departing from them, but as coming to their reſcue, and ſtaying the ravages of the locuſts; even a meat-offering and a drink-offering for the Lord our God; for their deſires were more intent on having God's altar ſupplied than their own tables covered; and this was a gracious evidence of the truth of their repentance.

3. God gives them the ſtrongeſt aſſurances he will hear their prayer, and will both help them and glorify himſelf. He will be jealous for the land, for his great name's ſake, and will pity his people in their deep diſtreſs. Their plenty ſhall be reſtored, their reproach be removed, v. 18. and their devourers deſtroyed, and caſt in heaps into the ſea, filling the air with the ſtench of their putrid carcaſes, becauſe he hath done great things, becauſe of the miſchief they have occaſioned; or, for he will do great things, God will make bare his arm for their reſcue, and do for his people the great things promiſed in this and the following verſes. Some apply this to the deſtruction of Sennacherib's army; and probably theſe locuſts, both in their invaſion and deſtruction, were a figure of the Aſſyrians. Note, God will aſſuredly hear when his people cry, and their enemies and his ſhall know the fierceneſs of his wrath.

21. ¶ Fear not, O land, be glad, and rejoice: for the LORD will do great things. 22. Be not afraid, ye beaſts of the field: for [k] the paſtures of the wilderneſs do ſpring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their ſtrength. 23. Be glad then ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the LORD your God: for he hath given you † the former rain ‡ moderately, and [l] he will cauſe to come down for you [m] the rain, the former rain and the latter rain in the firſt month. 24. And the floors ſhall be full of wheat, and the fats ſhall overflow with wine and oil. 25. And I will reſtore to you the ears [n] that the locuſt hath eaten, the canker-

v. 21—27. Many great and precious promiſes are here added for the comfort and joy of the people of God.

1. Their fears ſhall be all removed. The Lord will do great things for them; reſcuing them wonderfully from the hands of every enemy, whether the locuſts or Chaldeans; as he will alſo ſave the ſouls of his people in Chriſt Jeſus from every ſpiritual foe, and deliver them from the fears of guilt, and the powers of corruption.

2. Their joys ſhall be reſtored. Their temporal comforts ſhall abound; the devaſtations of the locuſts ſhall be repaired, v. 25. the paſtures which had been devoured ſhall ſpring afreſh, watered with the dew of heaven, v. 22. The rain, moderately deſcending in its ſeaſon, ſhall fertilize the ſoil, and cauſe their corn, their vineyards, their olive and fig-trees, to ſhoot vigorouſly, and bring forth fruit abundantly, v. 22, 23. ſo that their garners ſhould be filled, and their fats overflow, v. 24. And what is far better than even their reſtored plenty, he will give them ſpiritual conſolation, and the ſanctified enjoyment of their comforts. They ſhall rejoice in the Lord their God, aſcribing to him the praiſe of all their mercies, and happy in a ſenſe of his love and favour, v. 26. By experience now they ſhall be brought to know God's gracious preſence in the midſt of them, and that he alone is God, even their God, and none elſe; all idols being utterly rejected by them, and his great name alone adored and exalted: and this will be moſt eminently the caſe, when that teacher of righteouſneſs, (as the words, v. 23. may be rendered, inſtead of the former rain moderately,) which God would ſend, even the divine Meſſiah, ſhould come, and by his own obedience unto death work out, and in his goſpel direct us to, that one divine and everlaſting righteouſneſs, which is the grand ſource of every believer's joy, and will be to all eternity.

3. They ſhall never be aſhamed; never have cauſe to be ſo, through want of food, as before: or rather, the Lord their confidence will never diſappoint their hope; he will be their rock and refuge in every time of need; they ſhall experience his conſtant and uninterrupted favour in time, and in the day of his appearing and glory, ſtand forth before him with great boldneſs, aſſured of his everlaſting love.

4. The very beaſts that groaned and cried to God, ſhall have the cauſe of their fears and cries removed. The paſtures of the wilderneſs do ſpring; even to them hath God reſpect, for his mercies are over all his works, Jonah iv. 11.

28. ¶ [p] And it ſhall come to paſs afterward, that I [q] will pour out my ſpirit upon all fleſh, and your ſons and your daughters ſhall propheſy, your old men ſhall dream dreams, your young men ſhall ſee viſions: 29.
And [r] alſo upon the ſervants, and upon the handmaids in thoſe days, will I pour out my ſpirit. 30. And [s] I will ſhew wonders in the heavens, and in the earth, blood and fire and pillars of ſmoke. 31. [t] The ſun ſhall be turned into darkneſs, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the LORD come. 32.
And it ſhall come to paſs, that [u] whoſoever ſhall call on the name of the LORD ſhall be delivered: for [x] in mount Zion and in Jeruſalem ſhall be deliverance, as the LORD hath ſaid, and in the remnant whom the LORD ſhall call.

v. 28—32. The promiſes here evidently look forward to the times of the goſpel; and in all the former troubles of the people of God, the proſpect of theſe bleſſed days was a great ſupport under their afflictions.

1. There ſhall be a moſt plenteous effuſion of the Spirit, as on the apoſtles at the day of Pentecoſt, to which this prophecy is expreſsly applied, Acts ii. 16, 17. and afterwards upon all fleſh, Gentiles as well as Jews, who ſhould be made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, both of his miraculous powers, as well as the ordinary gifts and graces he beſtows; the latter of which ſtill continue, though the former have ceaſed, yet perhaps not for ever. Old and young, perſons of both ſexes, ſhould alike partake of this bleſſing; and even the meaneſt ſervants and handmaidens not be excluded from this unſpeakable gift. Thus they ſhould be enabled to prophecy; either to foretel things to come, as Agabus, the daughters of Philip, and others, Acts xi. 28. xiii. 1. xxi. 9, 10. or to ſpeak the truths of God to the edification of others; or to join in his praiſes with enlarged hearts; in all which ſenſes the word prophecy is uſed.

2. A ſcene of dreadful prodigies ſhall follow, v. 30, 31. which had their primary accompliſhment in the dreadful ravages of the Roman army in Judea, and the ſtrange ſights and appearances in the air, which uſhered in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and will alſo precede the final coming of the eternal judge, and uſher in that great and terrible day of the Lord. Happy would it be for the ſinner, if the tremendous views of that awful day's approach might alarm his conſcience, and awaken his concern, to fly to the boſom of Jeſus for ſhelter from the wrath to come, that he may be hid there in the day of the Lord's fierce anger.

3. The faithful in that great day are ſecured from fear of evil. It ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever ſhall call on the name of the Lord ſhall be delivered, as thoſe were who believed in Jeſus, and fled to Pella on the approaching ſiege of Jeruſalem. And more generally this muſt be extended to all Chriſt's redeemed people, who in him are ſure to find preſent and everlaſting ſalvation from all the great enemies of their ſouls; and waiting upon him by faith in ceaſeleſs prayer, obtain from him help in every time of need. For in mount Zion, and in Jeruſalem, in the goſpel church, ſhall be deliverance, as the Lord hath ſaid, who is faithful to all his promiſes, and neither can nor will ever leave or forſake his people; and in the remnant whom the Lord ſhall call, not one of whom ſhall ever periſh; for whom he hath effectually called, he will powerfully keep, and none ſhall ever pluck them out of his hands. Bleſſed and happy are they who have a part in this ſalvation; may my lot be with them!

CHAP. III.

The gracious promiſe which cloſed the foregoing chapter is here enlarged upon. Here is a prediction, 1. Of God's reckoning with the enemies of his people for all the injuries that they had done them, ver. 1—8. 2. Of God's judging all nations when the meaſure of their iniquity is full, and appearing publicly to the everlaſting confuſion of all impenitent ſinners, and the everlaſting comfort of all his faithful ſervants, ver. 9—17. 3. Of the proviſion God has made for the refreſhment of his people, for their ſafety and purity, when their enemies ſhall be made deſolate, ver. 18—21. Theſe promiſes were not of private interpretation only, but were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of this ſcripture might have hope.

1. FOR behold, in thoſe days, and in that time when I ſhall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jeruſalem, 2. I will alſo gather all nations, and will bring them down [a] into the valley of Jehoſhaphat, and will plead with them there for my people, and for my heritage Iſrael, whom they have ſcattered among the nations, and parted my land. 3. And they have caſt lots for my people, and have given a boy for a harlot, and ſold a girl for wine, that they might drink. 4.
Yea, and what have ye to do [b] with me, O Tyre and Zidon, and all the coaſts of Paleſtine? Will ye render me a recompenſe? And if ye recompenſe me, [c] ſwiftly and ſpeedily will I return your recompenſe upon your own head. 5. Becauſe ye have taken my ſilver and my gold, and have carried into your temple my goodly † pleaſant things. 6. The children alſo of Judah, and the children of Jeruſalem have ye ſold unto ‡ the Grecians, that ye might remove them far from their border.
7. Behold, I will raiſe them out of the place whither ye have ſold them, and [d] will return your recompenſe upon your own head. 8. And I will [e] ſell your ſons and your daughters into the hand of the children of Judah, and they ſhall ſell them to the Sabeans, to a people far off; for the LORD hath ſpoken it.

v. 1—8. The ſufferings of God's people, and the deſtruction of their enemies, have their appointed periods.

1. In thoſe days of the Meſſiah, I will bring again the captivity of Judah and Jeruſalem; many of them by the preaching of the goſpel being called into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God, from the bondage of corruption, more intolerable than that of Egypt or Chaldea. Perhaps alſo this may have reſpect to their recovery from their preſent diſperſion.

2. Their enemies ſhall be reckoned with, v. 2. which ſome apply to Sennacherib and the Aſſyrians, and ſuppoſe the days ſpoken of to refer to the recovery of the diſperſed Jews, who had fled or been taken priſoners on that invaſion. Others apply it to the Romans and neighbouring nations, who had ſeverely waſted God's heritage: and ſome imagine they ſee in this prophecy the deſtruction of the Turkiſh and papal powers, aſſembled to make war againſt the Saints of the moſt High, after all their former perſecutions of them, whoſe quarrel God will now ſignally eſpouſe, and avenge their wrongs.

3. The charges lying againſt theſe enemies of his people are, for their cruelty, robbery, inſult, and oppreſſion. They ſcattered them among the nations; ſeized and ſold them for ſlaves, particularly to the Grecians, v. 6. removing them far from their own land, which they parted among themſelves; either Titus parcelled it out to his ſoldiers, or the neighbouring nations each ſeized that portion which lay contiguous to them: and they have caſt lots for my people; in ſuch vaſt numbers were they taken captive, and their value ſo ſmall, that their conquerors gave a boy for the hire of an harlot, and a girl for wine, that they might drink. Thus in drinking and whoring they ſquandered the prey they had taken, the common vices of perſecutors. God's gold and ſilver they had plundered; what he had given to his people, and regarded ſtill as his own: and his pleaſant things, perhaps the veſſels or treaſures of his ſanctuary, they had carried to the temple of their idols, adding ſacrilege and impiety to robbery. Well may God therefore expoſtulate with them, What have you to do with me, O Tyre and Zidon, and all the coaſts of Paleſtine? which may be put for all the enemies of Chriſt's church and people in every age. What have you to do with me? how dare you diſtreſs my people; what provocation have they given? will you render me a recompenſe? Have they done you any injury, which you would thus retaliate? no: they were quiet in the land, and had never juſtly offended them. Note, (1.) No ſweetneſs of temper, or amiableneſs of diſpoſition, can ſoften the enmity of the wicked. (2.) We muſt not think it ſtrange if we receive the greateſt unkindneſs from thoſe whom we have ever ſtudied to oblige.

4. God threatens them to return their wickedneſs into their own boſom. If ye recompenſe me, pretending to retaliate wrongs they had received from God's people; I will ſwiftly and ſpeedily return your recompenſe upon your own head, and give tribulation to thoſe that troubled them. Whilſt God recovered his own children from the places whither they had diſperſed and ſold them, he will ſell the children of theſe his enemies into the hands of the men of Judah; and they, in juſt retaliation of the wrongs they have received, ſhall ſell them to the Sabeans, to a people far off. And for this the veracity of God is engaged; the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it: the accompliſhment of which prophecy ſome refer to the days of the Maccabees; others, to the future deſtruction of the perſecuting powers of Popery or Mahomediſm: certain however it is, that all the enemies of Chriſt's church and people ſhall at the laſt be made their footſtool.

9. ¶ [f] Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles: † prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near, let them come up. 10. [g] Beat your plow-ſhares into ſwords, and your ‡ pruning-hooks into ſpears: [h] let the weak ſay, I am ſtrong. 11. Aſſemble yourſelves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourſelves together round about: thither § cauſe thy mighty ones to come down, O LORD. 12. Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to [i] the valley of Jehoſhaphat: for there will I ſit to judge all the heathen round about. 13. [k] Put ye in the ſickle, for the harveſt is ripe; come, get ye down, for the preſs is full, the fats overflow, for their wickedneſs is great. 14. [l] Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of ‖ deciſion: for the day of the LORD is near in the valley of deciſion. 15. [m] The ſun and the moon ſhall be darkned, and the ſtars ſhall withdraw their ſhining: 16. The LORD alſo ſhall [n] roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jeruſalem, and [o] the heavens and the earth ſhall ſhake; but the LORD will be the † hope of his people, and the ſtrength of the children of Iſrael. 17. So [p] ſhall ye know that I am the LORD your God dwelling in Zion, [q] my holy mountain: then ſhall Jeruſalem be holy, and [r] there ſhall no ſtrangers paſs through her any more.

v. 9—17. Commentators greatly differ about the times referred to in this prophecy. Some ſuppoſe it fulfilled in the deſtruction of Sennacherib, or the Aſſyrians, or Antiochus; others, that it looks forward to more diſtant ages, and foretels the ruin of all the antichriſtian perſecuting powers, whether pagan, papal, or Mahometan; and many expreſſions in the Revelations, which ſeem to ſpeak of that event, are borrowed from hence. Some ſtill carry the accompliſhment farther, and read in it the great day of final judgment, when the wicked ſhall be caſt into hell, and the ſaints of God ſhall receive the kingdom of their father.

1. A defiance is ſent to all God's enemies. Let them collect their forces; muſter their armies; furniſh themſelves with weapons; encourage each other for the conflict, v. 10. unite their aſſembled legions; haſten to the field of battle, v. 11. rouſe up their courage, and ſtand in array. Multitudes, multitudes, innumerable the hoſt in the valley of deciſion, the ſame as the valley of Jehoſhaphat; which may not mark any particular place, but the end for which they are aſſembled, Jehoſhaphat ſignifying the judgment of the Lord, who will there plead with, condemn, and deſtroy his enemies; and the day is near, v. 14.

They who refer this to the ſlaughter of the antichriſtian powers, Rev. xvi. 14, 16. xix. 18—21. ſuppoſe they will in the latter day be gathered together in the land of Judea, to make war on the ſaints of the moſt High, and by ſome eminent ſtroke of vengeance from God be utterly conſumed.

Applying it to the day of judgment, we may learn, (1.) That it is near, uncertain when, but ſurely approaching: highly therefore doth it concern us to be always ready. (2.) That day will fix our final ſtate, whether for happineſs or miſery eternal, according to the unerring deciſions of the God of truth and judgment.

2. At the prophet's prayer the executioners of vengeance appear. Cauſe thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord; either the holy angels, or the Chriſtian princes under Chriſt their leader, going down to the valley of deciſion, to join battle with their foes. Put ye in the ſickle, for the harveſt is ripe; come, get ye down, for the preſs is full, the fats overflow; their enemies are ripe for judgment, See Rev. xiv. 18—20. xix. 15—20. and the reaſon is given, becauſe their wickedneſs is great.

3. To the impenitent ſinner, or antichriſtian foe, that day will be full of horror. The ſun and the moon ſhall be darkned, and the ſtars ſhall withdraw their ſhining; as will be literally the caſe in the great day of judgment, when theſe luminaries ſhall be extinguiſhed. Or figuratively it refers to the kings and princes of the earth, who ſhall be caſt down before the armies of the living God. When the Lord ſhall rore out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jeruſalem; appearing on the behalf of his church and people, and ſpreading terror and diſmay among their enemies: and the heavens and earth ſhall ſhake; the mightieſt will tremble before him; or as at the day of final judgment it will be ſeen, when the heavens being on fire ſhall be diſſolved, and the earth ſhall be burnt up. Woe to the wicked, who then ſhall find no ſhelter, no rock to hide, no mountain to cover their guilty heads.

4. The people of God will triumph and rejoice, for the Lord ſhall be the hope of his people; he that had ever been the object of their hope and truſt, will not then diſappoint them, but will be their refuge in this day of evil: and the ſtrength of the children of Iſrael; ſupporting them through all their conflicts, and crowning them at laſt with victory. So ſhall ye know that I am the Lord your God, by happy experience of his power and grace; dwelling in Zion my holy mountain; in the midſt of the church of his redeemed. Then ſhall Jeruſalem be holy, or holineſs; all the ſaints of God at the laſt ſhall be made perfect, as their Father which is in heaven is perfect: and there ſhall no ſtranger paſs through her any more; no enemy being left to hurt them, no hypocrite or ungodly perſons being any longer found among them.

18. ¶ And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, that the mountains [s] ſhall drop down new wine, and the hills ſhall flow with milk, and all the rivers of Judah ſhall † flow with waters, and [t] a fountain ſhall come forth of the houſe of the LORD, and ſhall water [u] the valley of Shittim. 19. [x] Egypt ſhall be a deſolation, [y] and Edom ſhall be a deſolate wilderneſs, [z] for the violence againſt the children of Judah, becauſe they have ſhed innocent blood in their land. 20. But Judah ſhall ‡ dwell for ever, and Jeruſalem from generation to generation. 21. For I will cleanſe their blood that I have not cleanſed, § for [a] the LORD dwelleth in Zion.

v. 18—21. Theſe great and precious promiſes conclude the prophecy, which, whatever reſpect they may have to the Jews, ſeem chiefly to look to the times of goſpel grace, or final glory.

1. There ſhall be the moſt abundant plenty, v. 18. either of temporal good things, or rather of ſpiritual bleſſings, diffuſed among the faithful. The wine and milk of goſpel grace ſhall flow down like torrents from the hills, refreſhing, ſtrengthening, comforting the members of Chriſt's church; and from him, the everflowing, overflowing fountain, ſhall the healing ſtreams go forth, watering the valley of Shittim, a barren valley beyond Jordan, which may ſignify the Gentile world, and intimate the fruitfulneſs which this watering of the ſanctuary ſhould produce, and the extent of the Redeemer's grace, even to the moſt diſtant corners of the earth.

2. The inveterate enemies of the church ſhall be deſtroyed, v. 19. Egypt and Edom had often ſhewn their implacable hatred againſt Judah, and ſhed innocent blood in the land; but they ſhall now be made perpetual deſolations. And theſe nations are the figures of the preſent perſecutors of God's people, particularly of Rome, called Egypt myſtically, Rev. xi. 8. and red with the blood of ſaints and martyrs; but blood ſhall now be given her to drink, together with all the other perſecuting powers, pagan or Mahometan, who will periſh together. Or if this be applied to the laſt great day, then death, ſin, and Satan, the moſt mortal foes of the redeemed, ſhall be deſtroyed together and for ever.

3. The people of God ſhall from thenceforth enjoy undiſturbed repoſe. Judah ſhall dwell for ever, and Jeruſalem from generation to generation; to the end of time the church of Chriſt ſhall be preſerved ſafe from all the attacks of the gates of hell: or, in the eternal ſtate of bliſs, the redeemed ſhall dwell ſafely in manſions of glory. For I will cleanſe their blood that I have not cleanſed; pardoning all their guilt, ſaving them from the power of all their ſins; and, at the laſt, deſtroying the very being of ſin in them: for the Lord dwelleth in Zion, and therefore his people may comfortably and confidently expect to be made partakers of the fulneſs of this his great ſalvation.

AMOS.

THOUGH this prophet appeared a little before Iſaiah, yet he was not, as ſome have imagined, that Amos who was the father of Iſaiah, (Iſa. i. 1.) for in the Hebrew their names are very different; and their families too of a different character; for Iſaiah was a courtier, Amos a herdſman. Amos ſignifies a burden; his word was the burden of the Lord. He was (as moſt think) of Judah, yet propheſied chiefly againſt Iſrael, and at Bethel, chap. vii. 13. He begins with threatnings againſt the neighbour-nations that were enemies to Iſrael, chap. i. and ii. Then calls Iſrael to account, and judgeth them for their idolatry, their unworthy walking under the favours God had beſtowed upon them, and their incorrigibleneſs under his judgments, chap. iii. and iv. He calls them to repentance, chap. v. rejecting their hypocritical ſacrifices, unleſs they did repent. He foretels the deſolations that were coming upon them, notwithſtanding their ſecurity, chap. vi. ſome particular judgments, chap. vii. particularly on Amaziah; and after other reproofs and threatnings, chap. viii. and ix. concludes with a promiſe of the ſetting up of the Meſſiah's kingdom, and the happineſs of God's ſpiritual Iſrael therein, juſt as the prophecy of Joel concluded.

1. THE words of † Amos, [a] who was among the herdſmen of Tekoa, which he ſaw concerning Iſrael, [b] in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh king of Iſrael, two years before [c] the earthquake.

v. 1. The prophecy opens with an account of the writer Amos, an inhabitant of Tekoa, in the tribe of Judah; a herdſman, not brought up in the ſchool of the prophets, nor probably furniſhed with human literature, but God can make the fooliſh things of the world to confound the wiſe; and when he ſpeaks, who can but propheſy? chap. iii. 8.

The ten tribes of Iſrael are chiefly the ſubject of the prophetic words which God revealed to Amos; and he ſaw the things he declares with the ſame evidence and clearneſs, as if they had been preſented before his bodily eyes.

The prophecy is dated in the reigns of Uzziah and Jeroboam the ſecond, two years before the earthquake; a very remarkable event, which happened in Uzziah's reign, probably at the beginning of it. Compare 2 Kings xv. 1. with 2 Kings xiv. 23.

And I will cut off the inhabitant [m] from Aſhdod, and him that holdeth the ſcepter from Aſhkelon, and I will turn mine hand againſt Ekron; and the remnant of the Philiſtines ſhall periſh, ſaith the Lord GOD. 9. ¶ Thus ſaith the LORD, For three tranſgreſſions of [n] Tyrus, and for four I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof: becauſe they delivered up the whole captivity to Edom, and remembred not [o] the brotherly covenant. 10. But I will ſend a fire on the wall of Tyrus, which ſhall devour the palaces thereof. 11. ¶ Thus ſaith the LORD, For three tranſgreſſions of [p] Edom, and for four I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof: becauſe he did purſue [q] his brother with the

v. 2—15. The general tenor of the prophecy before us is intimated in theſe firſt words of it. The Lord will rore from Zion, and utter his voice from Jeruſalem, loud and terrible as the lion roars, or as the voice of mighty thunderings. From between the cherubims, his ſeat of judgment, he denounces his wrath on the enemies of his people; the paſtures of the ſhepherds ſhall mourn, terrified with the ſound, and the top of Carmel ſhall wither, ſcorched with the flaſhing lightnings; or, as is intimated chap. iv. 7. conſumed with drought.

The charge and ſentence againſt theſe nations are nearly the ſame. Their multiplied iniquities and idolatries, ſignified by three and four tranſgreſſions, and above all their perſecution and oppreſſion of God's heritage, cried for vengeance againſt them; and God, as the prophet declares, had fixed their doom, for he ſpake not of himſelf, but thus ſaith the Lord, able to execute all the threatnings of his word, and ſolemnly engaging to do ſo, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof, the ſentence is gone forth, irreverſible, immutable.

1. Damaſcus, the capital of Syria, is brought to the bar, beſides the general charge of multiplied tranſgreſſions, her peculiar iniquity was, that they have threſhed Gilead with threſhing-inſtruments of iron, ſo terribly had Hazael ravaged that part of the country, 2 Kings x. 32, 33. xiii. 3—7. The wrath of God therefore, as devouring fire, ſhall conſume the royal palaces and temples of Syria, and the invading enemy beſiege and force their way into Damaſcus, the ſeat of empire; they ſhall cut off the inhabitants from the plain of Aven, a delightful valley near it, the ſcene of their idolatry, and him that holdeth the ſceptre from the houſe of Eden, ſome pleaſure-houſe probably of the kings of Syria; and the people of Syria ſhall go into captivity to Kir, ſaith the Lord, one tittle of whoſe word ſhall never fail. See the accompliſhment of the prophecy, 2 Kings xvi. 19.

2. Gaza, a chief city of the Philiſtines, is next found guilty and puniſhed. Becauſe they carried away captive the whole captivity to deliver them up to Edom; the event referred to ſeems to be that, 2 Chron. xxi. 17. when they ravaged and plundered the country, and ſeized all Jehoram's family except one ſon, and all his ſubſtance; for which the chief cities of Philiſtia, with the nobles and inhabitants, are doomed to deſtruction, and the remnant of them ſhall periſh; God will leave them neither root nor branch, and ſuch will at laſt be the fate of all the enemies and perſecutors of God's people.

3. Tyre, like the other neighbours of Iſrael, notwithſtanding the brotherly covenant which had ſubſiſted of old between Solomon and Hiram, ſpared them not in the day of their calamity, but delivered up the whole captivity to Edom; either ſuch as they had ſeized in ſome inroad into the country, or thoſe who had fled to Tyre for ſhelter from the invaſion of their enemies; theſe they delivered up, or ſold for ſlaves to their implacable enemies the Edomites: but the proud walls and palaces of Tyre ſhall be overthrown in juſt vengeance for ſuch unkindneſs, as was done by Nebuchadnezzar after a thirteen years ſiege. Note, Unkindneſs is doubly grating from thoſe, of whom we had juſt reaſon to expect every act of friendſhip.

4. Edom, with hereditary hatred, perſecuted the ſeed of Jacob; and though brethren in blood, yet in enmity moſt inveterate: they purſued them with the ſword, Numb. xx. 19. 2 Chron. xxviii. 17. and were ever ready to do them all poſſible miſchief; but it ſhall be returned upon their own heads, and their cities and palaces ſhall be deſtroyed, as was done by Nebuchadnezzar, and afterwards more terribly by the Maccabees, 1 Mac. v. 28. Note, (1.) The enmity which ariſes between neareſt relations, hath uſually peculiar malignity. (2.) Such enmity is exceeding ſinful, and will provoke exemplary vengeance againſt the offenders and the implacable.

5. The children of Ammon, with Rabbah their capital, are devoted to ruin, and their king and princes doomed to an ignominious captivity; their judgment ſhall be ſevere, ſudden, and irreſiſtable, v. 14. as their crimes were atrocious; they have ripped up the women with child of Gilead, that they might enlarge their border, with moſt inhuman cruelty maſſacring the inhabitants, without pity, remorſe, or diſtinction of age, ſex, or condition. Note, (1.) Covetouſneſs and cruelty are twin ſiſters; and the inordinate love of money is often ſeen to harden the heart againſt all the feelings of humanity. (2.) It is righteous in God to give thoſe to the ſpoil, whoſe ſubſtance is the gain of oppreſſion and injuſtice.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter we have, 1. God's controverſy with Moab, ver. 1—3. 2. His quarrel with Judah, ver. 4, 5. 3. His charge againſt Iſrael, to which all that goes before is but an introduction. Obſerve, (1.) The ſins they are charged with; injuſtice, oppreſſion, whoredom, ver. 6—8. (2.) The aggravations of thoſe ſins; the temporal and ſpiritual mercies God had beſtowed upon them, for which they had made him ſuch ungrateful returns, ver. 9—12. (3.) God's complaint of them for their ſins, ver. 13. and his threatnings of their ruin, and their utter inability to prevent it, ver. 14—16.

1. THUS ſaith the LORD, for three tranſgreſſions of [a] Moab, and for four I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof: becauſe [b] he burnt the bones of the king of Edom into lime. 2. But I will ſend a fire upon Moab, and it ſhall devour the palaces of Kirioth, and Moab ſhall die with tumult, with ſhouting, and with the ſound of the trumpet. 3. And I will cut off [c] the judge from the midſt thereof, and will ſlay all the princes thereof with him, ſaith the LORD. 4.
¶ Thus ſaith the LORD, for three tranſgreſſions of Judah, and for four I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof: becauſe they have deſpiſed the law of the LORD, and have not kept his commandments, [d] and their lies cauſed them to err, after the which their fathers have walked. 5. But I will ſend a fire upon Judah, and [e] it ſhall devour the palaces of Jeruſalem. 6. ¶ Thus ſaith the LORD, For three tranſgreſſions of Iſrael, and for four I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof:
becauſe [f] they ſold the righteous for ſilver, and the poor for a pair of ſhoes. 7. That pant after the duſt of the earth on the head of the poor, and turn aſide the way of the meek: and a man and his father will go in unto the ſame † maid, to profane my holy name. 8. And they lay themſelves down upon clothes [g] laid to pledge, by every altar, and they drink the wine of ‡ the condemned in the houſe of their god.

v. 1—8. God's controverſy ſtill proceeds,

1. With Moab. Their multiplied tranſgreſſions called for vengeance, and one peculiarly heinous is noted. Becauſe he burnt the bones of the king of Edom into lime, probably in revenge; for the diſtreſs to which the king of Edom had reduced him, 2 Kings iii. 26—27. he ſome time after ſeized the perſon of the king of Edom, and burnt him alive; or having ravaged the country, dug up his bones out of his grave, and burnt them to lime; for which inhumanity God threatens to puniſh him with an invading foe, who with all the horrid din of war ſhould ſeize his cities and palaces, murder the inhabitants, and cut off all the princes and judges of Moab, which was done by Nebuchadnezzar a few years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

2. Judah is brought to the bar: alike in ſin with heathen nations, and therefore alike in puniſhment. Many were her tranſgreſſions; but the root of all, and the moſt criminal, is her revolt from God, that God the nations around her never knew: they deſpiſed God's law, and kept not his commandments, rejecting his worſhip, and diſobedient to his holy will; and their lies cauſed them to err; their idols, their falſe prophets, the lying vanities on which they truſted, and the lying viſions in which they believed, as their fathers had done before them, the meaſure of whoſe iniquities they filled up. Juſtly therefore is the fire of wrath kindled, and ready to devour the palaces of Jeruſalem, Jer. lii. 13. Note, If other ſinners muſt periſh, apoſtates ſurely will fall under double vengeance.

3. Iſrael brings up the rear; laſt in judgment, not leaſt in puniſhment. The crimes of this people were peculiarly aggravated by their relation to God, and therefore are more particularly inſiſted upon.

(1.) Their perverſion of juſtice; before their corrupt judges, the bribe, not the truth, carried the cauſe, and the meaneſt gratifications influenced their deciſions, v. 6.

(2.) Their oppreſſion of the poor; the very pittance they poſſeſſed, their rulers, as greedy cormorants, panted after; or they wanted to drag them through the duſt, to gratify their pride and cruelty; and becauſe they were meek and patient, the more inſolently they trampled upon, or plundered them, which was a great aggravation of the wickedneſs.

(3.) Their abominable impurities, even inceſt itſelf, v. 7. for where the reins are once caſt upon the neck of lawleſs appetite, men are hurried into exceſſes that at firſt they would have ſtarted at with horror: and ſuch wickedneſs in God's profeſſing people, could not but greatly profane his holy name, and give abundant cauſe to the enemies of the Lord to blaſpheme.

4. Their impiety and idolatry. They lay themſelves down upon clothes laid to pledge by every altar, which, according to the law, ſhould have been reſtored before ſun-ſetting, Exod. xxii. 26. but they carried them into their idol-temples, and either ſlept there on them all night, in honour of their deities, or regaled themſelves there on the ſacrifices they had offered, whilſt the poor were pining in want and nakedneſs; and they drink the wine of the condemned in the houſe of their God, as if their idolatry could atone for their injuſtice, and the price of blood would be an acceptable offering. For ſuch tranſgreſſions, no marvel God threatens, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof, ver. 4.

9. ¶ Yet deſtroyed I [h] the Amorite before them, [i] whoſe height was like the height of the cedars, and he was ſtrong as the oaks, yet I [k] deſtroyed his fruit from above, and his roots from beneath. 10. Alſo [l] I brought you up from the land of Egypt, and led you forty years through the wilderneſs, to poſſeſs the land of the Amorite. 11. And I raiſed up of your ſons for prophets, and of your young men for [m] Nazarites. Is it not even thus, O ye children of Iſrael? ſaith the LORD. 12. But ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink, and commanded the prophets, [n] ſaying, Propheſy not. 13. Behold, † I [o] am preſſed under you, as a cart is preſſed that is full of ſheaves. 14. Therefore [p] the flight ſhall periſh from the ſwift, and [q] the ſtrong ſhall not ſtrengthen his force, neither ſhall the mighty deliver ‡ himſelf. 15. Neither ſhall he ſtand that handleth the bow, and he that is ſwift of foot ſhall not deliver himſelf, [r] neither ſhall he that rideth the horſe deliver himſelf. 16. And he that is ‖ courageous among the mighty ſhall flee away naked in that day, ſaith the LORD.

v. 9—16. The baſe ingratitude of Iſrael was among their blackeſt crimes.

1. God reminds them of what he had done for them. He had deſtroyed the Amorites before them, though ſo warlike and mighty a people, had cut them off root and branch, and given them their land for a poſſeſſion, v. 9. He had brought them marvellouſly from the iron bondage in Egypt, had led and fed them in the wilderneſs by continual miracles, v. 10. He had honoured them with peculiar marks of favour, raiſing up their ſons for prophets, from Moſes to that time, and their young men for Nazarites, as Samſon, Samuel, and others, whoſe holy abſtinence and ſelf-denial ſhould have taught them to imitate ſuch gracious examples. Is it not thus, O ye children of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord? The facts were notorious beyond contradiction. Note, (1.) Faithful miniſters are the greateſt bleſſings to a nation; and not to have profited by their labours, will one day bring a heavy reckoning. (2.) When in the heat of youth the power of divine grace is ſeen effectually reſtraining the corrupt appetite, and purifying the heart, ſuch examples are peculiarly ſtriking.

2. He upbraids them with what they had done againſt him. They gave the Nazarites wine to drink, enticing or threatning them into a compliance, and commanded the prophets, ſaying, Propheſy not; whilſt the people turned a deaf ear to them, the rulers and prieſts perſecuted, and endeavoured to ſilence them, chap. vii. 12, 13. Theſe, and the like abominations, were as a heavy burden which the Lord was weary to bear. I am preſſed under you, as a cart is preſſed that is full of ſheaves; though ſome read this as a threatning, I will preſs your place as a cart full of ſheaves preſſeth, intimating the diſtreſs which ſhould be brought upon them in the ſiege of Samaria. Note, (1.) The devil and his agents are very buſy to draw off the minds of young men from divine things, and they triumph if they can ſucceed in the debauch of a Nazarite. (2.) They who hate the truth, and exert their power to ſuppreſs it, ſhall ſhortly anſwer for it at their peril. (3.) Though God's patience bears long with ſinners, he will not bear always; the day of recompenſe will come, when he will eaſe him of his adverſaries, Iſa. i. 24.

3. Judgment is pronounced upon them for their ſins. He will load them with his wrath, who have burdened him with their iniquities. The Aſſyrian, the rod of his anger, ſhall come, and flight or reſiſtance will be alike in vain: the mighty ſhall fall, and the ſwift be overtaken by their ſwifter purſuers. The moſt courageous warriors ſhall flee naked, caſting away their armour, and conſulting only how they may eſcape; and this is confirmed by thus ſaith the Lord, whoſe denunciations ſhall have a ſure accompliſhment. Note, The ſinner in the day of God will find his caſe deſperate, unable to endure, or eſcape from the wrath he hath provoked.

CHAP. III.

The Iſraelites are warned, 1. Of the judgments of God denounced againſt them, that they might be hereby awakened out of their ſecurity, ver. 1—8. 2. Of the ſins that were found among them, for which God was provoked thus to threaten, thus to puniſh, that they might juſtify God in his controverſy with them, and unleſs they repented and reformed, might expect no other but that God ſhould proceed in his controverſy, ver. 9—15.

1. HEAR this word that the LORD hath ſpoken againſt you, O children of Iſrael, againſt the whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt, ſaying, 2. [a] You only have I known of all the families of the earth: [b] therefore I will puniſh you for all your iniquities. 3. Can two walk together, except they be agreed? 4. Will a lion rore in the foreſt, when he hath no prey? will a young lion † cry out of his den, if he have taken nothing? 5. Can a bird fall in a ſnare upon the earth where no gin is for him? ſhall one take up a ſnare from the earth, and have taken nothing at all? 6. ſhall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people ‡ not be afraid? [c] ſhall there be evil in a city, and the LORD hath not done it? 7. Surely the Lord GOD will do nothing, but [d] he revealeth his ſecret unto his ſervants the prophets. 8. [e] The lion hath rored, who will not fear? the Lord GOD hath ſpoken, [f] who can but propheſy?

v. 1—8. The prophet ſolemnly awakens the attention of this ſtupid people, and calls on them to hear and tremble at the word which the Lord hath ſpoken againſt them.

1. Their ingratitude will provoke him to puniſh them. Of all families of the earth, they had been diſtinguiſhed by his peculiar favour; though ſo few when they went into Egypt, yet he had multiplied them exceedingly, and brought them up from thence with a high hand; and therefore their rebellion againſt him was the more criminal, and would bring a heavier judgment on their heads. Note, None periſh under deeper guilt, than thoſe who have abuſed diſtinguiſhing means and mercies.

2. In their ſtate of apoſtacy, no communion can ſubſiſt between him and them. Can two walk together, except they be agreed? There muſt be reconciliation before there could be any renewed fellowſhip; and as they obſtinately rejected every call to repent, the enmity muſt ſubſiſt, and their ruin be the conſequence. Note, God is ready to be reconciled to ſinners, but if they reject his mercy, they may expect his wrath.

3. The judgments God threatned were not pretended, but real; nor ſhould they be removed from them till they were effectually humbled by them. Will the lion rore in the foreſt when he hath no prey? &c. No: they only rore in ſight of their prey, or when they have ſeized it. Can a bird fall in a ſnare upon the earth where no gin is for him? No: God had really ſpread the ſnare of affliction for them, nor would take it up fruitleſs, they would aſſuredly be ſnared and taken; nor would the viſitation be removed, till the end for which it was ſent ſhould be anſwered, v. 5. Note, (1.) The terrors of the Lord are not phantoms raiſed to frighten the weak, the ignorant, or ſuperſtitious, but awful realities that muſt ſhortly come to paſs. (2.) The ſinner's tranſgreſſion will aſſuredly bring him into the ſnare of guilt and miſery, and nothing but God's rich grace, bringing him to real repentance, can deliver him out of it.

4. The warnings they received ought juſtly to alarm them, and in the ſufferings they were about to feel, God's hand would viſibly appear. Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people not be afraid? of the approaching foe, or run together, to conſider how to avert the ſtorm. Thus God, by his prophets, had ſpread the alarm, and it was at their peril if they diſregarded them. Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it? No: all affliction comes from him, and without him not a hair of our head falls. Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his ſecret unto his ſervants the prophets, that before he ſtrikes, they may give fair warning to the guilty, and exhort them by a ſpeedy humiliation to avert the impending wrath. The lion hath rored, who will not fear? The Lord hath denounced his vengeance againſt the impenitent, and abundant cauſe there is they ſhould tremble before him. The Lord hath ſpoken, who can but prophecy? Who, that hath the glory of God and the good of men's ſouls at heart, can refrain from ſpeaking, when God ſtirs up his mind with holy zeal, and ſhews him the dreadful danger about which ſinners appear ſo fearfully unconcerned. Note, (1.) In all our trials and troubles, God's hand is to be acknowledged: it muſt ſilence every murmur, when we know he hath done it. (2.) God is very gracious; he never ſtrikes, till having warned in vain the ſinner proves incorrigible. (3.) Neceſſity is laid upon thoſe, whoſe ſpirit God inwardly moves with affecting views of the miſeries of a world that lieth in wickedneſs, to labour, if poſſible, to pluck theſe brands from the burning.

9. ¶ Publiſh in the palaces at Aſhdod, and in the palaces in the land of Egypt, and ſay, Aſſemble yourſelves upon the mountains of Samaria: and behold the great tumults in the midſt thereof, and the † oppreſſed in the midſt thereof. 10. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [h] An adverſary there ſhall be even round about the land; and he ſhall bring down thy ſtrength from thee, and thy palaces ſhall be ſpoiled. 12. v. 9—15. The neighbouring nations, the princes of Philiſtia and Egypt, are ſummoned to hear the trial of Iſrael, that they may bear witneſs to the righteouſneſs of the Lord, and in their puniſhments be themſelves admoniſhed, v. 9. We have,

1. The crimes of which Iſrael is found guilty. (1.) Behold the great tumults in the midſt thereof, the outrages committed in lawleſs riot, and paſſed off with impunity. (2.) Behold the oppreſſed in the midſt thereof: injuſtice, oppreſſion, rapine, and violence fill every ſtreet, and the injured groan without redreſs, for they know not to do right; they had no deſire to do it, or by ſo long a courſe of wickedneſs their very judgment was perverted, and their reaſon blinded: they ſtore up violence and robbery in their palaces, thus heaping up wrath againſt the day of wrath. Note, Sin is of that bewitching nature, that by long practice it gains, as it were, a ſanction in the mind, and the conſcience utterly defiled yields conſent and approbation.

2. The ſentence pronounced upon Iſrael is terrible. An adverſary, the Aſſyrian king, ſhall be raiſed up, that ſhall demoliſh their fortreſſes, and plunder their palaces of their ill gotten wealth, v. 11. The inhabitants ſhall be maſſacred and devoured as a helpleſs ſheep in a lion's mouth; a wretched remnant only ſhall eſcape, like the two legs, or piece of an ear, which the ſhepherd reſcues from his conſuming jaws: a few out of Samaria, in the corner of a bed, ſo poor that they have only part of a bed to lie on, or who ran thither to hide themſelves; and in Damaſcus in a couch, a mere handful, who fled thither when Samaria was taken; or when this city fell likewiſe, ſome few of them narrowly eſcaped, v. 12. This ſentence God's prophets and prieſts are called upon faithfully to deliver to the houſe of Jacob, ver. 13. and to aſſure them the day will come, when he will viſit their tranſgreſſions with deſerved vengeance; when their idolatrous altars at Beth-el ſhould fall, and the horns of them be cut off, nor afford the leaſt refuge to thoſe who fled thither, their idol confidences utterly failing them. Their houſes filled with oppreſſion ſhall alſo be laid in the duſt; their winter and ſummer-houſes, many of them curiouſly adorned with ivory, and the ſtructure ſuperb and magnificent, ſhall be plundered and demoliſhed by the invading foe. Note, (1.) Great houſes afford no protection againſt God's judgments, rather when built by unrighteouſneſs, maintained by oppreſſion, or abuſed by pride and luxury, they provoke them more ſpeedily and fearfully. (2.) They who make any creature their idol, will ſooner or later be convinced of the folly and miſery of their dependance thereon.

1. The oppreſſors are convicted, and their puniſhment read. Like kine of Baſhan they were ſtrong, wanton, unruly, breaking down the fence of juſtice, and treading the weak under their feet; they fattened on the mountains of Samaria, oppreſſing the poor, and cruſhing the needy, by an enormous load of taxes, or the perverſion of juſtice; or with a hard hand extorting ſuch rents from their indigent tenants, as left them ſcarce a ſufficiency to live; which ſay to their maſters, Bring, and let us drink; which may be the words of the magiſtrates encouraging the maſters of the poor to find ſome accuſation againſt them, and for an entertainment they would decide the cauſe in their favour; or of one oppreſſive lord to another, willing to feaſt with him on the ſpoils of oppreſſion. But God will not ſuffer ſuch deeds to paſs with impunity; He hath ſworn by his holineſs, and irrevocable is the decree: they ſhall be taken and deſtroyed as eaſily and irreſiſtably as the fiſh which is caught by the hook; and they and their poſterity who ſhould ſurvive the ſlaughter made by the Aſſyrians, ſhall be ſold for captives, and carried, as fiſh out of their element, into a ſtrange land. Their city walls being beat down by a beſieging army, at the breaches ſome would attempt to eſcape, whilſt others caſt themſelves into the palace or citadel, or lodged their ſubſtance there, but in vain; the fugitives will be purſued, and the high fortreſs laid low, even to the duſt. Note, (1.) God will one day appear the patron of the injured, and avenge their wrongs. (2.) The fruits of oppreſſion are often made the food of intemperance, and thus doubly aggravate the ſinner's guilt. (3.) What is got by wickedneſs often periſhes ſtrangely, and every obſerver may ſee the finger of God in the viſitation.

2. The idolaters are abandoned to their own devices, and a heavier curſe cannot be laid upon them. Ironically ſpeaking, God bids them go on to multiply their tranſgreſſions at Beth-el and Gilgal, to bring their daily ſacrifices, and offer their tythes at their idol-temples and altars, inſtead of the ſanctuary at Jeruſalem: and mimicking the worſhip of his temple, he ſaith, offer your ſacrifice of thankſgiving with leaven to your idols, Lev. vii. 13. and out of oſtentation of piety, or inviting others to the feaſt, publiſh and proclaim the free offerings, for this liketh you, O ye children of Iſrael. They took a pleaſure and pride in theſe idolatrous ſervices: juſtly therefore doth God give them up to their own inventions, to fill up the meaſure of their iniquities.

6. ¶ And I alſo have given you cleanneſs of teeth in all your cities, and want of bread in all your places; [i] yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the LORD. 7. And alſo I have withholden the rain from you, when there were yet three months to the harveſt, and I cauſed it to rain upon one city, and cauſed it not to rain upon another city: one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not, withered. 8. So two or three cities wandred unto one city to drink water; but they were not ſatisfied; yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the LORD. 9. [k] I have ſmitten you with blaſting and mildew; † when your gardens, and your vineyards, and your fig-trees, and your olive-trees increaſed, [l] the palmer-worm devoured them: yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the LORD. 10. I have ſent among you the peſtilence ‡ after the manner of Egypt: your young men have I ſlain with the ſword, ‖ and have taken away your horſes, and I have made the ſtink of your camps to come up unto your noſtrils: yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the LORD. 11. I have overthrown ſome of you, as[m] God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and[n] ye were as a firebrand plucked out of the burning: [o] yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the LORD. 12. Therefore[p] thus will I do unto thee, O Iſrael: and becauſe I will do this unto thee, [q] prepare to meet thy God, O Iſrael. 13. For lo, he that formeth

v. 6—13. The incorrigibleneſs of this people left them wholly inexcuſable in their ſins. God had tried repeatedly by his viſitations to bend their ſtubborn hearts, ready to receive them if they humbled their ſouls; waiting with long patience, and loth to abandon them to ruin, but neither mercies nor judgments had any effect: five times he complains, yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the Lord. We have here,

1. An account of the methods God had taken, by leſſer judgments, to bring them to repentance.

[1.] He had viſited them with famine in all their cities, 2 Kings viii. 1. I have given you cleanneſs of teeth, there being no proviſion left, not even bread to chew, and ſatisfy the cravings of hunger: yet this was ineffectual, they repented not.

[2.] He ſent a drought upon the land, and with-held the rain when there were yet three months to the harveſt, the time when it uſually fell, and without it the corn was ſcorched up and withered away; but that they might obſerve, that this was not a thing merely accidental, or owing to any influence of ſecondary cauſes, but by Divine direction, as a judgment upon them, he cauſed it to rain on one city, and not on another, and gave the clouds their commiſſion to water one piece, or inheritance, whilſt the eſtate which lay contiguous, was ſcorched up with heat and drought: and probably this diſtinction was obſervable, the idolaters being puniſhed, and the few faithful miraculouſly ſpared. In this diſtreſs, two or three cities wandered unto one city to drink water, but they were not ſatisfied, there being none, or but little to ſpare from their own wants; and even this produced no change.

[3.] Blaſting and mildew next deſtroyed their corn and wine, and the palmer-worm devoured all their trees and herbage; yet they perſiſted in impenitence, and turned not to him that ſmote them.

[4.] The peſtilence ſucceeded. They fell by a ſudden ſtroke, like the firſt-born of Egypt, and God ſlew their armies with the ſword of an enemy; or in the way of Egypt, as they went thither for food, ſome fell by the peſtilence; and others, who went in companies, were intercepted and ſlain by their enemies, and their corpſes left unburied, filling the air with noiſome effluvia: yet notwithſtanding, the ſurvivors repented not.

[5.] By fire from heaven God overthrew ſome of them like Sodom and Gomorrah, as monuments of vengeance, and a warning to the reſt who were ſpared, as brands plucked out of the burning, yet all their judgments left them as they found them, hardened in ſin; and till God is pleaſed to beſtow his effectual grace, all outward means and methods to bend the ſinner's heart will be fruitleſs.

2. Since all hath proved hitherto ineffectual, by the divinely appointed Meſſiah God will nevertheleſs bring ſalvation unto them, and cauſe his grace to triumph over their guilt and corruption. Therefore thus will I do unto thee, or nevertheleſs, notwithſtanding all theſe provocations; or becauſe nothing elſe can overcome them, I will do as I have promiſed, ſending the divine Meſſiah, who ſhall turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob: and becauſe I will do this unto thee, let ſuch an act of aſtoniſhing mercy and grace at laſt bend thy ſtubborn neck, and prepare to meet thy God, O Iſrael; to receive him with readineſs, ſubmiſſion, and delight, who comes with tidings of ſalvation. For lo, he that formeth the mountains, the great Creator of all, and who can make every mountain of difficulty a plain before his people; and createth the wind, holding theſe turbulent ſervants under his command; and declareth unto man what is his thought, being the ſearcher of hearts, and revealing unto men, by his prophets, his own purpoſes concerning them, which are thoughts of peace, and not of evil; that maketh the morning darkneſs, changing proſperity into adverſity, or the darkneſs morning, cauſing Chriſt, the day-ſtar, to ariſe; and treadeth upon the high places of the earth, exalted above all, and treading down the proudeſt of his foes; the Lord, Jehovah, the God of hoſts is his name, to whom all muſt bow, and humble their ſouls at his feet.

The words are generally underſtood in a quite different ſenſe, as a threatning of more terrible judgment, ſince the former viſitations were ineffectual. They muſt now prepare to meet an offended God, coming forth to execute vengeance; and how would they be able to ſtand when he appeared, whoſe power was irreſiſtible as his wrath was intolerable. It is our wiſdom to prepare to meet God as our God, by faith, penitence, and prayer, before we are ſummoned to appear at his bar in an hour of death, or at the day of judgment.

CHAP. V.

The ſcope of this chapter is to proſecute the exhortation given to Iſrael in the cloſe of the foregoing, to prepare to meet his God; he here tells them, 1. What preparation they muſt make, they muſt ſeek to the Lord, and not to their idols, ver. 4—8. they muſt ſeek the good and love it, ver. 14, 15. 2. Why they muſt make this preparation. (1.) Becauſe of the preſent deplorable condition they were in, ver. 1—3. (2.) Becauſe it was ſin that brought them into this condition, ver. 7, 10, 11, 12. (3.) Becauſe this would be their happineſs, and God would be found of them, ver. 8, 9, 14. (4.) Becauſe without it he would bring utter ruin upon them, ver. 5, 6, 13, 16, 17. And (5.) All their confidences would fail them. [1.] Their profane contempt and defiance of God's judgments would not ſecure them, ver. 8—20. [2.] Their external ſervices would not avail to turn away the wrath of God, ver. 21—24. [3.] Their long poſſeſſion of church-privileges, and courſe of holy duties, would not be their protection, while they kept up their idolatrous cuſtoms, ver. 25—27. They have therefore no way left to ſave themſelves, but by repentance and reformation.

Before Christ 787.

1. HEAR ye this word which I take up againſt you, [a] even a lamentation, O houſe of Iſrael. 2. The virgin of Iſrael is fallen, ſhe ſhall no more riſe: [b] ſhe is forſaken upon her land, there is none to raiſe her up. 3. For thus ſaith the Lord GOD, The city that went out by a thouſand, ſhall leave an hundred, and that which went forth by an hundred, ſhall leave ten to the houſe of Iſrael.

a Ezek. xix. 14.
b 2 Kings xvii. 6.

v. 1—3. The prophet cannot but be himſelf affected with the miſeries he foreſees coming upon the people, whilſt therefore he demands of them attention to the doleful tidings, he laments in elegaic ſtrains of woe the virgin of Iſrael fallen, as if ſhe was already a dead corpſe, ſince God had pronounced her doom.

1. Her ruin is irrecoverable. She is not only fallen, but fallen to riſe no more, having never been a kingdom ſince the ten tribes were carried captive by Salmaneſer. She is forſaken upon her land, both of God, her allies, and her own people; there is none to raiſe her up, either able or willing to help her, for thoſe whom God will deſtroy, none can ſave.

2. The inhabitants ſhall be diminiſhed, and brought very low. Before the final vengeance overtook them, a variety of calamities had reduced their numbers, ſo that the city which could formerly muſter a thouſand men, could on that invaſion raiſe but an hundred; and the village that had an hundred inhabitants was reduced to ten: or theſe numbers only remained after the campaign, but one in ten eſcaping the ravages of war.

4. ¶ For thus ſaith the LORD unto the houſe of Iſrael, [c] Seek ye me, and ye ſhall live. 5. But ſeek not [d] Beth-el, nor enter into Gilgal, and paſs not to [e] Beer-ſheba: for Gilgal ſhall ſurely go into captivity, and [f] Beth-el ſhall come to nought. 6. Seek the LORD, and ye ſhall live, leſt he break out like fire in the houſe of Joſeph and devour it, and there be none to quench it in Beth-el. 7. Ye [g] who turn judgment to wormwood, and leave off righteouſneſs in the earth, 8. Seek him that maketh [h] the ſeven ſtars and Orion, and turneth the ſhadow of death into the morning, and maketh the day dark with night: [i] that calleth for the waters of the ſea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth, [k] the LORD is his name: 9. That ſtrengtheneth the † ſpoiled againſt the ſtrong; ſo that the ſpoiled ſhall come againſt the fortreſs. 10. [l] They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and they abhor him that ſpeaketh uprightly. 11. Foraſmuch therefore as your treading is upon the poor, and ye take from him burdens of wheat; [m] ye have built houſes of hewn ſtone, but ye ſhall not dwell in them: ye have planted ‡ pleaſant vineyards, but ye ſhall not drink wine of them. 12. For I know your manifold tranſgreſſions, and your mighty ſins: they afflict the juſt, they take a bribe, and [n] they turn aſide the poor in the gate from their right. 13. Therefore the prudent [o] ſhall keep ſilence in that time, for it is an evil time. 14. [p] Seek good and not evil, that ye may live: and ſo the LORD the God of hoſts ſhall be with you, as ye have ſpoken. 15. Hate the evil, and love the good, and eſtabliſh judgment in the gate: [q] it may be that the LORD God of hoſts will be gracious unto the remnant of Joſeph.

v. 4—15. The bleſſings of obedience, and the miſeries of ſin, are topics we ſhould often dwell upon, that we may chuſe the one and avoid the other.

1. The ſins of Iſrael are brought to their remembrance, that they might repent and amend the evil of their ways. In general, v. 12. God charges them with manifold tranſgreſſions and mighty ſins, he knew them, however ſecretly committed, and

now produces them for their conviction. Note, The ſinner that is brought to a true knowledge of his ſtate, ſtands amazed at the multitude of his tranſgreſſions, by thought, word, and deed committed againſt the divine Majeſty, and is ſhocked at the flagrant enormities that cry for vengeance againſt him.

[1.] They were idolaters, flying to Beth-el and Gilgal, where their idols were, inſtead of having recourſe to God at his temple.

[2.] They practiſed the moſt flagrant injuſtice; ye turn judgment to wormwood, acting in direct oppoſition thereto, and leave off righteouſneſs in the earth, having not the leaſt regard for it, but trampling it under foot.

[3.] They were oppreſſors of the poor, not only plundering them of burdens of wheat, their very gleaning, or the fruit gotten by hard labour, but alſo trod them under foot, v. 11. Imperious, inſolent, and cruel to them, they afflicted the juſt, perhaps hated them, becauſe they were ſo, and took every opportunity to harraſs and torment them. They take a bribe, and they turn aſide the poor in the gate from their right, be the right of the cauſe never ſo clear, the bribe carries it againſt law and equity; and they who cannot fee them, may not expect redreſs of the moſt flagrant injuries.

[4.] They were malicious perſecutors of God's faithful miniſters and people. They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, the miniſters and prophets, who openly preached againſt their iniquities, and they abhor him that ſpeaketh uprightly; the converſation, yea, the very perſon of ſuch is their abhorrence, as they are a conſtant and living reproof to their iniquities. And in thoſe evil days, when the enmity of the wicked is ſo avowed, the prudent ſhall keep ſilence at that time, ver. 13. When a man will be made an offender for a word, it is as dangerous to complain, as fruitleſs to reprove. Note, Good men are often driven to unwilling ſilence, though it is a pain and grief to them.

2. Their puniſhment is foretold, except they repent. The head quarters of their idolatry, Beth-el and Gilgal, ſhall come to nought, and the inhabitants go into captivity, v. 5. A fire ſhall devour the houſe of Joſeph, it ſhall conſume the whole nation, and none of their idols at Beth-el ſhall be able to quench it, v. 6. ſo little protection can any creature afford us in the day of wrath. Though by the fruits of oppreſſion they reared magnificent abodes for themſelves, they ſhall not be ſuffered to dwell in them, nor eat the fruits of the pleaſant vineyards they had planted, v. 11. by death cut off, or by captivity removed far away. Note, What is not honeſtly got, is not likely to be long enjoyed.

3. To prevent this threatned vengeance, they are exhorted ſpeedily to ſeek the Lord for pardon and grace, in order that their hearts and lives may be reformed and changed. Seek ye me, ſaith the Lord, my mercy and favour, and return to my worſhip and ſervice, and ye ſhall live; notwithſtanding all that is paſt, their guilt ſhall be forgiven, and their forfeited lives reſtored; they ſhall be ſuffered ſtill to dwell in their own land, and what is far better, as partakers of God's grace ſhall live ſpiritually his people on earth, and eternally with him in heaven. But they muſt renounce their idolatries at Beth-el and Gilgal, for whilſt theſe remained, no mercy could be hoped for: and what wretched vanities were theſe, compared with him, whom they were exhorted to ſeek, and to whoſe favour they were invited; he maketh the ſeven ſtars, called the Pleiades, and Orion, another conſtellation, with all the heavenly hoſts, and turneth the ſhadow of death into the morning, and maketh the day dark with night, directing the conſtant revolutions of day and night; or as he pleaſes, able to turn the deepeſt night of diſtreſs into the day of exultation and joy; or the meridian brightneſs of proſperity into the darkneſs of moſt abject wretchedneſs; that calleth for the waters of the ſea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth, as in the deluge, to puniſh an ungodly world; or by exhalations from the great abyſs of waters, repleniſhes the clouds, that drop down the rain to water the earth; the Lord is his name, Jehovah, the ſelf-ſufficient, all-ſufficient God. That ſtrengthneth the ſpoiled againſt the ſtrong, enabling them to ſtand againſt their oppreſſors; yea, though vanquiſhed before, raiſing them above their conquerors, ſo that the ſpoiled ſhall come againſt the fortreſs, beſiege and take it. However deſperate therefore their national affairs might appear, if God became their friend, they might be eaſily retrieved: if then they would be delivered from danger, they muſt return to God, and the paths of duty. Seek good and not evil, putting away all your abominations, and deſiring henceforward to know God's holy will, and walk in all his holy ways; that ye may live, as God had promiſed, v. 4. and ſo the Lord the God of hoſts ſhall be with you, as ye have ſpoken, as once they boaſted he was, or as now they prayed he might be, and his gracious preſence is better than life itſelf. Hate the evil, not only becauſe it is ſo fatal to your ſouls, but becauſe it is ſo offenſive and odious to the holy God; and love the good, God himſelf, his people, his ways, his worſhip, delighting in the Lord, and in every good word and work which may advance his glory: and, particularly, what they had hitherto ſo neglected, eſtabliſh judgment in the gate, that juſtice may be adminiſtred to all impartially, freely, ſpeedily; it may be that the Lord will be gracious unto the remnant of Joſeph; though reduced to a few, this conduct would be the means of reſtoring their proſperity; at leaſt the remnant of the truly faithful ſouls ſhould find favour and grace in the eyes of the Lord. Note, The way of duty is the path of ſafety, and God hath never yet failed thoſe who ſeek him.

Before Chriſt 787.

16. Therefore the LORD the God of hoſts, the Lord ſaith thus, Wailing ſhall be in all ſtreets, and they ſhall ſay in all the high-ways, Alas, alas: and they ſhall call the huſbandman to mourning, and [r] ſuch as are ſkilful of lamentation, to wailing. 17. And in all vineyards ſhall be wailing: for [s] I will paſs through thee, ſaith the LORD. 18. [t] Wo unto you that deſire the day of the LORD: to what end is it for you? the day of the LORD is darkneſs, and not light. 19. [u] As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him; or went into the houſe, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a ſerpent bit him. 20. Shall not the day of the LORD be darkneſs, and not light? even very dark, and no brightneſs in it?

v. 16—20. This clauſe is connected not with the words immediately preceding, but with the foregoing part of the chapter, and declares what would be the caſe, if neither judgments, mercies, nor exhortations wrought upon them.

1. Such calamities were coming upon them, as would raiſe a bitter and univerſal mourning. Their ſtreets ſhould echo with wailing, and their highways reſound with lamentations; even the huſbandman and the vine-dreſſer ſhall leave their employments, to join the general cry, Alas! alas! Whilſt thoſe, whoſe profeſſion it had been to awaken the ſorrows of others, ſhall now with no fictitious notes of woe pour forth their anguiſh, and raiſe the melancholy ſound, for I will paſs through thee, ſaith the Lord, with ſuch fearful vengeance and deſolations, as when of old the deſtroying angel paſſed through the land of Egypt.

2. The ſcoffers are particularly and ſeverely rebuked. Many of the profane and ungodly mocked at the warnings given, and with daring inſolence and hardened infidelity bid the day come, as if they neither believed nor feared it. Therefore wo unto you that deſire the day of the Lord, it would come faſter than they were aware; to what end is it for you? it would make them wiſh a thouſand times their impious ſpeeches unſaid, for the day of the Lord is darkneſs, and not light, a terrible day for them. And it is repeated, v. 20. to affect them with a ſenſe of their danger, even very dark, and no brightneſs in it, when the hopes with which theſe ſinners, and all who are like them, flattered themſelves, ſhall be loſt in black unfathomable deſpair. No door of eſcape ſhall then be open, it ſhall be as if a man fled from a lion, and a bear met him, ſuch a multitude of dire calamities ſhould ſurround them; or went into a houſe, and leaned on the wall, and a ſerpent bit him, for no place in a day of wrath can afford the impenitent ſinner ſhelter or ſupport. Perhaps ſome wiſhed for theſe troubleſome times that were threatned, hoping to make their own advantage of them; but, to their coſt, they would find themſelves dreadfully involved in the common calamity.

21. ¶ [x] I hate, I deſpiſe your feaſt-days, and [y] I will not † ſmell in your ſolemn aſſemblies. 22. [a] Have ye offered unto me ſacrifices and offerings in the wilderneſs forty years, O houſe of Iſrael? 26. But ye have born § the tabernacle of [b] your Moloch and Chiun your images, the ſtar of your god, which ye made to yourſelves. 27. v. 21—27. Amidſt abounding ungodlineſs, they flattered themſelves the form of godlineſs they obſerved would preſerve them from ruin, but they are wofully miſtaken.

1. Their ſacrifices and ſervices, ſo far from being pleaſing to God, were his abomination, and their ſacred ſongs grated harſh diſcord in his ears. Not only they were performed contrary to his inſtitution, at Beth-el inſtead of Jeruſalem, but alſo their allowed iniquity and barefaced hypocriſy made them doubly diſpleaſing and loathſome in his ſight. Note, (1.) Formality and hypocriſy are more odious to God than open profaneneſs; theſe ſhall receive greater damnation. (2.) Many flatter themſelves their duties and devotions will carry them to heaven, when their pride and vain confidence in theſe things only the more certainly lead them down to hell.

Before Chriſt 787.

2. What God required of them was righteouſneſs and judgment, without which no ſacrifices could avail. Let judgment run down as waters, freely, copiouſly, without interruption; and righteouſneſs as a mighty ſtream, bearing down before it ungodlineſs and wrong.

3. To idols, not to God, had their ſacrifices been offered. Have ye offered unto me ſacrifices and offerings in the wilderneſs forty years? No. The greateſt part of the time none were offered; and, of the few ſacrifices they did bring, the golden calf had a chief ſhare: ſo ſoon idolatry began, and had continued ever ſince among them. Ye have born the tabernacle of Moloch, little ſhrines, or ſmall images of this hated idol, probably the ſun, in honour of whom they burnt their children in the fire; and Chiun, the ſame as Remphan, Acts vii. 43. probably the planet Saturn, your images; the ſtar of your god, which ye made to yourſelves; the worſhip of the heavenly hoſt being the moſt ancient idolatry, which they ſeem to have adopted, worſhipping and ſerving the creature inſtead of the Creator.

4. For theſe things they are doomed to an ignominious captivity. Therefore I will cauſe you to go into captivity beyond Damaſcus, into a more diſtant and ſtrange land, even beyond Babylon, as Stephen quotes it, Acts vii. 43. as far as Halah and Habor, cities of the Medes; and the infallible certainty of the prediction is confirmed by thus ſaith the Lord, whoſe name is the God of hoſts, almighty to execute, and true to accompliſh, the threatnings of his word.

CHAP. VI.

In this chapter we have, 1. A ſinful people ſtudying to put a ſlight upon God's threatnings, and to make them appear trivial; confiding in their privileges and preeminences above other nations, ver. 2, 3. and their power, ver. 13. and wholly addicted to their pleaſures, ver. 3—6. 2. A ſerious prophet ſtudying to put a weight upon God's threatnings, and to make them appear terrible, by ſetting forth the ſeverity of thoſe judgments that were coming upon theſe ſenſualiſts, ver. 7. God's abhorring them, and abandoning them and theirs to death, ver. 8—11. and bringing utter deſolation upon them, ver. 12—14.

1. [a] WO to them that are † at eaſe in Zion, and truſt in the mountain of Samaria, which are named [b] chief of the nations to whom the houſe of Iſrael came. 2. [c] Paſs ye unto [d] Calneh, and ſee; and from thence go ye to Hemath the great: then go down to [e] Gath of the Philiſtines: be they better than theſe kingdoms? or their border greater than your border? 3. Ye [f] that put far away [g] the evil day, and cauſe [h] the ſeat of violence to come near; 4. That lie upon beds of ivory, and ‡ ſtretch themſelves upon their couches, and eat the lambs out of the flocks and the calves out of the midſt of the ſtall; 5. [i] That § chant to the ſound of the viol, and invent to themſelves inſtruments of muſic, [k] like David; 6. That drink wine in bowls, and anoint themſelves with the chief ointments: but [l] they are not grieved for [m] the ‖ affliction of Joſeph. 7. ¶ Therefore now ſhall they go captive with the firſt that go captive, and the banquet of them that ſtretched themſelves ſhall be removed.

v. 1—7. When ſinners are moſt ſecure, and at eaſe, then will the terrible woes of God ſuddenly ſurprize them. We have here,

1. A deſcription of their pride, ſecurity, and ſenſuality.

[1.] They were puffed up with confidence on their wealth and fortreſſes, and conceited they would be their defence from the judgments threatned. They are at eaſe in Zion, wallowing in affluence; and truſt in the mountain of Samaria, the city by art and nature being ſtrongly fortified; which are named the chief of the nations, the principal perſons of Judah and Iſrael, who dwelt in Zion and Samaria; to whom the houſe of Iſrael came, for judgment; or theſe cities were the capitals of the two nations, and thither the people reſorted. Yet, illuſtrious and great as Zion and Samaria were, they need not look far to find other places as diſtinguiſhed in the annals of fame, but now reduced to ruins, ſuch as Calneh, Gen. x. 10. Hemath and Gath, 2 Kings xii. 17. chief cities of kingdoms greater than Iſrael and Judah, and their territories more extenſive, v. 2. and if they fell from their towering height of pride, let not Zion and Samaria be ſecure. Note, (1.) Greatneſs is too apt to beget pride. (2.) Other's falls ſhould be our warning.

[2.] They promiſed themſelves impunity in their iniquities. Ye that put far away the evil day, keeping it out of their thoughts, leſt it ſhould damp their joys; or flattering themſelves with long years of indulgence, unaffected with judgments which appeared ſo diſtant, or perhaps never would come; and cauſe the ſeat of violence to come near, acting with injuſtice and oppreſſion, on the preſumption of not being called to account for their tranſgreſſions. Thus the hope of impunity emboldens ſinners to commit iniquity.

[3.] They ſunk into ſenſuality, and abuſed their abundance to miniſter to their indolence, luxury, and carnal delights. They lie upon beds of ivory, &c. not that any of theſe things in themſelves are evil, or, temperately uſed, are forbidden; the ſin was placing their affections on theſe things, abuſing them to intemperance, ſquandering their time and wealth, which ſhould be otherwiſe employed, and racking their inventions for new amuſements; a conduct peculiarly unſeaſonable when the miſeries of the land called for mourning and humiliation; but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joſeph; either for the breaches the nation had ſuſtained, or the greater evils threatned; or they did not ſympathize with thoſe of their brethren who were in trouble; too intent upon their own pleaſures to care about others pains. Note, (1.) They who live in a round of diſſipation and amuſements are as effectually alienated from God as if they were ſunk in groſſer exceſſes. (2.) When pleaſure is made the grand purſuit and happineſs, every thought and object are ſhunned which would intrude ſerious reflection.

2. For theſe things God denounces a woe againſt them, v. 1. Therefore now ſhall they go captive with the firſt that go captive, and the banquet of them that ſtretched themſelves ſhall be removed: they ſhall experience an awful change. The chief in ſin ſhall be the firſt in ſuffering; their palaces ſhall be turned into houſes of bondage, their indolence into hard ſervitude, their bowls of wine and fatted calves ſhall be exchanged for bread and water; from beds of ivory they ſhall be reduced to lye on the cold earth, and their muſic ſhall be loſt in groans.

8. [n] The Lord GOD hath ſworn by himſelf, ſaith the LORD, the God of hoſts, I abhor the excellency of Jacob, and hate his palaces: therefore will I deliver up the city, with † all that is therein. 9. And it ſhall come to paſs, that [o] if there remain ten in one houſe, that they ſhall die. 10. And a man's uncle ſhall take him up, and he [p] that burneth him, to bring out the bones out of the houſe, and ſhall ſay unto him that is by the ſides of the houſe, Is there yet any with thee? and he ſhall ſay, No: then ſhall he ſay, [q] Hold thy tongue; [r] for ‡ we may not make mention of the name of the LORD. 11. For behold, the LORD commandeth, and he will ſmite the great houſe with § breaches, and the little houſe with clefts. 12. ¶ Shall horſes run upon the rock? will one plow there with oxen? for [s] ye have turned judgment into gall, and the fruit of righteouſneſs into hemlock. 13. Ye which rejoice in a thing of nought, which ſay, [t] Have we not taken to us horns by our own ſtrength? 14. But behold, [u] I will raiſe up againſt you a nation, O houſe of Iſrael, ſaith the LORD, the God of hoſts, and they ſhall afflict you from the entering in of Hemath, unto the ‖ river of the wilderneſs.

v. 8—14. As the ſins of Iſrael cried for vengeance, we here find it bound upon them by the tremendous oath of God that cannot lie. And wo unto the ſinner concerning whom he ſhall thus ſwear in wrath to pour forth upon him the fierceneſs of his indignation.

1. He declares his abhorrence of them, and his determined purpoſe to deliver them into the hands of their enemies. Their excellency, their cities, fortreſſes, and treaſures, on which they prided themſelves, and their palaces, built by unrighteouſneſs, are hateful, and under a curſe, doomed to be the prey of an invading foe, when their capital, with all therein, ſhould be beſieged and taken. Note, They who are the objects of God's hatred are miſerable indeed!

2. The peſtilence or famine ſhall devour thoſe that the ſword hath ſpared. If ten men eſcape in one houſe, they ſhall all die, and a man's neareſt relation be obliged to do the laſt offices to the dead corpſe, the mortality being ſo univerſal. And when he that burneth goes round to bring out the bones of the dead, to ſuch ſkeletons were they probably reduced who died by famine, and ſhall aſk of the laſt ſurvivor that is in the houſe, Is there yet any with thee? he ſhall ſay, No. Then he without ſhall reply, Hold thy tongue, for we may not make mention of the name of the Lord. Either this is the language of their impenitence, diſcouraging all humbling applications to God; or of their deſpair, as if their caſe was hopeleſs, and it was in vain to pray; or of their repentance, forbidding the ſurvivor to murmur, ſince all their ſufferings were no more than their ſins had juſtly provoked.

3. Their houſes ſhall be deſtroyed. He will ſmite the great houſe with breaches, and the little houſe with clefts; neither rich nor poor ſhall eſcape: ſince both are involved in guilt, he commands execution to paſs on them alike; for he is no reſpecter of perſons.

4. All methods that could be taken for their good would be utterly fruitleſs, as if one ſhould attempt to plow and harrow a rock; rock; ſo hardened and impenetrable were their hearts, v. 12. The paſt labours of the prophets had been ineffectual, and their future ones promiſed no better ſucceſs; for they perſiſted in their wicked ways, ye have turned judgment into gall, and the fruit of righteouſneſs into hemlock: inſtead of rendering juſtice to the injured, they but aggravated their oppreſſion by their unrighteous deciſions, under the formalities of law. Ye which rejoice in a thing of nought, in their idols, their wealth, their power, which, againſt God's judgments, would afford no more protection than a ſtraw againſt the ſtroke of the battle-ax; which ſay, Have we not taken to us horns by our own ſtrength? have we not obtained victory over our enemies by our own arm, and are we not able in ſelf-ſufficiency to ſtand our ground againſt every ſoe? Such was the language of their proud hearts, and they dared utter theſe vain boaſtings, to God's great diſhonour. Note, (1.) Proſperity neceſſarily increaſes the pride of thoſe who forget God. (2.) They who flatter themſelves with the conceit of their own goodneſs, and the ſtrength of their own reſolutions, rejoice in a thing of nought.

5. Their whole land ſhall be ſubdued and deſtroyed. The Lord God of hoſts, againſt whom they had behaved ſo exceeding proudly, he that hath the armies of heaven and earth at his command, will ſend a nation againſt them, the Aſſyrians, to afflict them with all the miſeries of a deſtructive war, and at laſt to carry them captive into a ſtrange land, from the entering in of Hemath unto the river of the wilderneſs, from one end of Iſrael to the other, 2 Kings xiv. 25. for when God begins he will make an end; and he never wants inſtruments of vengeance to execute his righteous decrees.

CHAP. VII.

In this chapter we have, 1. Iſrael threatned with leſſer judgments, but reprieved, and the judgments turned away at the prayer of Amos, ver. 1—6. 2. God's patience is at length worn out by their obſtinacy, and they are ſentenced to utter ruin, ver. 7—9. 3. Amaziah informs againſt Amos, ver. 10, 11. and doth what he can to rid the country of him as a public nuſance, ver. 12, 13. 4. Amos juſtifies himſelf in what he did as a prophet, ver. 14, 15. and denounceth the judgments of God againſt his perſecutor, ver. 16, 17.

1. THUS hath the Lord GOD ſhewed unto me, and behold, [a] he formed † graſhoppers in the beginning of the ſhooting up of the latter growth, and lo it was the latter growth after the king's mowings. 2. And it came to paſs, that when they had made an end of eating the graſs of the land, then I ſaid, O Lord GOD, forgive, I beſeech thee; [b] ‡ by whom ſhall Jacob ariſe? for he is ſmall. 3. [c] The LORD repented for this: It ſhall not be, ſaith the LORD. 4. ¶ Thus hath the Lord GOD ſhewed unto me, and behold, the Lord GOD called to contend by fire, and it devoured the great deep, and did eat up a part. 5. Then ſaid I, O Lord GOD, [d] ceaſe, I beſeech thee; [e] by whom ſhall Jacob ariſe? for he is ſmall. 6. The LORD repented for this: This alſo ſhall not be, ſaith the Lord GOD, 7. ¶ Thus he ſhewed me, and behold, the LORD ſtood upon a wall made by a plumb-line, with a plumb-line in his hand. 8. And the LORD ſaid unto me, Amos, what ſeeſt thou? And I ſaid, A plumb-line. Then ſaid the LORD, Behold, [f] I will ſet a plumb-line in the midſt of my people Iſrael, [g] I will not again paſs by them any more. 9. And [h] the high places of Iſaac ſhall be deſolate, and the ſanctuaries of Iſrael ſhall be laid waſte; and [i] I will riſe againſt the houſe of Jeroboam with the ſword.

v. 1—9. The prophet ſpoke before what he heard from God in words; here he relates what was revealed to him in viſion; and both confirming the ſame event, the ruin of a rebellious people. We have,

1. The judgment of graſhoppers or locuſts, which are removed at the prophet's interceſſion. They were formed in the viſion by God's hand, and commiſſioned to devour the aftergraſs, after the firſt mowings. Some underſtand this figuratively of the Aſſyrian army, which, under Pul their king, plundered the country, 2 Kings xv. 19. after it had begun to revive a little under Jeroboam, 2 Kings xiii. 25. from the ravages it had before ſuffered, ſee 2 Kings xiii. 3—22. Affected with the melancholy ſcene, the prophet becomes an earneſt advocate for this miſerable land: then I ſaid, O Lord, forgive, I beſeech thee: ſin was the cauſe of all their ſufferings, and the removal of that was the great object of the prophet's prayer. Ceaſe, I beſeech thee, the unequal controverſy, which muſt elſe quickly conſume that ſinful people, unable to ſtand before God's judgments: and he enforces his plea by their relation to him as the ſeed of Jacob; the low eſtate of miſery to which they were already reduced; and the abſolute deſpair into which they muſt fall, unleſs he was pleaſed graciouſly to pity, pardon, and ſave them. By whom ſhall Jacob ariſe, for he is ſmall? The Lord heard and was intreated; he repented for this; removed this afflictive diſpenſation of his providence at the prophet's inſtance. It ſhall not be, ſaith the Lord; either the locuſts, or the Aſſyrian army, ſhall not be permitted utterly to deſtroy the land, See 2 Kings xv. 19, 20. Note, (1.) Whilſt we declare to ſinners the judgments they provoke, every true prophet cannot but be an earneſt advocate to avert them; ſo far is he from deſiring the woful day. (2.) Sin is the cauſe of every human miſery; and the pardon of that is to be ſought in the firſt place, in order to open the door for every other mercy. (3.) The low and afflicted ſtate of the church is a powerful argument to plead for preſent help. (4.) Powerfully effectual and mightily availing is the fervent prayer of a righteous man. Such advocates with God are the greateſt bleſſings to their country.

2. Another judgment by fire ſucceeds, and this alſo is extinguiſhed at the prophet's prayer. The Lord called to contend by fire, and ready at his commands the elements obey him: it devoured the great deep; it ſeemed to dry up the ocean; and did eat up a part of the earth; which may refer either to ſome remarkable viſitation of lightning, conſuming part of their country; or to the intenſe heat of the ſun, occaſioning a drought through the land, and conſuming them by famine; or figuratively deſcribes the devaſtations of the Aſſyrian army under Tiglath-Pileſer, 2 Kings xii. 29. and the captivity of a part of the land. Hereupon the prophet repeats his former requeſt, and again ſucceeds in preventing their final ruin. Note, (1.) God hath many arrows in his quiver, and when one judgment doth not humble a ſinful ſoul, he will ſend another. (2.) God is not unwilling to multiply his pardons, if we are not weary in waiting upon him with our prayers.

3. In a third viſion their final ruin is predicted; for reprieves are not pardons; and they whom neither mercies nor judgments effectually work upon, may expect to be at laſt utterly abandoned of God. And he ſhewed me, and behold the Lord ſtood upon a wall made by a plumb-line: the Jewiſh ſtate was like a wall of adamant, ſtrong, and raiſed by the divine architect ſtrait and regular; and now he came, with a plumb-line in his hand, to diſcover their crookedneſs, who had ſo departed from the line of duty and his pure worſhip. On the proof therefore of their incorrigible perverſeneſs, he now reſolves to paſs by them no more; and therefore the prophet may no more intercede for them. Their doom is fixed; their high places ſhall be deſtroyed; their idol-temples demoliſhed, notwithſtanding the holy progenitors from whom they deſcended, which they might flatter themſelves would be their protection; and the houſe of Jeroboam, the great author of their apoſtacy from God, ſhall be cut off; as was ſhortly after accompliſhed by Shallum, 2 Kings xv. 10. Note, (1.) No outward privileges will protect apoſtates from ruin. (2.) Walls of adamant are no defence againſt God's judgments. (3.) In all God's viſitations he acts with ſtricteſt juſtice; ſo that they who ſuffer have not the ſhadow of complaint. (4.) Though God bears long with ſinners, he will not bear always: vengeance, though ſlow, is ſure.

10. ¶ Then Amaziah [k] the prieſt of Bethel ſent to [l] Jeroboam king of Iſrael, ſaying, Amos hath [m] conſpired againſt thee in the midſt of the houſe of Iſrael: the land is not able to bear all his words. 11. For thus Amos ſaith, [n] Jeroboam ſhall die by the ſword, and Iſrael ſhall ſurely be led away captive out of their own land. 12. Alſo Amaziah ſaid unto Amos, O thou ſeer, go, flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and propheſy there. 13. But [o] propheſy not again any more at Beth-el: for [p] it is the king's chapel, and it is the † king's court. 14. ¶ Then anſwered Amos, and ſaid to Amaziah, I was no prophet, neither was I [q] a prophet's ſon; [r] but I was an herdman, and a gatherer of ‡ ſycomore-fruit. 15. And the LORD took me as I followed the flock, and the LORD ſaid unto me, Go, propheſy unto my people Iſrael. 16. ¶ Now therefore hear thou the word of the LORD: thou ſayeſt, [s] Propheſy not againſt Iſrael, and [t] drop not thy word againſt the houſe of Iſaac. 17. [u] Therefore thus ſaith the LORD, [x] Thy wife ſhall be an harlot in the city, and thy ſons and thy daughters ſhall fall by the ſword, and thy land ſhall be divided by line: and thou ſhalt die in a polluted land, and [y] Iſrael ſhall ſurely go into captivity forth of his land.

v. 10—17. From the kindneſs which the prophet had ſhown by his interceſſion in behalf of the land, and the manifeſt deſign of all the judgments threatned, which was to lead them to repentance, one might have expected the moſt grateful returns would have been made to their affectionate friend, and faithful reprover; but let not the beſt of men be ſurprized at the baſeſt ingratitude they meet with.

1. Amaziah, the prieſt of Bethel, or prince, the chief ruler perhaps both in eccleſiaſtical and civil affairs, could not bear the threatnings of the prophet, and therefore tranſmits to court an accuſation againſt him as a traitor againſt the nation; as one that ſowed ſedition among the people, and ſpirited them up to murder the king: ſo that if timely care was not taken, the land would not be able to bear his words: either they would breed a revolt, or the country was ſo exaſperated againſt him, that he would inſinuate nothing could be a more popular act than to ſilence or puniſh him. For thus Amos ſaith, Jeroboam ſhall die by the ſword, and Iſrael ſhall ſurely be led away captive out of their own land; which was partly falſe, and partly true. Iſrael's ruin indeed the prophet foretold; but Amaziah ſuppreſſes the circumſtances of Amos's interceſſion, and his declarations that their repentance would prevent the judgment. As for Jeroboam's death, the prophet ſaid no ſuch thing: the threatning was againſt his houſe, not himſelf, v. 9. but this was eaſily perverted. Note, (1.) Apoſtate prieſts are the bittereſt perſecutors of the true prophets. (2.) It is a common method with deſigning men to repreſent the faithful as ſeditious, and troublers of the land, tho' in fact they are the beſt friends of it. (3.) They who bear teſtimony for God againſt men's ſins, may expect to meet with the moſt malicious inſinuations againſt them, and to have their words often tortured to a meaning of which they never dreamt.

2. Amaziah endeavours to drive Amos out of the country. What anſwer he received from court is not ſaid; it ſhould ſeem not one ſo favourable as he expected; and therefore to be rid of him at any rate, by pretending regard for his ſafety, which he inſinuates would be in danger, he adviſes him to quit Bethel, and fly to Judah, where he would be better received and rewarded; judging from his own caſe that Amos propheſied for bread, v. 12. which at Bethel he would never get. Beſides, the place was improper; it was the king's chapel, and court, where his plain ſpeaking could not fail of being diſagreeable, court-preaching requiring ſoft words, and ſmooth prophecies; nor could he think of making converts there, where the torrent ran ſo ſtrong againſt him, and would the more endanger his ſafety, the more he attempted to oppoſe it. Note, (1.) Falſe and faithleſs prophets meaſure the faithful by themſelves, and think their only motive is that filthy lucre and worldly eſteem which they adore. (2.) A zealous active miniſter is a burdenſome ſtone in the eyes of the lazy and negligent, eſpecially when he happens to be in a public ſituation, where his conduct more glaringly reflects on theirs, and therefore by fair means or foul they will ſtrive to get rid of him.

3. Amos anſwers this wicked prieſt with the ſteadineſs which became his office, and as one not to be intimidated by danger from the diſcharge of his duty. As for himſelf, he was not deſcended from a prophet, or bred up in their ſchools; but was an herdſman, and a gatherer of ſycomore-fruit, to ſerve his family or cattle; and from this employment the Lord called him to go and propheſy unto Iſrael. His divine miſſion therefore authorized him; he dared not deſert his poſt, ſince he was ſent thither of God; and as he had been accuſtomed to hard fare, he was the better prepared to meet with any hardſhips in the courſe of his miniſtry; though they who dared oppoſe and oppreſs him ſhould ſuffer for it, and Amaziah, who had forbid him to propheſy, among the firſt. His wife ſhall become an harlot, and her wickedneſs reflect infamy on him: his children ſhall fall by the ſword of an enemy, and his eyes ſhall behold it; his eſtate ſhall be divided among the conquerors, and himſelf ſurvive theſe miſeries, to die a wretched captive in a polluted land: and Iſrael ſhall ſurely go into captivity forth of his land, as he would ſee fatally verified. Note, (1.) God often chuſes weak and unlikely inſtruments; but whom he ſends he will both qualify them for their office, and ſtrengthen them to diſcharge it faithfully. (2.) Perſecutors of God's prophets ſhall ſhortly meet their fearful doom. (3.) It is in vain to attempt ſilencing thoſe whom God hath commanded to ſpeak. (4.) God's word will ſurely take place, whatever oppoſition ſinners may make againſt it.

CHAP. VIII.

Sinful times are here attended with ſorrowful times, ſo neceſſary is the connexion between them; it is threatned again and again that their laughter ſhall be turned into mourning. 1. By the viſion of a baſket of ſummer fruit is ſignified the haſtning on of their ruin, ver. 1—3. 2. Oppreſſors are here called to an account for their abuſing of the poor, and their deſtruction is foretold, ver. 4—10. 3. A famine of the word of God is here made the puniſhment of a people that go a whoring after other gods, ver. 11—14.

1. THUS hath the Lord GOD ſhewed unto me, and behold, a baſket of ſummer-fruit. 2. And he ſaid, Amos, what ſeeſt thou? and I ſaid, A baſket of ſummer-fruit. Then ſaid the LORD unto me, [a] The end is come upon my people of Iſrael, [b] I will not again paſs by them any more. 3. And [c] the ſongs of the temple † ſhall be howlings in that day, ſaith the Lord GOD: there ſhall be many dead bodies in every place, [d] they ſhall caſt them forth with ſilence.

[d] Chap. vi. 10.

v. 1—3. The prophet is called upon to attend to another viſion, and lo! a baſket of ſummer-fruit ſtood before him, an emblem of that people ripe for deſtruction, and ready to be devoured by their enemies.

1. Their end is come; they have been ſuffered like fruit to grow till they were fully ripe, and now are to be ſpared no longer: God's patience is wearied out, and their ruin reſolved. Though God bears long, the impenitent ſinner's fate will come at laſt.

2. Their ruin will be terrible. The ſongs of the temple ſhall be howlings in that day, ſaith the Lord God; the places where their idols praiſes reſounded, now ſhall be filled with ſhrieks and groans; and there ſhall be many dead bodies in every place, ſlain by the ſword, the famine, or the peſtilence: they ſhall caſt them forth in ſilence; without any funeral ſolemnity, or expreſſion of grief, as if the dead were happier than the living; or ſullenly ſubmitting, becauſe they cannot help themſelves; or bidding others be ſilent, and not take the leaſt notice of what might diſhearten the beſieged, or encourage their enemies. Note, (1.) Sinful mirth will end in bitter mourning. (2.) God's judgments do often but harden the hearts of the impenitent.

4. ¶ Hear this, O ye that [e] ſwallow up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail, 5. Saying, [f] when will the new-moon be gone, that we may ſell corn? [g] and the ſabbath, that we may ſet forth wheat, [h] making the ephah ſmall, and the ſhekel great, and † falſifying the balances by deceit? 6. That [i] we may buy the poor for ſilver, and the needy for a pair of ſhoes; yea, and ſell the refuſe of the wheat? 7. [k] The LORD hath ſworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely I will never forget any of their works. 8. [l] Shall not the land tremble for this, and every one mourn that dwelleth therein? and it ſhall riſe up wholly as a flood; and it ſhall be caſt out and drowned, [m] as by the flood of Egypt. 9. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, ſaith the Lord GOD, that [n] I will cauſe the ſun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day. 10. And [o] I will turn your feaſts into mourning, and all your ſongs into lamentation, and [p] I will bring up ſackcloth upon all loins, and baldneſs upon every head, and [q] I will make it as the mourning of an only ſon, and the end thereof as a bitter day.

v. 4—10. A people whoſe iniquities were ſo flagrant may expect the judgment they have provoked.

1. Their ſins were heinous. They ſwallow up the needy, by oppreſſion and injuſtice; even to make the poor of the land to fail, ſtarving them for want of neceſſary food. So addicted were they to covetouſneſs, that, though they kept up the form of religion, they were tired and weary of the ſervice, longing for the ſacred hours of the ſabbath and new moons to be gone, that they might reſume their work and merchandize, which met with this unwelcome interruption, v. 5. nor did they make any conſcience how they got their wealth, ſo they did but get it. They ſold by a ſmall meaſure, making the ephah ſmall; but, when they received money, they would uſe their own weights, making the ſhekel great, refuſing to take it unleſs it weighed more than it ought; and falſified the balances by deceit, that ſo the ſcale might always hang in their favour: and by ſuch fraudulent practices they ſo impoveriſhed their poor neighbours, that they were forced to ſell themſelves to theſe oppreſſive maſters; they buy the poor for ſilver, and the needy for a pair of ſhoes, to ſuch neceſſities were they reduced; yea, and ſell the refuſe of the wheat, making them take the corn that was not fit for bread, and exacting their own price for it. Note, (1.) Covetouſneſs is deſtitute of all bowels and mercies. (2.) To a worldly man the ſabbath is an irkſome day; and, when he is employed in religious duties, his heart goeth after his covetouſneſs; and even on his knees the thoughts of buſineſs thruſt out the thoughts of God. (3.) He who is deſtitute of true piety can never be an honeſt man.

2. Their ruin is ſure and terrible, confirmed by the oath of the unchangeable God, who ſaith, Surely I will never forget any of their works, but remember them in terrible judgment: they ſhewed no mercy, and they ſhall find none. And wo to the miſerable ſinner that is under ſuch a curſe! Shall not the land tremble for this? as weary to bear ſuch miſcreants upon it, and ready to ſwallow them up by an earthquake, ſee chap. i. 1. and every one mourn that dwelleth therein, ſhocked at this inhumanity, or confounded at the judgments ſent upon the tranſgreſſors;

it ſhall riſe up wholly as a flood, the calamity overwhelming the land, as Egypt was covered with the overflowing of the Nile, v. 8. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, ſaith the Lord God, that I will cauſe the ſun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day; in the midſt of their proſperity their whole kingdom, with the princes and nobles, ſhall be deſtroyed ſuddenly and unexpectedly: or when theſe oppreſſors were in the midſt of life and proſperity, death ſhould at a ſtroke cloſe their eyes in darkneſs, and ſend them to the grave. And I will turn your feaſts into mourning, and all your ſongs into lamentation; when their temples deſtroyed, their country deſolate, themſelves captives, every ſound of joy would be baniſhed, and with every expreſſive ſign of bitter woe they would bewail their hopeleſs miſeries, as the mourning of an only ſon, and the end thereof as a bitter day, no proſpect remaining of the removal of theſe calamities. Note, (1.) Riches got by rapine, will in the end bring ruin. (2.) They who will not tremble for the ſins of the land, ſhall be made to tremble when the threatned judgment comes. (3.) However high the oppreſſor may be ſeated, the flood of God's wrath ſhall overwhelm him. (4.) The ſinner's mirth will end in mourning, and God ſometimes is pleaſed to arreſt him in the midſt of his career of proſperity, and by a ſudden ſtroke to ſend him into darkneſs.

11. Behold, the days come, ſaith the Lord GOD, that I will ſend a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirſt for water, but [r] of hearing the words of the LORD. 12. And they ſhall wander from ſea to ſea, and from the north even to the eaſt, they ſhall run to and fro to ſeek the word of the LORD, and ſhall not find it. 13. In that day ſhall the fair virgins and young men [s] faint for thirſt. 14. They that [t] ſwear by [u] the ſin of Samaria, and ſay, Thy god, [x] O Dan, liveth, and † the manner [y] of Beer-ſheba liveth; [z] even they ſhall fall, and never riſe up again.

v. 11—14. We have had before heavy temporal judgments denounced, but here,

1. A ſpiritual judgment is threatned; a famine, not of bread nor of water, but of hearing the words of the Lord; from the time of their laſt captivity, no more prophets ſhall appear to them; having rejected God and his Chriſt, in vain will they ſeek for prophets of their own, v. 12. and pine away in their iniquities, v. 13. rejected and deſtitute, as they are this day. Note, (1.) The word of God is the food of immortal ſouls; they muſt periſh from whom it is withdrawn. (2.) They who have abuſed the means of grace they have enjoyed, are juſtly puniſhed by having them removed. (3.) Among the heavieſt curſes of God upon a place or nation, is the taking from them the light of truth, and abandoning them to the blindneſs and hardneſs of their own hearts.

2. The ringleaders in idolatry are doomed to deſtruction. They that ſwear by the ſin of Samaria, impious and profane, glorying in their ſhame, and ſwearing by their idols which they ſhould have deteſted, and ſay, Thy god, O Dan, liveth, and the manner of Beer-ſheba liveth; making their adjurations by the hated deities there placed, and the worſhip performed to them; even they ſhall fall, and never riſe up again, driven into a captivity from which they never have returned, and it is to be feared, periſhing there alſo eternally in their impenitence.

CHAP. IX.

In this chapter we have, 1. Judgments threatned, which the ſinners ſhall not eſcape, ver. 1—4, which an Almighty power ſhall inflict, ver. 5, 6. which this ſinful people have deſerved, ver. 7, 8. and yet it ſhall not be an utter ruin, ver. 8. for a remnant ſhall eſcape, ver. 9. but the wicked ſhall periſh, ver. 10. 2. Mercy promiſed, which was to be beſtowed in the latter days, ver. 11—15. as appears by the application of it to the days of the Meſſiah, Acts xv. 16. And with theſe comfortable promiſes, after all the foregoing rebukes and threatnings, the book concludes.

1. I Saw the LORD ſtanding upon the altar, and he ſaid, Smite the † lintel of the door, that the poſts may ſhake: and cut them in the head all of them; and I will ſlay the laſt of them with the ſword: [a] he that fleeth of them, ſhall not flee away; and he that eſcapeth of them, ſhall not be delivered. 2. [b] Though they dig into hell, thence ſhall mine hand take them; [c] though they climb up to heaven, thence will I bring them down: 3. And though they hide themſelves in the top of Carmel, I will ſearch and take them out thence; and though they be hid from my ſight in the bottom of the ſea, thence will I command the ſerpent, and he ſhall bite them: 4. And though they go into captivity before their enemies, [d] thence will I command the ſword, and it ſhall ſlay them: and [e] I will ſet mine eyes upon them for evil, and not for good. 5. And the Lord GOD of hoſts is he that toucheth the land, and it ſhall melt, [f] and all that dwell therein ſhall mourn, and it ſhall riſe up wholly like a flood, and ſhall be drowned [g] as by the flood of Egypt. 6. It is he that buildeth his ‡ [h] ſtories in the heaven, and hath founded his troop in the earth, [i] he that calleth for the waters of the ſea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth: [k] the LORD is his name. 7. Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Iſrael? ſaith the LORD. Have not I brought up Iſrael out of the land of Egypt? and [l] the Philiſtines from [m] Caphtor, and the Syrians from [n] Kir? 8. Behold, [o] the eyes of the Lord GOD are upon the ſinful kingdom, [p] and I will deſtroy it from off the face of the earth; ſaving that I will not utterly deſtroy the houſe of Jacob, ſaith the LORD. 9. For lo, I will command, and [q] I will ‖ ſift the houſe of Iſrael among all nations, like as corn is ſifted in a ſieve, yet ſhall not the leaſt § grain fall upon the earth. 10. v. 1—10. The judgments of God againſt a people devoted to deſtruction are here fearfully declared.

1. The awful command for the execution of theſe criminals is iſſued. I ſaw the Lord ſtanding upon the altar, at Beth-el probably, as about to ſtamp it into powder, and deſtroy the idols with their worſhippers; and he ſaid, Smite the lintel of the door, that the poſts may ſhake, intimating the demolition of the idol temples; and cut them in the head all of them, and I will ſlay the laſt of them with the ſword, the king, princes, prieſts and people that committed idolatry there.

2. All attempts to eſcape from God's avenging arm will be fruitleſs: they ſhall be arreſted in their flight, and no place afford them protection in this day of wrath. Could they dig into hell, it would not conceal them; or could they climb the heights of heaven, thence would he drag them down, v. 3. The caves or thickets of Carmel could not hide them from his all-piercing eye, nor the depths of the ſea cover them, God has even there his inſtruments of vengeance, v. 3. Nay, when in a miſerable captivity they might have hoped the vengeance of God would reſt, the ſword ſhould ſtill purſue them, and make them exchange a wretched life for a more tormenting death. Note, When God is againſt us it matters not who are for us, they can afford us neither help nor hope.

3. He that pronounces their doom is fully able to execute his threatnings. The Lord God of hoſts is he that toucheth the land, and it ſhall melt; a touch, a frown from him can diſſolve the earth, or deluge it with waters; and all that dwell therein ſhall mourn in bitterneſs the loſs of all their ſubſtance, and whatever is dear to them beſides, ſwallowed up in the flood of his judgments, v. 6. It is he, that great Creator of all, who buildeth his ſtories in the heaven, like a ſtately palace reared by his power and ſupported by his providence; and hath founded his troop in the earth, all things here below being the inſtruments of his pleaſure, and ready to execute his commands: he that calleth for the waters of the ſea, and poureth them out upon the earth, to deſcend in tempeſts from the clouds, or burſt from the boſom of the deep to puniſh guilty mortals; the Lord of hoſts is his name, able to perform all the purpoſes of his will. As happy and ſafe as it is to have him our friend, ſo miſerable and fatal muſt it be to have him our enemy.

4. Their iniquities had cut them off from their former honourable relation to this Almighty God. They were become, by their ſins, black as Ethiopians, and would be regarded no more by him than theſe heathens; nor ſhould they count upon the mercies God had ſhewed in bringing them from Egypt, as if theſe were ſo peculiarly diſtinguiſhing, or enſured his future favour, for he had brought the Philiſtines from Caphtor, the place of their nativity, or whither they had been carried captives; and the Syrians from Kir, the land of their captivity, 2 Kings xvi. 19. yet neither of theſe nations ſhared his favour, nor would eſcape at laſt his judgments. For behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the ſinful kingdom, on every guilty land, eſpecially on Iſrael, whoſe guilt was moſt aggravated; and I will deſtroy it from off the face of the earth, as was done by Salmaneſer. Note, When profeſſors degenerate, and in ſpirit depart from God, their privileges will ſtand them in no ſtead, but rather aggravate their guilt beyond that of the vileſt heathens.

5. A remnant of Iſrael, even thoſe who have preſerved their fidelity, ſhall be preſerved amidſt the general ruin. I will not utterly deſtroy the houſe of Jacob, ſaith the Lord, his eyes behold the men that ſigh, and cry for all the abominations of the land, and they ſhall be hid in the day of his fierce anger. For lo, I will command, by his over-ruling providence, and I will ſift the houſe of Iſrael among all nations, as corn is ſifted in a ſieve, all the afflictions coming upon them ſhall be ſo ordered as to ſeparate the precious from the vile; yet ſhall not the leaſt grain fall upon the earth, or the leaſt ſtone, not one of the faithful ſhall periſh; but all the ſinners of my people ſhall die by the ſword, which ſay, The evil ſhall not overtake nor prevent us, ſo daring in wickedneſs were they grown; but ſhall find, to their everlaſting confuſion, the vanity of their impious boaſts. Note, (1.) Though God's ſpiritual Iſrael are ſcattered in the world that lieth in wickedneſs, not one of them ſhall periſh; and the afflictions they meet with ſhall but ſerve to ſeparate them for God, and cleanſe them from the chaff of corruption, that they may be pure in heart. (2.) When the ſinner moſt confidently flatters himſelf with aſſurances of impunity, there is a lie in his right hand, and vengeance is at his heels.

v. 11—15. With one bright beam of hope the prophecy cloſes, and in the promiſed Meſſiah, ſtill a glorious proſpect remains of Iſrael's reſtoration, for to him bear all the prophets witneſs.

1. In the Meſſiah ſhall the glory of David's throne be reſtored. In that day will I raiſe up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and cloſe up the breaches thereof, and I will raiſe up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old; to what event this refers, we can have no doubt, having an infallible interpreter for our guide, Acts xv. 16. When Chriſt came into the world, the church, the ſpiritual kingdom of our David, was fallen as low as the royal family from whence the Redeemer ſprung; but in and by him the breaches were repaired, the goſpel of the kingdom was preached at his command, and religion revived its drooping head, and ſhone more glorioufly than in the brighteſt days of old. Nor was the church now confined to one nation or people; but Gentiles, as well as Jews, became the happy ſubjects of Chriſt's government. A remnant of Edom, and from the lands of the heathen ſhall now become the church's poſſeſſion, and be called by the name of Chriſt, admitted into the fellowſhip and privileges of the goſpel, ſaith the Lord who doth this, whoſe power and grace can and will accompliſh what he hath promiſed; and bleſſed be his name for what we have ſeen of the fulfilment hereof, and ſhall ſee daily, till the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in, and all the Iſrael of God be finally ſaved.

Before Chriſt 787.

2. The moſt abundant meaſure of ſpiritual bleſſings will then be diffuſed, ſignified by images of the moſt amazing plenty; the harveſt and vintage being ſo vaſt, that it ſhould continue till ſeed time again, and the very mountains, as if diſſolved, pour down ſtreams of wine, and milk, and honey; the gifts, the graces, and conſolations of the holy ghoſt in the times of the goſpel, being beſtowed in a more eminent and extenſive manner than ever before.

3. The captivity of God's Iſrael will then be for ever at an end; they ſhall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God, and help to build the walls of the ſpiritual temple; enjoying, as members of the church of Chriſt, that peace, proſperity, and plenty of heavenly bleſſings, which would be better than the fruit of gardens or vineyards, v. 14. Though ſome ſuppoſe this literally will be fulfilled, and that the Jews, when converted to Chriſt in the latter day, will be planted in their own land, and enjoy all that outward proſperity here deſcribed.

4. This happy eſtate of God's Iſrael ſhall never more be interrupted. They ſhall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, ſaith the Lord thy God; he will preſerve them alike from the power of their corruptions within, as well as from their ſpiritual enemies without, none of whom ſhall ever pluck the weakeſt believer out of his hands; God, their God, their covenant God, ſhall fulfill his promiſes, and ſecure their ſtability for ever; till the bleſſed day comes, that they ſhall be taken out of the reach of every foe, and be brought to the heavenly Canaan, to the manſions of eternal reſt and glory, provided for them before the foundations of the world.

OR, A
PRACTICAL COMMENT
Upon the PROPHECY of OBADIAH.

VARIOUS have been the conjectures concerning Obadiah, who or from whence he was, but they are wholly uncertain. At what time he wrote is alſo dubious, ſome making him cotemporary with Hoſea, Joel, and Amos, whilſt others place him later, with Jeremiah and Ezekiel. His name ſignifies a Servant of the LORD, and his prophecy is concerning Edom, a nation nearly allied to the Jews; but deriving from Eſau their fathers hereditary enmity againſt them, and their ruin is the burden of this little volume.

(3.) Their wiſdom infatuated, ver. 8, 9. (4.) Their ſpiteful carriage towards God's Iſrael avenged, ver. 10—16. 1. THE viſion of † Obadiah. Thus ſaith the Lord GOD, [a] concerning Edom, [b] we have heard a rumour from the LORD, and an ambaſſador is ſent among the heathen, Ariſe ye, and let us riſe up againſt her in battle. 2. Behold, I have made thee ſmall among the heathen: thou art greatly deſpiſed. 3. ¶ The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee: thou that dwelleſt in the clefts of [c] the rock, whoſe habitation is high, [d] that ſaith in his heart, Who ſhall bring me down to the ground? 4. [e] Though thou exalt thyſelf as the eagle, and though thou ſet thy neſt among the ſtars, thence will I bring thee down, ſaith the LORD. 5. [f] If thieves came to thee, if robbers by night (how art thou cut off!) would they not have ſtolen till they had enough? if the grape-gatherers came to thee, [g] would they not leave ‡ ſome grapes? 6. How are the things of Eſau ſearched out! how are his hid things ſought up? 7. All the men of thy confederacy have brought thee even to the border: the men ‖ that were at peace with thee have deceived thee, and prevailed againſt thee: § they that eat thy bread, have laid a wound under thee: there is none underſtanding † in him. 8. [h] Shall I not in that day, ſaith the LORD, even deſtroy the wiſe men out of Edom, and underſtanding out of the mount of Eſau? 9. And thy mighty men, O Teman, ſhall be diſmayed, to the end that every one of the mount of Eſau may be cut off by ſlaughter.

v. 1—9. The viſion of Obadiah concerning Edom, the inveterate enemy of God's people of old, and probably the type and figure of all the Antichriſtian foes, whether Papal, Pagan, or Mahometan, which, like theſe of old, ſhall utterly be deſtroyed at the laſt.

1. An ambaſſador is ſent among the heathen, to gather them together to battle againſt Idumea; either the prophet, or ſome other miniſter of providence, or a herald diſpatched by Nebuchadnezzar to ſummon his warriors to aſſemble, and his confederates to come to his aſſiſtance, See Jer. xlix. 15. for when God hath work to do, he hath in his hands inſtruments ever ready.

2. Edom ſhall be ruined, and all her confidences ſhall fail, for God is her enemy. Her heathen neighbours ſhall treat her as little and contemptible, v. 3. and though ſhe flatters herſelf they have the ſame high opinion of her ſhe hath of herſelf, her pride hath deceived her, ver. 3. as it generally does thoſe who fancy others value them as much as they do themſelves. She thought, becauſe her ſituation was ſtrong amidſt high rocks, where nature, as well as art, contributed to her ſecurity, that ſhe could there defy the impotent attacks of all her foes, v. 3. Thus ſinners, ſecure in ſelf-confidence, deſpiſe the wrath which is ready to overtake them: but though ſhe was as high on the rock as the eagle's neſt; yea, though her battlements reached to the ſtars, thence will I bring thee down, ſaith the Lord, before whoſe judgments the proudeſt ſinner cannot ſtand. Her wealth ſhall become a prey to her enemies, and the ravages of the Chaldeans ſhall utterly ſpoil the country. Though robbers by night plunder an houſe, they leave ſome things behind; and the moſt careful grape-gatherers cannot glean every cluſter; but theſe ſhall ranſack every ſecret place, and ſpare nothing, leaving the land bare as a rock, v. 5, 6. Do the Edomites place dependance on their allies? they will diſappoint their expectations: though they received their ambaſſadors with reſpect, and attended them to their borders, or joined their forces as auxiliaries, and marched to the borders of Edom as if to fight their enemies, receiving ſubſidies and proviſion from the Edomites, and pretending firm attachment to their cauſe, yet will they betray it, deſert to their invaders, and turn their arms againſt thoſe who hired them; who, whilſt they leaned on them as a ſupport, feel from their pretended friendly arm, a ſecret mortal wound, v. 7. Not all the wiſdom of their wiſe men, nor the courage of their warriors, will then be able to avail them: God hath infatuated the counſels of the one, and panic fear ſeizes the others, doomed to the ſlaughter, ſo that not a man of them ſhall eſcape. Thus when God contends he will ſurely overcome: our wiſdom will prove folly, our ſtrength weakneſs, our confidence deluſion, when he is our foe.

v. 10—16. If Edom's doom be heavy, her ſins have provoked it; and, amidſt all the other iniquities of that devoted people, none come deeper into the account than their violence againſt their brother Jacob, whoſe relation to them by blood, and the peculiar favour God had ſhewn him, ſhould have engaged their affection and aſſiſtance in the day of calamity: but too often we ſee neareſt relations ſhew us the leaſt regard.

1. They had, with moſt malicious enmity, rejoiced in the ruin of Iſrael, and in a variety of inſtances helped forward their diſtreſs. God tells them what they ſhould not have done, and therein upbraids them with what they had done. Inſtead of affording the Jews a friendly hand, or at leaſt commiſerating their calamity, and dropping a tear of tender compaſſion over their afflictions, they ſtood on the other ſide, not merely unconcerned ſpectators, but pleaſed with the ſcene, and helping forward the ruin of Jeruſalem, when the Chaldeans entered the city, led the inhabitants captive, and divided the ſpoil, v. 11. nay, they inſulted the unhappy ſufferers, and mocked at their diſtreſs, v. 12. Eager to plunder, they ruſhed with the beſiegers into the city, and pillaged whatever they laid their hands upon, v. 13. and with ſavage inhumanity ſtood in the croſs-way to ſeize the few who eſcaped from the Chaldean ſword, and murdered them in cold blood, or delivered them up to their cruel enemies, v. 15. For ſuch atrocious wickedneſs,

2. Vengeance, ſuch as their crimes deſerved, deſcends upon them. The day of the Lord, that great and terrible day of wrath, approaches, when he will recompenſe the wickedneſs of the heathen, and Edom ſhall drink deep of the cup of his indignation. Since judgment had begun at the houſe of God, Edom may not think to eſcape. As thou haſt done, it ſhall be done unto thee; when other heathen nations are deſtroyed, Edom ſhall fall in the general ruin; and, whilſt the Jews only were captives for a while, and would be again reſtored, and preſerved ſtill as a people, the Edomites ſhame would be continual, they ſhall be cut off for ever, and be as though they had not been, their nation extirpated, and not a trace of them remain. And thus ſhall the enemies of Chriſt and his church be at laſt deſtroyed for ever, and every antichriſtian foe ſhall be caſt as a millſtone into the ſea, and ſink, and never riſe up again, Rev. xviii. 21. So let all thine enemies periſh, O Lord!

And [u] the houſe of Jacob ſhall be a fire, and the houſe of Joſeph a flame, and the houſe of Eſau for ſtubble, and they ſhall kindle in them, and devour them, and there ſhall not be any remaining of the houſe of Eſau; for the LORD hath ſpoken it. 19. And they of the ſouth [x] ſhall poſſeſs the mount of Eſau; and they of the plain, the Philiſtines: and they ſhall poſſeſs the fields of Ephraim, and the fields of Samaria, and Benjamin ſhall poſſeſs Gilead. 20. v. 17—21. The ſame cloud, which looked ſo dark and terrible towards the Egyptians, afforded brightneſs and comfort to Iſrael's camp. Thus the deſtruction of the church's enemies, before threatned, is accompanied with great and precious promiſes to her friends, in which, to the lateſt ages, they may rejoice.

1. Upon mount Zion there ſhall be deliverance. God will raiſe up a deliverer for them in diſtreſs, as Cyrus, and afterwards Judas Maccabeus; but a greater deliverance than theſe ſeems here intended, even that which Jeſus hath obtained for his people from the bondage of Satan, ſin, and death.

2. And there ſhall be holineſs, in the goſpel church, in conſequence of the deliverance obtained for them: all Chriſt's redeemed people ſhall partake of the ſanctifying influences of his Spirit, and be made pure within; this being a diſtinguiſhed part of the ſalvation he hath wrought, that we ſhould be delivered from the power as well as puniſhment of our ſins.

3. The church of the redeemed ſhall be extended far and wide. The houſe of Jacob ſhall poſſeſs their poſſeſſions; as was ſpiritually the caſe when, by the preaching of the miniſters of the goſpel, the Gentiles gave themſelves up unto the Lord: then, like fire, the word of God ſpread on every ſide, the hearts of ſinners were pierced, and their moſt beloved ſins conſumed, v. 18. the borders of the church were then greatly enlarged; and they ſhall continue to be ſo, till at laſt they ſhall ſpread from pole to pole, when the ſaviours, thoſe who publiſh the glad tidings of ſalvation, ſhall go forth, clothed with divine energy, convincing men of ſin, and turning them unto the Lord; and then the kingdoms of the world ſhall become the kingdoms of the Lord and his Chriſt.

Some ſuppoſe a more literal accompliſhment of the prophecy, when in the laſt days the Jews ſhall be converted, and return to their own land; their borders be greatly enlarged; and, judgment being executed upon all the perſecuting powers, papal, pagan, or Mahometan, Chriſt ſhall reign on mount Zion, and over his ancients glorioſly. This however at leaſt we are ſure of, that the day of the Lord will come, which ſhall burn as an oven, when all the proud perſecutors, and all who do wickedly, ſhall be conſumed together, and God's deſpiſed and perſecuted people ſhall reign with Jeſus their king in glory everlaſting.

OR, A
PRACTICAL COMMENT
Upon the PROPHECY of JONAH.

THIS book of Jonah, though it be placed here in the midſt of the prophetical books of Scripture, yet is rather a hiſtory than a prophecy; one line of prediction there is in it, Yet forty days and Nineveh ſhall be overthrown; the reſt of the book is a narrative of the preface to, and the conſequences of, that prediction. In the midſt of the obſcure prophecies before and after this book, wherein are many things dark and hard to be underſtood, which are puzzling to the learned, and are ſtrong meat for ſtrong men, comes in this plain and pleaſant ſtory, which is entertaining to the weakeſt, and milk for babes. Probably Jonah was himſelf the penman of this book, and he, as Moſes and other inſpired penmen, records his own faults, which is an evidence that in theſe writings they deſigned God's glory, and not their own. We read of this ſame Jonah, 2 Kings, xiv. 25. where we find that he was of Gath-hepher in Galilee, a city that belongs to the tribe of Zebulun, in a remote corner of the land of Iſrael: for the Spirit, which like the wind blows where it liſteth, will as eaſily find out Jonah in Galilee, as Iſaiah at Jeruſalem. We find alſo that he was a meſſenger of mercy to Iſrael in the reign of Jeroboam the ſecond; for the ſucceſs of his arms, in the reſtoring of the coaſt of Iſrael, is ſaid to be according to the word of the Lord, which he ſpake by the hand of his ſervant Jonah the prophet. Thoſe prophecies were not committed to writing; but this againſt Nineveh was, chiefly for the ſake of the ſtory that depends upon it, and that is recorded chiefly for the ſake of Chriſt, of whom Jonah was a type: it contains alſo very remarkable inſtances of human infirmity in Jonah; and of God's mercy, both in pardoning repenting ſinners, witneſs Nineveh; and in bearing with repining ſaints, witneſs Jonah.

v. 1—3. We have here,

1. The prophet's name and parentage: Jonah, a dove; God's prophets being harmleſs as theſe, and, like the dove of Noah, bringing the olive-branch of peace, the tidings of mercy and ſalvation to periſhing ſinners: his father's name is Amittai, my truth; for prophets muſt be ſons of truth, faithful to their office, and ſteady to maintain the truths of God.

Before Chriſt 862.

2. His miſſion. The word of the Lord came to him, bidding him ariſe, and go to Nineveh, that great city, the metropolis of the Aſſyrian empire, where wickedneſs abounded, as in great cities it uſually doth, the multitudes of ſinners ſerving to embolden and ſtimulate each other to commit iniquity. It was now ripe for vengeance, and he muſt go and cry aloud in the ſtreets, to give the inhabitants warning of their approaching doom, unleſs they repented.

3. His diſobedience. He roſe up to flee from the preſence of the Lord, from the land of Judea, where God in an eſpecial manner appeared between the cherubims; to Tarſhiſh; either Tarſus in Cilicia, or the ſea, determined to ſhip himſelf in the firſt veſſel, and fly any whither rather than go to Nineveh. Either he dreaded the dangers of the ſervice; or rather, as he ſuggeſts, chap. iv. 2. he knew God's compaſſions, that the Ninevites would be forgiven, and himſelf be counted a falſe prophet. A ſhip was ready to ſail as ſoon as he arrived at Joppa, and he inſtantly paid the fare and embarked: Providence ſeemed to concur with his deſires: but the ready way is not always the right way; and they who flee from duty, whatever preſent relief they may gain, are only treaſuring up for themſelves greater ſorrow.

4. ¶ But the LORD ſent out a great wind into the ſea, and there was a mighty tempeſt in the ſea, ſo that the ſhip was like to be broken. 5. Then the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god, [g] and caſt forth the wares that were in the ſhip, into the ſea, to lighten it of them: but Jonah was gone down into the ſides of the ſhip, and he lay, and was faſt aſleep. 6. So the ſhip-maſter came to him, and ſaid unto him, [h] What meaneſt thou, O ſleeper? ariſe, call upon thy GOD, [i] if ſo be that GOD will think upon us, that we periſh not. 7. And they ſaid every one to his fellow, Come, and let us caſt lots, that we may know for whoſe cauſe this evil is upon us. So [k] they caſt lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah. 8. Then ſaid they unto him, Tell us, we pray thee, for whoſe cauſe this evil is upon us: what is thine occupation? and whence comeſt thou? what is thy country? and of what people art thou? 9. And he ſaid unto them, I am an Hebrew, and [l] I fear the LORD the GOD of heaven, which hath made the ſea and the dry land. 10. Then were the men † exceedingly afraid, and ſaid unto him, Why haſt thou done this? (for the men knew that he fled from the preſence of the LORD, becauſe he had told them.)

v. 4—10. They who think to fly from God will ſoon perceive the folly of the attempt.

1. God ſends a mighty tempeſt on the ſhip in which the prophet ſailed, ſo that it ſeemed ready each moment to founder. Such ſtorms doth ſin raiſe in the conſcience, and the poor ſoul in deſpondence is ready to give himſelf up for loſt, little ſuſpecting that the very tempeſt, which he imagines will be his ruin, is only deſigned to drive him to the haven of reſt.

2. Jonah alone ſeemed unconcerned about the danger. The mariners, affrighted, ran to their prayers, and cried to their idols for help: for the imminent views of death will ſometimes bring thoſe to their knees who never thought of bowing them before; and, life being dearer to them than all beſides, they readily part with their merchandize, and caſt it into the ſea, to lighten the ſhip. Worldly goods are nothing worth when death ſtares men in the face: what folly then, for the ſake of them, to make ſhipwreck of faith and a good conſcience, and loſe an immortal ſoul, infinitely more precious than the dying body! When will men be wiſe? The roaring billows, that terrified the heathen ſeamen, ſerved but to rock Jonah aſleep: he, of all that company, appeared the only perſon inſenſible, though none had ſo much cauſe to be alarmed: into ſuch ſtupefaction doth ſin ſometimes lull the conſcience of the backſlider: he hath loſt all apprehenſion of danger; and even the judgments, which make others tremble, he paſſes over unaffected. From ſuch blindneſs and hardneſs of heart good Lord deliver us!

3. The ſhip-maſter rouſes him from his ſlumbers, and upbraids him with his inſenſibility. What meaneſt thou, O ſleeper? Strange, that a prophet of the Lord ſhould need reproof even from the mouth of a heathen! Ariſe, call upon thy God: delay is ruinous when danger urges. They had cried to their gods in vain; perhaps his was more able to help them; if ſo be that God will think upon us, that we periſh not, as, without immediate help, they knew they muſt. Note, (1.) Even gracious ſouls need ſometimes to be quickened, and ſtirred up from their ſleepy frame of ſpirit to cry unto God. (2.) No danger is ſo great, but, if God think upon us, he is able to ſave us to the uttermoſt.

4. The ſtorm increaſing, notwithſtanding all their endeavours and prayers, they began to ſuſpect that there might be among them ſome atrocious ſinner, on whoſe account the divine diſpleaſure purſued them; and, as was uſual with the heathens, they reſolved to enquire which of them it was, and to refer the deciſion to the lot; and ſo God ordained it, that the lot fell upon Jonah, v. 7. Thus is the iniquity of the ſinner often found out by means he never ſuſpected, and when he thought himſelf moſt ſecure and concealed from detection.

5. They hereupon ſtrictly interrogate the prophet. The lot had ſaid this is the man, and he is called upon to acknowledge his crime, that they might know for whoſe cauſe, or for what cauſe, this evil was upon them: what he had done to provoke God; what was his occupation; whence he came; and to what country he belonged. Note, In order to get our troubles removed, we muſt ſearch diligently into our ſins, which are the cauſe of them.

6. Jonah, without reſerve, makes confeſſion of his crime; and probably, now convicted in his own conſcience, deſired to take to himſelf all the ſhame and puniſhment which he felt he had deſerved. He declares himſelf by nation and religion a Hebrew, which was an aggravation of his guilt; his occupation was that of a prophet of the Moſt High, I fear the Lord, Jehovah, the God of heaven, which hath made the ſea and the dry land, which, though it added to his ſin, yet he owns to God's glory, and in order to the inſtruction of the heathen mariners, who blindly worſhipped gods many, inſtead of the one true and living Jehovah. His crime he owns: he told them that he fled from the preſence of the Lord, rebellious to his command, and running from his duty; for which this judgment was ſent. Note, When we have ſinned, nothing remains but to juſtify God in his judgments, and with penitence to bow into the duſt.

7. The ſeamen appear exceedingly affected with his narrative. Probably they had heard what the God of the Hebrews had done of old, and this increaſed their terrors. With juſt upbraidings therefore of the prophet, who by his wickedneſs had brought them into this imminent danger, they expoſtulate with him, Why haſt thou done this? why didſt thou ſo fooliſhly attempt to fly? and why embark with us, to involve us with thyſelf in danger? Note, (1.) They who profeſs religion, and act unſuitably, deſerve to be reproached. (2.) None know how extenſive and dangerous the conſequence of but one ſin may be.

11. ¶ Then ſaid they unto him, What ſhall we do unto thee, that the ſea may be † calm unto us? (for the ſea ‡ wrought and was tempeſtuous) 12. And he ſaid unto them, Take me up, and caſt me forth into the ſea; ſo ſhall the ſea be calm unto you: for I know that for my ſake this great tempeſt is upon you. 13. Nevertheleſs the men § rowed hard to bring it to the land, [m] but they could not, for the ſea wrought, and was tempeſtuous againſt them. 14. Wherefore they cried unto the LORD, and ſaid, We beſeech thee, O LORD, we beſeech thee, let us not periſh for this man's life, and lay not upon us innocent blood: for [n] thou, O LORD, haſt done as it pleaſed thee. 15. So they took up Jonah, and caſt him forth into the ſea, and [o] the ſea ‖ ceaſed from her raging. 16. Then [p] the men feared the LORD exceedingly, and † offered a ſacrifice unto the LORD, and ‡ made vows. 17. ¶ Now the LORD had prepared a great fiſh to ſwallow up Jonah, and [q] Jonah was in the § belly of the fiſh three days and three nights.

v. 11—17. The criminal is detected by his own confeſſion; the queſtion is, what is to be done with him?

1. They refer the matter to himſelf. Since he was a prophet of the God of the Hebrews, he beſt could inform them what was the likelieſt means to appeaſe his anger, and thereby obtain deliverance from the ſtorm, which raged more furiouſly than ever. Note, When by our ſins we have raiſed a ſtorm of wrath around us, it highly imports us to enquire how it may be appeaſed.

2. Jonah pronounces his own doom, v. 12. He well knew himſelf to be the troubler, and that, till he was caſt into the ſea, there could be no hope of the ſtorm's abating; and therefore he bids them throw him overboard: he would not be his own deſtroyer; yet, conſcious he deſerved to die, he offers himſelf for execution; and chuſes rather himſelf to periſh, than involve the innocent in deſtruction. Note, (1.) They who truly know the evil of ſin, and are deeply humbled under it, are ready to ſubmit to any ſhame or ſuffering, whereby God may be glorified, and reparation be made to the injured. (2.) When ſin hath raiſed a ſtorm, we may never hope for peace till the accurſed thing is removed.

3. Very unwilling to execute this grievous ſentence, the mariners rowed hard for land; but the more they ſtrove, the more the ſea wrought, and was tempeſtuous; ſo that deſpair took place in every countenance, and nothing remained but this laſt experiment, with which they felt the more reluctance to comply on account of the noble ſimplicity and deep humiliation which now probably appeared in the penitent prophet. Note, (1.) When a gracious man, overtaken with a fault, with frank acknowledgement takes ſhame to himſelf, he is entitled to our greateſt compaſſion; nor ſhould we ever by ſeverity aggravate his diſtreſs. (2.) There is no ſtriving againſt God's counſels: his will muſt be done.

4. Before they execute the dread decree, they preſent their importunate ſupplications to God, that he would not impute to them innocent blood, nor cauſe them to periſh for taking away this man's life; when they had deſired to know his will, and acted now, according to the beſt of their light, in conformity thereto; it appearing to be his pleaſure that Jonah ſhould be caſt into the ſea. Note, (1.) In all our emergencies we muſt have recourſe to God in prayer. (2.) When we follow, according to our beſt knowledge, under the guidance of Divine Providence, what appears to be God's will, we are bound with ſatisfiedneſs to truſt him with the iſſue.

5. Jonah is caſt into the ſea, and, to the aſtoniſhment of the mariners, inſtantly the ſtorm ceaſed. They feared the Lord exceedingly, amazed at the ſudden change, and filled with thankfulneſs, offered an immediate ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving, and made vows of future oblations whenever they ſhould reach the ſhore. Thus ſometimes our greateſt loſs proves our greateſt gain. The acquaintance they hereby gained with Iſrael's God amply compenſated for the damage they had ſuſtained by the ſtorm.

6. By a miracle the prophet's life is preſerved. God, who deſigned not to deſtroy but ſave him, had prepared a fiſh, a whale our Lord calls it, Matth. xii. 40. which ſwallowed him alive, and by almighty power he was preſerved three days and three nights, at leaſt part of three days, unhurt in the fiſh's ſtomach, a monument of divine mercy, and an illuſtrious type of him, who, when he had given his life a ranſom for others, lay ſo long in the grave, and roſe again the third day, Matth. xii. 40.

CHAP. II.

Afflictions often prove the beſt phyſic for the ſoul. Jonah is now brought home to God, and cries after him. In his prayer we have, 1. The great diſtreſs and danger he was in, ver. 2, 3, 5, 6. 2. The deſpair he was thereby almoſt reduced to, ver. 4. 3. The encouragement he took in this deplorable condition, ver. 4, 7. 4. The aſſurance he had of God's favour to him, ver. 6, 7. 5. The warning he gives to others, ver. 8. 6. The praiſe of all is given to God, ver. 9. 7. Jonah's deliverance out of the belly of the fiſh, ver. 10.

1. THEN Jonah [a] prayed unto the LORD his God out of the fiſh's belly, 2. And ſaid, I [b] cried † by reaſon of mine affliction unto the LORD, and [c] he heard me; out of the belly of ‡ hell cried I, and thou heardeſt my voice. 3. When my ſoul fainted within me, I remembered the LORD, and my prayer came in unto thee, into thine holy temple. 8. They that obſerve [i] lying vanities forſake their own mercy. 9. But I will ſacrifice unto thee with the voice of [k] thankſgiving, I will pay that that I have vowed: [l] ſalvation is of the LORD.

v. 1—9. Never, to appearance, was ſituation more deſperate than when Jonah was caſt into the ſtormy ocean, unleſs it were when he deſcended into the fiſh's belly: yet even in the loweſt ſtate of miſery God can ſave; and Jonah now is as ſafe in the monſter's ſtomach as if he were on dry land, and finds both power to pray, and fervent deſires after the Lord his God, who thus plainly ſhewed him he had not abandoned him to deſtruction, and thereby engaged him to exerciſe faith in his pardoning grace and preſerving providence. Note, (1.) No place can ſhut out the ſoul from communion with God; wherever we are, the way to a throne of grace is open. (2.) Our encouragement to draw near to God is the humble perſuaſion that he is our God, reconciled to us, and willing to hear and help us in every time of need.

1. He cried and was heard: I cried by reaſon of mine affliction. This was the bleſſed means of driving him to God. Out of the belly of hell I cried, out of the belly of the fiſh, where he ſeemed buried as in his grave; and thou heardeſt my voice, for no prayer of faith returns without an anſwer of peace.

2. He deſcribes his diſtreſſed ſituation, ſunk in the deep, buried in the midſt of the ſeas, compaſſed with the floods, and all the waves and billows running over him. And this was God's doing, v. 3. His life appeared in the moſt imminent danger: he was incloſed with waters, and his head wrapped with ſeaweeds, v. 5. he went down to the bottoms of the mountains, when the fiſh deſcended; and the bars of the earth, ſo deep he ſunk, appeared to be about him for ever: his ſtate helpleſs and hopeleſs. To ſuch diſtreſs are God's deareſt children ſometimes reduced, to ſhew them more eminently the power and grace of God engaged for their deliverance.

3. His heart began to fail him. God's diſpleaſure, ſeen in his wretched caſe, diſcouraged him, and he feared that he was abandoned, and caſt out of God's ſight, as he knew he had juſtly deſerved to be. Thus, when outward trials oppreſs them, God's people are ſometimes ſore beſet with inward fears and unbelief, as if God had utterly forſaken them, and hid his face in diſpleaſure.

4. His heart is encouraged notwithſtanding to truſt ſtill in God; and, in the exerciſe of faith, he directs his prayer to heaven, from whence alone his help could come. When his ſoul fainted, he remembered God, thought upon his power to ſave, reflected on the riches of his grace, and his own paſt experience; and thus his hopes revived, his fears were ſilenced. And in the ſame way muſt every child of God overcome his unbelieving fears; remembering his power and love, who hath engaged to ſave to the uttermoſt all that truſt in him.

5. His prayer was anſwered; it entered into the holy temple above, and God in mercy regarded his ſuffering ſervant, as he gratefully acknowledges to the glory of the Lord his God. Yet haſt thou brought up my life from corruption; either this he ſaid in the fiſh's belly, and it ſpeaks the language of his faith, aſſured God would interpoſe to ſave him; or when he afterwards was caſt on the land, and wrote down this prayer and complaint, he added this to the praiſe of the glory of God, and for the confirmation and encouragement of others in the like caſe, that they might ſee, that none ever truſted God, and were confounded.

6. He gives a warning to others of the vanity of idols, and declares the bleſſedneſs of dependance upon God. They that obſerve lying vanities, forſake their own mercy: no idols can ſave after this ſort. Perhaps he intended alſo herein to reflect upon his own folly in flying from God, whoſe work would have been its own reward, whilſt miſery is the ſure attendant on every departure from him.

7. He ſolemnly engages to offer the grateful ſacrifice of praiſe, and to diſcharge the vow he had made in trouble, which might be ſome ſacrifice which he would offer at the temple at Jeruſalem, or his reſolution to go without delay to Nineveh, in obedience to God's commmand. Note, (1.) Thankſgiving and praiſe are the tribute we owe, and ſhould without ceaſing pay to the God of our mercies. (2.) Every gracious ſoul, when he riſes from his falls, ſets himſelf with redoubled earneſtneſs to the work and ſervice of God.

8. He concludes with aſcribing glory to God. Salvation is of the Lord, and from him alone the temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal ſalvation of his people is to be expected, even from his power and love, and to be acknowledged to his glory. And they who depend on him for all ſhall find, by bleſſed experience, that he hath never failed them who truſt him.

10. ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto the fiſh, and [a] it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land.

[a] Chap. i. 17. Hoſ. vi. 2. Mat. xii. 40.

v. 10. In anſwer to his prayer, he is diſcharged from his priſon. He who commanded the fiſh to receive him, now obliges him to diſgorge his prey; and once more the prophet is ſafe on ſhore, as one raiſed from the dead. Thus God reſtores the poor ſinner, when he is often ready to deſpair of himſelf, and raiſes him from the death of ſin to the life of righteouſneſs. Jonah's deliverance was alſo the type of the reſurrection of Jeſus, and is a pledge of ours. When we ſee what God hath done for him, we need not think it incredible he ſhould raiſe our bodies from the duſt.

CHAP. III.

In this chapter we have, 1. Jonah's miſſion renewed, and the command a ſecond time given him to go preach at Nineveh, ver. 1, 2. 2. Jonah's meſſage faithfully delivered, ver. 3, 4. 3. The repentance and reformation of the Ninevites hereupon, ver. 5—9. 4. God's gracious revocation of the ſentence, and the preventing of the threatned ruin, ver. 10.

1. AND the word of the LORD came unto Jonah the ſecond time, ſaying, 2. Ariſe, go unto Nineveh that great city, and preach unto it the preaching [a] that I bid thee. 3. So Jonah aroſe and went unto Nineveh according to the word of the LORD: (now Nineveh was † an exceeding great city of three days journey) 4. And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey, and he cried, and ſaid, [b] Yet forty days and Nineveh ſhall be overthrown.

v. 1—4. No more diſobedient to the heavenly viſion, we now find Jonah ready to go; and God, though he might juſtly have diſmiſſed him from his ſervice, employs him again.

1. God ſends him the ſecond time to Nineveh, commanding him to preach what he had before ordered him; and herein he gave him a freſh token of his reconciliation and regard, and put him once more on the proof of his fidelity.

2. Jonah inſtantly proceeds on his journey, no longer deterred by any conſiderations: his afflictions had effectually wrought upon him, and his ready obedience ſhewed the truth of his repentance. Boldly therefore he delivered his meſſage, going into the ſtreets of that vaſt city, which, by hiſtorians, is ſaid to have been ſixty miles in compaſs; and crying aloud, as God's herald, Yet forty days, and Nineveh ſhall be overthrown, by ſome immediate ſtroke of divine vengeance, and moſt probably he informed them that their ſins were the cauſe of this terrible judgment denounced againſt them: the time is ſhort, yet it is infinite nite mercy that they have this ſpace allotted them to repent: one day's journey he advanced with this awful warning, and waited the returning day to proceed farther through the city. Note, (1.) God's ſervants muſt apply themſelves to his work according to his word, however dangerous or difficult the ſervice may appear. (2.) God's meſſages to his prophets cannot alter; the impenitent ſinner muſt periſh, but thoſe who return to him ſhall find mercy. (3.) They who carry God's warnings to a careleſs world muſt cry aloud, and by their earneſtneſs ſhew how deeply they are affected with the dangers they foretel. (4.) Great and wicked cities have need to tremble; an offended God can at his pleaſure inſtantly ſwallow them up, or devour them as Sodom with fire from heaven. (5.) What ſinner would not tremble, if aſſured that forty days ſhould bring him to the grave? and yet he ſits unconcerned, though uncertain whether ſo many hours or minutes are allotted him.

5. ¶ So the people of Nineveh [c] believed GOD, and proclaimed a faſt, and put on ſackcloth, from the greateſt of them even to the leaſt of them. 6. For word came unto the king of Nineveh, and he aroſe from his throne, and he laid his robe from him, and covered him with ſackcloth, and [d] ſat in aſhes. 7. And he cauſed it to be proclaimed, and publiſhed through Nineveh (by the decree of the king and his † nobles) ſaying, [e] Let neither man nor beaſt, herd nor flock, taſte any thing; let them not feed, nor drink water. 8. But let man and beaſt be covered with ſackcloth, and cry mightily unto GOD: yea, let them turn every one from his evil way, and from [f] the violence that is in their hands. 9. [g] Who can tell if GOD will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we periſh not? 10. ¶ And [h] GOD ſaw their works, that they turned from their evil way, and GOD repented of the evil that he had ſaid that he would do unto them, and he did it not.

v. 5—10. One day's preaching effectually wrought upon the Ninevites, and rendered it unneceſſary for the prophet to proceed any farther. Aſtoniſhing to tell! they repented at the preaching of Jonah; whilſt Iſrael, under ſo many prophets, ſo long riſing up and ſpeaking to them, repented not. Therefore ſhall theſe Ninevites riſe up in the judgment, and condemn them with all others, who enjoying richer means of grace, continue hardened and impenitent under them.

1. They believed God. Such divine power and efficacious grace accompanied the prophet's word, that conviction ſeized their conſciences; and they inſtantly began to conſider how they might avert their impending doom, and obtain mercy with this offended God. Note, It is a bleſſed ſymptom for good when the ſinner attends to God's word, and receives it as true, bowing in deep conviction under the charge laid againſt him.

2. A general faſt is immediately proclaimed and obſerved. Tidings of this dreadful ſentence were quickly carried to the palace; and far from repreſenting the prophet as a madman, or diſturber of the peace, the nobles and people received him as an ambaſſador from God, and reported his meſſage with deep ſerioufneſs to their king, probably Pul, 2 Kings xv. 19. whereupon he roſe from his throne, deeply affected with the prophet's word, and laying aſide the enſigns of royalty, covered himſelf with ſackcloth, and ſat in aſhes; a noble example for his people's imitation, and a becoming expreſſion of his own unfeigned humiliation. And all the people at his command, from the greateſt to the leaſt, copied after their royal maſter, and lay in ſackcloth, deprecating that vengeance which all had provoked, and which was ready to conſume them together. According to the decree of the king and his nobles, a faſt is kept moſt ſtrict and ſolemn, nor man nor beaſt may taſte ought, not ſo much as water; but, covered with ſackcloth, they are enjoined to cry mightily to God; even the beaſts, for lack of food, would lift up their inarticulate voices: and men, women, and children muſt unite in their prayers for mercy, if yet mercy may be found. Nor are they merely to make profeſſion of penitence, but inſtantly muſt amend their lives; without which, their prayers would be but hypocriſy: let them turn every one from his evil way, whatever his peculiar ſin hath been, and eſpecially from the violence that is in their hands, fraud and oppreſſion being their reigning iniquities. And when this is done, Who can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we periſh not? The wrath was great, their provocations aggravated, their judgment juſt; but God is not inexorable, there is yet hope, and that ſhould encourage and haſten their repentance. Note, (1.) The higher our ſtation is, the more exemplary ſhould be our conduct. (2.) The way not to break under the ſword of God's judgments, is to bow under the rod of his admonitions. (3.) Fervent prayer is mightily effectual; as long as a ſinner is ſtirred up to cry to God, there is yet hope. (4.) In times of national diſtreſs, all muſt unite, to deprecate the wrath which is threatned. (5.) They who faſt for ſin, muſt turn from the practice and love of it, elſe the mere afflicting the body availeth not. (6.) The great encouragement to the ſinner to turn to God is, that there is not only a peradventure of mercy, but an aſſurance of it confirmed by the unchangeable oath of the God who cannot lie.

Before Chriſt 862.

3. God ſaw their works, and heard their prayers; he obſerved their faith in his word, and the change wrought amongſt them; he compaſſionated their diſtreſs, he reverſed his threatnings, and extended to them the mercy they ſo earneſtly beſought. He delighteth not in the death of any ſinner, it is only by their own wilful impenitence that they bring down his wrath upon them.

1. BUT [a] it diſpleaſed Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry. 2. And he prayed unto the LORD, and ſaid, I pray thee, O LORD, was not this my ſaying, when I was yet in my country? Therefore [b] I fled before unto Tarſhiſh: for I knew that [c] thou art a gracious God, and merciful, ſlow to anger, and of great kindneſs, and repenteſt thee of the evil. 3. Therefore now, O LORD, [d] take, I beſeech thee, my life from me; for [e] it is better for me to die than to live. 4. ¶ Then ſaid the LORD, [f] † Doſt thou well to be angry?

[f] Mat. xx. 15.
† Or art thou greatly angry?

v. 1—4. Never was perverſeneſs more ſtrange and unaccountable than here appears in this angry prophet.

1. He is exceedingly diſpleaſed at the Ninevites repentance, and the mercy extended to them, which one ſhould have thought would have been the very joy of his heart. Perhaps he had imbibed the common Jewiſh prejudice againſt the heathen, and was unwilling the crumbs of mercy ſhould be caſt to theſe dogs. Probably alſo he eſteemed this a deep reflection upon Iſrael, that heathens ſhould repent ſo readily, and they continue obdurate. But what ſeems moſt to have touched him, was his own reputation, leſt he ſhould be counted a falſe prophet. So apt are we to be ſelfiſh, and more concerned about the vain world's opinion, than about God's glory, and the good of men's ſouls.

2. He dares expoſtulate with God on the ſubject. It is ſaid he prayed, v. 2. but very unlike was this prayer from what he had ſo lately offered up to God. He begins with juſtifying himſelf to God for his flight to Tarſhiſh, inſolently inſinuating that he was then in the right, having foreſeen this would be the conſequence; becauſe, as he ſuggeſts, he knew God's gracious character, and his readineſs to receive and pardon returning ſinners: a moſt amazing cauſe indeed for his diſpleaſure. So ready are paſſionate people to ſuggeſt the moſt abſurd reaſons to juſtify their anger. And now in a paſſion he is tired of life, and wants God inſtantly to diſpatch him, as if it was better for him to die than to live, and bear the reproach of a falſe prophet: a temper indeed very unfit for a dying man; but thoſe who are blinded by their paſſions are deſtitute of reflection, and uſually deaf to advice.

3. God juſtly rebukes him for his impatience and cauſeleſs perverſeneſs. Doſt thou well to be angry? what a mild rebuke for ſo great a provocation! If God be thus gentle, much more ought we to be ſo, and uſe that ſoft anſwer which turneth away wrath: or, is doing good diſpleaſing to thee, which ſhould have been his delight? Surely never was greater forbearance; inſtead of ſtriking him dead in judgment, as he deſerved, the Lord kindly ſeeks to ſoften his reſentment, and bring him to a better mind. What miſerable, eternally miſerable ſouls had many been, if God had given them their wiſhes, and ſent that death they impatiently invoked.

5. So Jonah went out of the city, and ſat on the eaſt-ſide of the city, and there made him a booth, and ſat under it in the ſhadow, till he might ſee what would become of the city. 6. And the LORD God prepared a † gourd, and made it to come over Jonah, that it might be a ſhadow over his head, to deliver him from his grief. So Jonah ‡ was exceeding glad of the gourd. 7. But God prepared a worm when the morning roſe the next day, and it ſmote the gourd that it withered. 8. And it came to paſs when the ſun did ariſe, that God prepared ‖ a vehement eaſt-wind; and the ſun beat upon the

the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and [g] wiſhed in himſelf to die, and ſaid, It is better for me to die than to live. 9. And God ſaid to Jonah, † Doſt thou well to be angry for the gourd? And he ſaid, ‡ I do well to be angry even unto death. 10. Then ſaid the LORD, Thou haſt had pity on the gourd for the which thou haſt not laboured, neither madeſt it grow, which § came up in a night, and periſhed in a night: 11. And ſhould not I ſpare Nineveh [h] that great city, wherein are more than ſixſcore thouſand perſons, [i] that cannot diſcern between their right hand and their left hand, and alſo much cattle?

‡ Or, I am greatly angry?

[h] Chap. i. 2. & iii. 3.
[i] Deut. i. 39.

v. 5—11. The beginning of ſtrife is uſually like the letting-out of water; paſſion having once taken the reins, goes from evil to worſe.

1. Jonah retires in ſullen ſilence, and waits without the city, to ſee what would become of it; having made him a booth with boughs of trees, to ſhelter him from the ſun and rain. Probably he thought, if the greater judgments were removed, ſome leſſer ones might be inflicted, and ſave his credit as a prophet; or he might preſume the repentance of the Ninevites would be of no long continuance, and then their ruin would return upon them.

2. Though in his preſent ſpirit he little deſerved any favour from God, yet he who is good to the evil and unthankful, thought upon him in his incommodious habitation, and cauſed a gourd, or, as others interpret it, a tree called the Ricinus, or Palma Chriſti, to ſpring up ſuddenly, and ſpread its ſhadow over him, to deliver him from his grief: probably the heat of the ſun was very troubleſome, and added to his other vexations. Note, (1.) They who vex themſelves with imaginary ills, are often ſuffered to feel real miſery. (2.) Though we are often froward children, God is a tender father, and pities us even when we deſerve puniſhment.

3. Jonah was exceedingly glad of this gourd; he rejoiced with a great joy, as the words may be rendered; exceſſive in his gladneſs, as he had been in his anger. So eaſily do hot and haſty ſpirits run to extremes; and they who vex themſelves about the loſs of worldly trifles, are uſually as eaſily and as much elated with their gain.

4. God ſmote the gourd by a worm he had prepared next morning, and left Jonah as much expoſed as ever; and, to make him feel more ſenſibly the loſs, he ſent a vehement eaſt-wind, which with the hot ſun-beams beat upon him; ſo that he was quite overpowered, and ready to die with the heat, from which he had no ſhelter. So quickly fading are all our earthly comforts, when God pleaſes to ſend a worm to our gourd; and when we are moſt happy in them, perhaps even then the inſtruments are at work to deſtroy them. In all ſublunary goods therefore we ſhould rejoice as if we rejoiced not, that we may be ready to bleſs God when he takes away, as well as when he gives.

5. Jonah relapſes into his former fretfulneſs, and with impatient diſcontent at the loſs of the gourd, again wiſhes for death, as a deliverance from his miſery, v. 8. Thus inordinate affection lays a foundation for inordinate affliction.

6. God expoſtulates with him on his ſin and folly. Doſt thou well to be angry for the gourd? Note, It becomes us in all our loſſes and croſſes to check our inordinate diſcontent and anger, and aſk, Do I well to be angry? ſo long, ſo often, on ſuch frivolous occaſions? One moment's reflection ſhould ſhame and ſilence us.

7. Far from ſtanding abaſhed at this reproof, he daringly vindicates his perverſeneſs: I do well to be angry even unto death. Thus do ungoverned paſſions bear down reaſon and conſcience; and, deaf to conviction, men vindicate the moſt glaring abſurdity and guilt. Nay, ſelf-murderers, many fret themſelves into diſeaſes of body, as well as bring ſin upon their ſouls, and will indulge their fretfulneſs and rage, though death be the conſequence.

8. God applies to him for his conviction the caſe of this gourd, about which he ſo vexed himſelf. If he was ſo concerned about a poor ſhrub, the growth of a night, the creature of a day, which he had uſed no pains to plant or water; with much more pity might God well regard the vaſt city of Nineveh, where, beſides the other inhabitants, were more than ſix ſcore thouſand infants, unable to diſtinguiſh good from evil, beſides much cattle. The animal life was far preferable to the vegetable, and much more immortal ſouls to both; and here were thouſands, and ſuch as never by actual tranſgreſſion had offended. Arguments which ſhould for ever ſilence his diſcontent, and lead him to adore the tranſcendent mercy and righteouſneſs of God. We may reaſonably hope the prophet was convinced, and humbled to the duſt, and that he left us this faithful record of his ſin and folly, that we might be warned againſt the like perverſeneſs, or be encouraged to repent of it, and find mercy.

THE EVANGELICAL EXPOSITOR;

OR, A

Upon the PROPHECY of

MICAH.

WE ſhall have ſome account of this prophet in the firſt verſe of the book of his prophecy; and therefore ſhall here only obſerve, that being cotemporary with the prophet Iſaiah (only that he begun to propheſy a little after him) there is a near reſemblance between that prophet's prophecy and this; and there is a prediction of the advancement and eſtabliſhment of the goſpel-church, which both of them have, almoſt in the ſame words, that out of the mouth of two ſuch witneſſes ſo great a word might be eſtabliſhed. Compare Iſa. ii. 2, 3. with Micah iv. 1, 2. Iſaiah's prophecy is ſaid to be concerning Judah and Jeruſalem, but Micah's concerning Samaria and Jeruſalem; for though this prophecy be dated only by the reigns of the kings of Judah, yet it refers to the kingdom of Iſrael, the approaching ruin of which, in the captivity of the ten tribes, he plainly foretels, and ſadly laments. The ſcope of the whole is, 1. To convince ſinners of their ſins, by ſetting them in order before them, charging both Iſrael and Judah with idolatry, covetouſneſs, oppreſſion, contempt of the word of God; and their rulers eſpecially, both in church and ſtate, with the abuſe of their power: and alſo by ſhewing them the judgments of God ready to break in upon them for their ſins. 2. To comfort God's people with promiſes of mercy and deliverance, eſpecially with an aſſurance of the coming of the Meſſiah, and of the grace of the goſpel through him. It is remarkable concerning this prophecy, and confirms its authority, that we find two quotations out of it, made publicly upon very ſolemn occaſions, and both referring to very great events. (1.) One is, a prediction of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, chap. iii. 12. which we find quoted in the Old Teſtament, by the Elders of the land, Jer. xxvi. 17, 18. in juſtification of Jeremiah, when he foretold the judgments of God coming upon Jeruſalem, and to ſtay the proceedings of the court againſt him. Micah (ſay they) foretold, that Zion ſhould be plowed as a field, and Hezekiah did not put him to death; why then ſhould we puniſh Jeremiah for ſaying the ſame? (2.) Another is, a prediction of the birth of Chriſt, chap. v. 2. which we find quoted in the New Teſtament, by the chief prieſts and ſcribes of the people, in anſwer to Herod's enquiry, where Chriſt ſhould be born? Matt. ii. 5, 6. for ſtill we find, that to him bear all the prophets witneſs.

Before Chriſt 750.

v. 1—7. Micah, or Micaiah, the author of this prophecy, was a Moraſthite, ſo named from the place of his nativity. He lived under the beſt and worſt of Judah's princes, and in all times of proſperity or adverſity faithfully declared the word which God gave him concerning Samaria and Jeruſalem, the capitals of the two kingdoms, the judgments which were ready to light upon them being the great burden of this prophecy.

1. A ſolemn call is given to pay deep attention to the word about to be delivered. Hear, all ye people of Judah and Iſrael, hearken, O earth, and all that therein is; if theſe refuſe to liſten, the very inanimate earth, trembling before the Lord, ſhall condemn their inſenſibility and hardneſs of heart: and let the Lord God be witneſs againſt you, if ye diſregard or deſpiſe theſe warnings, that I have faithfully delivered my meſſage, and that your blood is on your own heads; even the Lord from his holy temple in heaven, from whence he beholds the inhabitants of the world, and from thence ſends down his judgments on thoſe who are diſobedient to his word. Note, They who turn a deaf ear to the admonitions of God's miniſters, ſhall ſhortly be terribly convinced by experience of the threatnings they would not believe.

2. The deſolating judgments of God are foretold, which were ready to overtake them. The Lord cloathed with vengeance deſcends to deſtroy them: under his feet their ſtrongeſt fortreſſes are trod into the duſt, and the high places of their idols demoliſhed. Their princes and great men, with all their lofty looks, are brought low, and the valleys cleft, the loweſt of the people ſharing in the general calamity; and all unable to reſiſt his arm, as wax melts before the fire, or to bear up againſt his judgments, that as a torrent ſpread deſolation on every ſide. Samaria, the capital, ſhall then be laid in ruins, and be made as the furrows of the field, razed from the foundations, and ſcarce one ſtone left upon another, v. 6. which, as Joſephus relates, was fully accompliſhed by Hircanus. Note, When God ariſes to judgment, no place can protect the guilty.

3. The cauſe of all their miſeries is their ſin; and if it be aſked, What is the tranſgreſſion of Jacob? the crime peculiarly provoking; Is it not Samaria? the calf, and idolatry there committed: And what are the high places of Judah? are they not Jeruſalem? ſet up there with moſt impious effrontery againſt God's temple; yea, in the very courts of the ſanctuary an altar is reared to idols, 2 Kings xvi. 10—18. Note, (1.) Sin is at the bottom of all ſuffering. (2.) Great cities and perſons, whoſe bad conduct and example ſpread the contagion of iniquity, ſhall be firſt and deepeſt in puniſhment.

4. The demolition of their idols, as well as themſelves, is threatned. They ſhall be broken in pieces by the Aſſyrians, and made utterly deſolate. Such as were not worth carrying away for a ſpoil, ſhall be ſtripped of their ornaments, and left as naked logs; and all the hires thereof ſhall be burnt with fire; their palaces and ſubſtance, which they eſteemed the gifts of their idols, and the hire of their idolatry: thus what they gathered of the hire of an harlot, ſhall return to the hire of an harlot; be given to their idolatrous enemies, who would regard the ſpoil as the reward ſent by their gods, and ſpend it in their ſervice. Or the ſenſe may be, that their wealth, which was as ill-gotten as the money earned by proſtitution, would be, like it, under the curſe of God, and quickly conſumed. Note, The wages got by ſin will be ever earned with a curſe, and ſuch gain cannot proſper.

8. Therefore [o] I will wail and howl, [p] I will go ſtript and naked: [q] I will make a wailing like the dragons, and mourning as the owls. 9. For † her wound is incurable, for [r] it is come unto Judah: he is come unto the gate of my people, even to Jeruſalem. 10. ¶ [s] Declare ye it not at Gath, weep ye not at all: in the houſe of ‡ Aphrah [t] roll thyſelf in the duſt. 11. Paſs ye away, thou § inhabitant of Saphir, [u] having thy ſhame naked; the inhabitant of ‖ Zaanan came not forth in the mourning of † Beth-ezel, he ſhall receive of you his ſtanding. 12. For the inhabitant of Maroth waited carefully for good; but [x] evil came down from the LORD unto the gate of Jeruſalem. 13. O thou inhabitant of Lachiſh, bind the chariot to the ſwift beaſt: ſhe is the beginning of the ſin to the daughter of Zion: for the tranſgreſſions of Iſrael were found in thee. 14. Therefore ſhalt thou give preſents to Moreſheth-gath: the houſes of ‡ Achzib ſhall be a lie to the kings of Iſrael. 15. Yet will I bring an heir unto thee, O inhabitant of Mareſhah: § he ſhall come unto Adullam the glory of Iſrael. 16. v. 8—16. We have here,

1. The prophet deeply lamenting the deſolations he beheld approaching; wailing as a dragon, and mourning as an owl, becauſe the wound is incurable; the decree being gone forth againſt Iſrael, and their impenitence obſtinate and determined, and now the Aſſyrian army is at the very gate of Jeruſalem. Note, True prophets are themſelves ſore afflicted at the view of the threatnings they are obliged to declare; and ſo far from taking a delight in theſe ſad meſſages of woe, they weep over ſinners whilſt they warn them.

2. Other cities are called upon to join the prophet's mourning, but withal are admoniſhed not to declare it in Gath, nor weep ſo as to let the Philiſtines ſee their grief, who would triumph with malicious pleaſure in their calamities; and every gracious ſoul wiſhes to conceal the ſins or ſorrows of God's people, at which the wicked would rejoice. In ſilent grief they are commanded to roll themſelves in the duſt, in the houſe of Aphrah, the houſe of duſt, all their cities being reduced to ruinous heaps. The inhabitant of Saphir, once, as the name imports, fair and beautiful, muſt now go naked into captivity, ſtripped of all their wealth and riches. The inhabitant of Zaanan, once numerous as a flock, came not forth in the mourning of Beth-ezel, to condole with her, or to help her, being too much engaged with their own miſeries; for he ſhall receive of you his ſtanding; the enemy encamping near them, and making them pay dear for the reſiſtance their city made againſt him, v. 11. The inhabitant of Maroth waited carefully for good, hoping at laſt to ſee ſome ſtop put to the ravages of the Aſſyrians; but were quite in deſpair, when the evil came down from the Lord unto the gate of Jeruſalem, and they beheld the enemy preparing to beſiege it, v. 12. Lachiſh is now bid to flee, or rather ironically her attempts to do ſo are derided, ſhe being doomed with the reſt to captivity. She is the beginning of ſin to the daughter of Zion: lying contiguous to Iſrael, this city became firſt infected; and the idolatry the inhabitants had learned, ſpread through the land of Judah; and therefore, as ringleaders in ſin, they juſtly deſerve ſevereſt judgment, the iniquities of the land lying chiefly at their door, v. 13. In vain by preſents would they court the Philiſtines of Moreſheth-gath to aſſiſt them; though they promiſed them fair, they would fail them in the day of trial. The houſes of Achzib ſhall be a lie to the kings of Iſrael, as the name Achzib ſignifies, v. 14. Mareſhah alſo ſhall be a prey; God will bring an heir to her, one who ſhould ſeize the country, as if it were his by inheritance. He ſhall come unto Adullam the glory of Iſrael; ſhall ſeize this fortreſs on which they truſted; or even to the glory of Iſrael, to Jeruſalem itſelf, v. 15. Make thee bald, and poll thee for thy delicate children; which ſeems addreſſed to the land in general: enlarge thy baldneſs as the eagle; ſhew every expreſſive ſign of woe; for they are gone into captivity from thee: The prophet ſpeaks of it as already done; for what God decrees is as ſure to come to paſs, as if it were that moment accompliſhed.

v. 1—5. It is true both of nations and individuals, that they would never have been ſufferers, if they had not firſt been ſinners.

1. The ſins of this people are brought to light. With deep contrivance, even on their beds, they planned their wicked deſigns; and having in the day caſt their greedy eyes on ſome field or houſe which lay convenient for them, they deviſed how to diſpoſſeſs the owner, and, like Ahab, ſeize the heritage: and, eager to put their ſchemes in execution, no ſooner does the morning break, than they are in haſte to be at their evil work; and having the power in their hands, ſtick at no oppreſſion, fraud, or injuſtice, to accompliſh their deſigns, careleſs about the miſeries they may entail upon the unhappy families of thoſe who fall the victims of their covetouſneſs. Note, (1.) Where inordinate love of gain poſſeſſes the heart, the very feelings of humanity are often baniſhed. (2.) The more deſign and deliberation there is in ſin, the more exceeding ſinful it becomes. (3.) They who abuſe their power to oppreſſion, will find a greater than they to eſpouſe the cauſe of the injured.

2. God threatens them with condign puniſhment. They flattered themſelves they could as eaſily eſcape the curſe, as they had broken the commands of God, and haughtily looked down on their inferiors, and deſpiſed the warnings of the prophets; but God will deviſe an evil againſt them, the Aſſyrian invaſion, from which they cannot remove their necks; and in this time of evil, diſtreſs, and perplexity, the lofty looks of the proud ſhall be brought low; for pride will ſurely ſooner or later have a fall, v. 3. To ſuch miſery would they be then reduced, that they would be a proverb in the mouth of every beholder; inſulted by their enemies, and by their friends bitterly lamented; the general cry will be, We are utterly ſpoiled; their perſons captives; their ſubſtance plundered; their land poſſeſſed by ſtrangers; their portion changed, and given into the hands of the heathen. Turning away, he hath divided our fields; either God in anger hath turned from them, and given them up to the ſpoil; or the Aſſyrian conqueror, before he retired, divided their land among others; ſo that now they ſhould neither have the country to divide, as in the days of Joſhua, nor people to inhabit it, nor a congregation of the Lord, wherein to caſt the lot before him. Note, (1.) What is got by fraud, will uſually be no abiding poſſeſſion. (2.) There is a righteous God, who will ſhortly deal with proud oppreſſors according to their deſerts.

6. † [g] Propheſy ye not, ſay they to them that propheſy: they ſhall not propheſy to them, that they ſhall not take ſhame. 7. ¶ O thou that art named the houſe of Jacob, is the ſpirit of the LORD ‡ ſtraitned? are theſe his doings? do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly? 8. Even § of late my people is riſen up as an enemy: ye pull off the robe with the garment from them that paſs by ſecurely, as men averſe from war. 9. v. 6—11. They who chuſe their own deluſions, are juſtly given up to them. The ſins and puniſhments of this people exactly correſpond.

1. Their perſecution of the prophets is puniſhed by depriving them of theſe faithful miniſters, and abandoning them to their own inventions. Propheſy not, ſay they to them that propheſy; they could not bear their harſh admonitions, nor patiently hear the judgments they denounced, and therefore enjoined them ſilence. Thus they who will not be reformed, hate to be reproved, and ſtill ſeek to ſilence the faithful miniſters who will not ſuffer them to go on quietly in their iniquities, but denounce thoſe terrors of the Lord which diſturb their repoſe. Some read the words Propheſy not, as addreſſed to the true prophets; but propheſy ye, the falſe prophets, who flattered them in their iniquities: ſuch teachers they choſe, as with lies and falſehood lulled them aſleep, promiſing them peace, though they added drunkenneſs to thirſt, the companions or encouragers of their wickedneſs; and though they abuſed their bleſſings ſo vilely, propheſying of wine and ſtrong drink, the beſt news in a drunkard's ears; he ſhall be the prophet of this people. For ſuch abominable conduct God expoſtulates with them, O thou that art named the houſe of Jacob, glorying in their deſcent from this patriarch; is the Spirit of the Lord ſtraitned? will their prohibition ſtop God's Spirit? and when he ſpeaks, can the prophets forbear? Or will they limit him to viſions of peace, and reſtrain him from foretelling the judgments they provoked? Are theſe his doings? does ſuch conduct become the houſe of Jacob? or, is this like God's people? or, doth God delight in vengeance? No: they forced him to the ſtrange work. Do not my words, ſaith he, do good to him that walketh uprightly? If they enjoy not the bleſſing, they have only themſelves to blame, who by their impenitence put good things from them. For theſe things therefore God gives them up to their own deluſions, and bids his prophets be ſilent. They ſhall not propheſy to them, that they ſhall not take ſhame; either that the prophets may not expoſe themſelves to the inſults they had met with; or that they ſhould reprove the people no more, who, as they had choſen, v. 11. lying prophets as their ſin, ſhall be curſt with them as their plague, and a heavier one cannot light upon them. Note, (1.) They who are vile themſelves, chuſe thoſe for teachers who moſt reſemble them, and from whom they leaſt fear reproof. (2.) None hate God's word, but thoſe who walk contrary thereto: the upright delight in it, and adore the juſtice of the wrath therein revealed, as well as the riches of the grace. (3.) Many are happy when their miniſters who diſturbed them are removed or ſilenced, not knowing the wrath and reprobacy which is herein contained.

2. Their oppreſſion ſhall be puniſhed with captivity. Even of late my people is riſen up as an enemy; as when the Iſraelites fell upon their brethren, 2 Chron. xxviii. 6. or they grew more and more oppreſſive. Ye pull off the robe with the garment; ſtripping the poor quite naked, and this without the leaſt provocation; from thoſe who paſs by ſecurely, little ſuſpecting ſuch violence; as men averſe from war, peaceable themſelves, they thought to paſs unmoleſted. Nay, to ſuch a pitch of inhumanity they advanced, that they ſpared not helpleſs women and children, plundering their pleaſant houſes: and from their defenceleſs children have ye taken away my glory for ever; enſlaving them, and ſelling them to the heathen; thus depriving them of all the bleſſings of God's worſhip for ever, and robbing him of his glory. But God will give them according to their deeds: the oppreſſors ſhall in their turn be oppreſſed. Ariſe ye, and depart; prepare for captivity; for this is not your reſt: you flattered yourſelves with an abiding manſion here, but God hath decreed the contrary. Becauſe it is polluted, it ſhall deſtroy you even with a ſore deſtruction; the land ſhall ſhake them out, as the Canaanites of old, and the Chaldean ſword ſhall ſpread dreadful ravages among them, the juſt puniſhment of their cruelty and oppreſſion. Note, (1.) To oppreſs the fatherleſs and widows is peculiarly criminal, and God will ſurely be the avenger of their wrongs. (2.) This world is not our reſt; we muſt not think of it here below: it is polluted, and every thing around us is ready to communicate defilement. We muſt ariſe and depart, weaned from it in affection, and paſſing through it as a pilgrim through a ſtrange land, careful to avoid the pollutions that are in it, and haſtening on to our only true reſt, which is above with God in glory.

12. ¶ I will ſurely aſſemble, O Jacob, all of thee: I will ſurely [k] gather the remnant of Iſrael, I will put them together as the ſheep of Bozrah, as the flock in the midſt of their fold: they ſhall make great noiſe by reaſon of the multitude of men. 13. v. 12, 13. God ſtill in judgment remembers mercy. The chapter cloſes with a gracious promiſe of the adored Meſſiah.

The Lord will aſſemble the ſcattered remnant of his people, and unite them in one glorious fold, where they ſhall together rejoice aloud under their divine Shepherd's care; which was accompliſhed when by the preaching of the goſpel God's ſpiritual Iſrael were called into his church, and rejoiced in his ſalvation. The breaker is gone up before them, Chriſt Jeſus, who hath born down all oppoſition from ſin and Satan, and opened a way for his ranſomed to paſs over, eſpecially by his reſurrection and aſcenſion, leading their captivity captive: they have broken up, and have paſſed through the gate, and are gone out by it; made more than conquerors through his grace, and enabled triumphant to paſs through the gate of death: and their king ſhall paſs before them, and the Lord on the head of them; Jeſus the captain of their ſalvation leading the way, opening the kingdom of heaven to all believers, and bringing many ſons unto glory, even all that the Father hath given him, that hoſt which no man can number.

Some ſuppoſe this to be ſtill a continued threatning, that they ſhall be aſſembled as ſheep for the ſlaughter, and cry out in their diſtreſs; whilſt the Aſſyrians, with their king at their head, under the divine guidance, ſhall enter by the breach into the city, and lead forth the people with their king captives to Babylon; and this ſenſe is very ſuitable to the foregoing verſes.

CHAP. III.

It is needful with ſome ſinners to rebuke them ſharply; nor muſt the prophet of the Lord fear the faces or frowns of men. 1. He reproves and threatens the oppreſſing princes, ver. 1—4. and falſe and flattering prophets, ver. 5—8. 2. He gives them their leſſon jointly, as acting in conjunction for the ruin of the kingdom, of which they ſhould ſee the ruins, ver. 9—12.

1. AND I ſaid, Hear, I pray you, O heads of Jacob, and ye princes of the houſe of Iſrael; [a] Is it not for you to know judgment? 2. Who hate the good, and love the evil, who pluck off their ſkin from off them, and their fleſh from off their bones: 3. Who alſo [b] eat the fleſh of my people, and flay their ſkin from off them, and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot, and [c] as fleſh within the caldron. 4. Then [d] ſhall they cry unto the LORD, but he will not hear them: he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themſelves ill in their doings. 5. ¶ Thus ſaith the LORD [e] concerning the prophets that make my people err, that [f] bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace: and [g] he that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war againſt him. 6. [h] Therefore night ſhall be unto you that ye ſhall not have a viſion, and it ſhall be dark unto you, that ye ſhall not divine, and the ſun ſhall go down over the prophets, and the day ſhall be dark over them. 7. Then ſhall the ſeers be aſhamed, and the diviners confounded: yea, they ſhall all cover their † lips, for there is no anſwer of God.

v. 1—7. The higher the ſtation, the more ſacred the office, the more dangerouſly influential will be an ill example, and the more aggravated is every tranſgreſſion. The princes and prieſts, who ſhould have been the ſupport of religion, are chief in ſin, and ſhall be chief in ſuffering.

1. The princes are arraigned and condemned. With great boldneſs the prophet charges their crimes upon their conſciences, and bids them hear what the prince of the kings of the earth hath decreed concerning them. The duty of their ſtation, as magiſtrates, required that they ſhould be wiſe to know and impartial to adminiſter juſtice: but the very reverſe had their conduct been. They hate the good, the righteous man and his cauſe; and love the evil, approving the wicked, and countenancing them; or they hated goodneſs itſelf, and delighted in wickedneſs and oppreſſion, like wild beaſts tearing the flock of God's paſture, fleecing them to the very ſkin by their exactions and rapine; yea, to the very marrow they devoured them, breaking their bones, and chopping them as for the pot. For which barbarity and rapaciouſneſs God threatens to caſt out their prayer in the day of diſtreſs, and turn a deaf ear to their cries, as they have done to the cries of the oppreſſed. And juſt will be the retaliation.

2. The falſe prophets are next convicted, and their doom is read. They cauſed the people to err by their lies, crying peace, when God had ſaid there is no peace: they bite with the teeth; either gnaſh upon the true prophets for their reproofs, or ſo long as the people fed them well, they flattered them in their ſins: and he that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war againſt him, denounce God's judgments againſt him, or ſtir up his neighbours or the princes to perſecute him. For which wickedneſs they ſhall be brought into the night of dark and diſmal calamities, and be for ever ſilenced, experience giving the lie to their divinations, or becauſe of divination ſhall theſe evils come upon them; all their proſperity ſhall be at an end, their ſun ſhall ſet, and darkneſs and diſmay ſurround them: confounded and aſhamed, they ſhall no more dare open their lips; for now it ſhall be evident to all, that they never had an anſwer from God, tho' they made uſe of his ſacred name to preface their pretended revelations. Let thoſe who uſurp the office of God's miniſters without a divine call remember the day is near when their ſin and ſhame ſhall be made manifeſt to all.

8. ¶ But truly I am [i] full of power by the Spirit of the LORD, and of judgment, and of might, [k] to declare unto Jacob his tranſgreſſion, and to Iſrael his ſin. 9. [l] Hear this, I pray you, ye heads of the houſe of Jacob, and princes of the houſe of Iſrael, that abhor judgment, and pervert all equity. 10. [m] They build up Zion [n] with † blood, and Jeruſalem with iniquity. 11. [o] The heads thereof judge for reward, and [p] the prieſts thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: [q] yet will they lean upon the LORD, ‡ and ſay, Is not the LORD among us? none evil can come upon us. 12. Therefore ſhall Zion for your ſake [r] be plowed as a field, and [s] Jeruſalem ſhall become heaps, and the mountain of the houſe as the high places of the foreſt.

v. 8—12. In oppoſition to the character of the falſe prophets Micah declares,

1. Whence he received his commiſſion, and how he diſcharged it. The Spirit of the Lord had called him, and furniſhed him with gifts and graces for the work of his miniſtry; therefore he could ſay, truly I am full of power: he ſpeaks with confidence; for he knew he ſaid no more than the truth: and of judgment and of might; he feared neither the many nor the mighty; he delivered his meſſage with dignity, as one having authority; with zeal for God's glory and the good of men's ſouls; and with judgment, diſcretion guiding his zeal, and his diſcernment was clear, both to diſtinguiſh truth from falſehood, and to know how to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon; therefore, being thus qualified for his miniſtry, he boldly declared to Jacob his tranſgreſſion, and to Iſrael his ſin, whether they would hear or whether they would forbear. Note, (1.) Thoſe whom God calls into the miniſtry he qualifies for it. (2.) They who go to bear teſtimony againſt a ſinful people, need much courage and fidelity to diſcharge their truſt.

2. Being thus ſent on God's errand, he, without reſpect of perſons, delivers his meſſage, and calls upon the heads of Jacob, and the princes, prieſts, and prophets, who had been the ringleaders in ſin, to hear God's righteous judgments. The princes, as magiſtrates, abhorred juſtice, and perverted the law to oppreſſion; the higheſt bribe with them ever carried the cauſe, and nothing could be tranſacted without a fee. They ſucked the very blood of the poor, or murdered the innocent to ſeize their goods, and then built them ſtately palaces at Jeruſalem, or ornamented the temple, with the wages of their iniquity. The prieſts, equally mercenary, and lovers of filthy lucre, taught for hire, not for God's glory, or the good of men's ſouls; and, if they were well paid, they readily ſuited their doctrine to the palate of their hearers. The prophets alſo divined for money; they who enquired of them were ſure to hear good news, if they paid them well: and yet, notwithſtanding theſe abominations, they lean upon the Lord, and ſay, Is not the Lord among us? Becauſe they had the temple and the outward ordinances, they flattered themſelves they had God's favour and preſence among them; and therefore none evil can come upon us; as if their external privileges would be their protection: but they were fatally deceived; as all will be who reſt on the form, whilſt they deny the power of godlineſs. Therefore ſhall Zion for your ſake be ploughed as a field, &c. Their ſins had provoked God to ſend utter deſtruction on the temple and city in which they placed their confidence; not a ſtone ſhall be left on another, but the whole be reduced to a ruinous heap; which was in great meaſure done by the Chaldeans, and moſt literally fulfilled by the Romans. Note, (1.) Miniſters muſt know no reſpect of perſons, when they ſpeak in God's name, but rebuke the greateſt with all authority. (2.) Nothing is ſo oppoſite to the character of Chriſt's ambaſſadors, as that of ſerving for hire and loving filthy lucre. (3.) Outward privileges abuſed aggravate the guilt and haſten the ruin of ſinners, whilſt they are placing their confidence in them. (4.) The ſins of the great bring down thoſe judgments that overwhelm their whole country with deſolation.

CHAP. IV.

The ruin of the Jewiſh church and people was above foretold. The promiſes of the eſtabliſhment of the goſpel church in its ſtead are here revealed. 1. It ſhall be advanced and enlarged by the acceſſion of the nations to it, ver. 1, 2. 2. It ſhall be protected in tranquillity and peace, ver. 3, 4. 3. It ſhall be kept cloſe and conſtant, and faithful to God, ver. 5. 4. Under Chriſt's government all its grievances ſhould be redreſſed, ver. 6, 7. 5. It ſhall have an ample and flouriſhing dominion, ver. 8. 6. Its troubles ſhall be brought to a happy iſſue, ver. 9, 10. 7. Its enemies ſhall be diſquieted, nay deſtroyed, in and by their attempts againſt it, ver. 11—13.

1. The church of Chriſt ſhall be firmly eſtabliſhed, and gloriouſly exalted. In the laſt days, the days of the Meſſiah, it ſhall come to paſs, that the mountain of the Lord's houſe ſhall be eſtabliſhed in the top of the mountains, and it ſhall be exalted above the hills, fixed on a baſis immoveable, againſt which the gates of hell cannot prevail; raiſed high above all the power of its enemies; and conſpicuous as a city ſet on an hill. And this had its primary accompliſhment when Chriſt and his apoſtles firſt erected this glorious fabric, and ſhall more eminently be fulfilled when, in the latter day, the kingdoms of the world will become the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Chriſt.

2. Vaſt multitudes of converts ſhall flow into it, numerous as the drops which mighty rivers pour into the ocean; and many nations, at leaſt great numbers out of them, ſhall come and ſay, Come and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the houſe of the God of Jacob, encouraging each other eagerly to preſs into the church; and he, Chriſt the head of his church, will teach us his ways, by his word and Spirit; and we will walk in his paths, ſupported by his grace, and ſtrengthened to follow him: for the law ſhall go forth out of Zion, the law of the Spirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus; and the word of the Lord from Jeruſalem; the goſpel there began to be firſt preached, and from thence the healing waters of the ſanctuary have flowed into all lands, and through mercy into our own. And they who have an enlightened mind will value the ineſtimable bleſſing.

3. The power which will accompany the preaching of the goſpel ſhall effectually change men's hearts, and bring them to mutual love and peace. He ſhall judge among many people, and rebuke ſtrong nations afar off, convincing the Gentiles of their ſin, and the judgment of God againſt it, and bringing them to repentance and faith; in conſequence of which, ſwords ſhall be turned into plow-ſhares, all quarrels and animoſities ceaſe, the proud and paſſionate ſpirits of men be made humble and peaceable, and wars be for ever at an end, whilſt each, ſitting in comfort under his own vine and fig-tree, ſhall be quiet from fear of evil; which, ſo far as the goſpel now prevails, will be the ſpirit of every converted ſoul; and it ſhall univerſally be diffuſed in the laſt days, when this happy ſtate of things ſhall more gloriouſly appear: for the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it; and therefore, however unlikely it may ſeem, it ſhall be fulfilled at the appointed time.

4. There will then be the greateſt conſtancy among Chriſtians in their holy profeſſion. For all people will walk every one in the name of his god. This is uſually the caſe, Jer. ii. 11. or this will be the caſe till the Meſſiah ſhall convert them to himſelf. And we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever, with unſhaken fidelity and unremitting ardor; ſuch being the full purpoſe of every gracious ſoul.

5. Though the ſouls of ſinners are like a poor flock before devouring wolves, worried, torn, ſcattered, and maimed, God will collect them, heal their wounds, ſtrengthen their weakneſs, recover them from their wanderings afar off, and bring them into his fold. And this ſome particularly refer to the Jews, who ſhall be recovered from their preſent diſperſion at laſt, and, after all their afflictions, become a great and glorious people to the Lord.

6. The Lord ſhall then reign in his church for ever and ever. He hath begun to ſet up his kingdom already in the world; but hereafter he will more eminently diſplay his power and grace, when, the fulneſs of the Gentiles being come in, and Iſrael reſtored, He ſhall reign in mount Zion and over his ancients gloriouſly.

8. ¶ And thou, O tower of the flock, the ſtronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee ſhall it come, even the firſt dominion, the kingdom ſhall come to the daughter of Jeruſalem. 9. Now why doſt thou cry out aloud?
[q] is there no king in thee? is thy counſellor periſhed?
for pangs have taken thee as a woman in travail. 10.
Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail: for now ſhalt thou go forth out of the city, and [r] thou ſhalt dwell in the field, and thou ſhalt go even to Babylon, there ſhalt thou be delivered: there the LORD ſhall redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies. 11. ¶ Now alſo many nations are gathered againſt thee, that ſay, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion. 12. But they know not the thoughts of the LORD, neither underſtand they his counſel: for he ſhall gather them as the ſheaves into the floor. 13. Ariſe and [s] threſh, O daughter of Zion:
for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs braſs, and thou ſhalt beat in pieces many people:
and I will [t] conſecrate their gain unto the LORD, and their ſubſtance unto [u] the Lord of the whole earth.

v. 8—13. The words, O tower of the flock, Migdal-Eder, are left by many untranſlated, as the name of a place near Bethlehem, Gen, xxxv. 19—21. Others ſuppoſe them put for Jeruſalem, the ſtronghold of the daughter of Zion. Whilſt others, and with reaſon, conjecture this to be one of the titles of the Meſſiah, the tower of his redeemed flock, and the ſtronghold of his church. And,

1. It is here promiſed that in him the kingdom of David, which was fallen, ſhould revive in all its ſplendor, according to the firſt dominion, the kingdom ſhall come to the daughter of Jeruſalem. There the goſpel of the kingdom began to be preached, many Jews were admitted members of it, and the apoſtles, who were of the ſtock of Iſrael, were the chief perſons in it: perhaps alſo particular reſpect may be had to Chriſt's coming to them at the time of their laſt converſion, when the kingdom of the Meſſiah ſhall moſt eminently come to them.

2. The temporal deliverances God will work for his Iſrael, are the figure and earneſt of the ſpiritual redemption he hath in ſtore for them.

1. They are repreſented as in a ſtate of great diſtreſs, crying aloud as a travailing woman in pangs; their king no more, their counſellors periſhed, caſt out of their cities, and dwelling in the fields, led captive to Babylon, and ſerving their Chaldean maſters. So low are God's people ſometimes reduced.

2. God will deliver them from thence. Cyrus is his appointed inſtrument, raiſed up to reſcue them from the houſe of their priſon. The figure of that greater Redeemer, who came to preach deliverance to captive ſouls from the bondage of corruption, and to bring them into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God.

3. When new troubles ariſe, new helpers ſhall be given them. The church militant may expect little reſt here below. Now alſo, after their reſtoration from Babylon, many nations ſhall be gathered againſt thee, as particularly was the caſe in the days of the Maccabees, that ſay, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion, pleaſed with the thoughts of her ruin, and hoping to behold it: but they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither underſtand they his counſel, which were the very oppoſite to theirs; for, whilſt they deſigned the deſtruction of Zion, he intends to overrule their aſſembling to their own confuſion and perdition: for he ſhall gather them as ſheaves into the floor, ripe for ruin; and then the daughter of Zion ſhall be ſtrengthened to ariſe and threſh, puſhing her enemies as with horns of iron, treading them under foot as with hoofs of braſs, and beating them in pieces. And I will conſecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their ſubſtance unto the Lord of the whole earth. The ſpoil, which was gotten by the Lord's power, ought juſtly to be devoted to his honour and ſervice. All our gains are from him, and ſhould be employed for him.

This prophecy, ſome ſuppoſe, literally was accompliſhed in the victories of the Maccabees over Antiochus and the neighbouring nations. Whilſt others ſuppoſe it to refer to the ſpiritual conqueſts of the Redeemer. And ſome imagine it relates to the deſtruction of the antichriſtian powers in the latter days, when the kingdom of Jeſus ſhall be triumphantly ſet up, and all his foes be made his footſtool.

v. 1—6. We have here,

1. Troublous times coming upon Zion. Now gather thyſelf in troops, O daughter of troops; which ſeems addreſſed to the Chaldeans: he hath laid ſiege againſt us, the king of Babylon, with his army: they ſhall ſmite the judge of Iſrael with a rod upon his cheek, Zedekiah and the princes being moſt ignominiouſly and cruelly treated by Nebuchadnezzar, and his ſons ſlain before his eyes.

2. The Meſſiah is promiſed, the grand ſupport of his Iſrael in every time of their diſtreſs; the hopes of his appearing may well keep them from ſinking into deſpair, and engage them to wait patiently for him. But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thouſands of Judah, yet out of thee ſhall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Iſrael; whoſe goings forth have been of old, from everlaſting. St. Matthew has left us no doubt concerning whom theſe words are ſpoken: they relate to Chriſt, and of him the ancient Jewiſh interpreters underſtood them. (1.) They fix the place of his nativity at Bethlehem. (2.) They deſcribe the office of the Meſſiah to be a ruler in Iſrael; not indeed over Iſrael after the fleſh, but over his ſpiritual ſubjects, the children of Abraham by faith. (3.) They aſſert his eternal Godhead: from everlaſting are his goings forth. Tho', as man, he came forth from the lineage of David, and out of the city of Bethlehem, as God he is from everlaſting to everlaſting, without beginning of days or end of life.

3. Before his appearing in the fleſh the Jews ſhall go through much tribulation. Therefore, or notwithſtanding, will he give them up, for a while, to be haraſſed by their enemies, until the time that ſhe which travaileth hath brought forth; which many interpreters refer to the bleſſed virgin, the mother of Chriſt, of whom the long expected Saviour, in the fulneſs of time, ſhould be born for the conſolation of Iſrael. Or theſe words may relate to Chriſt's rejection of the Jewiſh nation for a while, for their unbelief, until the church, the ſpiritual Zion, hath brought forth the fulneſs of the Gentiles: then the remnant of his brethren, the Jewiſh people, ſhall return to the children of Iſrael, and be admitted into the church of the redeemed. Or this may comprehend the Gentiles alſo, whom Chriſt is not aſhamed to call his brethren, Heb. ii. 11. who with the Jews will become at laſt one fold under one ſhepherd.

4. The people of Chriſt ſhall then be ſafe and happy under his bleſſed government. He ſhall ſtand and feed in the ſtrength of the Lord, clothed with divine power, able to protect the ſheep of his paſture, and ever watching over them with kind ſollicitude, providing for their wants, and miniſtring to them out of his fulneſs; in the majeſty of the name of the Lord his God, being himſelf, in his nature and perfections, very God; and alſo, as Mediator, inveſted with a delegated power over all in heaven and earth; and therefore they ſhall abide for ever the objects of his love, and under his care, none being able to ſeparate them from him; and in their affections and fidelity firmly united to him; or they ſhall ſit under his ſhadow, quiet and ſafe from fear of evil: for now ſhall he be great unto the ends of the earth, when, his goſpel being ſpread abroad, all fleſh ſhall ſee his glory, and the nations be gathered unto him. And this man ſhall be the peace: man is not in the original: this ſhall be the peace; this Meſſiah, who by the blood of his croſs ſhall make peace with God on the behalf of periſhing ſinners, and by his grace ſhall preſerve his people from all the enemies of their ſouls; when the Aſſyrian ſhall come into our land; as he delivered them from Sennacherib's invaſion, ſo will he ſtill protect his redeemed from the power of the wicked: and when he ſhall tread in our palaces, and ſeems ready to ſwallow up the people of God, then ſhall we raiſe againſt him ſeven ſhepherds, and eight principal men: the Lord, their protector, hath inſtruments ready to employ in the ſervice of his people, and for the deſtruction of their enemies: and they ſhall waſte the land of Aſſyria with the ſword, and the land of Nimrod in the entrances thereof: thus ſhall he deliver us from the Aſſyrian, when he cometh into our land, and when he treadeth within our borders. And this deſtruction of theſe inveterate enemies of the church of old, ſeems to prefigure the conqueſts of the goſpel, before which Satan and the powers of darkneſs fell as lightning from heaven; and may be conſidered as having reſpect alſo to the final deſtruction of Chriſt's enemies, when the pagan, papal, and Mahometan powers, which laſt now poſſeſs theſe countries, ſhall at laſt be deſtroyed. Note, (1.) Chriſt's people need not fear, though ſurrounded with enemies, aſſaulted by temptations, and beſet with corruptions; he will be their peace when the Aſſyrian cometh into the land. (2.) All the church's foes ſhall ſhortly be made her footſtool; a little faith and patience will iſſue in eternal triumphs.

7. And the remnant of Jacob ſhall be in the midſt of many people, [l] as a dew from the LORD, as the ſhowers upon the graſs, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the ſons of men. 8. ¶ And the remnant of Jacob ſhall be among the Gentiles in the midſt of many people, [m] as a lion among the beaſts of the foreſt, as a young lion among the flocks of † ſheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver. 9. Thine hand ſhall be lift up upon their adverſaries, and all thine enemies ſhall be cut off. 10. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, ſaith the LORD, that [n] I will cut off thy horſes out of the midſt of thee, and I will deſtroy thy chariots: 11. And [o] I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy ſtrong-holds: 12. And I will cut off witchcrafts out of thine hand, and thou ſhalt have no more ſoothſayers. 13. v. 7—15. A glorious remnant of Jacob, according to the election of grace, ſhall be ſaved; bleſſed themſelves, and a bleſſing unto others. And this remnant may be underſtood, either of thoſe who were the firſt preachers of the goſpel; whoſe word diſtilled as the dew, and who vanquiſhed the ſuperſtition and idolatry of the Gentile world; or of the redeemed people in general, who are but a remnant, compared with thoſe that periſh.

1. They ſhall be as the dew in the midſt of many people, numerous as dew-drops, of heavenly extraction, fruitful in good works, and bleſſings to all around them; as the ſhowers upon the graſs, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the ſons of men; and ſo free, bounteous, and unſought are the gifts of God's grace, preventing our deſires, and above all our deſerts.

2. They ſhall be as a lion among the beaſts of the foreſt, ſo courageous and ſtrong, and before them their enemies ſhall be as a flock of helpleſs ſheep, unable to make the leaſt reſiſtance, v. 8. and fall an eaſy prey to their arms. Thus ſhall it be at the laſt with all who perſiſt in their enmity againſt Chriſt and his church, they ſhall periſh together.

3. They ſhall ceaſe from all human confidences, nor any longer need them, when all their foes are fallen. Their horſes and chariots for war ſhall be deſtroyed, as uſeleſs, and the fortifications of their cities, and their ſtrong holds be demoliſhed: and a mercy it is when theſe vain confidences are taken from us, which were a temptation to us to truſt on them more than God. Their witchcrafts and unlawful arts of divination ſhall be cut off, and never more regarded, v. 12. Every monument of idolatry ſhall be utterly aboliſhed, their images and groves caſt down, and the cities where idolatry prevailed, or the temples large as cities, dedicated to their idols, deſtroyed; or as in the margin, thy enemies, both within and without.

4 Vengeance ſhall then light on every diſobedient ſinner, ſuch as they have not heard, ſo terrible; or which have not heard, refuſed to receive the Lord Chriſt, and diſregarded his ſalvation, for which, judgment ſhall come upon them to the uttermoſt.

CHAP. VI.

The prophet here is again a reprover. 1. God enters an action againſt his people for their baſe ingratitude, and the ill returns they had made for his favours, ver. 1—5. 2. He ſhews the wrong courſe they took under conviction, and the frivolous propoſals they made in anſwer to his charge, and what courſe they ſhould have taken, ver. 6—8. 3. He calls upon them to hear the voice of his judgments, and points out their ſins, the occaſion of his controverſy with them, ver. 9. their injuſtice, ver. 10—15. and their idolatry, ver. 16. for both which ruin was coming upon them.

Shittim

Before Chriſt 710.

Shittim unto Gilgal, that ye may know the righteouſneſs of the LORD.

v. 1—5. This chapter begins a new ſubject.

1. The prophet is ſummoned to ariſe, and contend before the mountains; he muſt cry ſo loud, that the hills may echo again, publickly to expoſe the ſhame of Iſrael, and call even theſe inanimate creatures, the very foundations of the earth, to witneſs againſt the ſtupidity and inſenſibility of this people; who, when God ſpoke, turned a deaf ear to his admonitions. Note, They who plead earneſtly for God, muſt cry aloud, though mockers revile the vehemence of their diſcourſe.

2. The cauſe of this earneſtneſs is the controverſy God hath againſt his people, whoſe ſins are great and aggravated, and call for vengeance upon them. Though they are called Iſrael, their relation to God ſerves to aggravate their offence: none ſin ſo heinouſly as God's own people; every wilful tranſgreſſion of theirs is againſt light and love.

3. He expoſtulates with them on their baſe ingratitude. He challenges them to ſhew if he had ever done ought to provoke their ill uſage, or been a ſevere maſter to them, in the ſervices he had enjoined them, v. 3. He reminds them of the repeated and ineſtimable favours he had ſhowered upon them; bringing them from their bondage in Egypt, raiſing them up divinely appointed leaders, guiding them ſafe through the wilderneſs, baffling the devices of Balak, and compelling Balaam, the prophet he had ſent for to curſe Iſrael, to anſwer him with bleſſings inſtead of curſes upon their heads; from Shittim to Gilgal he brought them into the promiſed land, notwithſtanding the whoredoms they had committed with the Moabites; and all this was done that ye may know the righteouſneſs of the Lord, the faithfulneſs of God to his promiſes, his goodneſs to them, and the juſtice of his preſent controverſy againſt them, for the baſe returns they had made. Whenever he pleads againſt us, ſurely there is a cauſe.

6. ¶ [k] Wherewith ſhall I come before the LORD, and bow myſelf before the high God? ſhall I come before him [l] with burnt-offerings, with calves of a year old? 7. [m] Will the LORD be pleaſed with thouſands of rams, or with ten thouſands of rivers of oil? ſhall I give my firſt-born for my tranſgreſſion, the fruit of my body for the ſin of my ſoul? 8. He hath [n] ſhewed thee, O man, what is good, and what doth the LORD require of thee, but [o] to do juſtly, and [p] to love mercy, and to † walk [q] humbly with thy God?

v. 6—8. Some ſuppoſe theſe are the words of God's Iſrael, deſiring to make up the controverſy by a penitent return, and enquiring the way; but rather they are the words of Balak to Balaam, ſollicitous to gain, at any rate, an intereſt in God to curſe Iſrael, though at the expence of the ſacrifice of his firſt-born; an oblation, which it cannot be ſuppoſed the Iſraelites, under a penitential ſenſe of ſin, would ever have thought of offering, but very ſuitable to the ideas of a heathen.

1. He ſuggeſts his readineſs to offer the moſt expenſive ſacrifices, even thouſands of rams, or ten thouſands of rivers of oil, ſpeaking hyperbolically; nay, if a more precious oblation was needful to make the atonement, even the fruit of his body, his firſt-born ſon ſhall bleed: and this may be applied to the awakened ſinner ſeeking reconciliation with God; trembling before his majeſty, enquiring of his miniſters what he muſt do to be ſaved, brought into the duſt of humiliation, ſollicitous to avert his diſpleaſure and obtain his favour; burdened with ſin upon his conſcience, to be relieved from which, he could willingly part with the deareſt thing he poſſeſſes; not that aught we can do could ever ſatisfy offended Juſtice. The blood of all mankind had never been able to make ſatisfaction for the leaſt ſin; the blood of Jeſus alone is the effectual propitiation.

2. Balaam anſwers his enquiry. He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good; not external offerings, but moral duties are what he preſcribes; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſtly, adminiſtring impartial juſtice to his ſubjects, and ſeeing that none be oppreſſed with wrong; to love mercy, delighting in all acts of kindneſs and benevolence towards the diſtreſſed and indigent, and to walk humbly with thy God, acknowledging his own inſignificance, and aſcribing to God the glory due unto his name.

If we conſider this as an anſwer given to a guilty conſcience ſeeking reconciliation, we have, (1.) The object of faith propoſed in the words thy God; in Chriſt Jeſus he becomes ſuch to the believing ſinner, who, through the blood and righteouſneſs of the Redeemer, is entitled to an intereſt in his favour and regard. (2.) The duty God requires of thoſe who truly turn to him, is not any outward thing merely, but the heart devoted to his will and ſervice; and what he commands is not only good and right in itſelf, but good for us, conducing to our happineſs as well as his glory. And this is, [1.] To do juſtice, rendering to all their due, and injuring none in body, ſoul, goods, or fame. [2.] To love mercy, not only extending relief to the neceſſitous, and pardoning every offence, but delighting to be employed in doing good, and counting the ſervice its own reward. And, [3.] To walk humbly with God, conſcious of the poverty and imperfection of our beſt ſervices, ſubmiſſive to his government, and reſigned to his providences.

v. 9—16. Their ingratitude being too plain, God's controverſy proceeds againſt them.

1. They are commanded to hearken. The Lord's voice crieth unto the city, unto the capital, where wickedneſs moſt abounded; or to every city in the land: and the man of wiſdom ſhall ſee thy name, adore his perfections legible in his providences, and the judgments he executes on the earth; this being the higheſt point of wiſdom, to know God, and obſerve his agency in every diſpenſation. Hear ye the rod, the warnings God gives in his word and providences, which the man of heavenly wiſdom bids us remark, and ſee God's hand in the ſtroke, who hath appointed it, in time, meaſure, and duration, according to the good pleaſure of his will. Note, (1.) The voice of God's true miniſters is the voice of God, and to be heard with reverence and ſubmiſſion. (2.) Every providence has a tongue, if we have but ears to attend the meſſage it brings. (3.) When we conſider God hath appointed the rod, it becomes us to bow down in ſilent reſignation, ſollicitous only to anſwer the end for which our afflictions are ſent.

2. A charge of fraud and violence is brought againſt them, for which God will not hold them guiltleſs. By ſcanty meaſures, and falſe weights, they increaſed their treaſures, and the rich by violence and oppreſſion filled their houſes with ſpoil, of which, after all the warnings given them, they had not yet made reſtitution. And the inhabitants of inferior ſtation copying after their wealthier neighbours, by lies and deceit impoſed on the unwary who dealt with them, and made no ſcruple of falſehood, in order to make the greater gain of their wares: and as they robbed one another, they robbed God alſo of his glory by foul idolatry. The ſtatutes of Omri are kept, and all the works of the houſe of Ahab, the ſame abominations were practiſed, as theſe wicked kings had enjoined; nor would its being the ſtatute law of their kingdom be any exculpation of the crime: no authority can ſuperſede the divine commands.

3. For theſe things God will judge them. Therefore I will make thee ſick in ſmiting thee, with ſore judgments, which ſhould lay waſte their kingdom, and make them deſolate, becauſe of their ſins. Thou ſhalt eat, and not be ſatisfied, either wanting food, or the curſe of God being upon their proviſion; and thy caſting down ſhall be in the midſt of thee, inteſtine diſcords ſhould render them an eaſy conqueſt for the invading foe; their attempts to reſcue their friends and families from captivity ſhall be fruitleſs: or if they preſerved a part, another enemy ſhould quickly conſume it, v. 14. Their corn, wine, and oil ſhould fail them, blaſted, and never coming to maturity; or ſpoiled and devoured by the enemy, v. 15. Thus they ſhall be made a deſolation; Samaria, their capital, being deſtroyed by Salmaneſer, and the inhabitants thereof an hiſſing, the whole land going into captivity, and treated with ſcorn and deriſion by their inſulting conquerors; therefore ſhall ye bear the reproach of my people, the wrath threatned againſt them in the law if they proved rebellious; or the reproach due to the oppreſſors for their cruelty and injuſtice to God's people. Note, (1.) When God will viſit, he can put a ſpirit of diſcord into a land, and make a ſinful people their own executioners. (2.) None deſerve ſeverer reproach than thoſe who, by their ungracious conduct, bring a diſhonour upon the religious profeſſion they made.

CHAP. VII.

In this chapter, 1. The prophet, in the name of the church, ſadly laments the woful decay of religion, and the deluge of impiety and immorality which overwhelmed the nation, and bore down the fences of all that is juſt and ſacred, ver. 1—6. 2. The prophet, for the ſake of the church, preſcribes comforts, and counſels them what to do. (1.) They muſt have an eye to God, ver. 7. (2.) They muſt courageouſly bear up againſt the inſolencies of the enemy, ver. 8—10. (3.) They muſt patiently lie down under the rebukes of their God, ver. 9. (4.) They muſt expect that the trouble would continue long, and endeavour to make the beſt of it, ver. 11—13. (5.) They muſt encourage themſelves with God's promiſes, in anſwer to the prophet's prayers, ver. 14, 15. (6.) They muſt foreſee the fall of their triumphant enemies, ver. 16, 17. (7.) They muſt themſelves triumph in the mercy and faithfulneſs of God, ver. 18—20. and with that comfortable word the prophecy concludes.

1. WO is me, for I am as † when they have gathered the ſummer-fruits, as the grape-gleanings of the vintage: there is no cluſter to eat: [a] my ſoul deſired the firſt-ripe fruit. 2. [b] The ‡ good man is periſhed out of the earth: and there is none upright among men: they all lie in wait for blood: they hunt every man his brother with a net. 3. ¶ That they may [c] do evil with both hands earneſtly, [d] the prince aſketh, [e] and the judge aſketh for a reward: and the great man he uttereth ‖ his miſchievous deſire: ſo they wrapt it up. 4. The beſt of them [f] is as a brier: the moſt upright is ſharper than a thorn-hedge: the day of thy watchmen and the viſitation cometh; now ſhall be their perplexity. 5. ¶ [g] Truſt ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide: keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy boſom. 6. For [h] the ſon diſhonoureth the father, the daughter riſeth up againſt her mother, the daughter-in-law againſt her mother-in-law; a man's enemies are the men of his own houſe.

v. 1—6. Like righteous Lot, the prophet here bewails his unhappy fate, compelled to dwell among ſuch an abandoned people; for a gracious heart is pained to behold the overflowings of ungodlineſs.

1. He was ſingular and ſolitary, and ſcarce could find a gracious companion amidſt the thouſands of his countrymen: ſo few good men remained, as the berries which hung on the vine after the gleanings. There is no cluſter to eat, no ſociety of upright men to join with; my ſoul deſired the firſt ripe fruit, longed for the converſe of ſuch as had the firſt fruits of the ſpirit, as the holy men of old, but there were none remaining. The good man is periſhed out of the earth, and there is none upright among men, at leaſt the prophet could not find them; but, like Elijah, thought he was left alone. Note, It is a ſad ſymptom of a nation's ruin when good men are taken away, and they who riſe up in their places appear utterly degenerate from their piety.

2. They ſtick at nothing to get wealth, lying in wait for blood, that they may ſeize the ſpoil of the innocent; and like wild beaſts, hunting their very brethren into their toils, that they may plunder and oppreſs them. With both hands earneſtly they ſet themſelves to the practice of wickedneſs, and even the magiſtrates and princes are chief in the tranſgreſſion. Judging for reward; money, not juſtice, ever carrying the cauſe before them: and the great man he uttereth his miſchievous deſire, ſo they wrap it up, or twiſt it together, emboldened by the known corruption of the judges he is not afraid to appear openly in a bad cauſe; and having the princes on his ſide, they make the cords of iniquity ſtrong; or they perplex it, rendering the matter ſo intricate, that the truth cannot be eaſily unraveled. The beſt of them, and bad indeed is that beſt, is as a brier, miſchievous and hurtful, and the moſt upright is ſharper than a thorn-hedge; they who have any tranſactions with them are ſure to be ſcratched and torn; and for ſuch abominations God will viſit them; the day of thy watchmen and the viſitation cometh, the day the true prophets predicted, and the time when judgment ſhould paſs on the wicked watchmen in church and ſtate; now ſhall be their perplexity, unable to extricate themſelves from the troubles in which they were involved.

3. All good faith was loſt among them, no ſuch thing as a friend was to be met with, and no confidence to be put in any who pretended to be a guide in church or ſtate; nay, the very wife of their boſom was not to be truſted, being in thoſe degenerate days baſe enough to betray the ſecrets of her huſband, v. 5.

4. All reverence of parents was baniſhed, the ſon diſhonoureth the father, ſpeaking contemptibly of him, behaving diſreſpectful and diſobedient; and the daughter riſeth up againſt her mother, with ſaucineſs unbecoming her ſex, as well as her relation; the daughter-in-law againſt her mother-in-law; and a man's enemies are thoſe of his own houſe; his children, his ſervants, who ſhould be moſt ſollicitous to advance his intereſt, conſpiring to ruin him. Note, Nothing ſhews an abandoned heart more ſtrongly, than contempt of parental authority.

7. Therefore I will [i] look unto the LORD: I will wait for the God of my ſalvation: [k] my God will hear me. 8. ¶ [l] Rejoice not againſt me, O mine enemy: [m] When I fall, I ſhall ariſe: when I ſit in darkneſs, the LORD ſhall be a light unto me. 9. [n] I will bear the indignation of the LORD, becauſe I have ſinned againſt him, until he plead my cauſe, and execute judgment for me: he will bring me forth to the light, and I ſhall behold his righteouſneſs. 10. † Then ſhe that is mine enemy ſhall ſee it, and ſhame ſhall cover her which ſaid unto me, [o] Where is the LORD thy God? mine [p] eyes ſhall behold her: now ſhall ſhe be troden down as the mire of the ſtreets. 11. In the day that [q] thy walls are to be built, in that day ſhall the decree be far removed. 12. In that day alſo [r] he ſhall come even to thee from Aſſyria, and from the fortified cities, and from the fortreſs even to the river, and [s] from ſea to ſea, and from mountain to mountain. 13. ‡ Notwithſtanding the land ſhall be [t] deſolate, becauſe of them that dwell therein, [u] for the fruit of their doings.

v. 7—13. In theſe calamitous times the prophet looks upward, thence cometh his hope. I will look unto the Lord, ſince no dependance was to be placed on man; I will wait for the God of my ſalvation, for the performance of his promiſes, the removal of the preſent diſtreſſes, or for Chriſt's appearing, whoſe incarnation the good men of old ſo earneſtly deſired; my God will hear me, and anſwer my prayers, of which alſo all his people may be confident, when they wait upon him faithfully and patiently. Having thus caſt his care upon God, the prophet, in the perſon of his people,

1. Profeſſes his confidence in God. Rejoice not againſt me, O mine enemy; though caſt down, God's people were not deſtroyed, and ſhort would be the triumphing of their enemies; when I fall, I ſhall ariſe, ſtrengthened with divine power; when I ſit in darkneſs, diſconſolate, dejected, the Lord ſhall be a light unto me, reviving, comforting, and quickening me, and bringing me out of all my afflictions; and thus at all times ought the redeemed of the Lord to ſtay themſelves upon him.

2. He humbly bows before the chaſtning rod, and owns the righteouſneſs of the ſufferings brought upon the land. I will bear the indignation of the Lord with patient ſubmiſſion, becauſe I have ſinned againſt him, and therefore ſhould not dare murmur againſt God's righteous judgments; for all true penitents lay their mouths in the duſt: whatever indignation is upon them, their ſins have deſerved it, and they will juſtify God in his judgments, and ſo doing they may hope for God's appearing on their behalf; until he plead my cauſe, as he aſſuredly will in due time, and execute judgment for me, pouring down vengeance on all the oppreſſors of his people; and he will bring me forth to the light, eſpouſe their quarrel, and reſcuing them from their calamities, making his favour towards them openly appear; and I ſhall behold his righteouſneſs; his juſtice in puniſhing their wicked enemies, his grace in ſuccouring his afflicted people, his faithfulneſs in accompliſhing his promiſes; for they who humbly ſubmit themſelves to God, and caſt their care upon him, ſhall ever find he careth for them.

3. Their enemies, covered with confuſion, ſhall behold this ſalvation, ſo unlike what they looked for, v. 10. They once tauntingly aſked, Where is the Lord thy God? and now they are anſwered, Lo! this is our God, and we have waited for him: mine eyes ſhall behold her, their enemies, reduced to the loweſt ſtate of abject wretchedneſs; now ſhall ſhe be troden down as the mire in the ſtreets: which was fulfilled in the conqueſts of Babylon by the Perſians, and ſhall be proved true in the deſtruction of all the foes of God's ſpiritual Iſrael. In the day that thy walls are to be built, the walls of Jeruſalem, after their return from Babylon; in that day ſhall the decree be far removed which obſtructed the building for a while. In that day alſo he ſhall come unto thee, multitudes of the Jews returning to Jeruſalem from Aſſyria, and from the fortified cities, where they had been captives, and from all places whither they had been diſperſed and fled for ſhelter. And in a ſpiritual ſenſe this may be applied to the building the walls of the ſpiritual Zion; into which, from all parts, multitudes of converts ſhall flock together. Notwithſtanding the land ſhall be deſolate, for the cauſe of them that dwell therein, for the fruit of their doings; theſe gracious prophecies ſhall not ſuperſede the divine threatnings going before, ſo as to embolden the impenitent with hopes of impunity; nor, on the other hand, ſhall all the ſins and ſufferings of the people change theſe deſigns of mercy, which, notwithſtanding the diſtreſs to which they ſhall be firſt reduced, ſhall be brought to paſs in their ſeaſon.

14. ¶ † Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thine heritage, which dwell ſolitarily in the wood, in the midſt of Carmel: let them feed in Baſhan and Gilead, as in the days of old. 15. According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I ſhew unto him marvellous things. 16. ¶ [x] The nations ſhall ſee, and be confounded at all their might: [y] they ſhall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears ſhall be deaf. 17. They ſhall lick [z] the duſt like a ſerpent, [a] they ſhall move out of their holes like ‡ worms of the earth: they ſhall be afraid of the LORD our God, and ſhall fear becauſe of thee. 18. Who is a God like unto thee, [b] that pardoneth iniquity, and paſſeth by the tranſgreſſion of the remnant of his heritage? [c] he retaineth not his anger for ever, becauſe he delighteth in mercy. 19. He will turn again, he will have compaſſion upon us: he will ſubdue our iniquities: and thou wilt caſt all their ſins into the depths of the ſea. 20. v. 14—20. We have here,

1. The prophet's prayer on the behalf of his people. Feed thy people with thy rod, directing them in their way, and bringing them into green paſtures; the flock of thine heritage, whom he hath choſen for his own, and therefore is peculiarly engaged for their preſervation and ſafety; which dwell ſolitarily in the wood, ſeparated from the reſt of mankind by the diſtinguiſhing grace of God, and even in their captivity unmixed with the nations; in the midſt of Carmel, ſcattered in Aſſyria, as ſheep upon a mountain without a ſhepherd: let them feed in Baſhan and Gilead, as in the days of old, in the richeſt paſtures, abounding in all bleſſings ſpiritual and temporal; as will be the caſe when they ſhall be gathered from their diſperſion into the goſpel-church, and made one fold under one ſhepherd.

2. God is pleaſed graciouſly to anſwer the prophet's prayer. According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt, will I ſhew unto him marvellous things; as wonderful ſhould be their deliverance from Babylon, as from Egypt, and more amazing his work of redemption by Jeſus Chriſt, reſcuing his people from their ſpiritual enemies, and eclipſing all the former manifeſtations of his power and grace exerted on their behalf. Their inſulting foes ſhall then be confounded, ſilent with ſhame, and ſtopping their ears, as unwilling to hear the wonders of God's love towards his people, v. 16. Yea, the curſe of the ſerpent ſhall be upon them, Gen. iii. 14. trodden into the duſt, and proſtrate before thoſe whom once they trampled upon like worms of the earth, ſcarce daring to lift their heads from their lurking-places, for fear of the Lord our God, whoſe judgments are upon them, and becauſe of thee, whom they have abuſed, but now behold triumphant over them. And ſo low ſhall every enemy of Chriſt's church and people be brought at laſt.

3. With wonder, love, and praiſe the prophet beholds what God is about to do for his church. Who is a god like unto thee? none can be found like him for the perfections of his nature, and the works of his providence and grace; eſpecially that pardoneth iniquity, and paſſeth by the tranſgreſſion of the remnant of his heritage; this being God's diſtinguiſhing glory, that he is a pardoning God, and this above all things raiſes the admiration, and engages the affections of the miſerable ſinner: he retaineth not his anger for ever; though for a time, by our unfaithfulneſs, we provoke him to viſit our iniquities with the rod, and our ſin with ſcourges, he is not implacable nor inexorable, but ready to receive the returning ſoul, becauſe he delighteth in mercy, and waits to be gracious; more ready to pardon than we to pray, and willing to give exceeding abundantly beyond all we can aſk or think. He will turn again, though he withdraws for a little moment his loving-kindneſs in diſpleaſure, and turns away his face from us, he will have compaſſion upon us, mourning his abſence, and ſeeking his return; he will lift up again the light of his countenance, removing our ſorrows, and ſpeaking peace to our troubled ſouls: he will ſubdue our iniquities, delivering us from the power as well as puniſhment of them; breaking the yoke of corruption, and putting our inbred enemies under our feet. His grace ſhall overcome our depravity, and ſin ſhall not have any longer the dominion over us, which a ſoul who hath taſted the bitterneſs of ſin, looks upon as the moſt ineſtimable bleſſing: and thou wilt caſt all their ſins into the depths of the ſea, they ſhall be not only forgiven but forgotten; ſo totally done away in the blood of a Redeemer, that they ſhall never be remembered againſt us, and not one of all the numerous hoſt ever riſe up again to diſtreſs, or to deſtroy us. Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham; the everlaſting covenant of grace ſhall ſtand faſt to all their ſeed, and the faithfulneſs of God is engaged for the fulfilment of it, which thou haſt ſworn unto our fathers from the days of old, that by two immutable things, in which it is impoſſible that God ſhould lie, we might have ſtrong conſolation who have fled for refuge, to lay hold of the hope ſet before us. And for this, for ever and for ever praiſe the Lord, O my ſoul!

OR, A
PRACTICAL COMMENT
Upon the PROPHECY of
NAHUM.

THE name of this prophet ſignifies a comforter; for it was a charge given to all the prophets, Comfort ye, comfort, ye my people; and even this prophet, tho' wholly taken up in foretelling the deſtruction of Nineveh, which ſpeaks terror to the Aſſyrians, yet even in that is a comforter to the ten tribes of Iſrael, who, it is probable, were now lately carried captives into Aſſyria. It is very uncertain at what time he lived and propheſied, but moſt probable that he lived in the time of Hezekiah, and propheſied againſt Nineveh, after the captivity of Iſrael by the king of Aſſyria, which was in the ninth year of Hezekiah, and before Sennacherib's invading Judah, which was in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah; for to that attempt, and his defeat, it is ſuppoſed the firſt chapter hath reference; and, it is probable, was delivered a little before it, for the encouragement of God's people in that day of treading down and perplexity.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter we have, 1. The inſcription of the book, ver. 1. 2. A magnificent diſplay of the glory of God, in a mixture of wrath againſt the wicked, and mercy towards his people, and the diſcovery of his majeſty and power in both, ver. 2—8. 3. A particular application of this to the deſtruction of Sennacherib and his army, when they beſieged Jeruſalem, which was a very memorable inſtance of the power both of God's juſtice and of his mercy, and ſpoke abundance of terror to his enemies, and encouragement to his faithful ſervants, ver. 9—16.

1. THE burden of [a] Nineveh. The book of the viſion of † Nahum the Elkoſhite.

v. 1. At the preaching of Jonah the Ninevites repented, and were ſpared; but, returning as the dog to their vomit again, Nahum is ſent about an hundred years after to pronounce their doom, and bind the heavy burden of God's wrath upon them.

His prophecy is called The book of the viſion of Nahum: it was what God revealed to him, and he wrote in a book, and ſent probably to Nineveh. The prophet is called the Elkoſhite; either from the name of his father, or the place of his birth, there being a village in Galilee, as Jerom reports, called Helkeſi.

2. † God is [b] jealous, and [c] the LORD revengeth, the LORD revengeth and is furious, the LORD will take vengeance on his adverſaries; and he reſerveth wrath for his enemies. 3. The LORD is [d] ſlow to anger, and great in power, and will not at all acquit the wicked: [e] the LORD hath his way in the whirlwind, and in the ſtorm, and in the clouds are the duſt of his feet. 4. [f] He rebuketh the ſea, and maketh it dry, and drieth up all the rivers: Baſhan languiſheth, and Carmel, and the flower of Lebanon languiſheth. 5. [g] The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burnt at his preſence, yea, the world, and all that dwell therein. 6. Who can ſtand before his indignation? and [h] who can ‡ abide in the fierceneſs of his anger? his fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him. 7. The LORD is good, ‖ a ſtrong-hold in the day of trouble, and [i] he knoweth them that truſt in him. 8. But [k] with an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place thereof, and darkneſs ſhall purſue his enemies.

v. 2—8. Like the pillar of the cloud and fire, this deſcription of the divine perfections and glory ſpeaks terror to the church's foes, and comfort to her friends: wrath moſt fearful and mercy moſt adorable are here revealed. To Nineveh God makes himſelf known.

1. As the jealous God, who avengeth the indignities put upon him. The Lord is jealous of his own honour, and will not ſuffer his glory to be given to idols, nor tamely ſee his people inſulted: he revengeth; thrice it is repeated, to ſhew the certainty and fearfulneſs of his vengeance: he is furious, or maſter of wrath, hath it under command, can reſtrain or let it looſe at his pleaſure, and this without that perturbation which ever accompanies it in our minds: he reſerveth wrath for his enemies; though ſpared long by his patience, there is wrath in ſtore for the impenitent; and, though ſlow to anger, he will not at all acquit the wicked, who, in oppoſition to all his warnings, perſiſt in their rebellion againſt him: they will at laſt be condemned and executed.

2. His power is great, v. 3. yea irreſiſtible: if he is angry, yea but a little, who may abide it? All the elements wait his orders; the wind and ſtorm fulfil his word, and the clouds are the duſt of his feet: on theſe he cometh forth to judgment, and deſolation marks his way, v. 3. At his rebuke the ſea, the rivers, are dried, as when of old he opened a way through them for his redeemed to paſs over; and the moſt fruitful ſpots, as Baſhan and Carmel, languiſh when he is pleaſed to reſtrain the dew of heaven, v. 4. His earthquakes ſhake the tottering mountains and trembling hills; or the mightieſt nations, ſuch as the Aſſyrian, compared to theſe for ſtrength, are caſt down before his indignation. At his preſence the earth is burnt up, with the parching ſun-beams, or forked lightnings, yea the world, and all that dwell therein, as it will be at laſt in the univerſal conflagration, 2 Pet. iii. 10. Before ſuch indignation, ſuch devouring fire, who can ſtand, when even the maſſy rocks are thrown down as ſtubble before him: ſo weak, ſo eaſily ruined, are the greateſt kingdoms, and the moſt hardened and daring ſinners. We may well ſay of ſuch an omnipotent God, that it is good to have him for our friend, but terrible to meet him as an enemy.

3. His mercy to his people is great as his wrath towards his enemies. The Lord is good in himſelf, and in all the diſpenſations of his providence and grace; a ſtrong hold in the day of trouble, as Hezekiah found when he was invaded by Sennacherib, and as the redeemed will ever prove him to be amidſt all the trials and temptations with which they are exerciſed: he knoweth them that truſt in him, renouncing every other confidence, and ſtaying themſelves on him alone; theſe he knows, approves, delights in, and will protect and preſerve them from the power of evil. But with an overflowing flood will he make an utter end of the place thereof, of Nineveh; his judgments, like a deluge, ſhall overwhelm the city and deſtroy it; and darkneſs ſhall purſue his enemies, the darkneſs of affliction and trouble here below; and hereafter they ſhall be driven into eternal darkneſs, where there is weeping and wailing and gnaſhing of teeth.

9. What do ye imagine againſt the LORD? he will make an utter end: affliction ſhall not riſe up the ſecond time. 10. For while they be folden together as thorns, and [l] while they are drunken as drunkards, they ſhall be devoured as ſtubble fully dry. 11. [m] There is one come out of thee, that imagineth evil againſt the LORD: † a wicked counſellor. 12. Thus ſaith the LORD, Though they be quiet, and likewiſe many, [n] yet thus ſhall they be ‡ cut down, when he ſhall paſs through: though I have afflicted thee, I will afflict thee no more. 13. For now will I break his yoke from off thee, and will burſt thy bonds in ſunder. 14. And the LORD hath given a commandment concerning thee, that no more of thy name be ſown: out of the houſe of thy gods will I cut off the graven image, and the molten image, I will make thy grave, for thou art vile. 15. Behold, [o] upon the mountains the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publiſheth peace: O Judah, ‖ keep thy ſolemn feaſts, perform thy vows: for § the wicked ſhall no more paſs through thee, he is utterly cut off.

v. 9—15. It is generally thought theſe verſes refer to the deſtruction of the Aſſyrian army under Sennacherib.

1. The Lord mocks at their impotent deſigns. What do ye imagine againſt the Lord? how vain the counſel, how fruitleſs the attempt! There is one come out of thee, Sennacherib, that imagineth miſchief againſt the Lord, to plunder his temple, and captivate his people; a wicked counſellor, who by Rabſhakeh adviſed the people to deſpair of God's help, abandon their king, and ſubmit to his yoke, 2 Kings xviii. 29—31. but their politics are as unavailing as their power.

2. He threatens them with utter ruin. He will make an end of them at once, and there will be no need to repeat the blow; ſo compleat ſhall be their ruin, both of the army at firſt, and afterwards of Nineveh itſelf, v. 9. Unprofitable as thorns, and like them bound up ready for the burning; and drunken as drunkards, incapable of making reſiſtance, they ſhall be devoured as ſtubble fully dry, in which the fire rages, and quickly and irrecoverably it is conſumed. Thus ſaith the Lord, whoſe word is faithful, though they be quiet, ſecure of ſucceſs, and likewiſe many, and therefore fearing no oppoſition, yet thus ſhall they be cut down, when he ſhall paſs through, even the deſtroying angel, who in one night ſlew a hundred fourſcore and five thouſand, 2 Kings xix. 35. ſo often do we ſee ſinners cut off in the midſt of their carnal ſecurity. Nor ſhall the king eſcape: the Lord hath given a commandment concerning thee, that no more of thy name be ſown; his fame and glory ſhould be ſpread no farther, but, returning with ignominy to his own land, he ſhould periſh miſerably by the hands of his own children. Out of the houſe of thy gods will I cut off the graven image and the molten image, perhaps the temple where he was ſlain was demoliſhed, as defiled with blood; or this would be the caſe when the capital ſhould fall into the enemies' hand: I will make thy grave, for thou art vile, which refers either to Sennacherib himſelf, brought thus ignominiouſly to the duſt, becauſe of his vileneſs and wickedneſs; or to Nineveh, whoſe inhabitants ſhould be buried in the ruins of the city, becauſe of their iniquities. Note, They who make themſelves in God's ſight vile by their ſins, ſhall ſhortly be made an abhorring unto all fleſh.

3. God will ſave his own people out of all their troubles. Though I have afflicted thee, I will afflict thee no more; that is to ſay, no more by Sennacherib, or his ſucceſſors in Nineveh, to whom they had been tributary; from their bondage God's people ſhall be ſet free, the figure of that more glorious liberty into which Jeſus, our Redeemer, hath brought the ſons of God, v. 13. Then ſhall the glad tidings be diffuſed through the land, of Sennacherib's army fallen, or of Nineveh deſtroyed, and peace return after the ravages of war. Judah now may reſume the interrupted ſervice of the ſanctuary, which during this invaſion was impracticable to many of the people, and muſt perform her vows made in the day of diſtreſs, and now piouſly and thankfully to be paid to God for her deliverance. Nor is this only a preſent mercy, but it is farther promiſed, that the wicked ſhall no more paſs through thee, he is utterly cut off; no more ſhould they be invaded by them, but the race of Sennacherib, and Nineveh, the ſeat of empire, ſhould be utterly cut off and deſtroyed. Note, (1.) The goſpel proclaims the glad tidings of pardon and peace by Jeſus Chriſt, and of victory over all our ſpiritual foes, and beautiful upon the mountains are their feet who publiſh theſe tidings of joy. (2.) Every mercy we receive from God ſhould be an engagement to our fidelity, and quicken us in his worſhip and ſervice.

v. 1—10. Nineveh is doomed to fall, and lo! her enemies approach. He that daſheth in pieces is come up before thy face, Nabopolaſſar the Babylonian, with Cyaxares the Mede, Tobit xiv. 15. The Ninevites are ironically called to keep the munition, to guard the walls, to watch the way to the avenues of the city, to make their loins ſtrong, and fortify their power mightily, to do their utmoſt to ward off the blow, but all their efforts will be vain, ſince their ruin is decreed.

1. The cauſe of it, among other provocations, is their ill uſage of God's Iſrael. The Lord hath turned away the excellency of Jacob as the excellency of Iſrael; hath humbled and brought them low, and hath employed the Aſſyrians as his inſtruments, but they gratified their pride, covetouſneſs, and ambition herein, for the emptiers have emptied them out, and marred their vine branches, plundering and deſtroying the country, and leading many of the people into captivity.

2. The terrible deſtruction coming upon Nineveh, for this and all her other ſins, is deſcribed. The ſhields of the enemy are prepared, glittering with burniſhed braſs, or red with the blood of the ſlain. The valiant men in ſcarlet, magnificently arrayed; their chariots, when preparing for the ſiege, ſhall ſhine with flaming torches, to direct their way by night, or ſet fire to the city. The fir-trees, the mighty men of Nineveh, ſhall be terribly ſhaken; quaking for fear, whilſt the chariots of the enemy rage in the ſtreets, approaching the gates, or entered into the city; ſo eager to advance, that they ſhall juſtle one againſt another, devouring as torches of fire, and ſwift as lightning, ver. 4. He ſhall recount his worthies, chuſing out the mighty men to ſtorm the place; and in haſte to obey, they ſhall ſtumble, though inſtantly recovering themſelves, and mounting the breach, under the cover of the defence which is prepared, ver. 5. or this may be underſtood of the king of Nineveh muſtering his forces, manning the walls, and preparing to ſuſtain the ſiege, though his warriors ſhall ſtumble in their walk, and fall; at laſt the beſiegers ſhall enter at the gates of the rivers, either forced or betrayed into their hands, and then the palace ſhall be diſſolved; both the temples of the idols, and the houſes of their princes ſhall be laid in ruins; and Huzzab ſhall be led away captive, which ſome interpret of the queen, others of the king, compared to a woman for his effeminacy; or perhaps it may ſignify Nineveh itſelf, which before ſat as a queen, but is now hurled from her dignity, and lamented by her maids of honour, her inhabitants; who, whilſt they are repreſented ſupporting her fainting under her calamities, utter their doleful moans, and beat their breaſts for grief and anguiſh, v. 7. Thus, though of old this mighty city was like a pool of water, full of wealth and inhabitants, and tranquil and at eaſe; yet they ſhall flee away, like waters when the dam is broken down, and as weak before their enemies; in vain ſome gallant chief ſhould cry, Stand, ſtand; panic fear hath ſeized them, and none dares even look behind him. The beſiegers now are called to ſeize the ſpoil of ſilver, gold, and rich furniture, immenſe, invaluable; and thoroughly is the city ranſacked, and left empty, void, and waſte, without inhabitant, a heap of ruins; none of that populous place dare reſiſt; their hearts are melted, their knees knock againſt each other, they are like women in travail, and their countenances darkned like the livid faces of the dead.

11. Where is the dwelling of the lions, and the feeding-place of the young lions? where the lion, even the old lion walked, and the lion's whelp, and none made them afraid. 12. The lion did tear in pieces [g] enough for his whelps, and ſtrangled for his lioneſſes, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin. 13. Behold, I am againſt thee, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, and I will burn her chariots in the ſmoke, and the ſword ſhall devour thy young lions, and I will cut off thy prey from the earth, and the voice of [h] thy meſſengers ſhall no more be heard.

[h] 2 Kings xviii. 17, 19.

v. 11—13. They who inſulted over the calamities of others, juſtly deſerve retaliation in the day of their diſtreſs.

1. Nineveh is triumphed over by her enemies. Like a lion in time paſt had the king of this ſtrong city ravened uncontrouled, and filled his young lions with food, and the den with prey; and ſtrangled for his lioneſſes, his wives and concubines, who ſhared the ſpoils of the conquered nations, whilſt none dared withſtand or oppoſe him: but where is his dwelling now? it is deſolate and ruined. Note, Wealth gotten by violence is a precarious tenure, a ſhort-lived poſſeſſion.

2. God is her enemy, therefore ſhe muſt fall. Behold, I am againſt thee, and his wrath is more terrible than innumerable foes; he will burn her chariots in the ſmoke of the city in flames around them, and the ſword ſhall devour the young lions, the inhabitants thereof, their children, enriched by rapine and ſpoil; I will cut off thy prey from the earth, deſtroying all their ſubſtance which they had collected, and the voice of thy meſſengers ſhall be no more heard; demanding tribute, menacing the poor ſubjected nations: or like Rabſhekah, uttering their blaſphemies againſt God. Note, (1.) God will ſhortly ſilence the tongue of the blaſphemer. (2.) They who, to raiſe wealth for their children, ſtick at no fraud or injuſtice, are in righteous judgment deprived of them.

v. 1—7. Where ſin unrepented is found, there all the terrible woes of God are written againſt the guilty ſoul.

1. The ſins of Nineveh are charged upon her. It is a bloody city; innocent blood was ſhed there with impunity, or by the unjuſt wars her ambition waged againſt her neighbours: full of lies, where no honeſty, truth, or fidelity was to be found; and of robbery, each preying on his neighbour, or on the nations around them; the prey departeth not, they never deſiſt from plundering, nor think of making reſtitution to the injured: her whoredoms were multiplied, both carnal and ſpiritual: their idolatries notorious, their lewdneſs infamous; like a well-favoured harlot ſhe enticed the nations to learn her ways, and, being a miſtreſs of witchcrafts, bound them as with magic ſpells to ſell themſelves to work wickedneſs, and, having brought them firſt under corporal bondage, afterwards enſlaved their ſouls. Note, The charms of a harlot are like the ſpells of witchcraft, and iſſue in the deſtruction of body and ſoul.

2. Her judgment is read. The noiſe of the invading foe is heard; the whip of the charioteer, the rattling of the wheels, the prancing of the horſes, the jumping of the chariots, ſound terrible: the bright ſword is unſheathed, the glittering ſpear is brandiſhed, and ſo innumerable the multitude of the ſlain, that the very ſtreets and ways are obſtructed by them, and men ſtumble over them, v. 3. Since God is her foe, ſhe ſhall be ſtripped naked to her ſhame, deprived of all her wealth and power, expoſed as a ſtrumpet to the deriſion of thoſe ſhe had ſeduced, carted as a whore, and daubed with abominable filth and dung, made vile and contemptible, a gazing-ſtock of public reproach and infamy; every paſſenger, inſtead of affording the leaſt kindneſs or compaſſion, ſhall ſhun her with abhorrence, and ſay, Nineveh is laid waſte, pleaſed to proclaim the tidings, or aſtoniſhed at the fearful change; who ſhall bemoan her? ſhe deſerves no pity, that ſhewed none: whence ſhall I ſeek comforters for thee? the calamity is too great to admit of conſolation, nor can any be found to diſcharge this friendly office to a city ſo univerſally deteſted. Note, (1.) They who in the day of their proſperity treated others with inſolence, may expect, when they fall, to be trampled upon by every foot. (2.) The beſt-favoured harlot will ſhortly be a foul hag, hated and ſhunned by her former deareſt paramours.

8. [f] Art thou better than † populous [g] No, that was ſituate among the rivers, that had the waters round about it, whoſe rampart was the ſea, and her wall was from the ſea? 9. Ethiopia and Egypt were her ſtrength, and it was infinite, Put and Lubim were thy helpers. 10.
Yet was ſhe carried away, ſhe went into captivity: [h] her young children alſo were daſhed in pieces [i] at the top of all the ſtreets: and they caſt lots for her honourable men, and all her great men were bound in chains. 11.
Thou ſhalt alſo be [k] drunken: thou ſhalt be hid, thou alſo ſhalt ſeek ſtrength becauſe of the enemy. 12. All thy ſtrongholds ſhall be like [l] fig-trees with the firſt ripe figs: if they be ſhaken they ſhall even fall into the mouth of the eater. 13. Behold, [m] thy people in the midſt of thee are women: the gates of thy land ſhall be ſet wide open unto thine enemies, the fire ſhall devour thy bars. 14. Draw thee waters for the ſiege, [n] fortify thy ſtrongholds: go into clay, and tread the morter, make ſtrong the brick-kiln. 15. There ſhall the fire devour thee: the ſword ſhall cut thee off: it ſhall eat thee up like the canker-worm: make thyſelf many as the canker-worm, make thyſelf many as the locuſts.
16. Thou haſt multiplied thy merchants above the ſtars of heaven: the canker-worm ‡ ſpoileth and flieth away.

v. 8—19. All the vain confidences of Nineveh are here deſtroyed. She thought herſelf ſafe becauſe of her greatneſs; but vain is her preſumption. Art thou better than populous No? which ſome ſuppoſe to be Thebes, others Memphis, others Alexandria; a city vaſt and full of inhabitants; fortified by art and nature, and ſituate in a place almoſt inacceſſible to an enemy, v. 8. ſupported by all the united forces of Egypt and Ethiopia, whoſe armies were immenſe, and helped by her confederates of Libya and Mauritania: yet with all theſe advantages No was deſtroyed, probably by Sennacherib; the inhabitants carried captives; the infants daſhed in pieces againſt the ſtones by the inhuman ſoldiers, her honourable men divided by lot as ſlaves among the conquerors, and her nobles bound in chains. And if ſuch a city fell ſo fearfully, the men of Nineveh ought not to be thus ſecure: the ſame treatment awaited them.

1. Their forces ſhall be diſpirited, weakened, and deſtroyed; ſtaggering like drunkards, effeminate, and terrified as women, v. 13. flying to hide themſelves, and ſeeking in vain help from others againſt their enemies: for, when God diſpirits the hoſt, the braveſt turn cowards.

Before Christ 713.

2. Their fortreſſes ſhall ſtand them in no ſtead. Though they take every precaution to repair the walls, to lay in proviſion, to place numerous garriſons therein, and aſſemble their whole force in order to oppoſe the invaders, v. 14, 15. yet their ſtrongholds ſhall fall as eaſily before the beſiegers as a ripe fig when the tree is ſhaken, v. 12. her gates ſhall be ſet wide open, the fire ſhall devour the bars, v. 13. and with the ſword ſhall their enemies conſume, as the canker-worm, all the inhabitants of their cities, though numerous as the ſwarms of locuſts, v. 15.

3. Their friends ſhall deſert them. The merchants, that once crouded the ſtreets of Nineveh, and enriched themſelves with the traffick there carried on, will no ſooner behold the ſtorm approaching, than with their wealth they will forſake the devoted city, and fly away as the canker-worm when the field is eaten up; and their auxiliaries and tributary kings, who in the days of peace camped around them, and promiſed them aſſiſtance, no ſooner feel the ſcorching ſun of danger, than like locuſts, they take their flight and are heard of no more.

4. Their princes and officers, the ſhepherds who ſhould defend the flock, ſlumber, enervated with ſloth and luxury, and aſleep when they ſhould be at their poſts; or they ſleep the ſleep of death, and are laid with the nobles in the duſt, whilſt the people, as ſheep without a ſhepherd, are ſcattered, and fall an eaſy prey to the enemy.

5. Their caſe is deſperate. Their bruiſe incurable, their wound grievous; the city and empire fall together at a blow, never to be reſtored again. With triumph ſhall the oppreſſed nations clap their hands at the ſound of their fall; for upon whom hath not thy wickedneſs paſſed continually? having been oppreſſed, harraſſed, and plundered by the Aſſyrians: they will rejoice to ſee their deſtroyers deſtroyed. Let proud oppreſſors and hardened ſinners tremble: their day ſhall come to fall; and heaven and earth ſhall exult in their deſtruction.

THE EVANGELICAL EXPOSITOR;

OR, A

Upon the PROPHECY of

HABAKKUK.

THE time of Habakkuk's propheſying is not ſaid: the moſt probable conjecture is that he lived in the reign of king Manaſſeh, when wickedneſs abounded, and deſtruction was haſtening on; deſtruction by the Chaldeans, whom this prophet mentions as the inſtruments of God's judgments; and Manaſſeh was himſelf carried to Babylon, as an earneſt of what ſhould come afterwards. The mention made of Habakkuk in the apocryphal book of Bel and the Dragon, and what the rabbins ſay of his being the ſon of the Shunamite, are mere Jewiſh fables. The prophecy of this book is a mixture of the prophet's addreſſes to God in the people's name, and to the people in God's name: for it is the office of the prophets to carry meſſages both ways. And we have in it a lively repreſentation of the intercourſe and communion that there is between a gracious God and a gracious ſoul. The whole particularly refers to the invaſion of the land of Judah by the Chaldeans, who ſpoiled the people of God, as a juſt puniſhment of the ſpoil they had been guilty of among themſelves: but it is of general uſe, eſpecially to help us through that great temptation with which good men have in all ages been exerciſed, ariſing from the power and proſperity of the wicked, and the ſufferings of the righteous by it.

v. 1—4. This prophecy is called a burden, as it contains a heavy threatning of wrath for provoking iniquities.

1. The prophet bewails the miſerable ſtate of the land, where violence raged, iniquity reigned with impunity, rapine and injuſtice appeared without a vail, and whilſt families and neighbours were ſet at variance by thoſe who raiſe up ſtrife and contention, the kingdom was torn with inteſtine diviſions, fomented by the wicked, who loved to fiſh in theſe troubled waters. The law is ſlacked, hath loſt all its vigour; and judgment doth never go forth againſt the offenders, who are emboldened to commit every crime by this neglect: but, though the guilty eſcape, the innocent are perſecuted; for the wicked doth compaſs about the righteous, confederate to oppreſs the few faithful, and pervert juſtice; therefore wrong judgment proceedeth; the juſt are condemned, whilſt the criminals are acquitted. And when wickedneſs is thus prevalent in a nation, ruin cannot be far off.

Before Chriſt 690.

2. The prophet bewails his own unhappy fate, condemned to dwell in the ſight of ſuch abominations, which grieved his righteous ſoul, v. 3. and though an importunate advocate with God, no anſwer was given him. O Lord, how long ſhall I cry, and thou wilt not hear? even cry unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not ſave! notwithſtanding all his prayers, no ſtop was put to the abounding ungodlineſs; and on this account he expoſtulates, leſt it ſhould ſeem as if the Lord had forſaken the earth, when wickedneſs thus proſpered. Note, (1.) When we can do no more for ſinners, it becomes us ſtill to pray for them. (2.) Gracious ſouls, whilſt they are in the world, muſt bear this burden, of ſeeing and hearing abominations that grieve their ſpirits: but yet a little while they ſhall be releaſed, and go where the wicked ceaſe from troubling. (3.) It hath been a trial to many a good man's faith to behold proſperous iniquity; but we ſhall ſhortly ſee God juſtified in all his works and ways.

5. ¶ [d] Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, and

v. 5—11. Though God bears long with the veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction, he will not bear always.

1. He gives them notice of a terrible judgment ready to deſcend upon them. Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, ſee what fearful work God is doing among them; and Iſrael's turn would ſhortly come; and wonder marvellouſly, aſtoniſhed at the deſolations which are wrought in the earth: for I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe though it be told you; which was the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, with their cities, and the temple at Jeruſalem, which the Chaldeans, under the divine direction, would accompliſh; and this within the preſent age; ſo that many then alive ſhould ſee what the people of the Jews in general, notwithſtanding all the prophetic warnings, treated as utterly incredible. The Apoſtle applies this to the deſpiſers of Chriſt and his goſpel, whoſe deſtruction, terrible and ſure, approaches, notwithſtanding their inſenſibility and preſumption.

2. He deſcribes the dreadful ravages the Chaldeans ſhould make among them. Raiſed up at God's call, and ſent to execute his vengeance, they ſhall come to ſeize by conqueſt the dwelling-places which are not theirs; and, among other victims to their ambition, Judea ſhall be ſubdued by them. They are deſcribed as a bitter and haſty nation, cruel and mercileſs in their diſpoſitions, inveterate in their enmities, and rapid in executing their enterprizes: they are terrible and dreadful; the fame of their victories is ſpread, and their fierce look injects diſmay into their enemies: their judgment and their dignity ſhall proceed of themſelves; their will is their rule, imperious in their commands, and ſtrangers to the laws of clemency, equity, and humanity. Their cavalry, ſwifter than the leopards, and fiercer than evening wolves, ſhall charge, purſue, and bear down all oppoſition, plundering and devouring the country, ſpreading themſelves on every ſide, and haſting from their own diſtant land with ſuch velocity as the eagle darteth on his prey, v. 8. They ſhall come all for violence, purely to ravage and ſpoil: their faces ſhall ſup up as the eaſt-wind, blaſting all before them, leaving the land bare; or their faces ſhall look towards the eaſt, deſigning to transfer their ſpoil and captives thither, which they collect innumerable as the ſand, v. 9. They ſhall ſcoff at the kings of Judah, with their nobles and confederates; deriding every ſtronghold, as unable to reſiſt their victorious arms: for they ſhall heap duſt and take it; ſo eaſily will their mounts be raiſed by their numerous pioneers. Then ſhall his mind change: the king of Babylon, grown haughty by ſucceſs, ſhall meditate new conqueſts; and he ſhall paſs over all bounds of reaſon and equity, and ſhall offend by new acts of cruelty and injuſtice; imputing this his power unto his god, aſcribing his ſucceſs to his idol deities. Though ſome underſtand the words in a different ſenſe, as predicting Nebuchadnezzar's puniſhment. His mind ſhall change from a man to a beaſt, and he ſhall paſsover from the ſociety of men to dwell in the deſart, and be puniſhed for his pride and wickedneſs, for making this his power his god, as if he were a divinity, and poſſeſſed omnipotence. Note, (1.) It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of deſpotic tyrants. (2.) Succeſs often miniſters fuel for pride; and many by proſperity have their minds changed for the worſe.

12. ¶ [i] Art thou not from everlaſting, O LORD my God, mine holy One? we ſhall not die: O LORD, [k] thou haſt ordained them for judgment, and O † mighty God, thou haſt eſtabliſhed them for correction. 13. [l] Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canſt not look on ‡ iniquity: wherefore lookeſt thou upon them [m] that deal treacherouſly, and holdeſt thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he? 14. And makeſt men as the fiſhes of the ſea, as the § creeping things that have no ruler over them? 15. [n] They take up all of them with the angle: they catch them in their net, and gather them in their drag; therefore they rejoice and are glad. 16. Therefore [o] they ſacrifice unto their net, and burn incenſe unto their drag: becauſe by them their portion is fat, and their meat || plenteous. 17. Shall they therefore empty their net, and not ſpare continually to ſlay the nations?

v. 12—17. The judgments ready to come upon the people diſtreſſed the prophet, as their ſins had done before; ſeeing the righteous, as well as the wicked, would be involved therein; he therefore flies to God in prayer, and expoſtulates with him on theſe afflictive diſpenſations, that he may obtain an anſwer to ſatisfy his own mind, and thoſe who, like him, approved ſtill their fidelity to God.

1. He profeſſeth his own unſhaken faith in God, under every circumſtance of diſtreſs and difficulty. Art thou not from everlaſting? thou art the ſame unchangeable Jehovah, whoſe covenant ſtands faſt, and is like his nature, everlaſting; O Lord, my God, in whoſe favour he had an aſſured intereſt; mine holy One, whoſe diſpenſations, however dark to us, are perfectly righteous and true; who is holy eſſentially, and the author of all holineſs to others, we ſhall not die; however threatning the judgments, the nation ſhall not utterly be extirpated, the covenant of the eternal God forbids it: and hence every believer muſt draw his conſolation, and derive ſupport to his faith when ſhaken by temptation. His life is bound up with that of the eternal God; becauſe, ſays Jeſus, I live, ye ſhall live alſo; though the Chaldeans threatned high, they were but inſtruments in God's hand: O Lord, thou haſt ordained them for judgment, to puniſh the wicked, O mighty God, whoſe power can over-rule all the purpoſes of men; thou haſt eſtabliſhed them for correction, to chaſten thy children for good, that they may not be delivered unto death; this being the gracious deſign of God in all the afflictions he ſends upon his choſen, and which ſhould be their comfort under them. Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canſt not look upon iniquity; not that God's eye is not in every place, but he doth not approve of wickedneſs, it is his abhorrence; nor can he ſee the afflictions of his people, and the iniquity of their oppreſſors, with connivance or ſatisfaction; and to theſe principles he reſolved to adhere, however appearances might ſeem to contradict them. Note, (1.) Sound and well-eſtabliſhed principles are the great ſupport in time of trial. (2.) God's permiſſion of wickedneſs doth not imply his approbation, nor is the evil he ſuffers his people to undergo any mark of his diſpleaſure; but contrariwiſe, becauſe they are ſons, he chaſtiſeth them with the rod of men.

2. He begs a ſolution of his difficulties under the preſent diſtreſſful ſcene before him, when piety was oppreſſed, and wickedneſs triumphant: wherefore lookeſt thou upon them that deal treacherouſly, giving them ſucceſs in their perfidious deſigns, and holdeſt thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he? as the Chaldeans did the Jews; and God's ſilence diſtreſſed the prophet and other good men, how to reconcile this with their general principles. And makeſt men as the fiſhes of the ſea, ſeeming to ſhew no more care towards men in general, and his own people in particular, than over the fiſhes, where the weaker are a prey to the ſtrong, and whoever will may take them in their net, as the creeping things, that have no ruler over them, to protect and defend them. Thus helpleſs were they before their enemies, as if God had forſaken the earth, and left the good a prey to the wicked, and the weak a ſpoil to the ſtrong; to be caught as eaſily as fiſh with the angle; and by a variety of means, by the net or drag, to be ſeized and deſtroyed without concern: yea, to be a ſport and paſtime to their murderers, as fiſhermen rejoice and are glad when their net is filled, v. 15. Therefore they ſacrifice to their own net, and burn incenſe to their own drag, applaud themſelves in their own contrivances, and the ſucceſs of them, becauſe by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous; they thus enlarged their wealth, and were enabled to live more luxuriouſly, and this was their happineſs. Shall they therefore empty their net, and not ſpare continually to ſlay the nations? ſhall they go on ſucceſsfully from nation to nation, murdering and plundering at their pleaſure? Will a righteous God permit this? he leaves the matter with the Lord, and in faith and hope is emboldened to expect his interpoſition. Note, (1.) Whatever difficulties occur in the divine providence, we muſt caſt our care upon God, and wait patiently for his ſalvation. (2.) Ambitious princes make no more account of men than of fiſhes, and rejoice in battles gained at the expence of multitudes of lives, but God will reckon ſuch conquerors as the moſt bloody murderers of mankind.

CHAP. II.

The anſwer given to the prophet's prayer is, 1. That after God hath ſerved his own purpoſes by the prevailing power of the Chaldeans, has tried the faith and patience of his people, and diſtinguiſhed between the hypocrites and the ſincere among them, he will reckon with the Chaldeans for their inſatiable thirſt after dominion and wealth, for which they themſelves ſhould at length be made a prey, ver. 2—8. 2. That not they only, but all other ſinners like them, ſhould periſh under a divine woe. (1.) Thoſe that are greedy of wealth and honours, ver. 9—11. (2). Thoſe that are injurious and oppreſſive, and raiſe eſtates by wrong and rapine, ver. 12—14. (3.) Thoſe that promote drunkenneſs, that they may expoſe their neighbours to ſhame, ver. 15—17. (4.) Thoſe that worſhip idols, ver. 18—20.

1. I WILL [a] ſtand upon my watch, and ſet me upon the tower, and [b] will watch to ſee what he will ſay † unto me, and what I ſhall anſwer ‡ when I am reproved. 2. And the LORD anſwered me, and ſaid, [c] Write the viſion, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. 3. v. 1—4. We have here,

1. The prophet waiting in faith for an anſwer to his prayer. I will ſtand upon my watch, and ſet me upon my tower, as a watchman waiting for intelligence; and will watch to ſee what he will ſay to me, with regard to the requeſts he had made, and the difficulties he was under; and what I ſhall anſwer when I am reproved, either for the boldneſs of his expoſtulations; or how he ſhould ſilence the objections of others, who might, from theſe melancholy appearances, argue againſt the providence of God. Note, (1.) When we are in perplexity, and know not how to reconcile God's providences with his promiſes, we muſt go up to the tower of prayer and meditation, and ſtand our ground there by faith againſt the aſſaults of temptation, looking to God for an anſwer of peace. (2.) When we have been with God in prayer, conſulting his word, or reflecting on his diſpenſations, we muſt obſerve what God ſpeaks unto us by any of theſe means, for our conviction, direction, encouragement, or conſolation.

2. God anſwers him in mercy, and ſhews him the deſtruction of theſe mercileſs ravagers: for he never diſappoints the expectations of his waiting people. For the comfort of the faithful he is commanded to write the viſion, that it may be preſerved, and handed down, unadulterated by tradition; and make it plain upon tables, which were then uſed for writing, and covered with wax, on which the letters were impreſſed; and this was to be done very plainly, and hung up in ſome conſpicuous place, that he may run that readeth it, ſo legible that it might be eaſily read even by the moſt curſory look, or as one ran by it and but turned his head that way. And ſuch ſhould our preaching be, that the meaneſt capacities might comprehend it, never wiſhing to be admired as orators, but uſing all plainneſs of ſpeech, that God's word may be underſtood. For the viſion is yet for an appointed time; though it be diſtant, the day of its accompliſhment is fixed and ſure: at the end it ſhall ſpeak, and not lie; the Lord will not diſappoint the faith and patience of his people; or He will ſpeak, who is the faithful and true witneſs, the prophet come to lead us into all truth. Though it, the promiſe, or He, the Meſſiah, tarry long, or at leaſt ſeem to do ſo to thoſe who longed for his appearing, wait for it, or Him, the fulfilment of the promiſe, or the coming of the Lord; becauſe it will ſurely come, and not tarry a moment beyond the time fixed in God's eternal counſels; or, for he that cometh will come, as the Apoſtle quotes the words, Heb. x. 37. applying them to the Lord Jeſus, the great hope of his people, on whom they are called to ſtay themſelves under every afflictive diſpenſation. And herein the truth of grace is to be proved. Behold his ſoul, which is lifted up, is not upright in him: they who deſpiſe the viſion, or diſtruſt the promiſe, and, inſtead of waiting upon God, endeavour to ſhift for themſelves, depending on their own devices, they ſhew the unſoundneſs of their hearts. But the juſt ſhall live by faith: they who truſted God, even in the midſt of their calamities, ſhould be preſerved; and, in their captivity, the expectation of the Meſſiah ſhould ſupport them, and by faith in him their eternal life ſhould be ſecured. The words are quoted thrice by the Apoſtle as a proof of the great doctrine of juſtification by faith only; and they teach us, (1.) That no man is juſt, or juſtified before God, by any doings or duties of his own, but by faith in Jeſus. (2.) That all true believers ſhall live, kept by faith unto ſalvation, notwithſtanding every effort of their ſpiritual enemies. (3.) The meritorious cauſe of our life of grace or glory is not our faith, conſidered as our own act, but the object of it, Chriſt Jeſus, his blood and righteouſneſs alone.

5. ¶ † Yea alſo, becauſe he tranſgreſſeth by wine, he is a proud man, neither keepeth at home, who enlargeth his deſire [g] as hell, and is as death, and cannot be ſatisfied, but [h] gathereth unto him all nations, and heapeth unto him all people: 6. Shall not all theſe take up a parable againſt him, and a taunting proverb againſt him, and ſay, ‡ Woe to him that increaſeth that which is not his: how long? and to him [i] that ladeth himſelf with thick clay. 7. Shall they not riſe up ſuddenly that ſhall bite thee, and awake that ſhall vex thee, and thou ſhalt be for booties unto them? 8. v. 5—14. Some commentators, ſuppoſing from the foregoing verſes, which refer to goſpel times, that thoſe words go on to deſcribe the character of the ſucceeding enemies of the church, apply them to the Roman people, and eſpecially their emperors, to whom no doubt they are very applicable; but I rather incline, with the generality, to refer the prophecy to Nebuchadnezzar and his ſucceſſors in the Babylonian monarchy.

1. Moſt heavy accuſations are laid againſt this enemy of God's people: drunkenneſs and ſenſuality; impious pride, even to expect adoration; covetouſneſs inſatiable, v. 5. injuſtice and oppreſſion, v. 6. the blood of innocents; ambition, that knew no bounds, v. 9. theſe and the like were the crimes with which he ſtood chargeable before God. Therefore,

2. Repeated woes are denounced upon him; and, when he is fallen, he will be juſtly inſulted by thoſe nations over whom he lorded it before. Shall not all theſe take up a parable againſt him, and a taunting proverb, pleaſed to behold his diſgrace, and deriding his pride and preſumption, and ſay, Wo, wo, wo, unto him.

1. Wo to him that increaſeth that which is not his, oppreſſing and plundering to increaſe his wealth: how long ſhall iniquity thus prevail, and the unrighteous proſper? and to him that ladeth himſelf with thick clay, the riches of the world being no better; and they who lade themſelves with theſe by carking care and injuſtice, bring a heavy burden upon their ſouls, which will ſink them into perdition and deſtruction. Shall not they riſe up ſuddenly that ſhall bite thee, and awake that ſhall vex thee? certainly they ſhall: the Perſians and the Medes will ſpoil him of the thick clay on which he doated; and thou ſhalt be for booties unto them. As he had ſpoiled others, ſo ſhall they ſpoil him, the juſt retaliation for the innocent blood he had ſhed, the violence he had committed, and the cities he had deſtroyed, whoſe inhabitants he plundered, v. 8. God keeps a ſtrict account, and in the dreadful day of judgment the black catalogue will be produced againſt the proud oppreſſor and daring ſinner to his everlaſting confuſion.

2. Wo to him that coveteth an evil covetouſneſs to his houſe, inſatiable after wealth, and ever graſping at more; for covetouſneſs brings its own curſe along with it, and cannot be ſatisfied, robbing men of all the comforts in their families they otherwiſe might have enjoyed: that he may ſet his neſt on high, raiſe his family above dependence, and advance them higher in the world; that he may be delivered from the power of evil, ſecured from the power of his enemies, and from want, the great evil he dreads; though, alas! theſe are vain pretexts to gloſs over his covetouſneſs; and his defences but feeble againſt the evils he fears. Thou haſt conſulted ſhame to thy houſe, by cutting off many people, fixing, by ſuch unjuſt and cruel conduct, a mark of indelible infamy on his family; and haſt ſinned againſt thy ſoul, expoſing it to God's wrath and damnation: for the ſtone ſhall cry out of the wall, if other witneſſes of his guilt are wanting, and his frauds and deceits have been ſo managed as to eſcape the eye of men; and the beam out of the timber ſhall anſwer it, calling for vengeance upon the head of the unjuſt and the oppreſſor.

3. Wo to him that buildeth a town with blood, and eſtabliſheth a city by iniquity, as Nebuchadnezzar had built or adorned Babylon with the ſpoils of conquered nations, Dan. iv. 33. Behold, is it not of the Lord of hoſts, that the people ſhall labour in the very fire, and the people ſhall weary themſelves for very vanity? ſo fruitleſs will be all the endeavours of the Babylonians to preſerve themſelves from their enemies. For the earth ſhall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the ſea: when in the fall of Babylon God will be glorified, and the fame of his judgments ſpread into all lands. And this verſe ſeems to look forward alſo to greater events than the fall of Babylon, even to the times of the goſpel, when the kingdom of darkneſs ſhall fall before the word of Jeſus, and the knowledge of his glory be diffuſed, till at laſt, by his power and grace, the very ends of the earth ſhall remember themſelves and be turned to the Lord, and all fleſh ſhall ſee the ſalvation of our God.

15. ¶ Wo unto him that giveth his neighbour drink: that putteſt thy † bottle to him, and makeſt him drunken alſo, that thou [r] mayſt look on their nakedneſs. 16. Thou art filled ‡ with ſhame for glory: [s] drink thou

For the violence of Lebanon ſhall cover thee: and the ſpoil of beaſts which made them afraid [t] becauſe of men's blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and all that dwell therein. 18. ¶ What profiteth the graven image, that the maker thereof hath graven it; the molten image, and [u] a teacher of lies, that † the maker of his work truſteth therein to make him [x] dumb idols? 19. Wo unto him that ſaith to the wood, Awake; to the dumb ſtone, Ariſe, it ſhall teach; behold, it is laid over with gold and ſilver, and there is no breath at all in the midſt of it. 20. v. 15—20. The former verſes cried out of oppreſſion and wrong, for which the woes were there denounced; here we have two other cauſes for them, drunkenneſs and idolatry.

1. Drunkenneſs. Wo unto him that giveth his neighbour drink, as Belſhazzar did, when he made a feaſt for his thouſand lords, Dan. v. 1. that putteſt thy bottle to him, urging him to drink; and makeſt him drunken alſo: Such are factors for hell, and enemies to mankind; and tho' it may be called hoſpitality, good cheer, and giving them a hearty welcome, thus to make the glaſs circulate, it is indeed among the moſt deadly wickedneſſes, and will provoke the heavieſt wrath of God. Wo unto the drunkards, from the palace to the cottage! wrath is gone forth againſt them: that thou mayſt look on their nakedneſs; draw out their ſecrets, or expoſe them to ridicule, or induce them to ſome fooliſh or indiſcreet act or bargain; this being the malignant view for which men often ply their neighbours with liquor; but God will be the avenger of all ſuch. Thou art filled with ſhame for glory; God will render ſuch perſons vile and abhorred: drink thou alſo, and let thy foreſkin be uncovered; a cup of wrath is put into his hands; the cup of the Lord's right hand is turned unto thee. The ſame vengeance which the Chaldeans had executed upon others, ſhall return upon their own heads, when they ſhould be ſtripped naked to their ſhame, and, like drunkards, ſhameful ſpewing ſhall be on thy glory; they ſhall be rendered contemptible and loathſome, and all their riches and greatneſs be ſpoiled and defiled. The violence of Lebanon ſhall cover thee; either the ſame deſtruction as they had made in the temple of God; or this ſhould riſe up in judgment againſt them; or they ſhould be hunted down as wild beaſts in Lebanon: the ſpoil of beaſts which made them afraid; once the terror of the country, but now deſtroyed; and this for the reaſons alledged before, becauſe of men's blood, and for the violence of the land, and of the city, and of all that dwell therein.

Many apply this to Babylon myſtical, the great whore that maketh all nations drunk with the wine of her fornication, whoſe end will be according to her works, See Rev. xviii. 3—6.

2. Idolatry. Babylon was full of idols; but all the gold and ſilver laviſhed upon them, or the curious ſculpture, profited the maker nothing at all. Though they cried before them, Ariſe to help us, and expected from them directions in their emergencies, yet it was folly, nay madneſs, to expect a dumb ſtone, a lifeleſs log, to teach, or awake to ſuccour them. Such expectations could only be raiſed by the great teacher of lies, whom theſe idols effectually ſerve; and nothing but woe can be the conſequence of truſting on theſe lying vanities. Babylon myſtical, the church of Rome, copies cloſe after her pattern in antient days, and hath multiplied her images of gold and ſilver, of the Trinity, the Saviour, the Virgin Mary, of ſaints and angels, crouding their churches with them, where miſerable devotees are ſeen continually kneeling before the breathleſs image or dumb ſtone. Their crafty prieſts indeed repreſent theſe as laymen's books; but God regards them with abomination, as teachers of lies. But the Lord is in his holy temple; not in idols of wood, or ſtone, or gold, but in heaven, beholding the hearts and ways of all the children of men; and in his church, where his ſpecial preſence reſides, comforting his people, and protecting them from their enemies. Let all the earth keep ſilence before him, paying him the worſhip due unto his name with reverence and godly fear, and never more aſcribing his honour to graven images.

CHAP. III.

v. 1, 2. This chapter is called a prayer of Habakkuk the prophet; it is drawn up like David's pſalms, and ſuited for the ſervice of the ſanctuary, to be ſung upon Sigionoth, probably the muſical inſtrument which accompanied it.

1. The prophet acknowledges the notices of his will, which God had given him, and the impreſſion they made upon him. O Lord, I have heard thy ſpeech, and was afraid; becauſe of the ſad tidings concerning the deſolations of his people, which affected him exceedingly.

2. He cries on their behalf, that God would manifeſt his favour to them in the time of their diſtreſs. O Lord, revive thy work in the midſt of the years; give the people ſome tokens of regard before the captivity ends, or revive the work of grace among them, which cannot but comfort and ſupport them. In the midſt of the years make known thy pity, providence, and love: in wrath remember mercy, and ſhew them ſome ſigns of reconciliation, that they may not ſink into deſpair. Note, (1.) The work of grace in a believer's heart ſometimes appears decaying, his ſpirit lifeleſs, and he feels abundant cauſe to cry, Revive thy work, O Lord! (2.) When we are ſtirred up to cry to God, whatever wrath our ſouls appear to be under, there is then good hope of mercy in ſtore for us.

3. [b] God came from † Teman, and the holy One from mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praiſe. 4. And his brightneſs was as the light, he had ‡ horns coming out of his hand, and there was the hiding of his power. 5. [c] Before him went the peſtilence, and § burning coals went forth at his feet. 6. v. 3—15. The prophet, as the encouragement of his faith, remembers the days of old, and mentions the paſt deliverances God had wrought for his people, as a plea for preſent help.

1. He had appeared to them on Sinai, with moſt magnificent diſplays of his greatneſs and glory. He was ſeen advancing in majeſty from afar, from Teman and Paran, whilſt the heavens ſhone with his brightneſs, and earth rang with his praiſe, or was full of his light, v. 3. as the ſun he ſhone; he had horns, or beams, coming out of his hand, or ſides; begirt around with irradiation: and there was the hiding of his power; a little of his glory appeared; the far greater part was hid; for the greatneſs of his power who can underſtand?

2. He ſent his meſſengers before him, to prepare the way of his people. Before him went the peſtilence, and burning coals went forth at his feet; when Egypt felt his plagues, or when the Canaanites were by his judgments conſumed and weakened, in order to their final deſtruction. He ſtood and meaſured the earth; dividing the land of Canaan among the tribes, and with a look expelled the inhabitants. The mighty ſons of Anak, ſtrong as the everlaſting mountains, were ſcattered and broken; and all the nobles and princes of the land, who thought their poſſeſſions ſure as the perpetual hills, did bow before the God of Iſrael: for his ways are everlaſting, nor can any of the ſons of men fruſtrate his decrees, or ſtay his arm. With panic fears the neighbouring nations of Midian and Cuſhan, v. 7. beheld and trembled, leſt to them alſo the deſolations ſhould extend : ſo eaſily can God diſmay the mightieſt.

3. When the Red Sea was divided, and Jordan driven back, it ſeemed as if the very rivers affrighted fled from his diſpleaſure ; whilſt, as the captain of Iſrael's hoſt, he rode triumphant through the parted waters, and led them on horſes and chariots of ſalvation, v. 8. walking ſecurely along through the bed of the Red Sea, v. 15. The overflowing ſtreams, Joſh. iii. 15. paſſed by, retiring on either ſide : the deep uttered his voice, and lift up his hands on high ; roaring as it fled, and heaping up on either ſide a watery wall, that reached to the ſkies.

4. His rivers cleaved the earth, v. 9. when in the barren wilderneſs the ſtony rock at his command poured forth a torrent of waters, following Iſrael's camp through all their journeys in that dry and barren land.

5. To give Iſrael an opportunity to deſtroy their enemies, the ſun and the moon ſtood ſtill in their habitation, Joſh. x. 12. At the light of thine arrows they went, and at the ſhining of thy glittering ſpear ; God himſelf fought for them, and directed them in the purſuit of their routed foes. Thy bow was made quite naked, to conſume their enemies, according to the oaths of the tribes, even thy word, having ſworn to their fathers to give them this land for an heritage. From one end of Canaan to the other did the Lord, as the leader of Iſrael's army, march in indignation againſt the wickedneſs of the inhabitants, and threſhed them in anger, as corn in the floor, v. 12. Thou wenteſt forth for the ſalvation of thy people, even for ſalvation with thine anointed ; aſſiſting and ſtrengthening his divinely-appointed generals, Moſes, Aaron, and Joſhua : thou woundedſt the head out of the houſes of the wicked, the princes of Canaan, by diſcovering the foundation, utterly deſtroying their cities and the inhabitants, unto the neck ; the whole body politic, with all the members of it, being cut in pieces. Thou didſt ſtrike through with his ſtaves the head of his villages ; turning their own arms againſt them, and ruining the country throughout. Their rejoicing was as to devour the poor ſecretly ; they were confident of victory over God's poor people ; or this was a part of their crimes which provoked theſe judgments of God againſt them.

Some ſuppoſe the whole of this ſection refers to the coming of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt in the fleſh, his erection of his ſpiritual kingdom in the world, the ſubdual of ſin, Satan, death, and hell before him, and eſpecially his coming at the latter day for the deſtruction of the antichriſtian powers ; of all which, his appearances for his people in time paſt no doubt were typical ; and we may, in every time of our diſtreſs and trouble, as confidently hope to ſee this great ſalvation of God, as ever Iſrael experienced his ſalvation from their enemies of old.

16. [p] When I heard, my belly trembled : my lips quivered at the voice : rottenneſs entered into my bones, and I trembled in myſelf, † that I might reſt in the day of trouble : when he cometh up unto the people, he will ‡ invade them with his troops. 17. ¶ Although the fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither ſhall fruit be in the vines, the labour of the olive ſhall § fail, and the field, ſhall yield no meat, the flock ſhall be cut off from the fold, and there ſhall be no herd in the ſtalls : 18. [q] Yet I will rejoice in the LORD, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation. 19. The Lord GOD is [r] my ſtrength, and he will make my feet like [s] hinds feet, and he will make me to walk upon mine high places. To the chief ſinger on my ‖ ſtringed inſtruments.

v. 16—19. The tidings of diſtreſs which the prophet heard concerning the people of God, though there was hope in the end, affected him deeply.

1. When I heard, my belly trembled ; my lips quivered at the voice ; overpowered with fear and diſmay : rottenneſs entered into my bones ; his whole frame ſeemed as diſſolved : I trembled in myſelf, at the deſolations he beheld ; that I might reſt, or notwithſtanding I ſhall reſt in the day of trouble ; be ſafe under the divine protection, and delivered from the evil, though he plainly foreſaw, that when he cometh up unto the people, when the Chaldeans with their king come up, he will invade them, or cut them in pieces with his troops. Note, (1.) Holy ſouls tremble at God's word, and with awful apprehenſions look forward to the wrath ready to be revealed from heaven. (2.) God's people are enabled to exerciſe faith in him in the worſt of times, and they ſhall be hid in the day of his fierce anger.

2. Notwithſtanding every diſcouraging circumſtance, his faith triumphs in the God of his ſalvation. He ſuppoſes the worſt of calamities that can happen ; that drought, blaſting mildew, or the ravages of an enemy, deſtroy their vines, fig-trees, and olives ; that peſtilence and famine devour the cattle, ſo that the barren fields are quite forſaken, v. 18. Yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation. And thus can a faithful ſoul under the loſs of every earthly comfort rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, in the preſent experience of his grace, and the aſſured expectation of his glory ; a joy which the world can neither give nor take away. The Lord God is my ſtrength, when every other help fails, and upheld by his everlaſting arms, our preſent and eternal ſalvation is ſecured to us ; he will bring us ſafe through all our trials, and none ſhall pluck us out of his hand : and he will make my feet like hinds feet, firm, and ſwift to run the way of his commandments, amidſt every difficulty and danger : and he will make me to walk upon my high places ; victorious over every foe, as every believer ſhall ſhortly be, when he cometh to the mount of God in glory. Thus ends the prophet's prayer, with aſſured faith, and joyful hope ; and he hath left it upon record, directed to the chief ſinger on the ſtringed inſtruments, to teach God's people in all their trials never to ceaſe from prayer and praiſe ; but, rejoicing in hope, to expect with humble confidence the final, full, and eternal ſalvation of God.

OR, A
PRACTICAL COMMENT
Upon the PROPHECY of
ZEPHANIAH.

THIS prophet is placed laſt, as he was laſt in time of all the minor prophets before the captivity, and not long before Jeremiah, who lived at the time of the captivity. He foretels the general deſtruction of Judah and Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans, and ſets their ſins in order before them; which had provoked God to bring their ruin upon them; calls them to repentance; threatens the neighbour nations with the like deſtructions, and gives encouraging promiſes of their joyful return out of captivity in due time, which have a reference to the grace of the goſpel.

The day of the Lord is near, and it will be a terrible day*, ver. 10—18.

v. 1—6. We have,

1. An account of the penman of this prophecy, Zephaniah, whoſe anceſtors for four generations back are mentioned, probably as men of diſtinguiſhed note; and ſome have thought him of the blood-royal, and a deſcendant from Hezekiah, king of Judah, the ſame word in the original as Hizkiah. He lived in the beſt times, even in the reforming reign of Joſiah; and yet we find the people at bottom, many of them at leaſt, notwithſtanding their apparent change, continued bad, very bad, or quickly relapſed, and departed from their promiſing beginnings. Of ſo ſhort continuance are the effects wrought by the moſt zealous reformers among a backſliding people. The word of the Lord came to the prophet; for he ſpake not in his own name, but as the Spirit gave him utterance.

Before Chriſt 612.

2. The burden of his prophecy is the approaching deſtruction of the land of Judea, and all things therein, both man and beaſt.

(1.) I will conſume and cut off man from off the land, ſaith the Lord; even the good men that yet remain will be involved in the national calamity. But the wicked are eſpecially intended: againſt them the Lord will ſtretch out his hand, in wrath to ſmite and conſume them from the earth, with their ſtumbling-blocks, thoſe hated idols, which was their mortal ſin. I will cut off the remnant of Baal from this place; thoſe who, notwithſtanding all Joſiah's care, ſtill continued the worſhip of Baal: and the name of the Chemarims with the prieſts. The Chemarims were idolatrous prieſts, as the word is tranſlated, 2 Kings xxiii. 5. ſo called either from the black garments they wore, or from their faces blackened with the ſmoke of the fires where they ſacrificed. Theſe ſhould be cut off, yea their very name buried in oblivion, or mentioned with deteſtation. And thoſe who on houſe-tops worſhip the hoſt of heaven, ſhall ſhare the ſame fate; with all thoſe who ſwear by the Lord, or to the Lord and Malcham, or Moloch, ſeeking to reconcile the inconſiſtent ſervices of both, and pretending to worſhip them together, irreconcileable as that muſt for ever be: and them that are turned back from the Lord; apoſtates from the profeſſion they once made: and thoſe that have not ſought the Lord, nor enquired for him: careleſs and prayerleſs ſinners, who never troubled themſelves about God, his worſhip, or ſervice; theſe will he deſtroy together. Note, (1.) The prayerleſs ſoul is a loſt ſoul. (2.) They who ſeek to reconcile their religion with the ways of the world, and would ſerve God and Mammon too, juſt go as far as the devil deſires. If they ſwear by Malcham, conform to the maxims, cuſtoms, or vanities of the world, they may ſerve God in form as much as they pleaſe, but they will be numbered with the tranſgreſſors.

(2.) I will conſume the beaſts, the fowls of the heaven, and the fiſhes of the ſea; being deſigned for man's comfort, they are involved in his puniſhment, when by ſin he forfeits all his mercies.

7. [k] Hold thy peace at the preſence of the Lord GOD: for the day of the LORD is at hand: for [l] the LORD hath prepared a ſacrifice, he hath † bid his gueſts. 8. And it ſhall come to paſs in the day of the LORD's ſacrifice, that I will puniſh the princes, and [m] the king's children, and all ſuch as are clothed with ſtrange apparel. 9. In the ſame day alſo will I puniſh all thoſe that leap on the threſhold, which fill their maſters houſes with violence and deceit. 10. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, ſaith the LORD, that there ſhall be the noiſe of a cry from the fiſh-gate, and an howling from the ſecond, and a great craſhing from the hills. 11. Howl, ye inhabitants of Makteſh, for all the merchant-people are cut down: all they that bear ſilver are cut off. 12. And it ſhall come to paſs at that time, that I will [n] ſearch Jeruſalem with candles, and puniſh the men [o] that are ‡ ſettled on their lees; [p] that ſay in their heart, The LORD will not do good, neither will he do evil. 13. Therefore their goods ſhall become a booty, and their houſes a deſolation: they ſhall alſo build houſes, [q] but not inhabit them; and they ſhall plant vineyards, but not drink the wine thereof.

v. 7—13. The day of vengeance approaches, and the nation, as a ſacrifice to divine juſtice, is ready to be offered up; and the Lord hath bid his gueſts, the Chaldeans, or the fowls of the heaven, to feed upon the carcaſes of the ſlain.

1. Thoſe are deſcribed who are devoted to deſtruction.

(1.) The princes and king's children; for judgment begins with the higheſt; and all ſuch as are cloathed with ſtrange apparel; either the veſtments in which they worſhipped their idols, or they affected in their dreſs to imitate their heathen neighbours in finery and extravagance, and their cloaths proclaimed the pride and vanity of their hearts.

(2.) The oppreſſors, who leap on the threſhold, who daringly thruſt themſelves in at their neighbour's door, and ſeize what comes to hand; filling their maſters houſes with violence and deceit; who ſet them on this wickedneſs, and protect them from juſtice and puniſhment.

(3.) The rich merchants, and all they that bear ſilver, having plenty of money to trade, and buy and ſell, and get gain.

(4.) All that are ſettled upon their lees; living in pleaſure, affluence, eaſe, and carnal ſecurity, and this begetting infidelity; that ſay in their heart, though, like many other practical atheiſts, they dare not openly avow their ſentiments, The Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil; denying his providential government of the world; and that neither his ſervice would be attended with reward, nor ſin with any puniſhment; leaving him out of their ſight, and intimating in fact that there was no God. And as it is ſo much for their intereſt there ſhould be none, ſenſualiſts would fain perſuade themſelves there is none: but ſuch as theſe God will aſſuredly detect and puniſh. I will ſearch Jeruſalem with candles, that none may be able to hide themſelves; and puniſh them with judgment from which none ſhall be able to eſcape. Note, Many are driven to the dreadful and deceitful refuge of infidelity, that they may ſilence conſcience thereby, and enjoy their guilty pleaſures undiſturbed.

2. Their cry will be terrible when the ſtroke of vengeance deſcends. In that day, ſaith the Lord, there ſhall be the noiſe of a cry from the fiſh-gate, of the miſerable inhabitants flying before their Chaldean purſuers; and a great craſhing from the hills; either of the enemy ſhouting and ruſhing on to the ſlaughter, or of the houſes of the nobles, built on the higheſt part of Zion and Moriah, now plundered and beat to the ground. Howl, ye inhabitants of Makteſh, a ſtreet of Jeruſalem, into which the enemy broke; or it is put for the whole body of the people howling over their deſolations. Their merchants are cut down, and their ſubſtance a ſpoil to the Chaldeans: yea, their gods are become a booty; ſo far from being able to help them, unable to deliver themſelves. Their houſes, which they built, flattering themſelves with a long abode in them, are become a deſolation; and the vineyards they planted, afford their produce not to them, but to their conquerors.

3. The prophet, with all others who are like him, are commanded to hold their peace at the preſence of the Lord God, not daring to diſpute againſt his righteous judgments, nor ſuffered to open their mouths to pray for a people devoted to deſtruction.

14. The great day of the LORD is near, it is near, and haſteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the LORD: the mighty man ſhall cry there bitterly. 15. That day is [r] a day of wrath, a day of trouble and diſtreſs, a day of waſteneſs and deſolation, a day of darkneſs and gloomineſs, a day of clouds and thick darkneſs. 16. A day of the trumpet and alarm againſt the fenced cities, and againſt the high towers. 17. And I will bring diſtreſs upon men, that they ſhall walk like [s] blind men, becauſe they have ſinned againſt the LORD: and their blood ſhall be poured out as duſt, and their fleſh as the dung. 18. [t] Neither their ſilver nor their gold ſhall be able to deliver them in the day of the LORD's wrath, but the whole land ſhall be [u] devoured by the fire of his jealouſy: for he ſhall make even a ſpeedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land.

v. 14—18. If any thing can alarm the ſinners in Zion, the prophet's awful warnings muſt ſurely do it.

1. The great day of the Lord, when he will take vengeance on the Jews by the ſword of the Chaldeans, is near; it is near, and haſteth greatly; but a moment remains to fly from this devouring fire. It is madneſs for the ſinner to ſlumber, whoſe damnation ſlumbereth not.

2. This will be a day of terror and diſmay. The voice of the day of the Lord will ſtrike a panic into the boldeſt; the mighty men ſhall cry there bitterly, like women quite diſpirited, and wringing their hands when they ſhould graſp the ſword. That day is a day of wrath; of the wrath of God, and of the fury of the Chaldeans, his inſtruments of vengeance: a day of trouble and diſtreſs, to the miſerable inhabitants; of waſteneſs and deſolation to the whole land, to Jeruſalem, the temple, and all the cities thereof: a day of darkneſs and gloomineſs, a day of clouds and thick darkneſs, without a gleam of hope, and big with deſpair. A day of the trumpet and alarm againſt the fenced cities, and againſt the high towers, ſpreading horror and diſmay on every ſide. And I will bring diſtreſs upon men, perplexed, and not knowing which way to turn; that they ſhall walk like blind men, ruſhing upon their own ruin.

3. Deſtruction univerſal and unavoidable will enſue. Their blood ſhall be poured out as duſt, ſo profuſely, ſo diſregarded; and their fleſh as the dung; their carcaſes left unburied on the earth. Neither their ſilver nor their gold ſhall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; for in that day they profit not: but the whole land ſhall be devoured by the fire of his jealouſy; ſo furious, ſo implacable, nothing can ſtay the raging flames: for he ſhall make even a ſpeedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land, and leave them neither root nor branch. Note, It is a fearful thing indeed to fall into the hands of a jealous God.

4. Sin, ſin, that accurſed thing, is the cauſe of all this miſery. Becauſe they have ſinned againſt the Lord; this is the provocation, and the ſting of every affliction: it is this which puts the worm that never dies into the conſcience, and kindles the flames that never can be quenched. O ſin, ſin, what haſt thou done?

v. 1—3. God warns before he ſtrikes, that ſinners may have time to return, and prevent the threatned judgments.

1. A ſummons is ſent to this people. Gather yourſelves together, yea, gather together, to faſt and pray, and humble your ſouls; or ſearch yourſelves; examine your ways, that you may diſcover your ſins, and turn unto the Lord, O nation not deſired, or deſirous after God and his favour; negligent and careleſs, or not pleaſing to him, but odious through the multitude of their provocations.

2. They are urged inſtantly to lay their caſe to heart, before the decree bring forth, and be put in execution; before the day paſs as the chaff, when they ſhould be driven into captivity, unable to withſtand their fate, as chaff before the whirlwind; before the fierce anger of the Lord, the day of the Lord's anger come upon you, terrible beyond expreſſion. Delays are dangerous where eternity is at ſtake, and the wrath of God is threatned:

we need be quickened to ſeize the preſent moment; and to-day, whilſt it is called to-day, not to harden our hearts.

3. The few gracious ſouls among them are addreſſed, whatever others do, to make their calling and election ſure. Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth: this is the character of God's people; they are meek and lowly of heart, patient under the provocations of men, and ſubmiſſive under the afflictive providences of God; which have wrought his judgment; obedient to his laws, obſervant of his worſhip. Such as theſe, who will receive the word of exhortation, are enjoined to ſeek the Lord by prayer and ſupplication with thankſgiving. Seek righteouſneſs, ſeek meekneſs; a greater increaſe of grace, that they may be more holy and exemplary; for none who know themſelves can reſt in any preſent attainments, conſcious how ſhort they come at the beſt; and therefore forgetting the things that are behind, they reach to thoſe which are before, preſſing to the mark for the prize of their high calling in Chriſt Jeſus.

4. There is hope that ſuch may eſcape the general deſolations, and, by a peculiar interpoſition of Divine Providence, be hid in the day of the Lord's anger, and not periſh with their ungodly countrymen: but, whether involved in temporal calamities or not with others, it not only may be, but it certainly ſhall be, that ſuch ſhall be hid in the great day of his wrath.

4. ¶ For [d] Gaza ſhall be forſaken, and Aſhkelon a deſolation: they ſhall drive out Aſhdod at the noon-day, and Ekron ſhall be rooted up. 5. Wo unto [e] the inhabitants of the ſea-coaſts, the nation of the Cherethites: the word of the LORD is againſt you: [f] O Canaan, the land of the Philiſtines, I will even deſtroy thee, that there ſhall be no inhabitant. 6. And the ſea-coaſt ſhall be dwellings and cottages for ſhepherds, and folds for flocks. 7. And the coaſt ſhall be for the remnant of the houſe of Judah, they ſhall feed thereupon, in the houſes of Aſhkelon ſhall they lie down in the evening: † for the LORD their God ſhall viſit them, and turn away their captivity.

v. 4—7. The neighbouring nations are here called to the bar, and their doom read. Though judgment begins at the houſe of God, it will not end there. The Philiſtines were the antient enemies of Iſrael, and would rejoice at their fall; but they are deſtined to the ſame deſtruction.

1. They ſhall be extirpated as uſurpers, their land lying within the bounds of the country given to Iſrael, Joſh. xiii. 3. God pronounces a woe againſt them, with their neighbours the Cherethites, unleſs this be ſuppoſed another name for the Philiſtines. Their capital cities are devoted to ruin: they muſt fall ſince God's word is againſt them, whoſe purpoſes and decrees are irreſiſtible. Their deſtruction will be univerſal; not an inhabitant ſhall be left, v. 5. and their ſea-coaſt, where their cities once ſtood full of inhabitants, ſhall only now afford a few miſerable cottages, where ſhepherds watch and fold their flocks.

2. Judah ſhall poſſeſs the land, repair and inhabit their cities in peace, when the Lord ſhall viſit them, and turn away their captivity, which was fulfilled after their return from Babylon, in the days of the Maccabees.

8. ¶ I have heard [g] the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, whereby they have reproached my people, and [h] magnified themſelves againſt their border. 9. Therefore as I live, ſaith the LORD of hoſts the God of Iſrael, Surely [i] Moab ſhall be as Sodom, and [k] the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, [l] even the breeding of nettles, and ſalt-pits, and a perpetual deſolation, the reſidue of my people ſhall ſpoil them, and the remnant of my people ſhall poſſeſs them. 10. This ſhall they have [m] for their pride, becauſe they have reproached and magnified themſelves againſt the people of the LORD of hoſts. 11. v. 8—11. Moab and Ammon, the children of Lot, are joined together, alike in ſin and in ſuffering.

1. Their ſins are, (1.) Reproach and reviling of God's people, inſulting them in the day of their calamity, and probably helping forward their ruin; and they magnified themſelves againſt their border, ſeizing what lay contiguous to their country: but God heard, and noted their words and works, and will recompenſe them. (2.) Their pride. Puffed up with ſelf-conceit, they looked on the people of the Lord of hoſts as contemptible, and arrogantly deſpiſed their religion and their God. Note, Pride is the firſt-born of hell, and in God's ſight moſt odious.

2. Their judgment is the ſame; condemned to an overthrow, terrible as that of Sodom and Gomorrah, their country ſhall become barren and uncultivated as a wilderneſs; and Iſrael, whom they have inſulted, ſhall, after their return from Babylon, ſpoil them, and poſſeſs the country, after it had begun to revive from the deſolations of Nebuchadnezzar: and this is confirmed by the oath of the Lord of hoſts, none of whoſe words ſhall fail. Note, They who have trampled on others, in juſt judgment are brought under the feet of thoſe whom they thus inſulted.

3. A gracious promiſe, which reſpects the times of the goſpel, cloſes the burden of Moab and Ammon. God will not only be terrible to them, but he will famiſh or bring leanneſs upon all the gods of the earth, when idolatry before the power of the goſpel of Jeſus ſhould be deſtroyed; and men ſhall worſhip him, every one from his place, or in his place, without going up to Jeruſalem, the ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe being acceptable now in every place: even all the iſles of the heathen; and, bleſſed be God, we ſee the promiſe fulfilled graciouſly to us in this land.

12. ¶ Ye [n] Ethiopians alſo, ye ſhall be ſlain by my ſword. 13. And he will ſtretch out his hand againſt the north, and [o] deſtroy Aſſyria, and will make Nineveh a deſolation, and dry like a wilderneſs. 14. And flocks ſhall lie down in the midſt of her, all the beaſts of the nations: both [p] the † cormorant and the bittern ſhall lodge in the upper [q] lintels of it: their voice ſhall ſing in the windows, deſolation ſhall be in the threſholds: ‡ for he ſhall uncover the cedar-work. 15. v. 12—15. The inhabitants of Arabia, or Ethiopia, and the Aſſyrians, with Nineveh their capital, are devoted to deſtruction, which was brought upon them by Nebuchadnezzar. And we have,

1. The ſtate of proſperity and ſecurity in which Nineveh had been. This is the rejoicing city that dwelt careleſsly; mirth and jollity once rang through her palaces, and, fearleſs of danger, no melancholy thought interrupted the jocund hours: that ſaid in her heart, I am, and there is none beſide me; none to be compared to me for wealth, ſtrength, and beauty. But when ſelf-complacence ſwells the boſom of the proud, and ſecurity lulls the ſinner to his deceitful reſt, ruin hangs over him, wrath is at his heels.

2. The miſerable ſituation to which Nineveh ſhall be reduced. Turned to a heap of ruins, theſe proud palaces ſhall become the den of wild beaſts, and the abode of every rueful ominous bird. The deſcription, v. 14. is inimitably beautiful, and which a comment can but debaſe. It expreſſes the utter deſolation which would enſue; and every paſſenger who beheld the ſcene, whilſt they wonder at the fearful change, will hiſs and wag the hand, inſulting over her fall, who ſo often inſulted over others.

CHAP. III.

We now return to Jeruſalem, and muſt again hear what God has to ſay to her, 1. By way of reproof and threatning, for the abundance of wickedneſs that was found in her, ver. 1—7. 2. By way of promiſe of mercy, which God had yet in reſerve for them. (1.) That he would bring in a glorious work of reformation among them, cleanſe them from their ſins, and bring them home to himſelf, ver. 8—13. (2.) That he would bring about a glorious work of ſalvation for them, when he had thus prepared them for it, ver. 14—20. Thus the Redeemer ſhall come to Zion, and to clear his own way, ſhall turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob. Theſe promiſes were to have their full accompliſhment in goſpel times and goſpel graces.

v. 1—7. Jeruſalem again is the burden of this prophecy : where God might juſtly have expected all obedience, there nothing is found but abominations.

1. The whole city is full of wickedneſs. Wo to her that is filthy and polluted with complicated ſins, to the oppreſſing city, where lawleſs violence prevailed. She obeyed not the voice ; diſobedient to God's will, and paying no regard to his law : ſhe received not correction ; neither the admonitions of the prophets, nor the rod of afflictive providences, produced any good effect. She truſted not in the Lord, but in her idols and heathen allies : ſhe drew not near to her God ; breaking the covenant, forſaking the God of her mercies, and reſtraining prayer before him ; which ſome particularly apply to the Phariſees in the days of Chriſt, who were full of uncleanneſs, truſted in themſelves, and came not to Jeſus for pardon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation.

2. The leading men are chief in tranſgreſſion. The nobles and judges are rapacious and cruel as roaring lions and evening wolves, when driven by hunger they ſally forth in ſearch of prey ; they gnaw not the bones till the morrow, or in the morning ; eating up on the ſpot even the very bones of the prey which falls into their hands. Her prophets are light and treacherous ; their vain conduct gave the lie to their pretenſions, and their word tended to betray the intereſts of religion, and to ruin the ſouls of men. Note, Levity in a prophet muſt render him a diſcredit to his profeſſion. Her prieſts were faithleſs ; they polluted the ſanctuary by their ſins, which they ſhould have adorned by the purity of their lives : and did violence to the law ; perverted it by falſe gloſſes, or contradicted what it taught by their bad examples : theſe therefore ſhall receive greater damnation.

3. Their ſins were aggravated by many conſiderations :

(1.) God's preſence was eminently with them. The juſt Lord is in the midſt of thee ; his Shechinah dwelt among them ; he beheld all their ways, which could not but provoke the eyes of his holineſs. He will not do iniquity ; nor can he ſuffer it in others with impunity. Every morning doth he bring his judgment to light ; ſending his prophets to warn men of the evil and danger of their ways. He faileth not, with long patience and conſtant admonitions to call them to repentance : but the unjuſt knoweth no ſhame ; never bluſhing at their guilt or their ingratitude ; and they who are paſt ſhame, are paſt cure.

(2.) He had executed judgments on other nations, that they might take warning ; deſtroying their cities, and leaving their land deſolate without inhabitants, v. 6. I ſaid, Surely thou wilt fear me ; affected with the ſufferings of others, and not daring to provoke a jealous God. Thou wilt receive inſtruction, by their ſad caſe ; ſo their dwelling ſhould not be cut off, howſoever I puniſhed them ; his viſitations being deſigned to reſcue them from deſtruction, if they heard the rod, and who had appointed it. But,

(3.) They roſe early, and corrupted all their doings ; grew worſe and worſe, filling up the meaſure of their iniquities, and wilfully ruſhed on their ruin. Note, Damned ſouls will to eternity have only their own obſtinacy and folly to blame. How oft would I have gathered you, and ye would not !

v. 8—13. Amidſt all the deſolations determined, the proſpect of the days of the Meſſiah give ſome reviving hopes to the faithful, who are commanded to wait ſtill upon God, and expect his ſalvation.

1. He will riſe up to avenge himſelf, and ſeize the prey ; for which purpoſe he aſſembles the nations of the ungodly, to pour out upon them his wrath, who refuſe to ſubmit to the proffers of his grace, and obey not his goſpel. Or the ſenſe may be, He will aſſemble the kingdoms, the Roman army collected from them, to pour upon them, the Jewiſh people, mine indignation, for rejecting their Meſſiah ; and their whole country ſhall be devoured with the fire of my jealouſy.

2. He will ſet up and eſtabliſh the goſpel kingdom throughout the world, and bring the nations to the obedience of the faith. For then will I turn to the people a pure language ; the converting grace of God effectually changing the converſation ; ſo that renewed ſouls ſpeak a different language from what they uſed to do, telling now of the things which God hath done for their ſouls, and with one mind and one mouth glorifying him : and the faithful among all nations ſhall have one common tongue, and join in the ſame bleſſed ſervice of prayer and praiſe, calling upon the name of the Lord, and ſerving him with one conſent. And thus God's diſperſed people, now brought to humble ſupplicants, from Egypt and all the places of their diſperſion, ſhall come bringing their offering, even their bodies, ſouls, and ſpirits, a living ſacrifice to God, v. 10. Prayer being the immediate voice of the humbled ſinner ; and every true ſupplicant, not only in words but in deed, preſents himſelf to God, to glorify him, not only in his lips but in his life. In that day their ſhame ſhall be done away, their ſins being forgiven, and the power of them ſubdued. The proud and ſelf-righteous, the hypocrites, ſuch as were the Scribes and Phariſees, who truſted in their ſervices at the temple, and on their works and doings, ſhall then be deſtroyed, v. 11. Nothing being more offenſive to God, than that high conceit which ſuch miſerable ſinners entertain of their own formal ſervices and imperfect duties. I will alſo leave in the midſt of thee an afflicted poor people ; as when the Chaldeans carried all the nobles captives, and left the poor of the land for huſbandmen and vine-dreſſers. And a poor afflicted people are God's redeemed ; afflicted with temptations, corruption, perſecution ; poor, generally in worldly goods, always in ſpirit ; ſenſible of their own wants and wretchedneſs, and beggars at the door of mercy for the bread of life : and they ſhall truſt in the name of the Lord, in his blood and righteouſneſs, as the only ground of their acceptance before God. The remnant of Iſrael, theſe poor afflicted ones, ſhall not do iniquity, but by the effectual grace of God ſhall be enabled to walk in all holy converſation and godlineſs ; nor ſpeak lies, truth ſtamping all their words ; and faithful to the doctrines of the goſpel, holding the truth in the light and love of it : neither ſhall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth ; for they ſhall feed, as the ſheep of Chriſt's paſture, on the ordinances, and lie down in peace under the protection of their great Shepherd ; and none ſhall make them afraid ; none of their enemies, ſpiritual or temporal, ſhall be able to terrify or to deſtroy them, for their heart ſtandeth faſt, and truſteth in the Lord.

1. To remove all judgments from her ; all temporal judgments, ſuch as exile, diſperſion, poverty, contempt ; all ſpiritual judgments, ſuch as blindneſs, unbelief, and hardneſs of heart. All her enemies ſhall be caſt out, that now poſſeſs the land of Iſrael :

Iſrael, and he will undo all that afflict them. Though weak, feeble, and halting, their captivity ſhall be brought back, ver. 20. never to be repeated, for thou ſhalt ſee evil no more, their troubles now being for ever at an end.

2. God promiſes to be in the midſt of them, as their king, Meſſiah, to ſave them from the power of all evil; as their God, ver. 17. in a covenant of everlaſting love, and who will never leave nor forſake them. He is mighty, yea, Almighty, able to ſave to the uttermoſt, and to fulfil all the pomiſes of his word in ſpite of whatever oppoſition may be raiſed from Satan, ſin, death, or hell; and willing as he is able, he will ſave his people in time and in eternity. He will rejoice over thee with joy and ſinging, the converſion of ſinners being the delight of the Redeemer, and he ſees then in them the travail of his ſoul, and is ſatisfied. He will reſt in his love, unchangeably the ſame, no cloud ſhall ever hide from them again the bright beams of his countenance, and he will himſelf feel complacence in the expreſſions of his favour vouchſafed to his dear people.

3. They ſhall again enjoy the ordinances which have been ſo long interrupted, and after which they mourned during their diſperſion. I will gather them that are ſorrowful for the ſolemn aſſembly, who weep over the deſolations of Zion, who are of thee, the true children of the Jeruſalem which is above, the mother of us all; to whom the reproach of it was a burden, deeply affected with the inſults of their enemies, which was the caſe of the pious Jews in Babylon, who were, in God's appointed time, reſtored to their temple and worſhip at Jeruſalem. The Jews in their preſent diſperſion lament alſo the ſad interruption of the ſervice of the ſanctuary, and thoſe who are converted from among them long for the day of their brethren's reſtoration, when they may be gathered either into the church of Chriſt, or, as ſome ſuppoſe, be collected together in their own land, and ſerve God literally in his holy mountain at Jeruſalem, and their reproach be for ever rolled away.

4. They ſhall become honourable and reſpected, as they have been contemned and deſpiſed. I will get them praiſe and fame in every land where they have been put to ſhame, for their rejection of the Meſſiah; but now being turned unto the Lord, all chriſtian lands will praiſe them for their obedience to the faith, and the fame of their converſion will ſpread a general joy; they ſhall then be a name and a praiſe among all people of the earth; for which happy event all gracious ſouls ſhould unite their fervent ſupplications, that the Lord would be pleaſed to haſten it in his time.

THE EVANGELICAL EXPOSITOR; OR, A PRACTICAL COMMENT Upon the PROPHECY of HAGGAI.

THE three laſt of the prophets were raiſed up of God, after the return of the Jews from Babylon. Haggai and Zechariah appeared much about the ſame time, eighteen years after, when the building of the temple was both retarded by its enemies, and neglected by its friends, Ezra v. 1. to reprove them for their remiſſneſs, and to encourage them to revive that good work when it had ſtood ſtill for ſome time, and to go on with it vigorouſly, notwithſtanding the oppoſition they met with in it. Haggai began two months before Zechariah, who was raiſed up to ſecond him, that out of the mouth of two witneſſes the word might be eſtabliſhed: but Zechariah continued longer at the work; for all Haggai's prophecies that are recorded, were delivered within four months, in the ſecond year of Darius, between the beginning of the ſixth month, and the end of the ninth: but we have Zechariah's prophecies dated above two years after, Zech. vii. 1. They both propheſied of Chriſt; Haggai ſpeaks of him as the Glory of the latter Houſe; Zechariah as the Man the Branch: as they ſaw the day approaching, they ſought thus to raiſe the expectations of Iſrael, and prepare them for his reception.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter we have, 1. A reproof of the Jews for their dilatorineſs and ſlothfulneſs in building the temple, with an exhortation to reſume that good work, and to proſecute it in good earneſt, ver. 1—11. 2. The good ſucceſs of this ſermon, appearing in the people's return and cloſe application to that work, wherein the prophet in God's name animated and encouraged them, aſſuring them that God was with them, ver. 12—15.

1.[a] IN the ſecond year of Darius the king, in the ſixth month, in the firſt day of the month, [b] came the word of the LORD by † Haggai the prophet unto [c] Zerubbabel the ſon of Shealtiel [d] governor of Judah, and to Joſhua the ſon of Joſedech the high prieſt, ſaying, 2. Thus ſpeaketh the LORD of hoſts, ſaying, This people ſay, The time is not come, the time that the LORD's houſe ſhould be built. 3. Then came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, ſaying, 4. [e] Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your cieled houſes, and this houſe lie waſte? 5. Now therefore thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, ‡ Conſider your ways. 6. Ye have [f] ſown much, and bring in little: ye eat, but ye have not enough: ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink: ye clothe you, but there is none warm: and [g] he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag ‖ with holes. 7. ¶ Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, [h] Conſider your ways. 8. Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the houſe; and I will take pleaſure in it, and I will be glorified, ſaith the LORD. 9. Ye looked for much, and lo it came to little: and when ye brought it home, [i] I did § blow upon it: why? ſaith the LORD of hoſts, becauſe of mine houſe that is waſte, and ye run every man unto his own houſe. 10. Therefore [k] the heaven over you is ſtayed from dew, and the earth is ſtayed from her fruit. 11. v. 1—11. The date of this prophecy is in the ſecond year of Darius the king, in the ſixth month, the firſt day of the month. Not Darius the Mede, but probably Darius Hyſtaſpes, who came to the throne about fifteen years after the proclamation of Cyrus. The word of the Lord which was ſent to Haggai, he is commanded to deliver to Zerubbabel the ſon of Shealtiel, or Salathiel, his nephew, it ſhould ſeem, 1 Chron. iii. 17—19. at leaſt his adopted ſon and ſucceſſor in the government, and to Joſhua the ſon of Joſedech the high-prieſt, theſe being the chief perſons in church and ſtate, on whom it was eſpecially incumbent to ſtir up the people to their duty.

1. They are charged with great negligence and remiſſneſs in the work of God. This people, who have ſo lately enjoyed ſuch diſtinguiſhed favours from God, ſay, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's houſe ſhould be built; they had begun the foundations immediately on their return from Babylon, but the building had been interrupted through the miſrepreſentations of their enemies at the Perſian court; and though for a ſeaſon they had liberty to proceed, they ſeem to have been too indifferent about it, and were ready to ſuggeſt arguments to encourage themſelves in their negligence; either they were too poor as yet to proceed in it, or the late unſeaſonable years were interpreted as a providential intimation, that it was not yet proper to carry on the work, and therefore they deferred it to a more convenient ſeaſon. So often are we ready to put off what is preſent duty to ſome future time, and in excuſe to pretend a providential interpoſition, when in truth we only follow our own inclinations.

2. For this lukewarmneſs and careleſſneſs, God's diſpleaſure had already appeared againſt them. The wants of which they complained had their origin from hence, nor would they be relieved till this matter was rectified. Their land was under a curſe, and though they ſowed much, they reaped little; they had neither meat, drink, nor cloaths ſufficient to ſupport and keep them warm; or what they had, God permitted them to have no comfort in it, and the money they gained was quickly loſt, as if they had put it into a bag with holes, v. 6. The drought had parched up their land, and diſappointed their expectations of plenty, v. 10, 11. and what they gathered into their ſtorehouſes, God blew upon it, ver. 9. and it waſted inſenſibly; or blew it away as ſtubble, by ſome providential judgments: and the reaſon he informs them, becauſe of mine houſe that is waſte, and ye run every man unto his own houſe, diligent and active in ſeeking their own intereſts, and promoting their own advantage, and unconcerned about the houſe of God and the glory of his name. Note, (1.) They who look for much from creature-comforts, muſt prepare for diſappointment. (2.) In our common bleſſings we are as much dependant upon God's ceaſeleſs providential care, as if we were fed daily by miracles. (3.) If God blows upon our poſſeſſions, we ſhall pine in the midſt of plenty, and his wrath will embitter every comfort. (2.) They who ſeek firſt the kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs, conſult beſt for both worlds: all happineſs in time, as well as eternity, ariſing only from his favour and bleſſing.

3. He expoſtulates with them hereupon. Is it time for you, O ye, who can find no time to ſerve God, and build his houſe, to dwell in your cieled houſes? Theirs were compleatly finiſhed and furniſhed, whilſt his lay waſte. So often do profeſſors all ſeek their own things, and not thoſe which be Jeſus Chriſt's, but great is their guilt.

4. He endeavours to rouſe them from their lethargy, and to ſet them to work. Conſider your ways, what miſeries they have already brought upon you; the baſeneſs and ingratitude of ſuch conduct, and what will be the end of theſe things. Conſider your ways, that, convinced of their evil, you may amend them without delay, and begin inſtantly the neglected work of God's temple. Go up to the mountain, and bring wood from Lebanon, and build the houſe, and I will take pleaſure in it, accept their labours and the ſacrifices there offered; and I will be glorified, ſaith the Lord, in the work of your hands; the worſhip there performed ſhould redound to his praiſe. Note, (1.) The firſt ſtep to all godlineſs is ſerious conſideration, and this preparation of the heart is from the Lord. (2.) They who conſider their ways to any good purpoſe, muſt ſhew it by immediate reformation of what is wrong. (3.) Whenever we return unto God, and his neglected ſervice, he will ſtill be found gracious, he will take pleaſure in us, and be glorified in mercy.

12. ¶ [n] Then Zerubbabel the ſon of Shealtiel, and Joſhua the ſon of Joſedech the high prieſt, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the LORD their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, (as the LORD their God had ſent him) and the people did fear before the LORD. 13. Then ſpake Haggai the LORD's meſſenger, in the LORD's meſſage unto the people, ſaying, [o] I am with you, ſaith the LORD. 14. And the LORD [p] ſtirred up the ſpirit of Zerubbabel the ſon of Shealtiel [q] governor of Judah, and the ſpirit of Joſhua the ſon of Joſedech the high prieſt, and the ſpirit of all the remnant of the people, and they came and [r] did work in the houſe of the LORD of hoſts their God: 15. v. 12—15. We have here an account of the happy ſucceſs with which the prophet's admonition was attended.

1. They obeyed inſtantly the voice of the Lord their God. Zerubbabel and Joſhua led the way, and the people chearfully followed their good examples, fearing before the Lord, under a ſenſe of his diſpleaſure viſible in their paſt viſitations, and juſtly apprehenſive leaſt they ſhould provoke heavier judgments. They came and did work in the houſe of the Lord of hoſts their God within three weeks after the warning they had received, v. 15. the intermediate time probably being ſpent in providing the materials; and for this ſudden alteration they ſtood indebted to God's rich grace, who ſtirred up their ſpirits, v. 14. inclining and encouraging them to the undertaking. Note, (1.) The word in the mouth of God's miniſters is the voice of God, and muſt be reſpected accordingly. (2.) Holy fear is a bleſſed principle of action. (3.) When we ſee how negligent we have been, the conſideration ſhould quicken us to double diligence, that we may redeem the time. (4.) Whatever good is in us, or done by us, we owe it entirely to God's free grace, from whom alone all holy deſires, and all juſt works do proceed.

2. God hereupon ſends his prophet to them, with a new meſſage of encouragement. I am with you, ſaith the Lord, to pardon your paſt neglect, to aſſiſt you in your preſent labour, to protect you from your enemies, and to crown your work with ſucceſs. Note, If God ſays, I am with you, that is enough, we need not wiſh for more; his preſence includes all bleſſedneſs.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter we have three ſermons preached by the prophet Haggai, for the encouragement of thoſe that were forward to build the temple. In the firſt, he aſſures the builders that the glory of this houſe ſhould exceed that of Solomon's, in which he has an eye to the coming of Chriſt, ver. 1—9. In the ſecond he aſſures them, that though their delay to build the temple had retarded the proſperous progreſs of their other affairs, yet now they had ſet about it in good earneſt God would bleſs them, and give them ſucceſs, ver. 10—19. In the third, he aſſures Zerubbabel, that as a reward of his pious zeal and activity herein, he ſhould be a favourite of heaven, and one of the anceſtors of Meſſiah the prince, whoſe kingdom ſhould be ſet up on the ruins of all oppoſing powers, ver. 20—23.

1. IN the ſeventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the LORD † by the prophet Haggai, ſaying, 2. Speak now to Zerubbabel the ſon of Shealtiel governor of Judah, and to Joſhua the ſon of Joſedech the high prieſt, and to the reſidue of the people, ſaying, 3. [a] Who is left among you that ſaw this houſe in her firſt glory? and how do ye ſee it now? [b] is it not in your eyes in compariſon of it, as nothing? 4. Yet now [c] be ſtrong, O Zerubbabel, ſaith the LORD, and be ſtrong, O Joſhua ſon of Joſedech the high prieſt, and be ſtrong, all ye people of the land, ſaith the LORD, and work: for [d] I am with you, ſaith the LORD of hoſts; 5. According to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, ſo [e] my ſpirit remaineth among you: fear ye not. 6. For thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, [f] Yet once, it is a little while, and [g] I will ſhake the heavens, and the earth, and the ſea, and the dry land: 7. And I will ſhake all nations, and [h] the deſire of all nations ſhall come, and I will [i] fill this houſe with glory, ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 8. The ſilver is mine, and the gold is mine, ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 9. The glory of this latter houſe ſhall be greater than of the former, ſaith the LORD of hoſts: and in this place will I give peace, ſaith the LORD of hoſts.

v. 1—9. Having ſet themſelves heartily to their work, God encourages them by a ſecond meſſage, about a month after the former, to proceed in the building. Some, probably who had ſeen the former temple, which had been deſtroyed about ſeventy years, beheld with grief the preſent ſtructure, ſo little comparable to that for magnificence, and perhaps diſcouraged the hearts of the builders, ſuggeſting what an inſignificant houſe this would be; but God bid the prophet ſay, Be ſtrong, O Zerubbabel and Joſhua, and all ye people of the land, and work, nor be diſheartned at any obſtacles. And he ſuggeſts, for this purpoſe, the moſt reviving grounds of encouragement.

1. God will be with them with his ſpecial preſence, and the comforts of his ſpirit, according to his covenant when he brought them out of Egypt, and took them for his own; therefore they need not fear, ſucceſs ſhould crown their labours: or as ſome read the words, I am with you, with the Word, the Lord Jeſus, the eſſential word, with whom I covenanted; he being the covenant Head and fulfiller, and through him all the bleſſings of it ſhall be ſecured to them; and his ſpirit of wiſdom and might ſhould be their guide, their ſtay and conſolation; and if he be with us, then ſhall we be ſtrong.

2. In this temple ſhall the Meſſiah incarnate appear, and give it far greater glory than ever Solomon's temple could boaſt of: Yet once, it is a little while before this ſhall come to paſs; for though the coming of Chriſt was diſtant five hundred years, it was a little while in God's ſight, or compared with the time ſince the firſt promiſe had been given; and yet once may have reference to God's appearance on Sinai, when he revealed himſelf in ſuch tremendous majeſty, ſhaking the heavens and the earth, as now ſhould again be done. Before the coming of Chriſt, the nations and all their rulers had been ſhaken in pieces as by an earthquake, through the prevalence of the Roman arms; and when Chriſt appeared, his goſpel made a ſhaking among the nations, awakening the conſciences of men, and changing their natures; deſtroying and ſilencing the oracles of the heathen, and aboliſhing the whole ceremonial inſtitutions, Heb. xii. 27. And the deſire ſire of all nations ſhall come; He, whoſe ſalvation is to extend to all nations, the deſirable object which every miſerable ſinner ſo greatly needs, and whom all ſhould long for as their only hope and refuge; and I will fill this houſe with glory, ſaith the Lord, by the preſence of the incarnate Jehovah, which ſhould far exceed in glory the Shechinah of old. It is true they might ſay, that their treaſures were utterly inſufficient to adorn the temple, as it had been overlaid by Solomon with gold; but God anticipates the objection. The ſilver and the gold is mine, theſe were his own before Solomon beſtowed them on his building, and he could, if he had pleaſed, have given them enough to have done likewiſe, but his glory was not by theſe exalted. Far greater ſhould be the glory of this latter houſe, than of the former; though neither ark, nor Shechinah, nor Urim and Thummim, nor celeſtial fire were there, the fullneſs of the Godhead bodily reſident in Jeſus ſhould far ſurpaſs all theſe; and the miracles he wrought, and the goſpel he declared, far exalted the latter houſe above the former: and in this place will I give peace, ſaith the Lord God; not temporal peace, for under the ſecond temple the Jews enjoyed little of that, but ſpiritual peace, which Jeſus the Prince of Peace came to purchaſe, preach, and communicate to all his redeemed people.

10. ¶ In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the ſecond year of Darius, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, ſaying, 11. Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, [k] Aſk now the prieſts concerning the law, ſaying, 12. If one bear holy fleſh in the ſkirt of his garment, and with his ſkirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, ſhall it be holy? And the prieſts anſwered and ſaid, No. 13. Then ſaid Haggai, [l] If one that is unclean by a dead body, touch any of theſe, ſhall it be unclean? And the prieſts anſwered and ſaid, It ſhall be unclean. 14. Then anſwered Haggai, and ſaid, [m] So is this people, and ſo is the nation before me, ſaith the LORD; and ſo is every work of their hands, and that which they offer there is unclean. 15. And now, I pray you, conſider from this day and upward, from before a ſtone was laid upon a ſtone in the temple of the LORD. 16. Since thoſe days were, [n] when one came to an heap of twenty meaſures, there were but ten: when one came to the preſs-fat, for to draw out fifty veſſels out of the preſs, there were but twenty. 17. ¶ [o] I ſmote you [p] with blaſting, and with mildew, and with hail, [q] in all the labours of your hands, [r] yet ye turned not to me, ſaith the LORD. 18. Conſider now from this day, and upward, from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, even from the day that the foundation of the LORD's temple was laid, conſider it. 19. [s] Is the ſeed yet in the barn? yea as yet the vine, and the fig-tree, and the pomegranate, and the olive-tree hath not brought forth: [t] from this day will I bleſs you.

v. 10—19. This diſcourſe was delivered above two months after the former, and is deſigned,

1. To humble them under a ſenſe of their pollution and ſinfulneſs; and in order hereunto the prophet is ſent to enquire of the prieſts, not ſo much for his information as their conviction. He puts two queſtions to them concerning the law, of which they were the expounders, (1.) Whether a perſon carrying holy fleſh in his garment, ſanctified by the touch of it any common meat; to which they anſwered, No; for though the garment muſt be waſhed before it could be employed in common uſes, Lev. vi. 27. yet it communicated no virtue to what it touched. (2.) Whether if a perſon unclean touched any of theſe, it ſhould be unclean; they ſaid, It ſhall be unclean, Num. xix. 22. ſo much more eaſily is pollution communicated than purity. Then anſwered Haggai, applying the caſe to the prieſts and people, So is this nation before me, ſaith the Lord; their ritual devotions and ſervices, like the garment carrying holy fleſh, could not ſanctify; whilſt their hearts being unclean, every thing they touched received defilement; and eſpecially, as ſeems to be the intention of the prophet to ſhew, was this the caſe with them whilſt they neglected the building God's houſe; and this they are called upon to conſider, and lay to heart, that in their reflections on the paſt, they might lie low before God, from this day upward, even from before a ſtone was laid upon a ſtone in the temple of the Lord; from that day, when they left off the work about ſeventeen years ago, they had been under the conſtant marks of God's diſpleaſure, the ſure proof of their ſins. Their harveſt had failed their expectations; the heap of corn which ſhould have yielded twenty meaſures, when it came to be threſhed gave but ten; and when from the quantity of grapes he put into the preſs, the vine-dreſſer hoped to draw out fifty meaſures, there were but twenty, ver. 16. Blaſting, mildew and hail, deſtroyed the fruits of the earth, yet ye turned not unto me, ſaith the Lord, continued unhumbled under thoſe providences, and reſumed not the work of the ſanctuary: all which they ſhould remember, and humble their ſouls before the Lord.

2. To encourage them, he bids them obſerve from the day forward, that they began to return to God, and ſet themſelves heartily to his neglected ſervice, what a bleſſed alteration would appear. Is the ſeed yet in the barn? No: they had juſt ſown it, and it was not yet come up, and uncertain what harveſt it would produce; their fruit trees, it being winter, were now empty; but ſaith God, from this day will I bleſs you, with plenty of all good things, and to their full conviction demonſtrate how much they conſulted even their own advantage in returning to his work and ſervice. Note, They who faithfully apply themſelves to God's work, ſhall aſſuredly find his bleſſing, ſometimes in providential gifts of this world's goods, always in the comfort he will beſtow upon their ſouls.

20. ¶ And again the word of the LORD came unto Haggai in the four and twentieth day of the month, ſaying, 21. Speak to Zerubbabel, [u] governor of Judah, ſaying, [x] I will ſhake the heavens and the earth, 22. And [y] I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will deſtroy the ſtrength of the kingdoms of the heathen, and [z] I will overthrow the chariots, and thoſe that ride in them, and the horſes and their riders ſhall come down, every one by the ſword of his brother. 23. In that day, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel my ſervant, the ſon of Shealtiel, ſaith the LORD, and [a] will make thee as a ſignet: for [b] I have choſen thee, ſaith the LORD of hoſts.

v. 20—23. The ſame day in which Haggai had delivered this meſſage to the people in general, he is ſent to Zerubbabel in particular, with encouragement to him under the difficulties of his office, and the dangers to which he ſaw himſelf and the nation expoſed from their weakneſs, and the powerful nations around them.

1. He may expect to ſee ſtrange revolutions, like the ſhakings of heaven and earth. The throne of kingdoms, the Perſian monarchy, would be overthrown, and the kingdoms of the heathen be deſtroyed, with their chariots and horſemen, every one by the ſword of his brother, which may include the ſucceſſive monarchies, the Grecian and Roman, and be extended to all the enemies of Chriſt's church and people to the end of time.

2. Zerubbabel ſhall be protected and defended in the midſt of theſe commotions; or the promiſe reſpects his glorious deſcendant the Meſſiah, of whom he was the figure. He is emphatically the ſervant of the Lord, raiſed up to do his pleaſure. I will make thee as a ſignet, for I have choſen thee, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; he is the elect of God, in whom his ſoul delighteth, precious as a ſignet, and entruſted with all power in heaven and in earth, who is himſelf ſealed as the head of his redeemed people, and he in like manner ſealeth them unto the day of redemption.

THE EVANGELICAL EXPOSITOR;

OR, A

Upon the PROPHECY of

ZECHARIAH.

THIS prophet was collegue with the prophet Haggai, and began to propheſy ſome time after him; but he continued longer, ſoared higher in viſions and revelations, and wrote more than he had done. He begins with a plain practical ſermon, expreſſive of that which was the ſcope of his propheſying in the five firſt verſes; but afterwards, to the end of chap. vi. he relates the viſions he ſaw, and the inſtructions he received immediately from heaven by them. At chap. vii. from an enquiry made by the Jews concerning faſting, he takes occaſion to ſhew them the duty of their preſent day, and to encourage them to hope for God's favour, to the end of chap. viii. After which there are two ſermons, which are both called burdens of the word of the Lord; one begins with chap. ix. the other with chap. xii. which probably were preached ſome time after; the ſcope of which is to reprove for ſin and threaten God's judgments againſt the impenitent, and to encourage thoſe that feared God with aſſurances of mercy God had in ſtore for his church, and eſpecially of the coming of the Meſſiah and the ſetting up of his kingdom in the world.

(2.) By the prayer of the angel for Jeruſalem, and the anſwer to it, ver. 12—17. 1. IN the eighth month, [a] in the ſecond year of Darius, [b] came the word of the LORD [c] unto † Zechariah the ſon of Barachiah, the ſon of Iddo the prophet, ſaying,
2. [d] The LORD hath been ‡ ſore diſpleaſed with your fathers.
3. Therefore ſay thou unto them, Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, [e] Turn ye unto me, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, and I will turn unto you, ſaith the LORD of hoſts.
4. Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets have cried, ſaying, Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, [f] Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings: but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, ſaith the LORD.
5. Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live for ever?
6. But my words and my ſtatutes, which I commanded my ſervants the prophets, [g] did they not § take hold of your fathers? and they returned and ſaid, [h] Like as the LORD of hoſts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, ſo hath he dealt with us.

Before Chriſt 520.

v. 1—6. The prophet Zechariah received his commiſſion from God, and began to ſpeak about two months after Haggai. He is called the ſon of Barachiah, and the ſame, as ſome ſuppoſe, whom our Lord mentions, Matth. xxiii. 35. as ſlain between the porch and the altar, the ſon of Iddo, the prophet, which may refer to Zechariah, and not his grandfather; or he might be a prophet alſo. He begins his diſcourſe,

1. With reminding them of the ſins and provocations of their forefathers, with whom God was ſore diſpleaſed, and whom he had ſeverely puniſhed, whoſe ſufferings ſhould be a warning to them, v. 2.

2. With exhorting the people to turn unto God; and gives them the moſt gracious encouragement to do ſo, for he will turn unto you; and thrice he adds, thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, to give weight and authority to the admonition, and engage their faith in the certainty of his promiſed mercy. Conſcious guilt makes the heart fearful; and the ſinner, who ſees his iniquities in their true colours, can ſcarce be perſuaded that God can and will receive one ſo unworthy into his favour.

3. He reminds them of the ſins of their forefathers, which had provoked God, and bids them take warning by their ſufferings, and not imitate their bad examples, v. 2. Be ye not as your fathers, treading in their ſteps, who, though repeatedly, fervently, and for a long ſeaſon, called upon by the former prophets to repent, turned a deaf ear to God's word and hardened their hearts; and where are they? They went captives into a ſtrange land; and many of them no doubt were cut off in their iniquities, and were gone to receive the juſt reward of their deeds. And the prophets are dead alſo; but their words ſurvived them, and overtook the ſinners againſt whom they were denounced; and this in ſo evident a manner, that when the threatned judgments came, too late, in their accompliſhment, their forefathers, in a miſerable captivity, felt that righteous vengeance they would not believe till it took hold upon them. Note, (1.) The example of parents is no plea for following their ways, when contrary to God's word. (2.) We ſhould often think of thoſe who are gone before, where are they? gone into bliſs or miſery eternal, and we are haſtening after them: whither then are we going? (3.) God's miniſters are dying men; we ſhould improve the ſeaſon they are ſpared to labour among us: whilſt each of them, conſidering their own mortality, ſhould ſpeak as a dying man to dying men; and deliver at leaſt their own ſouls. (4.) Though the denunciations of wrath do not immediately take place againſt the ſinner, being in much patience delayed, yet, if he perſiſts in impenitence, they will take hold of him at laſt; and too late, in the belly of hell, he will feel that wrath from which he would not be perſuaded to flee.

7. ¶ Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Sebat, in the ſecond year of Darius, came the word of the LORD unto Zechariah the ſon of Barachiah, the ſon of Iddo the prophet, ſaying, 8. I ſaw by night, and behold, [i] a man riding upon a red horſe, and he ſtood among the myrtle-trees that were in the bottom, and behind him were there [k] red horſes † ſpeckled and white. 9. Then ſaid I, O my lord, what are theſe? And the angel that talked with me, ſaid unto me, I will ſhew thee what theſe be. 10. And the man that ſtood among the myrtle-trees anſwered and ſaid, Theſe are they whom [l] the LORD hath ſent to walk to and fro through the earth. 11. And they anſwered the angel of the LORD that ſtood among the myrtle-trees, and ſaid, We have walked to and fro through the earth, and behold, all the earth [m] ſitteth ſtill, and is at reſt. 12. ¶ Then the angel of the LORD anſwered and ſaid, [n] O LORD of hoſts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jeruſalem, and on the cities of Judah, againſt which thou haſt had indignation [o] theſe threeſcore and ten years? 13. And the LORD anſwered the angel that talked with me, with good words, and comfortable words. 14. So the angel that communed with me, ſaid unto me, Cry thou, ſaying, Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, I am [p] jealous for Jeruſalem and for Zion with a great jealouſy. 15. And I am very ſore diſpleaſed with the heathen [q] that are at eaſe: for [r] I was but a little diſpleaſed, and they helped forward the affliction. 16. Therefore thus ſaith the LORD, [s] I am returned to Jeruſalem with mercies: my houſe ſhall be built in it, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, and a line ſhall be ſtretched forth upon Jeruſalem. 17. Cry yet, ſaying, Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, my cities through proſperity ſhall yet be ſpread abroad, and the LORD ſhall yet comfort Zion, and [t] ſhall yet chooſe Jeruſalem.

v. 7—17. The viſion here recorded was given to the prophet about three months after the former diſcourſe was delivered, and is deſigned for the encouragement of the people who had turned unto God, and diligently employed themſelves in rebuilding his holy temple. We have

1. The viſion, v. 8. The grove of myrtles in the bottom fitly repreſented the ſtate of the Jewiſh church, ſunk very low in the deep gloom of afflictions and want, and ſurrounded by the hills of the neighbouring nations, far greater than they. It may ſignify alſo the church militant in general, which through much tribulation enters into the kingdom of God, the members of which, though low, are cloſely united, and their graces breathe fragrance before God. In the midſt of them Jeſus appears, become man for us men and for our ſalvation, and going forth to fight our battles, conquering and to conquer, and riding upon a red horſe as the Captain of ſalvation, who by his own blood is to redeem his people, and by his power treads down his enemies, till their blood reaches to the horſes bridles, Rev. xiv. 20. Behind him ſtood marſhalled the armies of heaven, his miniſtring ſpirits, on horſes of different colours, according to the various ſervices in which they are employed, for judgment or for mercy.

2. The prophet, filled with admiration at what he beheld, preſumes with deep reſpect to aſk, O my Lord, what are theſe? And the angel, he that is the head of all principalities and powers, even the man that ſtood among the myrtle-trees, is graciouſly pleaſed to inform him. Theſe are they whom the Lord hath ſent to walk to and fro in the earth, to execute his commands, and miniſter to the heirs of ſalvation. So kind and condeſcending is Jeſus to the humble enquirers after divine knowledge, that cry, What I know not teach thou me: theſe he will guide into all truth.

3. He hears the report theſe miniſtring ſpirits make to their King and Lord. They had diſcharged their commiſſion, and report, that the earth ſitteth ſtill, and is at reſt, undiſturbed by wars, as was the caſe in the reign of Darius; ſecure and at eaſe, whilſt the poor people of God are under affliction and perpetual alarms. Thus ſtill a careleſs world ſleeps on: but they will ſhortly be fearfully rouſed from this fatal lethargy.

4. The Angel, the Lord Jeſus, hereupon becomes an advocate for his redeemed, and cries for mercy now at laſt upon them, after the long time God hath afflicted them, during ſeventy years; which, if computed from the burning of the temple, were juſt now compleated: ſo long had they ſuffered the marks of God's indignation; and now he begs that he will ſay, It is enough. It is well for the church we have ſuch an advocate with the Father: and in all times of trouble we ſhould remember this for our ſupport.

5. An anſwer of peace is given to this Saviour's prayer. The Lord anſwered the angel with good words, and comfortable words, for him the Father heareth always: and if he undertake our cauſe, it ſhall not miſcarry.

6. He communicates this anſwer to the prophet, to be proclaimed to his people for their comfort and encouragement: Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, I am jealous for Jeruſalem and for Zion with a great jealouſy: on fire to repair their wrongs, and zealous to promote their happineſs. Their enemies, who now ſit at eaſe, are the objects of his wrath: he ſent them to correct his people in a little diſpleaſure, and they helped forward the affliction, exceeding their orders in cruelty and inhumanity, and inſulted over the miſeries of their unhappy captives: but God will avenge their quarrel. Whilſt on the other hand the prophet muſt proclaim aloud, Thus ſaith the Lord, I am returned to Jeruſalem with mercies: the temple ſhall be built, Jeruſalem be raiſed from its ruins, and plenty and proſperity once more dwell in the cities of Judah. And the Lord ſhall yet comfort Zion, after the days of her mourning; and ſhall yet chuſe Jeruſalem, for his bleſt abode: which was literally fulfilled in the days of Zerubbabel and of the Maccabees; but moſt eminently when the Meſſiah appeared in the midſt of her, and his goſpel went forth through all the cities of the land.

18. ¶ Then lift I up mine eyes, and ſaw, and behold, four horns. 19. And I ſaid unto the angel that talked with me, What be theſe? And he anſwered me, [u] Theſe are the horns which have ſcattered Judah, Iſrael, and Jeruſalem. 20. And the LORD ſhewed me four carpenters. 21. Then ſaid I, What came theſe to do? And he ſpake, ſaying, Theſe are the horns which have ſcattered Judah, ſo that no man did lift up his head: but [x] theſe are come to fray them, to caſt out the horns of the Gentiles, which lift up their horn over the land of Judah to ſcatter it.

v. 18—21. We have here a ſecond viſion to the ſame purpoſe as the former, comforting the people of Iſrael againſt their mighty foes.

1. The prophet ſaw four horns, and, aſking an explanation of them, is informed, that theſe are the horns which have ſcattered Judah, Iſrael, and Jeruſalem; the various nations that at different times haraſſed and diſperſed them, ſo that no man did lift up his head; ſo oppreſſed and diſpirited they were, and brought ſo low. Some refer theſe horns to the Samaritans, Arabians, Ammonites, and Philiſtines, who gave them ſuch hindrances in the building the temple and city. And all who ſet about this bleſſed work may expect to be puſhed at by many a horn.

2. The Lord ſhewed him four capenters, or ſmiths, 1 Sam. xiii. 19. Theſe he had not ſeen. Our fears of danger ſo engage us, that we often overlook the help provided for us. And he tells him what theſe came to do, v. 20. to fray them, to caſt out the horns of the Gentiles. And theſe may be interpreted of the ſeveral monarchies which have riſen up to deſtroy each other; or of the angels whom God ſends to execute his judgments; or of the four great promoters of God's work, Zerubbabel, Joſhua, Ezra, and Nehemiah; or perhaps of the miniſters of the goſpel, who go forth and are ſtrengthened for carrying on the work of God in the midſt of all oppoſition. Note, Whatever enemies are againſt us, we have greater friends for us: and, though ſore thruſt at that we ſhould fall, in the Lord is our help, who will break all the horns of the ungodly.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter we have, 1. Another of the prophet's viſions, ver. 1, 2. 2. A ſermon upon it: (1.) By way of explication of the viſion, ſhewing it to be a prediction of the repleniſhing of Jeruſalem, and of its ſafety and honour, ver. 3, 5. (2.) By way of application. Here is, 1. A uſe of exhortation to the Jews that were yet in Babylon, preſſing them to haſten their return to their own land, ver. 6—9. 2. A uſe of conſolation to thoſe that were returned, in reference to the many difficulties they had to ſtruggle with, ver. 10, 11. 3. A uſe of caution to all not to preſcribe to God, or limit him, but patiently to wait for him, ver. 13.

1. I LIFT up mine eyes again, and looked, and behold, [a] a man with a meaſuring line in his hand. 2. Then ſaid I, Whither goeſt thou? And he ſaid unto me, [b] To meaſure Jeruſalem to ſee what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof. 3. And behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, 4. And ſaid unto him, Run, ſpeak to this young man, ſaying, Jeruſalem ſhall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein. 5. For I, ſaith the LORD, will be unto her [c] a wall of fire round about, [d] and will be the glory in the midſt of her.

v. 1—5. The prophet had declared that a line ſhould be ſtretched forth upon Jeruſalem, and now in viſion it is done. And more ſeems intended than the mere rebuilding this city, even the erection of that glorious church, which the Redeemer of men ſhould, in the fullneſs of time, come to eſtabliſh in the earth.

1. The viſion he beholds is a man with a meaſuring-line in his hand, the ſame perſon as before, the Lord Jeſus going forth according to the eternal decrees, to mark out the bounds of his church, and by his word and Spirit to build up the walls, that it may be a glorious church, in doctrine, diſcipline, and all holy converſation.

2. The prophet, deſirous to be informed concerning what he ſaw, aſks, Whither goeſt thou? and he tells him, to meaſure Jeruſalem, &c. Then going forth, another angel meets him, and deſires him to go back and inform the young man, for ſuch, tho' a prophet, it ſeems Zechariah was, concerning the meaning of the viſion: that Jeruſalem ſhall be inhabited as towns without walls, intimating its ſafety, ſecurity, and populouſneſs, repleniſhed with men and beaſts in multitudes, protected as with a wall of fire, and filled with the glory of the Lord, v. 5. which, though in a ſenſe literally applicable to that city, is much rather to be conſidered as deſcriptive of the church of Chriſt, when all nations ſhould flow into it; ſafe under the care of Jeſus, as if ſurrounded by a wall of fire, his people ſhall dwell in peace; and in his ordinances he will manifeſt to them his preſence, and be in the midſt of their aſſemblies their glory and defence.

6. ¶ Ho, ho, come forth, and [e] flee from the land of the north, ſaith the LORD: for I have ſpread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, ſaith the LORD. 7. [f] Deliver thyſelf, O Zion, that dwelleſt with the daughter of Babylon. 8. For thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, After the glory hath he ſent me unto the nations which ſpoiled you, for he that [g] toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye. 9. For behold, I will ſhake mine hand upon them, and [h] they ſhall be a ſpoil to their ſervants: and [i] ye ſhall know that the LORD of hoſts hath ſent me.

v. 6—9. Though a general permiſſion had been given to all the Jewiſh captives to return to their own land, many, diſcouraged by the difficulties they apprehended in reſettling, and who had perhaps well provided for themſelves in the land of their captivity, took no advantage of the proclamation of Cyrus, but ſat down content in that ſtrange land. To rebuke their backwardneſs, and to quicken their return, God ſends a ſummons to them in all places of their diſperſion: Ho, ho, come forth. And ſuch is the kind voice of goſpel-grace, when miſerable ſinners are hugging their chains, and aſleep in the priſon of their iniquities.

1. They are commanded to flee as for their lives, and eſcape without delay from the houſe of their priſon, no longer dwelling with the daughter of Babylon, but coming to Zion, now prepared for their reception, v. 7. Note, All things are ready, if we are ready; Jeſus calls, our duty, our intereſt, is to obey: if we reject his word, and continue willing ſlaves of ſin, our blood will be upon our own heads.

2. Their apprehenſions of the difficulties and dangers they may meet with are ſilenced: nay, where they were they would be much more expoſed; for thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, After the glory promiſed, v. 5. and the glorious beginnings which had appeared, hath he ſent me unto the nations that ſpoiled you, the Chaldeans, to avenge the wrongs they had ſuffered from them; for he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye; ſo tender, ſo careful, is God of his dear people, and ſo quick in his reſentments of every offence given to them. For behold, I will ſhake my hand upon them, the Babylonians, and they ſhall be a ſpoil to their ſervants, being deſtroyed by the Perſians under Darius, againſt whom they had revolted; and ſhould the Jews ſtay there, they would then ſuffer for their folly. And ye ſhall know that the Lord of hoſts hath ſent me, when the prophecy receives its accompliſhment. Note, (1.) Every child of God is dear to him, as if they were his very eyes, and he will ſuffer no injury to be done them with impunity. (2.) All Chriſt's enemies ſhall fall before him; he will perfect, as he hath begun, the work of his people's ſalvation: and therein his glory ſhall appear, and his divine miſſion be fully evidenced.

10. ¶ [k] Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for lo, I come, and [l] I will dwell in the midſt of thee, ſaith the LORD. 11. And [m] many nations ſhall be joined to the LORD [n] in that day, and ſhall be [o] my people: and I will dwell in the midſt of thee, and [p] thou ſhalt know that the LORD of hoſts hath ſent me unto thee. 12. And the LORD ſhall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, [q] and ſhall chooſe Jeruſalem again. 13. v. 10—13. The church and the people of God are called to ſing and rejoice on the appearing of the great Redeemer.

1. They ſhall have his preſence in the midſt of them. For lo I come, not only as incarnate, but in the preaching of his goſpel to the end of time; and I will dwell in the midſt of thee, ſaith the Lord, in his ſpecial preſence accompanying his ordinances; and thou ſhalt know that the Lord of hoſts hath ſent me unto thee, by experience of his power and grace upon each of their hearts.

2. Great acceſſions from all nations ſhall be made to the church. Many nations ſhall be joined to the Lord in that day; the Gentiles being called into the fellowſhip of the goſpel, and obedient to the faith; and thus ſhall be entitled to all the bleſſings of the covenant of grace, they ſhall be my people, to ſerve and enjoy me.

3. The Jewiſh people ſhall be reſtored to their own land. The Lord ſhall inherit Jacob his portion in the holy land, and ſhall chuſe Jeruſalem again; either they ſhall be converted and brought into the church, which is the holy land; or literally, as many ſuppoſe, ſhall at the time of their recovery at laſt be put in poſſeſſion of Judea, rebuild Jeruſalem, and as the redeemed of Jeſus worſhip the Lord in the beauty of holineſs.

4. Silence is proclaimed through the earth to all fleſh. Either they are enjoined to behold with aſtoniſhment this wonderful work of the recovery of Iſrael; or this is addreſſed to the enemies of God's church and people, who will be confounded and for ever ſilenced in the duſt, when, raiſed up from his holy habitation, the Lord ſhall come to vindicate their wrongs, and execute judgment on the ungodly.

CHAP. III.

Here is, 1. A viſion relating to Joſhua, as the repreſentative of the church in his time. (1.) He is accuſed by Satan, but is brought off by Chriſt, ver. 1, 2. And the LORD ſaid unto Satan, [d] The LORD rebuke thee, O Satan, even the LORD [e] that hath choſen Jeruſalem, rebuke thee: [f] is not this a brand pluckt out of the fire? 3. Now Joſhua was clothed with [g] filthy garments, and ſtood before the angel. 4. And he anſwered and ſpake unto thoſe that ſtood before him, ſaying, Take away the filthy garments from him. And unto him he ſaid, Behold, I have cauſed [h] thine iniquity to paſs from thee, and I will clothe thee with [i] change of raiment. 5. And I ſaid, Let them [k] ſet a fair mitre upon his head: ſo they ſet a fair mitre upon his head: and clothed him with garments: and the angel of the LORD ſtood by. 6. And the angel of the LORD proteſted unto Joſhua, ſaying, 7. v. 1—7. Joſhua the high-prieſt is here in viſion ſhewed to Zechariah as ſtanding before the Lord, the angel of the covenant, and he appears the repreſentative of the prieſthood and people to whom he miniſtered, who were defiled with guilt, and enſlaved by corruption; from both of which God here in the perſon of Joſhua proceeds to deliver them.

1. He appears as a criminal before his great judge, and his accuſer laying heavy charges againſt him; but he is acquitted. He

Before Chriſt 510.

He ſtood before the angel of the Lord, and Satan at his right hand to reſiſt him, to oppoſe him in his work, and raiſe difficulties to diſcourage him; and none more effectual than the accuſations of guilt he laid againſt him: but the Lord Jeſus Chriſt is his advocate, his judge is his friend, and ſaid unto Satan, the Lord rebuke thee, Satan. Which may be conſidered as the Redeemer's prayer to his father, to confound and ſilence this malicious adverſary; or as his declaration what ſhould be, the Lord ſhall rebuke thee, and avenge this enmity againſt his people; for he hath choſen Jeruſalem, and therefore every tongue that riſeth in judgment againſt her he will condemn; no charge can lie againſt God's elect. Is not this a brand pluckt out of the fire? as Joſhua and the people had been out of their captivity; and as all the people of God are when called out of a ſtate of ſin and guilt, in which they were expoſed to the wrath of God, and fit fuel for the flames of hell; but, being now reſcued by ſovereign grace, in vain doth the enemy of ſouls attempt to kindle that fire which the blood of Jeſus hath extinguiſhed. Note, (1.) None ever ſtood up zealouſly for God, at whoſe right hand Satan did not place himſelf as an adverſary. (2.) There is enough in the beſt of men to afford ground for accuſation, if we had not a better righteouſneſs than our own to plead in arreſt of judgment. (3.) They who put their cauſe in Chriſt's hands need not fear the accuſer of the brethren, they ſhall be juſtified from all things. (4.) The beſt way of anſwering the Devil's accuſations is by looking up to God in prayer, and ſaying, the Lord rebuke thee, Satan. (5.) Every child of God is a brand pluckt from the fire. How often have we ſtood on the brink of everlaſting burnings, and lo! Jeſus reſcued us from ruin. (6.) The Lord's paſt mercies, which we have experienced, are an earneſt of his preſent care: they ſhall never be burnt, whom he hath once pluckt from the fire.

2. He appears in filthy garments, as one polluted; and no doubt, as a ſinful man, he had abundant cauſe to confeſs his ſhame. Some ſuggeſt this was on account of the ſtrange wives the prieſts had taken, and ſome of them his own ſons, Ezra x. 18. but he ſeems rather to repreſent the ſtate of the people in general, whoſe beſt righteouſneſs was but as filthy rags, Iſa. lxiv. 6. but the Lord takes care for his cleanſing. The angel looked on him not with anger but compaſſion, and commanded his attendant miniſters to ſtrip off the filthy garments, the meaning of which he explains to his comfort, Behold, I have cauſed thy iniquity to paſs from thee; the guilt of it is pardoned, the power of it ſubdued. God ſanctifies by his Spirit all thoſe whom Jeſus hath waſhed from their ſins by his blood, and thus prepares them as a holy prieſthood. And I will clothe thee with change of raiment, that he might appear lovely, as before loathſome. And thus doth Jeſus array all his people in that divine righteouſneſs which is without ſpot, and adorn them with thoſe graces of his Spirit which make them all-glorious within: and this is the Lord's doing, and marvellous in our eyes. Arrayed in prieſtly robes, Joſhua now looks great; for, at the Lord's command, the ſacerdotal mitre is ſet on his head, and the prieſtly garments for beauty and glory are put upon him: and though, from his former pollution, he might fear he ſhould be turned out of his office, he is ſolemnly confirmed in it, v. 6. The angel of the Lord proteſted unto Joſhua, ſaying, thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, If thou wilt walk in my ways, in all the paths of righteouſneſs and truth preſcribed in God's word; and if thou wilt keep my charge, faithful in his ſacerdotal office, vigilant, active, laborious; then thou ſhalt alſo judge my houſe, and ſhalt alſo keep my courts, preſiding over the temple and its ſervice, and enjoying all the honours and advantages reſulting from that high ſtation; and I will give thee places to walk among thoſe that ſtand by, highly reſpected by his fellow miniſters in the temple, or made a companion of glorified ſaints and angels at laſt, as the reward of his fidelity. Note, (1.) The miniſters of God have a ſolemn truſt committed to them, and they muſt look well how they diſcharge it. (2.) They who are faithful to Jeſus ſhall be exalted in his better temple, and made to walk with him in white in glory everlaſting, for they are worthy.

8. Hear now, O Joſhua the high-prieſt, thou and thy fellows that ſit before thee: for [l] they are men † wondered at: for behold, I will bring forth [m] my ſervant [n] the BRANCH. 9. For behold, the ſtone that I have laid before Joſhua: [o] upon one ſtone ſhall be [p] ſeven eyes, behold, I will engrave the graving thereof, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, and [q] I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day. 10. [r] In that day, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, [s] ſhall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig-tree.

v. 8—10. The prieſthood of Joſhua was typical of Chriſt, the great high-prieſt of our profeſſion, and from him derived all its efficacy. To him therefore Joſhua and his fellows are directed to look. Hear now, O Joſhua, thou and thy fellows that ſit before thee; for they are men wondered at for their ſingularity, or their ſtrange deliverance from captivity; or men of a ſign, types of the prieſthood of Jeſus. Note, Chriſt's redeemed ones are men wondered at by others for their holy ways, which appear ſtrange to a carnal world; and they are a wonder to themſelves, when they reflect on God's aſtoniſhing grace, and what he hath done for their ſouls.

Before Chriſt 519.

The promiſe given to them is the ſending the expected Meſſiah, who is here deſcribed,

1. As the Branch. Behold I will bring forth my ſervant the Branch; the Branch from the root of Jeſſe, who ſhould be born in the fulneſs of time; weak to outward view as a tender rod, yet filling the world with fruit: God's ſervant, who ſhould fulfil all his pleaſure, and perfect the work of ſalvation whereunto God had appointed him.

2. As the ſtone, the precious corner-ſtone of the ſpiritual temple, and the rock of offence to all who ſtumble at the word. It is laid before Joſhua, that he may build thereon, as the only ſure foundation of the ſinner's hope. Upon or in one ſtone ſhall be ſeven eyes, denoting either the perfection of his wiſdom and the fulneſs of his grace to diſcover and ſupply all the wants of his people; or this may refer to the eyes of all believers, which are directed to him, that out of his fulneſs they may receive grace for grace; behola, I will engrave the graving thereof, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, alluding probably to the engraving and poliſhing the corners of the temple, and may ſignify that Chriſt ſhould be adorned with all gifts and graces for the diſcharge of his office as Mediator; or it may refer to the prints of the inſtruments in his fleſh by which he ſuffered; or perhaps to his exaltation after his reſurrecton, when he was crowned with glory and honour.

3. He ſhall ſave his people by one oblation of himſelf once offered. I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day, even in that day when Jeſus on the croſs cried, It is finiſhed, and gave up the ghoſt, compleating the work of atonement, and ſecuring the eternal redemption of his people.

4. In conſequence of this, his people ſhall enjoy great peace of conſcience, and rejoice together in the ſalvation of God. In that day of goſpel grace, ſhall ye call every man his neighbour under his vine and under his fig-tree. For, when iniquity is taken away, the ſoul ſits happy under the ſhadow of Jeſus, and invites all around to come and taſte how good the Lord is, to join in his ordinances, and maintain ſweet communion with him and with each other; a foretaſte of that bleſſed ſtate, where the peace of God, which paſſeth all underſtanding, ſhall keep our hearts and minds.

1. AND [a] the angel that talked with me, came again and waked me, as a man that is wakened out of his ſleep, 2. And ſaid unto me, What ſeeſt thou? And I ſaid, No, my lord. 6. Then he anſwered and ſpake unto me, ſaying, This is the word of the LORD unto Zerubbabel, ſaying, [e] Not by § might, nor by power, but by my ſpirit ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 7. Who art thou, [f] O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou ſhalt become a plain, and he ſhall bring forth the head-ſtone thereof [g] with ſhoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it. 8. [n] 2 Chron. xvi. 9. Prov. xv. 3. Chap. iii. 9.

v. 1—10. Overcome probably with the glorious viſions he had ſeen, his ſpirits failed him, and he ſunk down in ſleep, See Dan. viii. 8. but he is awakened and ſtrengthened by the Lord Jeſus, to behold other viſions and revelations of the Lord.

1. On his awaking a queſtion is put to him, What ſeeſt thou? And he looked, and behold a candleſtick of gold, &c. like, in ſome reſpects, to that in the temple of old, the figure of the church of Chriſt; of gold, denoting its excellence and purity; the bowl upon the top of it full of oil implies that fulneſs of grace in Jeſus, out of whom all we do receive; the ſeven lamps may ſignify all believers in general, or the miniſters of the goſpel particularly, who are burning and ſhining lights; and being once kindled by the fire of divine grace, never more are extinguiſhed, but are fed with conſtant ſupplies of oil from the two olive trees, Chriſt and the Comforter, through the ſeven pipes, the various means of prayer, the word, meditation, ſacraments, &c. which Chriſt hath inſtituted as channels of conveying to us the conſtant influences of his grace.

2. The prophet humbly enquires into the meaning of what he ſaw. What are theſe, my Lord? And the angel, to reprove his dullneſs, or quicken his attention, anſwers, Knoweſt thou not what theſe be? He replies, with a humble confeſſion of his ignorance, No, my Lord: very graciouſly therefore this angel condeſcends to explain the viſion to him; This is the word of the Lord to Zerubbabel, an illuſtration of what God had ſpoken to him before, ſaying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my ſpirit, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. As the lamps were ſupplied with oil, without any human aſſiſtance from the olive-trees, that poured the oil into the bowl, which thence was communicated to them through the ſeven golden pipes, ſo ſhould Zerubbabel be ſupplied with ſtrength from on high, for the work in which he is engaged: and thus is every faithful ſoul made more than conqueror, not through any human ſufficiency, but by the power of divine grace alone.

It is promiſed here concerning Zerubbabel,

1. That he ſhall overcome all difficulties in his way. Who art thou, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel thou ſhalt become a plain. Whatever oppoſition he met from the Perſian monarchy, or from Sanballat and the Samaritans, it ſhould be eaſily ſurmounted. Note, In the eye of ſenſe mountains unpaſſable obſtruct the way to glory, but faith looks up to Jeſus, the great Zerubbabel; and as he hath put all enemies under his own feet, ſo will he put them under ours; and thus the mountain becomes a plain.

2. He ſhall ſee the completion of the work he hath begun. He ſhall bring forth the head-ſtone thereof with ſhoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it, rejoicing and praiſing God for the ability he hath ſupplied for finiſhing his temple. And herein, (1.) He is a type of Chriſt, who on the croſs exulting cried, It is finiſhed; or it may refer to the day when he ſhall rejoice over all his redeemed in glory with joy and ſinging, Zeph. iii. 17. (2.) Of every believer, who, when God ſhall have finiſhed his work, and brought him happily to the end of his labours, ſhall ſtand forth before his throne, aſcribing the whole of his ſalvation to ſovereign, rich, and boundleſs grace, and join his voice with ten thouſand times ten thouſand others, ſhouting, Grace, grace unto it.

3. Zerubbabel ſhall hereby be fully convinced, with all the Jews, of the divine miſſion of the prophet, v. 9. or rather this may be referred to Chriſt, who will make his people know by bleſſed experience, when he hath completed the work of grace in their hearts, that he is indeed the Saviour of the world, and that him hath God the Father ſent.

4. The enemies of Judah ſhall be confounded, and thoſe, among themſelves, who at firſt were diſheartened, ſhall rejoice, when they ſee the work brought to ſo happy an iſſue. For who hath deſpiſed the day of ſmall things? Sanballat, and many even of the Jews, deſpiſed the mean beginnings of the temple; but they ſhall quickly change their mind: for they, the Jews, who at firſt deſpaired of being able to finiſh the work, ſhall rejoice, and ſhall ſee the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel, the building riſing faſt and beautiful under his direction, with thoſe ſeven, they are the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth; ſupported by the divine providence, and inſtructed by divine wiſdom, he ſhall be enabled to complete the glorious work. Note, (1.) The work of God in the ſoul begins with a day of ſmall things; the light but glimmering, the graces weak; yet thoſe are not to be deſpiſed, for in the end they ſhall have great increaſe. (2.) Inſtead of being diſcouraged, becauſe our labours have but little ſucceſs, we muſt be thankful for that little, and truſt in him who giveth the increaſe. (3.) It is a great joy to all faithful people to ſee miniſters and magiſtrates exerting themſelves in the cauſe of God and truth. (4.) They who are under the guidance of theſe ſeven eyes of God's providence and grace need never deſpair, whatever difficulties are in their way.

11. ¶ Then anſwered I, and ſaid unto him, What are theſe [o] two olive-trees, upon the right ſide of the candleſtick, and upon the left ſide thereof? 12. And I anſwered again, and ſaid unto him, What be theſe two olive-branches which † through the two golden pipes ‡ empty the golden oil out of themſelves? 13. And he anſwered me, and ſaid, Knoweſt thou not what theſe be? And I ſaid, No, my lord. 14. Then ſaid he, [p] Theſe are the two § anointed ones, that ſtand by [q] the LORD of the whole earth.

v. 11—14. Since he had found ſuch favour in the eyes of the Lord, the prophet continues his enquiries, not to gratify his curioſity, but to furniſh himſelf with matter for the good of his people.

1. He begs information concerning the two olive-trees, and what the two branches ſignify that emptied their oil into the golden bowl through the two golden pipes; and, being interrogated as before, Knoweſt thou not what theſe be? he again acknowledges his ignorance.

2. He is told what the olive-trees and branches ſignify. Theſe are the two anointed ones, or the ſons of oil; which ſome interpret of the gifts and graces of the Spirit; ſome of Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt; others of Chriſt in his two natures, or in his offices of prieſt and king, from whom the golden oil of grace is poured forth; that ſtand before the Lord of the whole earth, God the Father, who governs the affairs of the world and the church in and by his Son, to whom all power is committed, and by the Holy Ghoſt, which proceeds from them both, and is the quickning Spirit in the hearts of all the faithful.

CHAP. V.

Let the ſinners in Zion be afraid: though God ſpeaks peace to his people, his wrath is revealed from heaven againſt the ungodly; for, 1. God will reckon ſeverely with thoſe particular perſons among them that continued wicked and profane, they ſhall lie under the curſe, which the prophet ſees in a flying roll, ver. 1—4. 2. If the body of the nation hereafter degenerate, it ſhall be carried off, and hurried away with a ſwift deſtruction, under the preſſing weight of divine wrath, repreſented by a talent of lead upon the mouth of an ephah, carried upon the wing to the land of Shinar, ver. 5—11.

1. THEN I turned, and lift up mine eyes and looked, and behold, a flying roll. 2. And he ſaid unto me, What ſeeſt thou? And I anſwered, I ſee a flying roll, the length thereof is twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof ten cubits. 3. Then ſaid he unto me, This is the curſe that goeth over the face of the whole earth: for † every one [a] that ſtealeth ſhall be cut off as on this ſide, according to it: and [b] every one that ſweareth ſhall be cut off as on that ſide, according to it. 4. I will bring it forth, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, and it ſhall enter into the houſe of the thief, and into the houſe of [c] him that ſweareth falſly by my name: and it ſhall remain in the midſt of his houſe, and [d] ſhall conſume it, with the timber thereof, and the ſtones thereof.

[a] Ex. xx. 15.

[b] Ex. xx. 7. Ver. 4.

[c] Chap. viii. 17.

[d] Lev. xiv. 45.

v. 1—4. A new viſion here appears, big with terrible judgment againſt the wicked.

1. The prophet, looking upwards, beheld a flying roll; and, being aſked what he ſaw, deſcribes a ſtrange ſight; a roll of vaſt length appeared expanded in the air, and carried by the wind.

2. This is explained to him by the angel, as containing the curſe, the long catalogue of lamentations, mourning, and woe, which are the wages of ſin; that goeth forth over the whole earth; either the world in general, where all have ſinned and come ſhort of the glory of God; or over the whole land of Iſrael, which ſeems principally intended. Note, Sinners, whoſe eyes are blinded by the god of this world, ſee no danger, and walk on fearleſs and ſecure; but the enlightened mind, that looks into God's word, beholds with trembling the wrath which hangs over their devoted heads, and wonders at their inſenſibility.

3. The crimes particularly here charged upon them are theft and perjury. The curſe lies againſt every one that ſtealeth, whether robbing God, Mal. iii. 8. or man, their parents or others; whether in the leſſer acts of fraud, impoſition, deceit, and knavery; or the more atrocious deeds of open violence; and every one that ſweareth, profanely, raſhly, paſſionately, thoughtleſsly, falſely, ſhall be cut off; God will not hold them guiltleſs; wrath is upon them.

4. God will himſelf fearfully execute the curſe denounced on theſe criminals: I will bring it forth, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. It ſhall not only cut off the ſinners themſelves, and deſtroy both ſoul and body in hell, but it ſhall entail ruin upon their whole houſe and family, and like the plague of leproſy prove incurable, till the whole be utterly demoliſhed and laid in ruins.

5. ¶ Then the angel [e] that talked with me, went forth, and ſaid unto me, Lift up now thine eyes, and ſee what is this that goeth forth. 6. And I ſaid, What is it? And he ſaid, This is [f] an ephah that goeth forth. He

He ſaid moreover, This is their † reſemblance through all the earth. 7. And behold there was lift up a talent of lead: and this is [g] a woman that ſitteth in the midſt of the ephah. 8. And he ſaid, This is [h] wickedneſs; and he caſt it into the midſt of the ephah, and he caſt the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof. 9. Then lift I up mine eyes, and looked, and behold, there came out two women, and the wind was in their wings, (for [i] they had wings like the wings of a ſtork) and they lift up the ephah between the earth and the heaven. 10. Then ſaid I to the angel that talked with me, Whither do theſe bear the ephah? 11. And he ſaid unto me, To [k] build it an houſe in [l] the land of ‡ Shinar; and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed, and ſet there upon her own baſe.

v. 5—11. Another viſion ſucceeds, dark and hard to be underſtood. The prophet is commanded to look up, and ſay what he ſaw; but, through the diſtance, or dimneſs of his ſight, he does not diſtinctly perceive the object, and aſks what it is; and is anſwered.

1. It is an ephah, a meaſure containing about ſeven gallons, and ſeems to ſignify the meaſure of the iniquity of the Jewiſh people. And he ſaid moreover, This is their reſemblance in all the earth, or their eye; throughout Judea, or through all the countries where they were diſperſed, their wickedneſs abounded, and eſpecially in the times of Chriſt the meaſure of their ſins was filled faſt.

2. A woman appears, ſitting in the midſt of the ephah, the repreſentative of the ſinners among them, and a lively figure of her who afterwards ſhould ariſe, the mother of harlots. And he ſaid, This is wickedneſs, intimating the exceeding ſinfulneſs of their iniquity, who, being profeſſors of godlineſs, had ſo grievouſly degenerated.

3. A talent of lead is caſt as a cover on the mouth of the ephah, to ſhew how impoſſible it would be to eſcape from the wrath they had provoked, and how inſupportable the load would be on the impenitent.

4. Two women came forth, with wings like a ſtork, and, lifting up the ephah, with the wind in their wings ſwiftly conveyed it to the land of Shinar, or Babylon, where they built it an houſe, and ſet it upon its baſe. And theſe ſeem to repreſent the Roman armies, ſwiftly marching to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and carrying the Jewiſh nation into a more dreadful captivity, and of much longer continuance, than they had endured in Babylon: and to this day we ſee them ſunk under this load. Some refer this to Antichriſt, and his deſtruction: and it may well be applied to the eternal perdition of all ungodly men, who, when the meaſure of their iniquity is full, will be caught away from the earth, under their load of guilt, and caſt down into Shinar, into the everlaſting burnings, where is weeping and wailing and gnaſhing of teeth.

CHAP. VI.

Here is, 1. God, as king of nations, ruling the world by the miniſtry of angels, in the viſion of the four chariots, ver. 1—8. 2. God, as king of ſaints, ruling the church by the mediation of Chriſt, in the figure of Joſhua the high-prieſt crowned, the ceremony performed, and then explained concerning Chriſt, ver. 9—15.

1. AND I turned, and lift up mine eyes, and looked, and behold, there came four [a] chariots out from between two mountains, and the mountains were mountains of [b] braſs. 2. In the firſt chariot were [c] red horſes, and in the ſecond chariot [d] black horſes. 3. And in the third chariot [e] white horſes, and in the fourth chariot griſled and † bay horſes. 4. Then I anſwered, and [f] ſaid unto the angel that talked with me, What are theſe, my lord? 5. And the angel anſwered, and ſaid unto me, Theſe are the four [g] ‡ ſpirits of the heavens, which go forth from [h] ſtanding before the LORD of all the earth. 6. The black horſes, which are therein, go forth into the north country, and the white go forth after them; and the griſled go forth toward the ſouth-country. 7. And the bay went forth, and ſought to go, that they might walk to and fro through the earth: and he ſaid, Get ye hence, [i] walk to and fro through the earth. So they walked to and fro through the earth. 8. Then cried he upon me, and ſpake unto me, ſaying, Behold, theſe that go toward the north-country have [k] quieted my ſpirit in the north-country.

v. 1—8. The viſion of this chapter is of very difficult interpretation. The chariots coming from between the brazen mountains are ſuppoſed to repreſent either,

1. The apoſtles and miniſters of the goſpel, going forth into all lands according to God's eternal counſels, ſignified by the mountains of braſs. The different colours of the horſes may denote their various meſſages of wrath or mercy; their miniſtry is accompanied with the powerful operations of the Spirit, compared to the wind, which acts inviſibly, yet irreſiſtibly; and they are ſent from Chriſt, the Lord of the whole earth, to the different parts of the world; and by their labours ſinners are brought back to God's favour, and his wrath is turned away, his ſpirit quieted towards them. Or,

2. Theſe ſignify the angelic hoſts, the ſpirits of the heavens, coming forth from the mount of God into the earth, as executioners of God's decrees, and inſtruments of wrath or mercy according as God is pleaſed to ſend them; and when they have gone to and fro, and accompliſhed their miniſtry, God is well pleaſed, and his Spirit quieted and refreſhed. Or,

3. Theſe are the four monarchies, called the winds of the heavens, Dan. vii. 2. The Babyloniſh is repreſented by the red horſes, the Perſian by the black, the Grecian by the white, and the Roman by the griſled and bay horſes, who walked to and fro in the earth, or through the land of Judea, and ſubdued it. And a peculiar notice is taken of thoſe who went forth into the north-country, they have quieted my ſpirit, having avenged on the Babylonians the violence they had uſed towards God's captive Iſrael. Or,

4. They refer to the diſpenſations of Divine Providence in general, which proceed according to God's eternal counſels, and are fixed as brazen mountains, againſt which it is vain to ſtruggle. His chariots run at his will; chariots of love to his friends, to whom all things work together for good; chariots of war to his enemies, whom he treads under his horſes feet: from him the miniſters of Providence take their directions, and each in his ſphere accompliſhes the work which is given him to do, and God is well pleaſed in beholding the counſels of his own will fulfilled by them.

9. ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, 10. Take of them of the captivity, even of Heldai, of Tobijah, and of Jedaiah, which are come from Babylon, and come thou the ſame day, and go into the houſe of Joſiah the ſon of Zephaniah; 11. Then take ſilver and gold, and make [l] crowns, and ſet them upon the head of Joſhua, the ſon of Joſedech the high-prieſt; 12. And ſpeak unto him, ſaying, Thus ſpeaketh the LORD of hoſts, ſaying, Behold, [m] the man whoſe name is [n] the BRANCH, and he ſhall † grow up out of his place, and [o] he ſhall build the temple of the LORD: 13. Even he ſhall build the temple of the LORD, and [p] he ſhall bear the glory, and ſhall ſit and rule upon his throne, and [q] he ſhall be a prieſt upon his throne, and the counſel of peace ſhall be between them both. 14. And the crowns ſhall be to [r] Helem, and to Tobijah, and to Jedaiah, and to Hen the ſon of Zephaniah, [s] for a memorial in the temple of the LORD. 15. And [t] they that are far off ſhall come and build in the temple of the LORD, and [u] ye ſhall know that the LORD of hoſts hath ſent me unto you. And this ſhall come to paſs, if ye will diligently obey the voice of the LORD your God.

v. 9—15. Before God taught the people by viſions, here by type and figure.

1. Joſhua the high-prieſt is crowned by Zechariah with crowns of gold and ſilver, made of the offerings which Heldai, Tobijah, and Jedaiah brought from Babylon, and in their preſence. They who came not yet up to the temple ſent their preſents thither, and with their purſe endeavoured to compenſate for their abſence. The crowns on Joſhua were deſigned to intimate the union of the kingly and ſacerdotal office in him whom he prefigured, and whoſe name he bore.

2. A prophecy, founded on this figure, is delivered to Joſhua. Thus ſpeaketh the Lord of hoſts, ſaying, Behold the man whoſe name is the Branch, the divine Meſſiah; and he ſhall grow up out of his place, from Bethlehem-Ephratah, the city appointed for the place of his birth; and he ſhall build the temple of the Lord, the goſpel-church, of which he is the great architect; and by his power alone it is raiſed up and eſtabliſhed; even he ſhall build the temple of the Lord; ſo God hath decreed; and he ſhall bear the glory, to him the entire glory of it ſhall be aſcribed, and every member of that church will with delight caſt down his golden crown at his feet, and own that he, who alone hath won it, deſerves to wear it for ever; and he ſhall ſit and rule upon his throne, and he ſhall be a prieſt upon his throne, having all power delivered to him, and able to ſave to the uttermoſt in virtue of the oblation once offered: as a prieſt, God hath highly exalted him; and as he ever lives to plead the redemption he hath obtained for his people, ſo, as their glorious king, he reigns to apply it effectually to them: and the counſel of peace ſhall be between them both; either between Jehovah and the man, the Branch, or between the kingly and ſacerdotal offices of Chriſt; or the counſel of peace is the goſpel, preached to both Jew and Gentile, and uniting them together in love. And the crowns ſhall be to Helem, and to Tobijah, and to Hen the ſon of Zephaniah, for a memorial in the temple of the Lord, either for a conſtant teſtimony of the generous liberality of theſe good men; or to put the people in mind of him who ſhould come, and to whom the crowns particularly referred. And they that are afar off ſhall come, either the Jews yet in Babylon, or the Gentiles, Eph. ii. 12, 13. who ſhould be called by grace into the participation of all the privileges of the goſpel, and build in the temple of the Lord, as workers together helping forward the work of God; and by their labours bringing ſouls to Jeſus Chriſt, as lively ſtones to be built up on him, the One great and glorious foundation; and ye ſhall know that the Lord of hoſts hath ſent me unto you, the accompliſhment of the prophecy would be a proof of his divine miſſion. And this ſhall come to paſs, if ye will diligently obey the voice of the Lord your God; not that their obedience was the condition on which the fulfilment of theſe promiſes depended, but as many as proved faithful and obedient, would be convinced of the prophet's divine authority; or if they uſed their diligence in building the temple, God would take care they ſhould not want every needful aſſiſtance. Note, When we are enabled to improve the talent we are entruſted with, then God giveth more grace.

CHAP. VII.

In this chapter we have, 1. A caſe of conſcience propoſed to the prophet by the children of the captivity concerning faſting, ver. 1—3. 2. The anſwer to this queſtion, which is given in this and the next chapter. In this chapter, (1.) The prophet ſharply reproves them for the miſmanagement of their faſts, ver. 4—7. (2.) He exhorts them to reform their lives, which would be the beſt way of faſting, and to take heed of thoſe ſins which brought thoſe judgments upon them, which they kept theſe faſts in memory of, ver. 8—14.

518. 1. AND it came to paſs in the fourth year of king Darius, that the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah in the fourth day of the ninth month, even in Chiſleu; 2. When [a] they had ſent unto the houſe of God, Sherezer, and Regem-melech, and their men to † pray before the LORD, 3. And to ſpeak unto [b] the prieſts which were in the houſe of the LORD of hoſts, and to the prophets, ſaying, Should I weep in [c] the fifth month, [d] ſeparating myſelf, as I have done theſe ſo many years? 4. ¶ Then came the word of the LORD of hoſts unto me, ſaying, 5. v. 1—7. Though we have nothing here recorded of the prophet for two years, we are aſſured he was well employed, Ezra vi. 14. but he had no commiſſion to publiſh his diſcourſes, till on the preſent occaſion. We have,

1. The queſtion propoſed concerning faſting. Sherezer and Regem-melech, perſons of ſome note, with their men, are commiſſioned in the name of the people to go up to the houſe of God, either from Babylon, or from thoſe who were ſituated in the country of Judea, at a diſtance from Jeruſalem; to whom, in v. 5. the anſwer ſeems to be directed. Their buſineſs at the temple was to pray before the Lord, as the greateſt of men ſhould count it their honour to do, and to ſpeak to the prieſts which were in the houſe of the Lord of hoſts, whoſe office and buſineſs it is to explain the will of God; and the people, even the chief of them, ſhould with reverence and attention hear the law at their mouth; for they who are ſincere in their prayers, will be ſerious in their enquiries to know God's mind, that they may do it; and to the prophets, whom God had then in mercy raiſed up to them, ſaying, ſhould I weep in the fifth month, on the day when the temple was burnt by the Chaldeans, ſeparating myſelf for faſting and prayer, as I have done theſe ſo many years? during their captivity, and ſince their return; which now they doubted whether it were proper for them to continue, their temple being in great forwardneſs, and a proſpect of its happy re-eſtabliſhment before them. Note, (1.) In caſes of conſcience God's miniſters ſhould be conſulted. (2.) When God afflicts, he calls to weeping and faſting: to be ſtupid, or unconcerned, would be to deſpiſe the chaſtening of the Almighty, and provoke a heavier ſcourge.

2. Zechariah hath an anſwer given him for them, and it is a ſharp reproof for their hypocriſy and diſobedience. They had faſted indeed; in the fifth and ſeventh month, in memory of the burning the temple, and the murder of Gedaliah, but their faſts were mere ceremonious duties, without any real humiliation of ſoul: did ye at all faſt unto me, even to me? Their eye was not ſingle, they did not propoſe God's glory as their end, and therefore their ſervices could not be acceptable, however long they had continued them; in mentioning which, they ſeem tacitly to upbraid God with not taking notice of them, and to value themſelves on their performances: but their faſts were no more pleaſing than their common meals, or their feſtivals, in which they eat and drank for themſelves; not giving him thanks, or doing him honour; or deſigning, in the uſe of his creatures, to glorify him, but to indulge themſelves. Should ye not hear the words which the Lord hath cried by the former prophets, when Jeruſalem was inhabited, and in proſperity, and the cities thereof round about her, when men inhabited the ſouth and the plain? This was what they ſhould have done, which would have prevented the deſolations, and in their faſts theſe ſcriptures ſhould have been attended to, both as a matter of humiliation, and as a warning againſt the iniquities which had provoked God to deſtroy the land. But this they had neglected; and it is then to no purpoſe to faſt, whilſt our hearts continue unhumbled for the ſins which are the cauſe of our calamities.

8. ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah, ſaying, 9. Thus ſpeaketh the LORD of hoſts, ſaying, [k] Execute true judgment, and ſhew mercy and compaſſion every man to his brother. 10. And [l] oppreſs not the widow, nor the fatherleſs, the ſtranger, nor the poor, and [m] let none of you imagine evil againſt his brother in your heart. 11. But they refuſed to hearken, [n] and † pulled away the ſhoulder, and [o] ſtopped their ears, that they ſhould not hear. 12. Yea, [p] they made their hearts as an adamant-ſtone, leſt they ſhould hear the law, and the words which the LORD of hoſts hath ſent in his ſpirit by the former prophets: therefore [q] came a great wrath from the LORD of hoſts. 13. Therefore it is come to paſs that, as he cried, and they would not hear; [r] ſo they cried, and I would not hear, ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 14. But I ſcattered them with a whirlwind among all the nations whom they knew not: thus the land was deſolate after them, that no man paſſed through nor returned: for they laid [s] the ‡ pleaſant land deſolate.

v. 8—14. The examples they had ſeen, and the words of the preceding prophets, ſhould have been warnings to them.

1. The prophet puts them in mind what had been the ſubject of the former prophets diſcourſes. Thus ſpeaketh the Lord of hoſts, ſaying, execute true judgment, impartially adminiſtring juſtice without reſpect of perſons, and ſhew mercy and compaſſion every man to his brother, under all his wants of body or ſoul, aſſiſting him with our advice, our purſe, our perſon, and our prayers; forgiving every provocation, and bearing his infirmities. And oppreſs not the widow, nor the fatherleſs, the ſtranger, nor the poor, whoſe helpleſs ſtate ſhould plead for them, and let none of you imagine evil againſt his brother in your heart; neither harbour a deſign of miſchief, nor entertain an evil ſurmiſe concerning them.

2. He reminds them of the diſobedience of their fathers. They refuſed to hearken, and pulled away the ſhoulder, diſobedient and refractory againſt all the warnings given them, and ſtopped their ears, that they ſhould not hear, not deigning ſo much as to hearken to God's meſſages. Yea, they made their hearts as an adamant ſtone, impenetrable to conviction, neither regarding the law of Moſes, nor the words of his divinely commiſſioned meſſengers the prophets.

3. For theſe things came a great wrath upon them, from the Lord of hoſts; and ſince they would not hear his calls, God refuſed to hear their cries in the day of their calamity; ſcattered them among the nations, laid their pleaſant land deſolate; a righteous judgment upon them for their obſtinacy, impenitence, and hardneſs of heart. Note, (1.) They who in proſperity ſet at nought God's threatnings, will cry too late for mercy, when it is the time of judgment. (2.) Sinners have only themſelves to blame for their eternal ruin.

CHAP. VIII.

The work of miniſters is rightly to divide the word of truth, and to give every one their portion. Whilſt the hypocrites are rebuked, the faithful muſt be encouraged. Here are two meſſages; in the firſt, ver. 1. God promiſeth that Jeruſalem ſhall be reſtored, reformed, repleniſhed, ver. 2—8. That the country ſhall be rich, their national affairs ſucceſsful, their reputation retrieved, and their ſtate in all reſpects the reverſe of what it had been, ver. 9—15. And then exhorts them to reform what was amiſs among them, that they might be ready for theſe favours deſigned for them, ver. 16, 17. In the latter of theſe meſſages, ver. 18. he promiſeth that their faſts ſhould be ſuperſeded by the return of mercy, ver. 19. And that thereupon they ſhould be repleniſhed, enriched, and ſtrengthened by the acceſſion of foreigners to them, ver. 20—23.

1. AGAIN the word of the LORD of hoſts came to me, ſaying, 2. Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, [a] I was jealous for Zion with great jealouſy, and I was jealous for her [b] with great fury. 3. Thus ſaith the LORD, I am returned unto Zion, and [c] will dwell in the midſt of Jeruſalem, and Jeruſalem [d] ſhall be called a city of truth; and the mountain of the LORD of hoſts, the holy mountain. 4. Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, [e] There ſhall yet old men and old women dwell in the ſtreets of Jeruſalem, and every man with his ſtaff in his hand † for very age. 5. And the ſtreets of the city ſhall be full of boys and girls playing in the ſtreets thereof. 6. Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, If it be ‡ marvellous in the eyes of the remnant of this people in theſe days, [f] ſhould it alſo be marvellous in mine eyes? ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 7. Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, Behold, [g] I will ſave my people from the eaſt-country, and from || the weſt-country, 8. And [h] I will bring them, and they ſhall dwell in the midſt of Jeruſalem, and they ſhall be my people, and [i] I will be their God in truth and in righteouſneſs.

v. 1—8. God keepeth not his anger for ever, he will return and be gracious.

1. He will be jealous for Zion with great jealouſy, concerned to vindicate her honour, and avenge her wrongs; and therefore with great fury ſhall his vengeance light on her enemies.

2. He will return to Zion: he ſpeaks of it as already done, ſince his promiſe is ſure, and dwell in the midſt of Jeruſalem, manifeſting his gracious preſence to them at the temple, and meeting them in his ordinances; and this was moſt eminently fulfilled, when the word was made fleſh, and dwelt among them.

3. He will work a glorious change on the place and people. Jeruſalem ſhall be a city of truth, eminent for integrity and honeſty; the mountain of the Lord of hoſts, where he condeſcends to take up his abode, the holy mountain, cleared from all idolatry and pure before God. The church of Chriſt is the pillar and ground of truth; in it all truth of doctrine and uprightneſs of converſation are found; it is firm as the everlaſting mountains, and cannot be ſhaken, and on the heart of every living member thereof there is written, Holineſs to the Lord.

4. He will give them long life, peace, and proſperity. No diſeaſes ſhall ſweep them off, nor war ſpread its ravages among them, but in the ſtreets ſhall vigorous old age appear; and tho' time hath impaired much of nature's ſtrength, the ſtaff ſhall ſtill ſupport the hoary head; whilſt the riſing generation, numerous and healthful, ſhall in youthful exerciſes and innocent ſport, mix in the ſtreets, ſecure from fear of evil. In the church are found fathers in Chriſt, young men and children, a multitude of converts, each adorning their place and ſtation, and ripening for glory.

5. He will ſave the diſperſed of Iſrael from Babylon and Egypt, and bring them back to their own land; and, better than all their other mercies, he will take them again into the covenant, and engage their hearts unto himſelf. They ſhall be my people, engaged, inclined, and enabled to be ſo, by his preventing and effectual grace; and I will be their God in truth and in righteouſneſs, faithful to all his promiſes. And this ſeems to have regard to all the Iſrael of God, who ſhall be called and converted unto him; be received into the arms of his love; by his grace effectually engaged in his ſervice; and through the everlaſting righteouſneſs of Jeſus, and according to the unchangeable promiſes of the everlaſting covenant, God will be their God, to bleſs, preſerve, and keep them, their portion and exceeding great reward in time and in eternity.

6. However incredible this may ſeem, and marvellous, with God all things are poſſible; and therefore ſtrange as it is, it will be found true, for not one jot or tittle ſhall fail of all his promiſes. If we can believe, we ſhall ſee the ſalvation of God.

9. ¶ Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, [k] Let your hands be ſtrong, ye that hear in theſe days theſe words by the mouth of [l] the prophets, which were in the day that the foundation of the houſe of the LORD of hoſts was laid, that the temple might be built. 10. For before theſe days † there was no [m] hire for man, nor any hire for beaſt, neither was [n] there any peace to him that went out, or came in, becauſe of the affliction: for I ſet all men, every one againſt his neighbour. 11. But now I will not be unto the reſidue of this people, as in the former days, ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 12. For [o] the ſeed ſhall be proſperous, the vine ſhall give her fruit, and the ground ſhall give her increaſe, and the heavens ſhall give their dew, and I will cauſe the remnant of this people to poſſeſs [p] all theſe things. 13. And it ſhall come to paſs, that as ye were [q] a curſe among the heathen, O houſe of Judah, and houſe of Iſrael; ſo will I ſave you, and ye ſhall be [r] a bleſſing: fear not, but let your hands be ſtrong. 14. For thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, As I thought to puniſh you, [s] when your fathers provoked me to wrath, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, and I repented not; 15. So again have I thought in theſe days to do well unto Jeruſalem, and to the houſe of Judah: fear ye not. 16. ¶ [t] Theſe are the things that ye ſhall do, [u] Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour: [x] ‡ execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates. 17. And [y] let none of you imagine evil in your hearts againſt his neighbour, [z] and love no falſe oath: for all theſe are things that I hate, ſaith the LORD.

v. 9—17. We have here,

1. The great encouragements given to the people who, attentive to the voice of God's prophets, laboured zealouſly to further the work of the temple; for they who are faithful to him, may expect comfort from him. They had laboured under many difficulties during the time when God's houſe was neglected; there was no hire for man or beaſts, trade was dead, and the produce of the earth ſo little, that few hands were needed to reap and gather it. Their enemies on every ſide made inroads upon them, and robbers in their own country made travelling dangerous, and no man's property was ſecure: and an evil ſpirit of diſſention and ſtrife was ſown among themſelves, ſo that every one ſeemed ſet againſt his neighbour; but now God will change his manner of acting towards them. Their ground ſhall produce abundantly; and enriched with all manner of ſtore, they ſhall poſſeſs their good things undiſturbed, v. 12. Inſtead of that reproach they had ſuffered among the heathen, now God will ſave them in ſo diſtinguiſhed a manner, that all who beheld them would acknowledge them to be the bleſſed of the Lord, and their example and labours would make them a bleſſing to all around them. As ſurely as he had threatned to puniſh their fathers, and had done it, as they had ſeen, ſo ſurely now will he do well unto them, for his gifts and calling are without repentance. They may therefore confidently hope to ſee the fulfilment of all his promiſes, and ſhould neither fear the multitude of their enemies, nor the difficulties in their way; but be ſtrong in the aſſurance of divine ſupport; and this is the powerful argument to engage all believers to work out their own ſalvation, becauſe it is God who worketh in them to will and to do of his good pleaſure.

2. Their duty is ſet before them; the ſame which the prophets had inculcated upon their diſobedient fathers of old. Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour, in ſimplicity, putting away falſhood, deceit, and all prevarication; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates: let juſtice be impartially adminiſtered, and ſeek to heal all differences. And let none of you imagine evil in your hearts againſt his neighbour, not entertain an ill wiſh, nor harbour an ill ſurmiſe againſt any of them, and love no falſe oath, but abhor and diſcountenance every thing which may lead thereunto: for all theſe are things that I hate, ſaith the Lord, and therefore we ſhould hate them alſo.

18. ¶ And the word of the LORD of hoſts came unto me, ſaying, 19. Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, The faſt of [a] the fourth month, and the faſt of [b] the fifth, and the faſt of [c] the ſeventh, and the faſt of [d] the tenth ſhall be to the houſe of Judah [e] joy and gladneſs, and chearful † feaſts; [f] therefore love the truth and peace. 20. Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, It ſhall yet come to paſs, that there ſhall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities. 21. And the inhabitants of one city ſhall go to another, ſaying, [g] Let us go ‡ ſpeedily to || pray before the LORD, and to ſeek the LORD of hoſts: I will go alſo. 22. Yea, [h] many people and ſtrong nations ſhall come to ſeek the LORD of hoſts in Jeruſalem, and to pray before the LORD. 23. Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, In thoſe days it ſhall come to paſs, that ten men ſhall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even ſhall take hold of the ſkirt of him that is a Jew, ſaying, We will go with you; for we have heard [i] that God is with you.

fourth month, in memory of the taking Jeruſalem; of the fifth, becauſe then the temple was burnt; of the ſeventh, on account of Gedaliah's murder; of the tenth, becauſe then Nebuchadnezzar began the ſiege: but now, when God will reſtore Jeruſalem, and rear up again his temple, the memory of theſe melancholy ſcenes of deſolations ſhall be loſt in the joy and gladneſs ariſing from their preſent happy eſtate. Therefore love truth and peace; let this be the grateful return you make for the divine mercies beſtowed upon you.

2. God promiſes to enlarge them abundantly with multitudes of proſelytes; or this hath rather a more immediate reference to the times of the goſpel, when the Gentiles ſhould come into the church of Chriſt. The inhabitants of many cities, among whom the apoſtles and others preached, ſhall become obedient to the faith, and ſollicitous for the ſalvation of others, each ſhall ſay to his neighbour, Come, and let us go ſpeedily to pray before the Lord; no longer lying down in their former ſtate of blindneſs and guilt, but, without delay, ſeeking the Lord of hoſts whilſt yet he may be found; and in fervent and importunate prayer, the language of every truly converted ſoul, eager to obtain mercy and acceptance before him: I will go alſo, ſhall one ſay to another, glad to join the happy company, and haſting to the courts of Zion. Multitudes out of all nations ſhall aſſemble for this bleſſed purpoſe, and then the name of the Jew ſhall be no longer hated or deſpiſed, but ten men out of all languages, many converted by the preaching of the Apoſtles, and other miniſters of Chriſt, ſhall take hold of the ſkirt of him that is a Jew, the firſt preachers of the goſpel being chiefly of that nation, ſaying, we will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you; the divine Redeemer being of the ſtock of Iſrael after the fleſh, to whom it was promiſed of old the gathering of the people ſhould be, and to whom the miniſters of truth deſire to lead the ſouls who are under their care. Note, (1.) Every truly converted ſoul will immediately be found upon his knees, ſeeking the Lord. (2.) They who have themſelves taſted that the Lord is gracious, cannot but be ſollicitous that others ſhould come and partake of their mercies. (3.) A gracious purpoſe ſhould be executed ſpeedily; delays are dangerous.

v. 1—8. When God comes with bleſſing to his people, he will execute vengeance on their enemies.

1. The neighbouring nations, who had been ſuch oppreſſors of Iſrael, ſhall be puniſhed.

(1.) Syria and Damaſcus come firſt under judgment; on them ſhall reſt the wrath of God, a burden intolerable; and this on account of their ill uſage of God's people, whoſe eyes, as the eyes of one man, are toward the Lord, crying for help againſt theſe enemies. Hamath, who borders thereby, ſhall meet the ſame fate, v. 2. Some apply the words to a quite different ſenſe, and ſuppoſe they ſpeak not wrath but mercy. That the word of the Lord is his goſpel, which ſhall reſt in Damaſcus; and many of the inhabitants, as the Iſrael of God, ſhall look towards the Lord; and this was fulfilled when St. Paul was, near Damaſcus, brought to the knowledge of Jeſus, and immediately preached him in the ſynagogues.

Before Chriſt 587.

(2.) Tyre and Zidon, though ſupported by every human advantage, very wiſe, very ſtrongly fortified, and very rich, ſhall fall; God will caſt her out, deſtroy her power in the ſea where ſhe reigned queen of the ocean, and ſhe ſhall be devoured with fire. Note, There is neither counſel nor might againſt the Lord.

(3.) The cities of the Philiſtines, Aſhkelon, Gaza, and Ekron, ſhall be terrified at their neighbours ruin, aſhamed of the confidence they repoſed in Tyre; the king of Gaza ſhall periſh; Aſhkelon ſhall become deſolate and uninhabited, and a baſtard ſhall dwell in Aſhdod; which was fulfilled when Alexander deſtroyed all theſe places, and captivated the inhabitants; and afterwards the Jews, under the Maccabees, ſeized many of them, and ſubdued great part of theſe countries.

2. A remnant of theſe ſhall be ſaved. Their bloody enmity againſt God's people, and their abominable idolatries ſhall be removed; but he that remaineth, even he ſhall be for our God, ſaved by his grace, and converted by the preaching of the goſpel; and he ſhall be as a governor in Judah, dear to God, and honourable as the chiefs of Judah; and Ekron as a Jebuſite, or inhabitant of Jebus, that is Jeruſalem; the middle wall of partition being broken down, and no difference any longer ſubſiſting between Jew and Gentile, both alike admitted into the church, and heirs together of the grace of life.

3. God's care over his own people will eminently appear. I will encamp about mine houſe becauſe of the army, becauſe of him that paſſed by, and becauſe of him that returneth, which literally refers to the protection God gave them againſt the army of the Greeks under Alexander, who, amidſt his other ravages, favoured the Jews. And ſpiritually it ſpeaks God's watchfulneſs over his choſen, who, amidſt all the legions of hell, and the powers of earth combined againſt them, are and ſhall be for ever preſerved; and no oppreſſor ſhall paſs through them any more, which cannot ſo well be underſtood of the Jewiſh people, ſince many enemies afterwards oppreſſed them, but is glorioſly verified reſpecting the Iſrael of God; who being juſtified from all things by the blood and righteouſneſs of Jeſus, ſhall never enter into condemnation, or be brought again under the yoke of bondage: for now have I ſeen with mine eyes, which expreſſes his watchfulneſs over his people, and his delight in them, ſo that they are ſafe from all the powers of evil.

9. ¶ [n] Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; ſhout, O daughter of Jeruſalem: behold, thy king cometh unto thee: he is juſt, and having ſalvation, lowly, and riding upon an aſs, and upon a colt the foal of an aſs. 10. And I will [o] cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horſe from Jeruſalem, and the battle-bow ſhall be cut off; and [p] he ſhall ſpeak peace unto the heathen: and his dominion ſhall be [q] from ſea even to ſea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth. 11. v. 9—11. The former verſes directed us to the ſalvation of the great Redeemer, here he appears in great humility, yet bringing joy to all his ſaints.

1. The adored Meſſiah appears, and the prophet cries, Behold him, that the eye of faith might be directed forward to that bleſſed time, which was now faſt approaching: thy king cometh unto thee, the long-expected Son of David, to ſit on his father's throne; he is juſt, in himſelf perfectly righteous, and adminiſtring the kingdom of his grace with the higheſt juſtice, and having ſalvation, the author and finiſher of it, procuring it by his blood and righteouſneſs, and aſcending to his throne to apply it to his people's hearts, and make them partakers of it in time and in eternity: lowly, humbling himſelf for our ſakes to the form of a ſervant, and to the death of a ſlave; or poor and afflicted, as he appeared during all the days of his ſojourning here below; and riding upon an aſs, and upon a colt the foal of an aſs, or even upon a colt, for thus our Lord made his entry into Jeruſalem, Mat. xxi. 4, 5. amidſt the Hoſannah's of the multitude.

2. He will erect a glorious kingdom in the world, not by weapons of war, or outward force, but by the preaching of his goſpel, bowing the hearts of men to ſubmit to his eaſy yoke; and under his government they ſhall be ſafe, nor need the chariot, horſe, or battle bow to defend them. And the heathen ſhall ſhare the bleſſings of his government, for to them he will ſpeak peace, ſending to them his goſpel of peace, and cauſing them to enjoy in their ſouls the peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding, and making them men of peace and quiet in the land; and his dominion ſhall be from ſea even to ſea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth, reaching in proceſs of time from pole to pole, eſpecially in the laſt days, when all nations ſhall hear his goſpel, and become obedient to the faith.

3. The great deliverance to be wrought for the church is aſcribed to the blood of the everlaſting covenant, the blood of Jeſus, which he ſhed upon the croſs: it is called thy covenant, the church's, becauſe the bleſſings and benefits of it are her's, thro' Chriſt, who is the great Covenant-head to his people; and this blood was prefigured in all the ſacrifices which the Jews offered of old. By virtue of this, I have ſent forth thy priſoners; for the redeemed by nature are in the ſame ſtate of guilt and corruption as others, concluded under ſin, till through the efficacy of atoning blood they are called by divine grace, and quickened by the holy ghoſt to come forth out of the pit, wherein is no water, where they muſt be ſure to periſh miſerably, unleſs relieved. And all who are brought out from thence look back with wonder, love, and praiſe, when they conſider the horrible pit from which the Lord hath drawn them. Therefore,

4. They are commanded to rejoice in the view of all theſe ineſtimable bleſſings; yea, to rejoice greatly, v. 9. as well it becomes thoſe to do who have ſeen the king in his beauty, and are made partakers of his great ſalvation.

12. ¶ [s] Turn ye to the ſtrong hold, [t] ye priſoners of hope, even to day do I declare, that [u] I will render double unto thee: 13. When I have bent Judah for me, filled † the bow with Ephraim, and raiſed up thy ſons, O Zion, againſt thy ſons, O Greece, and [x] made thee as the ſword of a mighty man: 14. And the LORD ſhall ‡ be ſeen over them, and his arrow ſhall go forth as the lightning: and the Lord GOD ſhall blow the trumpet, and ſhall go [y] with whirlwinds of the ſouth. 15. The LORD of hoſts ſhall defend them, and they ſhall devour and || ſubdue with ſling-ſtones, and they ſhall drink, and make a noiſe as through wine, and they ſhall be filled like bowls, and [z] as the corners of the altar. 16. And the LORD their God ſhall ſave them in that day as the flock of his people, for [a] they ſhall be as the ſtones of a crown, [b] lifted up as an enſign upon his land. 17. For [c] how great is his goodneſs, and how great is [d] his beauty! corn ſhall make the young men § cheerful, and new wine the maids.

v. 12—17. The promiſes here delivered ſeem not ſo much to belong to any happy ſtate of the Jewiſh affairs, as to the times of the goſpel; at leaſt then they ſhall moſt eminently receive their accompliſhment.

1. Sinners are invited to turn to the ſtrong hold Chriſt Jeſus, who alone is able to protect them from the aſſaults of their ſpiritual enemies Satan, ſin, and death; to ſave them from the wrath of God, the curſe of a broken law; and to ſupply all their wants out of his fulneſs. They are called priſoners of hope; by nature enſlaved by corruption, and condemned by guilt; their ſtate in themſelves deſperate, and every effort to eſcape fruitleſs: yet in the goſpel, hope beams into the priſon, Jeſus hath opened the doors, by his blood having obtained redemption from all ſins, by his righteouſneſs having purchaſed eternal glory, by his grace calling the priſoners forth, and enabling them to ariſe, and turn to him, by faith quitting all other dependencies, and reſting their whole ſalvation on him alone.

2. They are aſſured of all protection and favour. To day do I declare that I will render double unto thee, twice as much as they hoped for; comforts far exceeding all their afflictions, and bleſſings double to any their fathers had experienced: the ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt Jeſus in heavenly things being unſpeakably ſuperior to the greateſt temporal proſperity and earthly good things.

3. They ſhall be victorious under the divine guidance over every enemy, and be defended by almighty power. When I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, or filled Ephraim with the bow, ſtrengthened their arms to bend it, and put the mighty weapons into their hands, the ſpiritual weapons of the goſpel, with which the Apoſtles went forth, ſhooting the arrows of conviction into the ſtouteſt hearts of ſinners, and bringing them to the obedience of Chriſt; and raiſed up thy ſons, O Zion, againſt thy ſons, O Greece, the wiſe diſputers of this world, for which Greece was famed, as the ſeat of human literature and ſcience; but all this proud wiſdom ſhould be humbled before the goſpel-word, and the wiſe made willing to become fools that they may be wiſe; and made thee as the ſword of a mighty man, ſo piercing and ſharp is the word of God in the mouths of his miniſters, when accompanied by the demonſtration of the ſpirit. And the Lord ſhall be ſeen over them, as when on the day of pentecoſt the fiery tongues deſcended upon the apoſtles; or in the conſtant ſupports of grace and courage he miniſtered unto them, and ſtill doth miniſter to all his ſervants, evidently manifeſting the divine power which makes their labours effectual, and his arrow ſhall go forth as the lightning, ſwift ſhall his goſpel ſpread, and fill the world with its light and glory: and the Lord ſhall blow the trumpet, his miniſters ſhall ſound a terrible alarm in the ears of impenitent ſinners, and ſhall go with whirlwinds of the ſouth, executing judgment on all who obey not his word; or the trumpet is like the jubilee trumpet, a proclamation of pardon, peace, and liberty; and the whirlwinds, the irreſiſtible energy of the word preached, bearing down all oppoſition before it in the ſinner's heart. The Lord of hoſts ſhall defend them from every foe, and they ſhall devour and ſubdue with ſling-ſtones; though they ſeem as unequal to contend with their enemies reſpecting wiſdom and power, as David to cope with Goliath; yet like him, theſe weak things ſhall confound the mighty, and bring the moſt ſelf-righteous and ſtout-hearted ſinner to bow in the duſt, and accept the grace of the goſpel; they ſhall drink deep at the fountain of truth, and of the conſolations of the ſpirit, and make a noiſe as through wine, full of joy and thankfulneſs, and ſongs of praiſe; and they ſhall be filled with the love of God, and a ſenſe of the efficacy of the atonement of Jeſus, as bowls with the blood of the ſacrifice, and as the corners of the altar on which it was ſprinkled, as our conſciences are with the blood of Chriſt, ſealing our pardon and peace. And the Lord God ſhall ſave them in that day as the flock of his people, either the miniſters above ſpoken of, whom the Lord ſends to fight his battles, or rather thoſe who are ſubdued by the ſword of the ſpirit, and now numbered with ſuch as bear Chriſt's eaſy yoke, and ſhare in the bleſſings of his people, whom like a ſhepherd he feeds, watches over, and protects from every evil; for they ſhall be as the ſtones of a crown, ſo precious in God's ſight, the jewels that ſhall glitter in the Redeemer's crown to all eternity; lifted up as an enſign upon the land, trophies of the victories of Jeſus, and a monument of his grace for ever and ever.

Some refer theſe promiſes to Iſrael after the fleſh, when under the Maccabees they were victorious over Antiochus and their other foes; but the ſenſe given ſeems far preferable, and gives a nobler view of the prophecy.

4. The Redeemed ſhall be filled with wonder, love, and praiſe. For how great is his goodneſs, in thus loving us living, dying for us, and beſtowing upon us the riches of his grace and the abundance of his bleſſings; and how great is his beauty? In every redeemed ſinner's eye he is beyond compare; the chiefeſt of ten thouſand, and altogether lovely: corn ſhall make the young men chearful, and new wine the maids; the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus ſhall be vigorous, active, lively; going forth, as refreſhed with corn and wine, ſinging in the good ways of God, and fruitful, as it is by ſome tranſlated, in every good word and work.

CHAP. X.

The ſcope of this chapter is much the ſame with that of the preceding. Now, 1. They are here directed to eye the great God in all events; and, both in the evils they ſuffered, and the comforts they deſired, to acknowledge his hand, ver. 1—4. 2. They are encouraged to expect ſtrength and ſucceſs from him, in all their ſtruggles with their enemies, and to hope that the iſſue would be glorious at laſt, ver. 5—12.

1. [a] ASK ye [b] of the LORD [c] rain [d] in the time of the latter rain, ſo the LORD ſhall make † bright clouds, and give them ſhowers of rain, to every one graſs in the field. 2. For [e] the ‡ idols have ſpoken vanity, and the diviners have ſeen a lie, and have told falſe dreams; they [f] comfort in vain: therefore they went their way as a flock, [g] they were troubled, becauſe there was no ſhepherd. 3. v. 1—4. God is now returning in mercy to his people, and therefore,

1. They are directed to apply to him for the rain in its ſeaſon, on which the fruitfulneſs of their land depended. In Judea the rain fell periodically; the former rain in autumn, about ſeed time, the latter in March, April, and May, from whence to September they had ſcarce any; and if theſe failed, the harveſt neceſſarily ſuffered. Now God promiſes to hear their prayers, to ſend his clouds, and by watering their lands ſeaſonably, to give them plenty of the fruits of the earth. The common bleſſings of providence are to be humbly ſought, nor looked upon as things of courſe, but as rich gifts of grace; and this may be referred myſtically to the influences of God's ſpirit, by which our ſouls can alone be quickened to bring forth fruit unto God, and therefore we muſt aſk this holy ſpirit from God, in ceaſeleſs and importunate prayer.

2. None of the idols of the heathen, or thoſe their fathers worſhipped, could give rain; their falſe prophets and diviners, who pretended to conſult them, and return anſwers from them as oracular, were liars, they told falſe dreams, and comforted in vain; following theſe wicked ſhepherds, they had gone aſtray as a flock; and for this their ſhepherds in church and ſtate, who had deluded them, were cut off in anger and none left; and the goats, the princes and prieſts, that, inſtead of going before the flock aright, miſled and miſuſed them, God had puniſhed ſeverely. By theſe examples they ſhould therefore be warned, and ceaſe from idolatry, worſhipping and ſerving God alone. Eſpecially,

3. Seeing God had now done ſuch great things for them, viſiting them with his favour as his flock recovered from their diſperſion and captivity, and hath made them as his goodly horſe in the battle, beautiful, ſtrong, and formidable. Out of him went forth the corner, he laid the foundation of their reſtoration; out of him the nail, which faſtened them together; out of him the battle bow, all their military power was derived from him; out of him every oppreſſor, or exactor, either thoſe enemies which had oppreſſed them did it by his permiſſion, or the word may be taken in a correſpondence with the reſt, that all the might they had, or ſhould be endued with, to make any of the neighbouring nations tributary to them, muſt be from his gift alone.

Some apply this to the Meſſiah, the Corner-ſtone, the nail faſtened in a ſure place, the battle bow to ſubdue all the enemies of his people, and aſſign this as the reaſon why God will viſit them, and ſtrengthen them; ſeeing he gives them him, he will with him freely give them every other bleſſing.

5. ¶ And they ſhall be as [m] mighty men, which [n] tread down their enemies in the mire of the ſtreets in the battle, and they ſhall fight, [o] becauſe the LORD is with them, and † the riders on horſes ſhall be confounded. 6.
And I will ſtrengthen the houſe of Judah, and I will ſave the houſe of Joſeph, [p] and I will bring them again to place them; for [q] I have mercy upon them: and they ſhall be as though I had not caſt them off: for I am the LORD their God, and will hear them. 7. And they of Ephraim ſhall be like a mighty man, and their heart [r] ſhall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children ſhall ſee it, and be glad, their heart ſhall rejoice in the LORD. 8. [s] I will ‡ hiſs for them, and gather them, for I have redeemed them: and [t] they ſhall increaſe as they have increaſed. 9. And I will [u] ſow them among the people: and they ſhall remember me in far countries, and they ſhall live with their children, and turn again. 10. [x] I will bring them again alſo out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Aſſyria, and I [y] will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon, and [z] place ſhall not be found for them. 11. [a] And he ſhall paſs through the ſea with affliction, and [b] ſhall ſmite the waves in the ſea, and all the deeps of the river ſhall dry up: and the pride of Aſſyria ſhall be brought down, and [c] the ſceptre of Egypt ſhall depart away.
12. And I will [d] ſtrengthen them in the LORD, and [e] they ſhall walk up and down in his name, ſaith the

v. 5—12. The promiſes contained in theſe verſes certainly look farther than the eſtabliſhment of Iſrael after their firſt captivity; and either appertain to the goſpel-church in general, or have ſpecial reference to the Jewiſh people in the laſt days, when they ſhall be turned to the Lord.

1. As applicable to the Iſrael of God in general. Becauſe the Lord is with them, with the preachers of his goſpel, and the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus; they ſhall be as mighty men, ver. 5, 7. ſtrengthened by grace to fight the Lord's battles againſt all their enemies, within and without, and the ſtrongeſt ſhall fall before them, v. 5. They ſhall be ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation through the mercy of God, and live ſafely and comfortably in the church of the redeemed, being reſcued from the bondage of corruption. They ſhall be as the natural branches of the true olive, and God will be their covenant God, ready to hear and anſwer all their prayers, v. 6. He will fill them with ſpiritual joy, as men rejoice through new wine, and their bleſſings ſhall deſcend to children's children, who ſhall behold their father's mercies, partake of them, and rejoice in the ſame ſalvation, for Chriſt's church ſhall never fail, but continue through all ages, v. 7. His goſpel, as the ſhepherd's whiſtle, ſhall effectually gather them out of all lands, from the captivity of ſin, much more burdenſome than that of Egypt or Aſſyria, v. 10. for Jeſus hath redeemed them by his moſt precious blood from every enemy, and great ſhall be their multitude, far exceeding that of Iſrael, when increaſed as the ſand of the ſea-ſhore, v. 8. See Hoſ. i. 10. God will ſow them among the people, as his precious ſeed in all lands, and the moſt diſtant countries ſhall remember him, and turning to the Lord, ſhall live with their children the life of grace and glory, v. 9. They ſhall poſſeſs the good land where all ſpiritual bleſſings abound, and place ſhall ſcarce be found for the multitude of converts, and not one of them ſhall be left, not one of the redeemed ſhall be finally loſt, v. 9. Through many tribulations indeed they muſt enter into the kingdom of God, but he will open a way for them through all their difficulties, and cauſe their ſtrongeſt and moſt inveterate foes to fall before them, v. 11. In the Lord is their ſtrength, therefore they muſt prevail, and they ſhall walk up and down in his name, going forth in his might, and making mention of his righteouſneſs only, walking by faith, and ſafely kept by the power of God unto ſalvation.

2. Theſe promiſes may alſo be particularly applied to Iſrael, when they ſhall be recovered from their preſent diſperſion in the latter day, when God will convert their hearts to himſelf, increaſing them more than ever, will ſtrengthen them againſt all their foes, and probably make them his chief inſtruments in the ruin of the Antichriſtian foe; after whoſe fall, it is ſuppoſed by many good interpreters, that they will dwell long and happily in their own land of Judea, and being now become the people of Jeſus, ſhall glory in his name as much as they have before blaſphemed it.

CHAP. XI.

Though many of the Jewiſh nation received the Lord's Chriſt, far the moſt rejected him, for which their doom is here denounced. We have, 1. A prediction of the deſtruction itſelf that ſhould come upon the Jewiſh nation, ver. 1—3. 2. The putting of it into the hands of the Meſſiah. (1.) He is charged with the cuſtody of that flock, ver. 4—6. (2.) He undertakes it, and bears rule in it, ver. 7, 8. (3.) Finding it perverſe, he gives it up, ver. 9. Breaks his ſhepherd's ſtaff, ver. 10, 11. Reſents the indignities done him, and the contempt put upon him, ver. 12, 13. And then breaks his other ſtaff, ver. 14. (4.) He turns them over into the hands of fooliſh ſhepherds, who, inſtead of preventing, ſhall complete their ruin, and both the blind leaders and the blind followers ſhall fall together into the ditch, ver. 15—17.

1. OPEN thy doors, O Lebanon, [a] that the fire may

v. 1—3. The deſtruction of the Jewiſh temple and nation is here foretold.

1. They are devoted to ruin. Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars, which may be underſtood of the temple; in building which, much cedar of Lebanon was employed; or of the gates of Jeruſalem, both of them being forced open, and burnt by the Roman ſoldiers. The fir-tree and the cedar, the mighty men of war, the princes and rulers, are doomed to fall, and given up to the ſpoil; and this being ſure in the divine decree, is ſpoken of as already done. The oaks of Baſhan, the mightieſt, are now hewn down, and the foreſt of the vineyard, or the fortified foreſt, Jeruſalem, ſtrong and filled with inhabitants, is deſtroyed; their glory is ſpoiled, their treaſures plundered; the pride of Jordan is ſpoiled, the whole land of Judea waſted; at which the lions, who infeſted the banks of this river, roar, the emblems of the princes and judges who oppreſſed and harraſſed the poor people.

2. This will make an howling among the ſhepherds, the great men of the nation, who will with bittereſt grief behold theſe deſolations, and be themſelves terribly involved in them. They who roared over their prey, and were the terrors of others, have now in juſt judgment theſe terrors turned upon them. Note, In a day of recompence, wicked and careleſs ſhepherds in church and ſtate, will meet the heavieſt doom.

4. Thus ſaith the LORD my God, [c] Feed the flock lo, I will deliver the men, every one to his neighbour's hand, and into the hand of [i] his king, and they ſhall ſmite the land, and out of their hand I will not deliver them. 7. And I will feed the flock of ſlaughter, even [k]

v. 4—14. The people of the Jews are called the flock of the ſlaughter, as being ſo ſeverely treated by their ſhepherds, or as devoted to the ſword. The prophet, as the type of Chriſt, is commanded to feed them, miniſtring his goſpel among them, that the remnant of the poor among them might be fed with the word of God, whilſt others ripened for deſtruction. We have,

1. An account of their miſerable plight. Their poſſeſſors, who, as good ſhepherds in church or ſtate, ſhould have taken all care of them, ſlay them; their prieſts, ſcribes, and phariſees, by falſe doctrines deſtroyed their ſouls; and hold themſelves not guilty, blinded by pride in their errors; and they who ſell them ſay, Bleſſed be the Lord, for I am rich, making long prayers, though laden with the ſpoils of widows houſes, and valuing themſelves on their external piety and goodneſs, when their burnt-offerings were robbery, and their hearts abominable; ſhewing no pity towards the ſouls of the people. And ſad is that church's caſe, where ſuch careleſs, ſelfiſh, covetous paſtors rule.

2. For this God gives them up to deſtruction. I will no more ſpare the inhabitants of the land, who were involved in the general guilt, and doomed to ſink in one promiſcuous ruin: their own inteſtine diviſions will pave the way, and the Roman emperor, the king they choſe, John xix. 15. ſhall complete their deſolations.

3. Before their judgment comes, Chriſt undertakes to feed the flock of ſlaughter, the poor of the flock, the choſen remnant among them, chiefly poor people, who were made partakers of the Saviour's grace, and all the bleſſings of his goſpel, whilſt the rulers and great men in general rejected the counſel of the Lord againſt their own ſouls, and hereby filled up the meaſure of their iniquities. To execute his paſtoral office the great Shepherd takes two ſtaves, the one he calls Beauty, the other Bands; concerning the meaning of which there is great diverſity of opinions: the moſt probable ſeem to be, either that theſe ſignify the goſpel, and the ordinances thereof, whereby the members of the church are united together; or they refer to the different perſons of the flock, ſome of whom would walk before the Lord in the beauty of holineſs, whilſt others continued under the power of ſin, and were doomed to the bands of captivity; or theſe may denote the beauty of the ſervice of the ſanctuary, and the bands of civil government among them: and he fed the flock, as he had undertaken to do. Three ſhepherds alſo he cut off in one month; which may refer to the puniſhment of the wicked ſhepherds in general; or to the princes, prieſts, and prophets; or the three ſects of Phariſees, Sadducees, and Herodians; or perhaps it may relate to ſome ſingular judgment on three notorious offenders, of whom we have no record remaining.

4. For their obſtinacy and impenitence the Jews in general are rejected. My ſoul lothed them, and their ſoul alſo abhorred me; they could not bear his high pretenſions as the Meſſiah, nor endure his ſharp rebukes: and whilſt the ſinner perſiſts in his enmity againſt God, he muſt be an abomination in his ſight. Then ſaid I, I will not feed you; will take no more care of them, nor continue his goſpel any longer among them: that that dieth, let it die; and that that is cut off, let it be cut off: he devotes them to the ruin they have provoked, and conſigns them over to the peſtilence and the ſword: and let the reſt eat every one the fleſh of another, through the ſeverity of famine, or the rancour of their mutual animoſities. And, in token of this utter rejection of them, I took my ſtaff, even Beauty, and cut it aſunder, to ſignify the ceaſing of his paſtoral office, and his abandoning them to deſtruction, the covenant of peculiarity being henceforth broken and aboliſhed; and it was broken in that day, when Chriſt rejected them, ſee Matth. xxi. 43. or when he died; and this was evident when ſhortly after Jeruſalem and the temple were deſtroyed: and the poor of the flock that waited on me, the diſciples of Chriſt who attended his miniſtry, and were generally of the poorer ſort, the kingdom of God being chiefly compoſed of ſuch, knew that it was the word of the Lord, it being mixed with faith in their hearts, and they fully ſatisfied that every tittle would come to paſs as Jeſus had ſpoken.

5. We have a particular inſtance of their contempt of Chriſt. I ſaid unto them, Give me my price; and if not, forbear; diſcharge me, if you like not my ſervice; or, if you think me worth nothing, pay me nothing. So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of ſilver, the price of a ſervant, Exod. xxi. 32. a goodly price, ſaith he ironically, that I was valued at of them: with diſdain therefore he caſts it to the potter, in the houſe of the Lord. To what this refers we cannot be at a loſs, ſee Matth. xxvii. 9, 10. this being the price for which Judas ſold his maſter; and with this ſum, which in remorſe the traitor had caſt down in the temple, the chief prieſts bought the potter's field, a waſte ground where clay had been dug, to bury ſtrangers in.

6. Their whole civil ſtate and polity is hereupon diſſolved. Then I cut aſunder my other ſtaff, even Bands, that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Iſrael, a ſpirit of diſſenſion being ſowed among them, which haſtened their deſtruction, and, when deſtroyed by the Romans, they were ſeparated and diſperſed as captives into all lands. Thus, when ungodlineſs abounds, the bonds of civil ſociety are looſed, and ſuch a wicked people haſten their own diſſolution.

v. 15—17. Having rejected the good Shepherd Chriſt Jeſus, the Jewiſh people are given up to wicked and fooliſh ſhepherds, whom the prophet is here commanded to perſonate, ſuch as were the ſcribes and phariſees, who deceived and deluded the people with falſe expoſitions and vain hopes, preying upon them inſtead of feeding them, and, far from ſeeking to ſave that which was loſt, or healing the wounded, they neglected their charge, or made their proſelytes ſevenfold more the children of hell than they were before; for which, heavy curſes are denounced upon them: and the character and woes belong to others beſides them, who in the Chriſtian church pretending to feed the flock of the Lord, in reality betray and deſtroy them. We may read here,

1. The character of every fooliſh idol-ſhepherd. (1.) He leaveth the flock; he neglects the duty of his miniſtry, reſides not among the people committed to his care, and for ſome poor pittance gets a hireling to ſupply his place. (2.) He doth not viſit thoſe that be cut off, takes no pains to recover loſt ſouls, nor ever goes round his pariſh or diſtrict to admoniſh and exhort the people. (3.) He doth not ſeek the young ones, by catechiſing and early inſtruction deſiring to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. (4.) He doth not heal that which is broken, but, if a poor ſinner applies to him under conviction of ſin, with a bleeding heart, he is a phyſician of no value, he knows not what advice to give, and wickedly and ignorantly heals the hurt ſlightly, crying peace, peace, when there is no peace; thus making the evil worſe. (5.) He doth not feed that which ſtandeth ſtill, and through weakneſs and hunger is ready to faint, the famiſhed flock look up and are not fed; the huſks of dry morality, or the hemlock of falſe doctrines, ſuch as man's dignity and freewill, juſtification by works, and ſelf-ſufficient endeavours, are laid before them to their ruin. (6.) He eats the fleſh of the fat, and tears their claws in pieces: though he hates the work of the miniſtry, yet he is rapacious in exacting the wages of it, and in luxury and eaſe devours the fleſh as well as the fleece of the poor flock.

2. The curſe is ſure and heavy upon him. His arm ſhall be dried up, and his right eye darkned; judicial blindneſs ſhall ſeal him up under wrath, his power to oppreſs the flock ſhall be deſtroyed, and the ſword of wrath overtake him. Wo therefore to the idol ſhepherd.

CHAP. XII.

In this chapter God promiſes, 1. That the attempts of the church's enemies againſt her ſhall be to their own ruin, ver. 2, 3, 4, 6. 2. That the endeavours of the church's friends for her good ſhall be ſucceſsful, ver. 5. 3. That God will protect and ſtrengthen the meaneſt and weakeſt that belong to his church, and work ſalvation for them, ver. 7, 8. 4. That as a preparative for all this mercy and a pledge of it, he will pour upon them a ſpirit of prayer and repentance, the products of which ſhall be univerſal and very particular, ver. 9—14.

v. 1—8. The promiſes contained in this chapter refer either to the church of God in general, or the Jewiſh people in particular, when in the laſt days God ſhall bring them into his fold. The prophecy is called a burden, becauſe it is filled with terror to Iſrael's enemies; and it is prefaced with an awful deſcription of him who undertakes to accompliſh his own word, He ſtretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth; the Creator, Governor, and Upholder of all things, who formeth the ſpirit of man within him; the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, who hath the ſovereign dominion over them, and influences them according to his own will, encouraging the hearts of his people, and injecting terrors into his enemies. God promiſes,

1. To make the efforts of all the enemies of his church iſſue in their confuſion. They who perſecute God's people, and lay ſiege againſt them, ſhall have a cup of trembling put into their hands, v. 2. Be their foes never ſo many, never ſo mighty, ſpiritual or temporal, inſtead of prevailing againſt the redeemed, they ſhall pull down ruin upon their own heads, as a burdenſome ſtone, which cruſhes the man who attempts to lift it up, v. 3. God's eyes of love and favour are upon them, therefore their foes ſhall be ſmitten with blindneſs, aſtoniſhment, and madneſs, and baffled in all their enterpriſes, v. 4. whilſt the governors of the church, the miniſters of Chriſt, by the goſpel-word they preach, like a devouring fire and a torch in a ſheaf, ſhall bear down all before them, and none ſhall be able to reſiſt the wiſdom and ſpirit by which they ſpeak, v. 6.

They who apply this to the Jewiſh people, refer the prophecy either to the times of the Maccabees, or rather ſuppoſe it hath reſpect to their future greatneſs, and that when they are returned to ſettle in their own land, the Mahometan powers will go up to beſiege them, whoſe armies chiefly conſiſt of cavalry, and ſhall fall on the mountains of Iſrael, defeated and deſtroyed by the Jewiſh forces.

2. God will eſtabliſh his church, and build it up great and glorious, v. 6. defending every member thereof with his everlaſting arms of love and power, v. 8. On him the governors of Judah ſhall place their confidence, he being the ſtrength of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the bulwark of the country, and not any human ſupports, with which, as fortifications, they may be ſurrounded, v. 5. The meaneſt, who dwell in tents, he will ſave; and none of the more diſtinguiſhed and honourable members muſt arrogate to themſelves any part in the ſalvation, and magnify themſelves over their brethren, as if they owed to them their protection and ſupport, when the whole is from God, and all alike debtors to ſovereign grace, v. 7, by which the weakeſt believer ſhall be as David, able to cope with their mightieſt foes; and the houſe of David, the ſpiritual deſcendants of Jeſus, David's ſon, a royal generation, they ſhall be as God, ſtrong as the arm of omnipotence; as the angel of the Lord before them, all Chriſt's power being engaged for them, and they intereſted in it; he is their ſtrength and their Redeemer.

Some underſtand this as literally to have its accompliſhment, when Jeruſalem ſhall be built on the very ſpot where it ſtood of old, and be again inhabited; even in Jeruſalem: on which occaſion the eaſtern antichriſtian powers ſhall aſſemble againſt it, and God will ſave them, both in the country and city, in ſome moſt diſtinguiſhed manner; ſo that his arm ſhall be viſible, and the glory aſcribed to him alone. The former ſenſe I ſhould prefer.

9. ¶ And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, that [m] I will ſeek to deſtroy all the nations that come againſt Jeruſalem. 10. And [n] I will pour upon the houſe of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the ſpirit of grace and of ſupplications, and they ſhall [o] look upon me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn for him [p] as one mourneth for his only ſon, and ſhall be in bitterneſs for him, as one that is in bitterneſs for his firſt-born. 11. In that day ſhall there be a great [q] mourning in Jeruſalem, as the mourning of [r] Hadadrimmon in [s] the valley of Megiddon. 12. And [t] the land ſhall mourn, † every family apart, the family of the houſe of David apart, and their wives [u] apart: the family of the houſe of [x] Nathan apart, and their wives apart: 13. The family of the houſe of Levi apart, and their wives apart: the family ‡ of [y] Shimei apart, and their wives apart: 14. All the families that remain, every family apart, and their wives apart.

v. 9—14. To apply theſe great things to the days of the Maccabees ſeems to enervate the prophecy; a greater than they is ſurely here intended.

1. All enemies of Chriſt's church and people ſhall be deſtroyed, as before was promiſed.

2. A ſpirit of grace, and ſupplications, and mourning ſhall be poured forth upon all the people of God.

[1.] A ſpirit of grace; the Spirit of God ſhall be given to them, as a quickening, illuminating, converting, ſanctifying, comforting Spirit, the author of every divine and gracious temper in them, and witneſſing to his own bleſſed work in the hearts of the redeemed.

[2.] A ſpirit of ſupplications; for every gracious ſoul immediately is brought to his knees, and lives in an habitual courſe of waiting upon God; his ſoul can no more live without prayer than his body without breath: he is ſtirred up to the exerciſe of prayer, and aſſiſted in the act by that Spirit of adoption which enables him to cry Abba, father, and helps his infirmities; and, in anſwer to his ſupplication, grace upon grace is beſtowed, by which means he increaſeth with the increaſe of God.

[3.] A ſpirit of mourning: They ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced, and mourn, ſee John xix. 37. Their eye ſhall be directed in prayer to Chriſt, through whom alone the ſinner hath acceſs to God; and the view of a crucified Jeſus will melt their heart and make their eyes overflow. When we conſider that he was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, that our ſins were the nails, the ſpear that pierced the body of the Saviour, this will produce that godly ſorrow which worketh repentance unto ſalvation never to be repented of, which nothing but faith, beholding the evil of ſin as placed before the croſs, can ever beget in us: and this mourning will be heart-felt and bitter, like that of a parent for his firſt-born ſon, or like the ſeveral mournings of Iſrael for Benjamin at the rock Rimmon, Judg. xx. 47. and for Joſiah in the valley of Megiddon, where that pious king was ſlain, 2 Kings xxiii. 29. And this will be the caſe with every individual believer, with every family, with every ſociety of real Chriſtians; the higheſt in rank, and the holieſt by office, v. 12, 13. ſhall herein ſet the example, and all ſhall concur in lamenting their ſin and wickedneſs, and looking to Jeſus for pardon and peace.

They who refer this to the people of the Jews particularly, ſuppoſe that at their converſion, which will be general and ſudden, this ſhall be fulfilled, when, the vail being taken from their hearts, they ſhall behold that Meſſiah whom they crucified, and, returning to him with weeping and ſupplication, ſhall teſtify their unfeigned remorſe and ſorrow for that black deed. Perhaps alſo their loſt genealogies may be then reſtored, and, literally taken, the ſeveral families apart ſhall each lament over their crucified Lord.

any ſhall yet propheſy, then [f] his father and his mother, that begat him, ſhall ſay unto him, Thou ſhalt not live; for thou ſpeakeſt [g] lies in the name of the LORD: and his father and his mother, that begat him, ſhall thruſt him through when he propheſieth. 4. v. 1—6. The ſubject of the former chapter is here continued, and the great bleſſings ariſing from the goſpel of Jeſus are ſet forth.

1. The guilt of ſin ſhall be done away through his atoning blood. In that day of the crucifixion of Jeſus, there ſhall be a fountain opened to the houſe of David and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, to all ſinners of every rank and degree, for ſin and for uncleanneſs; for all need this cleanſing, being defiled with guilt, and altogether as an unclean thing before the God of purity; nor can any thing waſh out the ſtains but this fountain opened, where there is all fulneſs of merit, and to which all are freely invited, that they may waſh and be clean. They who neglect ſo great a ſalvation, ignorant of their pollution; or too proud, like Naaman, to ſtoop to this humbling method of ſalvation; muſt periſh in their ſins.

2. Idolatry ſhall be rooted out, and the names of their idols be never again mentioned as objects of worſhip: which was the caſe with the Jews after their return from captivity. But the promiſe ſeems here to look farther: either to the deſtruction of the idols of paganiſm, which fell before the goſpel; or to the rooting out the image-worſhip that remains in the antichriſtian church.

3. The falſe prophets ſhall deceive no more. I will cauſe the prophets, and the unclean ſpirit, by which they were actuated, to paſs out of the land; ſo that when any pretender to prophecy ſhall ariſe, his neareſt relatives, Deut. xiii. 6, 11. ſhall ſeize, accuſe, and execute judgment upon him, v. 3. yea, ſo aſhamed ſhall they themſelves be of their former pretenſions, that they ſhall ſtrip off the rough garments which they had worn out of ſeeming ſanctity and auſterity, and ſay, I am no prophet, I am an huſbandman, and from my youth was bred to this occupation, unwilling to own he was ever engaged in any other, v. 5. and when queſtioned concerning the wounds in his hands, he will reply, to evade the truth, that they were wounds received in the houſe of his friends, not as the rebuke for aſſuming the prophetical character, as they really were, but correction he received for ſome neglect in his ſecular buſineſs, v. 6. Note, (1.) Our deareſt relations, who would turn us away from God, muſt be rejected with abhorrence. (2.) Pretenders to godlineſs will ſooner or later be detected; the demure look and rough garment of the hypocrite will not always deceive. (3.) Parents muſt uſe the rod of correction; theſe wounds ſhew the trueſt affection to their children.

Some ſuppoſe the laſt verſe refers to Chriſt, upbraided by the Jews as a falſe prophet; and from the wounds in his hand they ſuggeſt he ſuffered juſtly as a deceiver. To which he replies, that he was ſo treated indeed among thoſe who ſhould have been his friends; but that the wounds were not for any crime he had done, but in conſequence of the ſatisfaction he had undertaken to make to divine juſtice as the ſurety of his people; as is implied in the following verſe.

7. ¶ Awake, O ſword, againſt my [m] ſhepherd, and againſt the man [n] that is my fellow, ſaith the LORD of hoſts: [o] ſmite the ſhepherd, and the ſheep ſhall be ſcattered: and I will turn mine hand upon [p] the little ones. 8. And it ſhall come to paſs, that in all the land, ſaith the LORD, [q] two parts therein ſhall be cut off, and die, but [r] the third ſhall be left therein. 9. And I will bring the third part through the [s] fire, and will [s] refine them as ſilver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: [t] they ſhall call on my name, and I will hear them: [u] I will ſay, It is my people; and they ſhall ſay, The LORD is [x] my God.

v. 7—9. That the Meſſiah ſhould be cut off was before propheſied: we have here the execution of that decree.

1. God the Father commiſſions the ſword of juſtice to pierce the Redeemer: Awake my ſword againſt my ſhepherd, even againſt the man that is my fellow, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. In eſſential dignity he was God's fellow, and counted it no robbery to be equal with God; in office he was God's ſhepherd, appointed to be the great covenant-head of his redeemed flock, who ſhould lay down his life for his ſheep. This ſword our ſins had provoked; it had long ſlumbered; but now awakes, according to the eternal purpoſe, againſt the Son of God, ſince upon him are laid the iniquities of us all: he who bears our ſins muſt carry our ſorrows.

Before Chriſt 587.

2. The ſheep hereupon are ſcattered. Which the great ſhepherd himſelf quotes, Matth. xxvi. 31. as fulfilled on that diſmal night when he was apprehended, and all his diſciples forſook him and fled. But he promiſes ſoon to recover them: I will turn mine hand upon the little ones. They were now like children, timorous, affrighted, and weak; but ſoon were brought back, and endued with power from on high; ſo that they went forth bold champions in his cauſe, and God mightily ſupported them, and gave them wonderful ſucceſs in their labours.

3. The impenitent Jews ſhall periſh, but a remnant ſhall be ſaved, two parts being cut off during their war with the Romans. A third, the remnant according to the election of grace, ſhall eſcape, as through the fire, getting out of Jeruſalem to Pella before the Romans formed the ſiege: and theſe, refined in the furnace of affliction, and proved faithful, ſhall be a people for God, calling upon his name, and anſwered in all their requeſts; he will own the relation they claim to him as their God, and give them every bleſſing they can aſk or need. Some refer this to the world and church in general, one third of which will ſcarcely be found faithful amidſt the far more numerous herd of profeſſors, the hypocrites, formaliſts, and ſelf-righteous. Note, (1.) Thoſe whom God ſaves he firſt refines in the furnace of affliction. They who were never thus exerciſed have reaſon to fear they are baſtards, and not ſons. (2.) They are gracious troubles which ſerve to purge us from the remaining droſs of corruption. (3.) God's people are all ceaſeleſs in prayer; and they find the bleſſedneſs of being ſo employed, in the anſwers of grace and peace he beſtows. (4.) They who have taken the Lord for their God, will never have cauſe to repent their choice.

CHAP. XIV.

To what time the day *here ſpoken of belongs is dubious, whether to the times of the goſpel diſpenſation or the great day of the Lord. 1. BEhold, [a] the day of the LORD cometh, and thy ſpoil ſhall be divided in the midſt of thee. 2. For [b] I will gather all nations againſt Jeruſalem to battle, and the city ſhall be taken, and [c] the houſes rifled, and the women raviſhed, and [d] half of the city ſhall go forth into captivity, and [e] the reſidue of the people ſhall not be cut off from the city. 3. Then ſhall the LORD [f] go forth, and fight againſt thoſe nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. 4. ¶ And his feet ſhall ſtand in that day upon [g] the mount of Olives, which is before Jeruſalem on the eaſt, and the mount of Olives ſhall cleave in the midſt thereof toward the eaſt, and toward the weſt, and [h] there ſhall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain ſhall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the ſouth. 5. And ye ſhall flee to the valley of the mountains: for the valley of the mountains ſhall reach unto Azal: yea, ye ſhall flee like as ye fled from before [i] the earthquake in the days of Uzziah king of Judah: and [k] the LORD my God ſhall come, and all the ſaints with thee. 6. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, that the light ſhall not be clear, nor dark. 7. † But it ſhall be [l] one day [m] which ſhall be known to the LORD, not day, nor night: but it ſhall come to paſs, that at [n] evening-time it ſhall be light.

v. 1—7. We have here,

1. A day of judgment, v. 1, 2. which may refer to the taking Jeruſalem by the Romans, when all the brutal rage of war was let looſe, and half the people carried into captivity, a remnant being left, even thoſe who, according to the divine warnings, had before ſaved themſelves by flight. Or this may better ſignify the prevalence of the powers of antichriſt over the church for a while, ſo that few faithful ſhall be left.

2. A day of mercy, when Chriſt ſhall go forth to fight his people's battles, to deſtroy their deſtroyers, v. 3. And his feet ſhall ſtand in that day upon the mount of olives, as when he aſcended up from thence, and quickly after made a way for the Gentile world to draw near unto God, ſignified by the dividing aſunder the mountain, and opening a great valley between, in which Jews and Gentiles ſhould aſſemble together and incorporate, eager to be admitted into the church, which ſhall now be exceedingly enlarged, v. 5. flying thither with as much ſpeed as thoſe in the days of Joſiah fled from the earthquake; and there God's preſence in the midſt of his ſaints ſhall eminently appear.

Some refer this to the ſecond coming of Chriſt, when they ſuppoſe he ſhall deſcend on that very ſpot from which he aſcended; that the valley ſhall be the place where the dead ſhall be raiſed and aſſembled, many of whom will then be fleeing to the mountains to cover them from the preſence of the Judge, now appearing with ten thouſands of his ſaints, and be more terrified at his coming than thoſe were who fled from the earthquake in Uzziah's days, which threatned to ſwallow them up. It muſt be confeſſed this prophecy is of very difficult interpretation. However we may learn, (1.) That the Lord Jeſus will come to judge the world, and that it highly imports us to be ready to meet him. (2.) That it will be too late then to flee from his wrath, if we have not before betaken ourſelves to the refuge of his mercy. (3.) That they will then be truly happy who can ſay, My God ſhall come; for he will be moſt welcome to all who have an intereſt in his love and favour.

3. It ſhall come to paſs in that day, that the light ſhall not be clear, nor dark. Which may refer either to the imperfect attainments of Chriſt's ſaints upon earth, compared with what they expect hereafter; or to the diſpenſations of God's providence towards his church, over which there ſtill hang clouds of trouble whilſt in this militant ſtate below. But it ſhall be one day, a ſhort time that this will be the caſe, which will be known unto the Lord, who takes notice of his people under all their remaining infirmities and troubles, and hath appointed their end. At evening-time it ſhall be light: when the day of time ſhall come to its period, and eternity open to view, then all ſhall be light to God's people for ever; when their faith and patience ſhall be crowned with glory, their ſun ſhall no more go down, nor their moon withdraw itſelf: and therefore in our preſent darkneſs and troubles we ſhould wait ſtill upon God, and hope for a happy iſſue at laſt out of all.

Some refer this to the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, when his goſpel ſhall be ſpread abroad in the latter day, and the darkneſs of Mahomediſm, paganiſm, and popery, be utterly diſpelled.

8. And it ſhall be in that day, that [o] living waters ſhall go out from Jeruſalem: half of them toward the † former ſea, and half of them toward the hinder ſea:
in ſummer and in winter ſhall it be. 9. And the LORD ſhall be [p] king over all the earth: in that day ſhall there be one LORD, and his name one. 10. All the land ſhall be turned [q] as a plain from Geba to Rimmon, ſouth of Jeruſalem: and it ſhall be lifted up, and [r] inhabited in her place: from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the firſt gate, unto the corner-gate, and [s] from the tower of Hananeel unto the king's wine-preſſes.
11. And men ſhall dwell in it, and [t] there ſhall be no more utter deſtruction, [u] but Jeruſalem ‡ ſhall be ſafely inhabited. 12. ¶ And this ſhall be the plague wherewith the LORD will ſmite all the people that have fought againſt Jeruſalem: [x] Their fleſh ſhall conſume away while they ſtand upon their feet, and [y] their eyes ſhall conſume away in their holes, and [z] their tongue ſhall conſume away in their mouth. 13. (And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, that [a] a great tumult from the LORD ſhall be among them, and they ſhall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbour, and [b] his hand ſhall riſe up againſt the hand of his neighbour. 14. And Judah alſo ſhall fight § at Jeruſalem; [c] and the wealth of all the heathen round about ſhall be gathered together, gold, and ſilver, and apparel in great abundance.) 15. And [d] ſo ſhall be the plague of the horſe, of the mule, of the camel, and of the aſs, and of all the beaſts that ſhall be in theſe tents, as this plague.

v. 8—15. Farther bleſſings are here promiſed to God's Iſrael.

1. Living waters ſhall go out from Jeruſalem, even the goſpel, which began to be preached at Jeruſalem, and went forth, from eaſt to weſt, into all parts of the world, and will continue to the end of time to flow, till the earth ſhall be covered with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the ſea.

2. Chriſt will erect an univerſal kingdom in the earth. All competitors will at laſt be deſtroyed: there ſhall be one Lord owned and acknowledged through the whole world; and his name one, every diſtinction of party, and difference of opinion and worſhip, will be laid aſide, and all with one heart and one mouth ſhall unite in prayer and praiſe before him.

3. The church ſhall be glorious, abundantly repleniſhed, and the abode of peace for ever. All the land ſhall be turned as a plain, every mountain and hill laid low, from Geba to Rimmon, all oppoſition deſtroyed, and Jeruſalem, the goſpel-church, lifted up as a beacon on an hill, whither all the converts ſhall flock together, ſo that it ſhall be filled with inhabitants from one end to the other, v. 11. Wars ſhall then ceaſe, no civil diſcords nor eccleſiaſtical anathemas ſhall diſturb the peace of God's people; they ſhall dwell in ſafety, and none evermore make them afraid.

4. The enemies of the church ſhall be utterly cut off. Their once-pampered fleſh ſhall be emaciated, and conſume away; their eyes, full of covetouſneſs, envy, laſciviouſneſs, ſhall rot in their ſockets; and their tongues, defiled with blaſphemy, reproach, and falſehood, ſhall periſh. God will put his terrors in the midſt of them, and in their confuſion every man's ſword ſhall be againſt his fellow, ſo that they ſhall be their own executioners, ſee Rev. xvii. 16. the ſaints of God, who go forth to fight, will have nothing to do but to gather the immenſity of rich ſpoils, v. 14. and the very beaſts of theſe ſinners ſhall ſhare their plagues, and be deſtroyed with them, v. 15. All which ſeems much more applicable to the deſtruction of the antichriſtian powers than to the diſſenſions and deſtruction of Jeruſalem, to which it is by ſome referred.

16. ¶ And it ſhall come to paſs, that every one that is left of all the nations which came againſt Jeruſalem, ſhall even [e] go up from year to year to worſhip the King the LORD of hoſts, and to keep [f] the feaſt of tabernacles.
17. And it ſhall be, that [g] whoſo will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jeruſalem, to worſhip the King the LORD of hoſts, even upon them [h] ſhall be no rain. 18. And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, [i] that have no rain: there ſhall be the plague wherewith the LORD will ſmite the heathen that come not up to keep the feaſt of tabernacles.
19. This ſhall be the † puniſhment of Egypt, and the puniſhment of all nations that come not up to keep the feaſt of tabernacles. 20. ¶ In that day ſhall [k] there be upon the ‡ bells of the horſes, [l] HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD; and the pots in the LORD's houſe ſhall be like the bowls before the altar. 21. Yea, every pot in Jeruſalem and in Judah ſhall be Holineſs unto day [m] there ſhall be no more the § Canaanite in the houſe

v. 16—21. The deſtruction of the wicked ſhall bring a great acceſſion of converts to the church.

1. A remnant, according to the election of grace, who have dwelt among the enemies of Chriſt, ſhall now be brought home to him, and with his people go up from year to year to worſhip the King the Lord of hoſts, and to keep the feaſt of tabernacles: not that theſe Jewiſh feſtivals will be then obſerved; but Chriſt's redeemed will, with ſuch joy as they teſtified on this occaſion, commemorate his wonderful deliverance of them from the bondage of ſin and Satan, and be ceaſeleſs in their ſupplications to him that he would perfect their redemption, and bring them into the heavenly Canaan, the final and eternal reſt which remaineth for the people of God.

2. They who refuſe or neglect this holy worſhip ſhall be puniſhed with famine; either, literally, for want of rain the earth ſhall give them no food; or, ſpiritually, they ſhall be deſtitute of the heavenly influences of grace, and deprived of the goſpel; given up to the curſe of barrenneſs, and periſhing in their iniquities. And if Egypt, which owes its fertility to the overflowing of the Nile more than to the clouds, be found among thoſe who are culpable, her puniſhment ſhall be the ſame: He, who prevents the rain from falling on others, will prevent the Nile from overflowing them, and give them the ſame curſe of barrenneſs and famine. Note, (1.) Though ſome ſinners may think their ſituation will be a protection to them from the threatned evils, they will find God's arm can as eaſily reach them as others. (2.) They who live in neglect of God's worſhip will ſurely die under his curſe.

3. When the wicked are conſumed, the church ſhall appear glorious in the beauty of holineſs. Upon the very bells of their horſes ſhall be engraven, as on the high-prieſt's mitre, Holineſs to the Lord, the people of Jeſus being an holy prieſthood; their profeſſion being public, their converſation exemplary, and in all their actions, civil as well as religious, one uniform tenor of holineſs will appear. And the pots in the Lord's houſe, which the prieſts uſed in their apartments, ſhall be as the bowls before the altar, conſecrated to God, and employed in a holy manner; God's ſpiritual prieſts making even their common meals a ſacrifice, by their prayers, thankſgiving, and gracious uſe of God's creatures, whether they eat or drink doing all to the glory of God. And every pot in Jeruſalem and in Judah ſhall be holineſs unto the Lord of hoſts, conſecrated to his glory, as the veſſels of the ſanctuary. And all they that ſacrifice ſhall come and take of them and ſeethe therein, the ceremonial diſtinction between one veſſel and another no longer ſubſiſting, and the real holineſs of heart and life in every member of the church rendering their offerings acceptable, through Jeſus Chriſt, in every place. And in that day there ſhall be no more the Canaanite in the houſe of the Lord of hoſts, the church being thoroughly purged of all the ungodly and profane. Whether this ſtate of perfection and purity ſhall ever be ſeen in the church of Chriſt under the ſun, many doubt; yet certain at leaſt it is, ſuch will be the caſe in that eternal world to which we are going; for there nothing ſhall ever enter that defileth, or maketh unclean.

OR, A
PRACTICAL COMMENT
Upon the PROPHECY of
MALACHI.

MALACHI was probably the laſt of the prophets, though he gives us no date of his Prophecy, as moſt of the others had done. In him prophecy ceaſed for the ſpace of about four hundred Years, till the appearing of the Great Prophet, who ſhould come into the world. We have, 1. His name, Malachi, but no account of his country or parentage. Malachi ſignifies my angel; which has given occaſion for a conjecture, that this prophet was indeed an angel from heaven, and not a man; as that, Judges ii. 1. But there is no juſt ground for the conjecture: prophets were meſſengers, God's meſſengers; this prophet was ſo; his name is the very ſame with that which we find in the original, chap. iii. 1. for my meſſenger; and perhaps from that word he might (though probably he had another name) be called Malachi. 2. The ſcope of the prophecy. Haggai and Zechariah were ſent to reprove the people for delaying to build the temple; Malachi was ſent to reprove them for the neglect of it when it was built, and for their profanation of the temple-ſervice; for from idolatry and ſuperſtition they run into the other extreme of impiety and irreligion; and the ſins he witneſſeth againſt are the ſame that we find complained of in Nehemiah's time, with whom, it is probable, he was cotemporary. And now prophecy was to ceaſe, he ſpeaks more clearly of the Meſſiah as nigh at hand, than any other of the prophets had done; and concludes with a direction to the people of God, to keep in remembrance the law of Moſes, while they were in expectation of the goſpel of Chriſt.

CHAP. I.

This prophet is ſent, firſt to convince, and then to comfort. He opens the wound, and then applies the healing balm. He reproves the Jews, 1. For their ingratitude to God, in return for the favours he had ſhewn them, ver. 1—5. 2. For their negligence and remiſſneſs in obſerving his inſtitutions, of which the prieſts were particularly culpable, ver. 6—14.

1. THE burden of the word of the LORD to Iſrael by † Malachi. 2. [a] I have loved you, ſaith the LORD: yet ye ſay, Wherein haſt thou loved us? was not Eſau Jacob's brother? ſaith the LORD: yet [b] I loved Jacob, 3. And [c] I hated Eſau, and laid his mountains, and his heritage waſte, for the dragons of the wilderneſs. 4. Whereas Edom ſaith, We are impoveriſhed, [d] but we will return and build the deſolate places: thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, They ſhall build, but I will throw down; and they ſhall call them, The border of wickedneſs, and the people againſt whom the LORD hath indignation for ever. 5. And your eyes ſhall ſee, and ye ſhall ſay, [e] The LORD will be magnified ‡ from the border of Iſrael.

‡ Heb. From upon.

v. 1—5. This word of the Lord to Iſrael is called a burden: it contains ſharp rebukes, and bound upon the impenitent a load of wrath, which would ſink them into the belly of hell. The charge againſt Iſrael here advanced is their ingratitude. God aſſerts his love to them from the days of old. I have loved you, ſaith the Lord; but they ſeemed inſenſible of the mercy, and unaffected with it: Yet ye ſay, Wherein haſt thou loved us? as if the inſtances of his regard were ſo ſlight and ſo few, that they had little or no obligations to him: to convince them of their baſeneſs, he proves, by the diſtinguiſhing favours ſhewn them, the love he had towards them.

Before Chriſt 400.

1. He had preferred Jacob, though the younger brother, to Eſau, and entailed upon him the covenant of promiſe. Was not Eſau Jacob's brother? and, as his elder, ſhould have ſucceeded to the birthright; but God, who acts according to the counſel of his own will, had been pleaſed, to ſhew his ſovereignty, to chuſe the younger, and reject the firſt-born. Yet I loved Jacob; choſe him when yet unborn, not only to be the father of God's peculiar people, but perſonally, as an elect veſſel: and I hated Eſau; ſo far at leaſt as to deprive him of the birthright and bleſſing; and, left deſtitute of divine grace, his profaneneſs fitted him as a veſſel of wrath for deſtruction.

2. Their poſterity were deeply affected by this original difference God had made between their great progenitors. I laid his mountains and his heritage waſte for the dragons of the wilderneſs; as was done by the Chaldeans: and though Judea was alſo deſolated by them, yet there was a diſtinguiſhing difference, the ruins of the one were for a while only; of the other, perpetual. For though the Edomites attempt to repair their breaches, God will diſappoint their endeavours: They ſhall build, but I will throw down: God was againſt them, and who ever hardened their hearts againſt him, and proſpered? and they ſhall call them the border of wickedneſs; their ſins ſhall be notorious, and read in their ſufferings: the people againſt whom the Lord hath indignation for ever. God's people provoke him, and he viſits their iniquities with a rod; but his enemies provoke him, and their ſcourge is a ſcorpion, and his wrath againſt them is for ever wrath to come. And your eyes ſhall ſee the deſolations of Edom, and the diſtinction made between them and Iſrael; and ye ſhall ſay, The Lord will be magnified from the border of Iſrael; he intends his own glory in theſe diſtinguiſhing mercies ſhewn them, and juſtly deſerves and demands their praiſes: not to have offered them muſt prove their baſe ingratitude.

6. ¶ [f] A ſon honoureth his father, and a ſervant his maſter: [g] if then I be a father, where is mine honour? and if I be a maſter, where is my fear? ſaith the LORD of hoſts unto you, [h] O prieſts, that deſpiſe my name? and ye ſay, [i] Wherein have we deſpiſed thy name? 7. Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar; and ye ſay, Wherein have we polluted thee? In that ye ſay, The table of the LORD is contemptible. 8. And [k] if ye offer the blind for ſacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and ſick, is it not evil? offer it now unto thy governor, will he be pleaſed with thee, or accept thy perſon? ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 9. And now [l] I pray you, beſeech God that he will be gracious unto us: this hath been by your means: [m] will he regard your perſons? ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 10. Who is there even among you that would ſhut the doors for nought? neither do ye kindle fire on mine altar for nought. [n] I have no pleaſure in you, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand. 11. For [o] from the riſing of the ſun even unto the going down of the ſame, my name ſhall be great among the Gentiles, and [p] in every place [q] incenſe ſhall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for [r] my name ſhall be great among the heathen, ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 12. ¶ But ye have profaned it, in that ye ſay, The table of the LORD is [s] polluted, and the fruit thereof, even his meat is contemptible. 13. Ye ſaid alſo, Behold, [t] what a wearineſs is it, and ye have ſnuffed at it, ſaith the LORD of hoſts; and [u] ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the ſick; thus ye brought an offering: ſhould I accept this of your hands? ſaith the LORD. 14. But curſed be [x] the deceiver, which hath in his flock a male, and voweth and ſacrificeth unto the LORD a corrupt thing: for [y] I am a great King, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, and my name is dreadful among the heathen.

v. 6—14. The bad example of the prieſts being of moſt pernicious conſequence to the people, God ſends to them a ſevere rebuke.

1. God tells them what he might juſtly have expected from them. A ſon honoureth his father, and a ſervant his maſter; at leaſt, all admit that this ought to be, and they are accounted, unnatural, undutiful, and wicked, who act otherwiſe. If then I be a father, where is mine honour? and if I be a maſter, where is my fear? If reverence, reſpect, and fear be paid to an earthly parent or maſter, how much more due are they to our Father and Maſter in heaven? and to rob him of this his honour, how much more criminal?

2. He charges them with the inſolent contempt with which they had treated him. They deſpiſed his name; paid no regard to his honour, and neglected his worſhip and ſervice; and profaned it, v. 12. by their irreverent uſe of it, and perverting it to ſerve their own pride, covetouſneſs, and luxury, bringing the higheſt reproach upon it by their whole conduct; for nothing ſo deeply diſhonours God, as the bad lives of thoſe who call themſelves his miniſters. And yet with daring effrontery they deny the charge: Ye ſay, Wherein have we deſpiſed thee? either they were ſo ignorant of the divine law, as to think they had obſerved it; or ſo atheiſtical, as to imagine God could not detect them. Thus hardened ſinners juſtify themſelves in evil, and ſay, like the adultereſs, I have done no wickedneſs; but God will reprove them, and ſet in order the things they have done.

(1.) Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar; either the ſhewbread, or the meat-offering which accompanied the daily ſacrifice, was made of the refuſe of the wheat, or of flower damaged and unfit for uſe: and yet ye ſay, Wherein have we polluted thee? as if there was no harm in what they had done; and this attempt to vindicate themſelves was an aggravation of their crime.

(2.) Ye ſay, The table of the Lord is contemptible; perhaps not publicly, but among themſelves, they treated the divine inſtitutions with ridicule; and though it was for their intereſt to keep up the form of religion, they talked of it as a mere juggle, deſigned to keep the vulgar in awe: or if they ſaid not ſo much, their conduct ſpoke aloud their ſentiments. They paid no veneration to the ſanctuary, or its ordinances: Ye ſay, The table of the Lord is polluted, and the fruit thereof, even his meat, is contemptible; as if it was no better than any other table: their own were better ſerved than his; and the fat and the blood, which were the Lord's portion, were in their eyes contemptible, and very little deſerving ſo many laws concerning them.

(3.) They offered the blind and the lame, v. 8. and the torn and the ſick, v. 13. for ſacrifices to God, ſuch as they would not have dared to have preſented to their governor, becauſe he would have eſteemed it an affront. And is not this evil? contrary to God's expreſs command, and a deſigned inſult. Note, They who think God will be ſatisfied with careleſs, cold, negligent, haſty prayers, the labour of the lips or the book, where all the life of devotion, of faith and love is wanting, are but offering the blind and lame for ſacrifice, and their ſervices will be accounted but an abomination.

(4.) They were perfectly mercenaries, and ſerved merely for hire. They would not ſhut a door of the temple, nor kindle a fire there, unleſs they were well paid: the work of the ſanctuary was no delight to them; the wages was all they looked at. Note, Though God would have us live by the altar we ſerve, yet to have an eye to this, as the inducement to undertake the miniſtry, is in God's ſight moſt abominable, and ſuch hirelings will be abhorred and diſowned by the great Biſhop of ſouls.

(5.) The ſervice they were obliged to be employed in was a wearineſs to them. They were always complaining of the hard duty, v. 13. to be ſo conſtant in attendance on the temple, ſo ſtrict in the obſervance of the forms and ordinances preſcribed, they thought quite tireſome, and ſnuffed at it; with diſcontent and reluctance dragging themſelves to the taſk, and hurrying it over as faſt as poſſible. Would to God theſe had been the only miniſters of the ſanctuary on whom theſe things were chargeable.

3. He expoſtulates with them on this conduct of theirs, Should I accept this at your hands? can ſuch ſacrifices and ſervices be pleaſing? No, ſaith God; I have no pleaſure in you; neither will I accept an offering at your hands; ſince they had made themſelves vile, and this had been by their means, with their connivance and encouragement, that ſuch deſpicable ſacrifices were offered; Shall I regard your perſons? ſaith the Lord of hoſts. It was impoſſible he ſhould, and therefore their prayers, which the prophet ironically calls them to offer, v. 9. muſt needs be unavailing and rejected. Note, If our perſons are not accepted of God through the blood of atonement, all our prayers muſt needs be fruitleſs.

Some underſtand v. 9. as containing a ſerious exhortation to the prieſts, who had been the chief authors of all the evil, to repent of their ſins, and cry to God for mercy on the behalf of themſelves and the people, and not to flatter them with vain hopes, that God accepted their perſons more than others, ſeeing the holineſs of their office aggravated their ſins, and would increaſe their puniſhment.

4. Since they thus diſhonoured God, he will glorify himſelf, rejecting them, and turning to the Gentiles, ſetting up his church from the riſing of the ſun even unto the going down of the ſame. My name, ſaith he, ſhall be great among the Gentiles; they ſhall render him that glory of which Iſrael had robbed him: and in every place incenſe ſhall be offered to my name; the incenſe of prayer and praiſe, ariſing from all the worſhipping aſſemblies of true believers, who are conſecrated ſpiritual prieſts, to offer ſpiritual ſacrifices acceptable to God through Jeſus Chriſt, and a pure offering, even themſelves, their bodies, ſouls, and ſpirits, a living ſacrifice; for my name ſhall be great among the heathen: it is repeated to aſſure them of the certainty of the event, and that when the time came that the Gentiles ſhould be fellow-heirs, and of the ſame body, they might remember that the mouth of the Lord had ſpoken it.

5. A curſe is pronounced on theſe careleſs and wicked prieſts, and on all others who are deceivers like them. Curſed be the deceiver, which hath in his flock a male, and voweth and ſacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing. Though they might think thus to ſatisfy their conſciences, and the corrupt prieſts, indulgent caſuiſts, flattered them it would be accepted; they were both deceivers and deceived. God is not to be thus mocked; they would put a cheat upon him, but in fact deceived themſelves, and brought wrath upon their ſouls. He will be ſerved with the beſt, or not at all: to attempt to put him off with the refuſe, is increaſing our provocations; For I am a great King, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, and therefore to be honoured according to his excellent greatneſs; and my name is dreadful among the heathen; the judgments he had executed upon them made it ſo, and their more provoking wickedneſs would bring down ſtill heavier vengeance upon their heads.

CHAP. II.

Further charges are here laid againſt the prieſts. 1. They profaned the ordinance of the miniſtry, their ſin is aggravated, and they are ſeverely threatned for it, ver. 1, 9. 2. The ordinance of marriage was profaned both by prieſts and people, in marrying ſtrangers, ver. 10, 12. treating their wives unkindly, ver. 13. putting them away, ver. 16. and herein dealing treacherouſly, ver. 10, 14, 15. And that which was at the bottom of this, and other inſtances of profaneneſs, was downright atheiſm, thinking God altogether ſuch a one as themſelves, which was in effect to ſay, there is no God, ver. 17. And theſe reproofs to them are warnings to us.

1. AND now, [a] O ye prieſts, this commandment is for you. 2. [b] If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to [c] give glory unto my name, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, I will even ſend a curſe upon you, and I will curſe your bleſſings: yea, I have curſed them already, becauſe ye do not lay it to heart. 3. Behold, [d] I will corrupt your ſeed, [e] and ſpread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your ſolemn feaſts, and † one ſhall take you away with it. 4. And ye ſhall know that I have ſent this commandment unto you, that my covenant might be with Levi, ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 5. [f] My covenant was with him of life and peace, and I gave them to him ‡ for [g] the fear wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my name. 6. [h] The law of truth was in his mouth, and [i] iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and equity, and did [k] turn many away from iniquity. 7. [l] For the prieſts lips ſhould keep knowledge, and they ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth: for [m] he is the meſſenger of the LORD of hoſts. 8. But ye are departed out of the way: ye [n] have cauſed many to § ſtumble at the law: [o] ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 9. v. 1—9. This word of God is particularly directed to the prieſts: And now, O ye prieſts, this commandment is for you; and they were bound deeply to conſider the divine rebuke here given them. The prophet ſhews,

1. What was their duty, v. 7. The prieſt's lips ſhould keep knowledge; their mind ſhould be ſtored with divine wiſdom; wiſe expoſitors of the law of God; ready to anſwer every caſe propoſed to them, and diligent to preach and inculcate the truths of God: and they, the people, ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth; teachable and inquiſitive; deſiring to know the mind of the Lord; humble hearers, and ready to follow his will, ſo far as it is made known to them: for he is the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts; diſtinguiſhed with this high honour, and employed in this high office, to carry God's meſſages to men, and, as an ambaſſador, to tranſact the great concerns which belong to the eternal world. Such therefore were bound by every obligation to walk worthy their high vocation and calling.

2. What had been their practice; the very contrary to all this. But ye are departed out of the way; in principle and practice utterly apoſtatized from God: ye have cauſed many to ſtumble at the law; corrupted by their falſe doctrines, and emboldened by their ill examples; for nothing tends to make men infidels and libertines, ſo much as the wicked, careleſs, and worldly lives of thoſe who pretend to be God's miniſters. Ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi; defeated the great end and intention of it; as if the prieſthood, inſtead of being inſtituted in order to lead ſinners to a pardoning God, and make them holy and happy, was deſigned merely to enrich the prieſts, and fatten them with the ſpoils of the altar. Ye have not kept my ways; neither the commandments moral or ceremonial: but have been partial in the law, in their obſervance of it; or accepted perſons in the law; giving wrong judgments in favour of ſome, and to the prejudice of others.

3. Their ſins were greatly aggravated by the conſideration of the peculiar honour God had put upon them in this covenant of prieſthood eſtabliſhed with their fathers, and by their degeneracy from their pious examples. My covenant was with Levi; God took that tribe into a peculiar relation, to attend ſolely on his worſhip; a covenant of life and peace, containing a promiſe of long life and proſperity to themſelves here, and of endleſs life and peace hereafter, if they proved faithful. And alſo their miniſtrations were intended to be life to the guilty ſinner, whoſe iniquities, which called for death, ſhould be removed by faith in the blood of the ſacrifices offered, and peace with an offended God be reſtored to their troubled conſciences. And I gave them to him, the bleſſings of life and peace, for the fear wherewith he feared me; he rewarded the zeal of Levi, Exod. xxxii. 26. and the boldneſs of Phinehas, Num. xxv. 11, 12. with the ſettlement of the prieſthood in that tribe and family. Or it may be read, I gave them to him, and the fear wherewith he feared me, this being, as every other grace, the gift of God: and he was afraid before my name; continuing faithful in God's ſervice, jealous of offending, approving himſelf in all ſimplicity before him. The law of truth was in his mouth; he always ſpoke according to the oracles of God; and iniquity was not found in his lips; he never perverted the truth to flatter the great, nor concealed what would be offenſive in order to pleaſe men; but plainly, freely, and fully, in all caſes declared the word of God; and, in matters of judicature, decided with ſtricteſt impartiality, without reſpect of perſons. He walked with me in peace and equity; his life adorned his doctrine; he was himſelf a man of peace, and the peace-maker among others; of unimpeached integrity, as miniſters ſhould be; an example to the flock in every good word and work: and did turn many away from iniquity; his life gave weight to his preaching, and God beſtowed ſucceſs on his labours; ſo that they were effectual to the converting many ſinners from the evil of their ways: and every faithful preacher of God's word may expect to ſee ſuch fruit of their miniſtry, when they thus walk and ſpeak; and as the bleſſed iſſue of ſuch a converſation, after having turned many to righteouſneſs, who will bleſs God in eternity for ever having heard and known them, they ſhall ſhine as the ſtars in the firmament for ever and ever. Such godly prieſts as are here deſcribed had there been of old in the Jewiſh church; and to have been deſcended from, and inherited the covenant of prieſthood, yet to have degenerated from their examples, and betrayed the truſt delivered down to them, was the aggravated crime of that generation.

Some apply this to Chriſt, of whom indeed the Levitical prieſthood was a type and figure, and in whom moſt eminently theſe things were fulfilled. With him the everlaſting covenant of life and peace was eſtabliſhed, who is the purchaſer of both for his people, and they are given into his hands to be diſtributed to the members of his body myſtical; and he hath obtained this life and peace for them, becauſe he feared, humbled himſelf to obey the precept, and ſubmitted to the penalty of the law for us. In his mouth the law of truth, the goſpel of our ſalvation, was found; in his lips was no guile, perfectly ſpotleſs in all his converſation, and turning many from iniquity, even all who ever ſhall be ſaved.

4. Judgment is denounced upon them. They had already begun to feel God's diſpleaſure, and to the uttermoſt it ſhall light upon them. [1.] They had begun to feel God's wrath. I have already curſed your bleſſings; they had no comfort in their work, nor any enjoyment of their wages; all their temporal bleſſings were embittered, and nothing proſpered in their hands: becauſe ye do not lay it to heart, to repent of your ſins, and glorify God in your miniſtry. Therefore have I alſo made you contemptible; ſince they had made themſelves vile, God juſtly expoſed them before all the people, and returned upon their own heads the contempt they had ſhown of his ſervice. Nor can there be conceived a more infamous and deſpicable character than that of a profane, wicked, and negligent prieſt. [2.] What they had felt, if they continued impenitent, was but the prelude to greater evils in ſtore for them. If ye will not hear theſe warnings, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, by an immediate return to him with broken hearts, and deſire of miniſtring henceforth to God's glory, I will even ſend a curſe upon you; even that wrath which ſhall burn like fire: and I will curſe your bleſſings; their benedictions on the people ſhall be turned into curſes, and their worldly good things be imbittered with the ſenſe of his diſpleaſure, or deſtroyed. Behold, I will corrupt your ſeed, that it ſhall rot under the clod, and famine be the conſequence; and ſpread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your ſolemn feaſts; ſo far ſhould theſe be from pleaſing God, that he would treat them with the utmoſt contempt and averſion, as if the dung of the beaſts they brought were caſt into their faces: and one ſhall take you away; either the Romans, or any other perſon would count them fit only for the dunghil; or the devil, the ſinner's tormentor, ſhall ſeize them, and drag them with him into the pit of deſtruction. Note, (1.) They who reſt on the external performances of religion, ſo far from pleaſing God, will find that their dependance on theſe will render them abominable in his ſight. (2.) The day is coming, when God will take away all the wicked from the earth, and deliver them over to the tormentor.

10. [q] Have we not all one father? [r] hath not one God created us? why do we [s] deal treacherouſly every man againſt his brother, by profaning the covenant of our fathers? 11. ¶ Judah hath dealt treacherouſly, and an abomination is committed in Iſrael and in Jeruſalem: for Judah hath profaned [t] the holineſs of the LORD which he loved, and [u] hath married the daughter of a ſtrange god. 12. v. 10—17. As corrupt principles naturally lead to corrupt practices, ſo on the other hand, the love of ſin, and the ſervice of it, harden the heart in infidelity and atheiſm.

1. Their practices were very bad. In general they dealt treacherouſly every man againſt his brother; perverting juſtice, and having reſpect to perſons, and in all their dealings full of diſhoneſty; thus profaning the covenant of their fathers, wherein ſuch injuſtice and fraud were forbidden; and which was peculiarly criminal in them, who had one father, were brethren in a peculiar ſenſe, as ſprung from Abraham, and one God their Creator; not merely as men, but who had formed them in a covenant of peculiarity as a people for himſelf. But of all their other treacherous dealings, that which eſpecially is here brought to account, is their violation of God's covenant with regard to their marriages, both taking wives of the heathen, which had been ſo expreſsly forbidden, Exod. xxxiv. 15. and abuſing and divorcing thoſe of their own nation.

(1.) They took wives of the heathen, called here, the daughters of a ſtrange god, trained in their worſhip and ſervice, as a child in the family; and this was to profane the holineſs of the Lord which he loved. They were ſet apart for a peculiar people, dedicated to God, and to be obſervant of his holy law; and he then loved and delighted in them, when they approved their fidelity to him; but by theſe ſtrange marriages they profaned their covenant of ſeparation, and became an abomination in the ſight of God, v. 11. for which he threatens to cut them off, both maſter and ſcholar; or, as in the margin, both him that wakeneth, the magiſtrates and elders, whoſe office it was to call and excite the people to their duty; and him that anſwereth, the people in general, who ſhould be obedient to their admonitions, as a ſervant to his maſter's call. Theſe God will deſtroy together, and him that offereth an offering unto the Lord of hoſts, the prieſts who ſhould be found guilty of the like crime, as many of them were, Ezra x. 18, 44. Note, (1.) They who profeſs the faith of Jeſus, ſhould no more be yoked now with unbelievers, than theſe with the daughters of a ſtrange god; and miniſters eſpecially ſhould ſhun ſo unequal a connection. (2.) Nothing more fatally endangers the ſoul, and expoſes it to everlaſting perdition, than raſhly taking thoſe to be our wives or huſbands, who are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins. The daughter of a ſtrange god will much ſooner make a convert of her huſband to idolatry, to the ways of ſin and this world, than he can ever hope to bring her to the knowledge and worſhip of Jeſus.

(2.) This have ye done again, or in the ſecond place; abuſed and divorced the wives of their own nation, probably to make room for theſe foreigners; ſo that they covered the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping, and with crying; complaining of the ill uſage of their huſbands: inſomuch that he regardeth not the offering any more, or receiveth it with good will at your hand. Theſe tears ſtood on the altar as a memorial againſt them, and all their offerings were but hypocritical, whilſt they perſiſted in ſuch wickedneſs. Yet ye ſay, Wherefore? why ſhould not God accept our offerings? The reaſon is obvious; becauſe the Lord hath been witneſs of thoſe plighted vows which were exchanged between thee and the wife of thy youth, againſt whom thou haſt dealt treacherouſly; divorcing her, or marrying others to vex her; and he will be an awful avenger of this breach of contract, aggravated as the ſin is by various conſiderations. She is a wife of youth; placed her affections upon thee in thoſe beſt days of youth and beauty, and therefore not afterwards to be neglected or abhorred: She is thy companion; hath been the partner of all thy cares and griefs, and born an equal ſhare in them: and the wife of thy covenant; bound to her by every ſacred tie, till death ſhall part; and therefore it would be moſt cruel, baſe, ungrateful, and unjuſt, to treat her with falſhood, or break the marriage-bond. And did not he make one? When the great Creator formed us, did it not evidently appear, that he intended one man ſhould have but one wife, in the caſe of our firſt parents; yet had he the reſidue of the Spirit, and could as eaſily have formed many Eves as one. And wherefore one? The reaſon is, that he might ſeek a godly ſeed, or a ſeed of God; a noble and legitimate offspring, a ſeed to ſerve him, which is the great end of marriage; not to gratify men's lawleſs luſts and appetites, but to beget children, who may be brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Therefore take heed to your ſpirit; keep your hearts, keep your eye, keep every wandering deſire in ſubjection, which would lead you after forbidden objects: and let none deal treacherouſly with the wife of his youth; but be conſtant, faithful, affectionate, and cleave to her alone: for the Lord the God of Iſrael ſaith, that he hateth putting away; and though permitted for the hardneſs of their hearts, to prevent worſe conſequences, it was diſpleaſing to God, and contrary to his original inſtitution; and therefore the author of ſuch ſeparation will be abhorred of God. For one covereth violence with his garment, and thinks, by pretending the permiſſion of the law, he can cover the violence done his wife by the divorce; or he grieves, vexes, and ill uſes her in private, and in public caſts his garment over her, as if he would protect and cheriſh her; but God ſees, and will puniſh the unfaithful: therefore take heed to your ſpirit, that you deal not treacherouſly; and great need there is that we, whoſe hearts are by nature ſo corrupt, ſhould take heed to them; eſpecially in this eſtate we need watch againſt every alienation of affection and unkindneſs, for if but once a breach be made, the miſchief is often afterwards irreparable.

2. Their principles were corrupt, and their words correſponded with their works. Ye have wearied the Lord with your words; ſpeaking perverſely, and vindicating themſelves in their wickedneſs, which was highly provoking. Yet ye ſay, Wherein have we wearied him? denying the charge, and maintaining their innocence, which aggravated their crime. When ye ſay, Every one that doth evil is good in the ſight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; obſerving the proſperity of the wicked, they concluded God approved and rewarded him, which caſt the moſt blaſphemous imputation on the holineſs of God. Or where is the God of judgment? why doth he not appear to puniſh ſin as he hath threatned? They infer from his patience, that he hath forſaken the earth, and that let men live as they liſt, they have nothing to fear. Such infidel ſcoffers there were of old, that ſaid, Where is the promiſe of his coming? and ſuch there ſtill are, who put far away the evil day, and ſay, Tuſh, God careth not for it; but they will be terribly undeceived when this God of judgment ſhortly appears to puniſh ungodly ſinners, among their other crimes, for all the hard ſpeeches they have ſpoken againſt him, Jude 15.

v. 1—6. If the words of the concluſion of the foregoing chapter be conſidered, as they are by ſome, as the ſcoff of the infidel, who, becauſe the Meſſiah's appearing was long delayed, concluded he would never come, the opening of this chapter contains a full anſwer to ſuch a ſuggeſtion.

1. The harbinger of the Meſſiah approaches. Behold, I will ſend my meſſenger, and he ſhall prepare the way before me. Of whom this is ſpoken we cannot be in doubt, Mat. xi. 10. Mark i. 2. John the Baptiſt being ſent to point out the Lamb of God, and, by preaching repentance, to lead them to him who alone can give remiſſion of ſins.

2. The Lord of life and glory ſhall immediately follow his herald and forerunner. The Lord, whom ye ſeek, the long-expected Meſſiah, to whom the eyes of Iſrael were directed, ſhall ſuddenly come to his temple, and by his preſence fulfil the prophecy of Haggai, putting the moſt diſtinguiſhed honour on that holy place. Even the meſſenger of the covenant of grace, who, as the great prophet ſent from God, publiſhes and explains the tenor of that covenant more clearly and diſtinctly than it was ever done before; whom ye delight in; they in general pleaſed themſelves with the expectation of him, though they entirely miſtook the nature of his office; but many there were alſo among them, who waited for him as a ſpiritual Meſſiah, coming to ſave his people from their ſins. He ſhall come, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, whoſe promiſe is faithful, and the accompliſhment of it, in the fulneſs of time, ſure.

3. The great end of his coming is declared. Many wiſhed for his appearing, who little underſtood the deſign of it; therefore is the queſtion aſked, But who may abide the day of his coming? who will be able to bear the doctrines he advances, concerning his own deity, the purpoſe of his coming to die for ſinners, the nature of his kingdom, &c. or his ſharp and piercing rebukes againſt the characters of the men of that generation, held in higheſt admiration; and who ſhall ſtand when he appeareth? before the piercing energy of his word; which intimates how few would be able to endure or receive the truths he taught: for he is like a refiner's fire; by his word ſeparating the precious from the vile; diſtinguiſhing the true ſenſe of God's word from the adulterating gloſſes of the ſcribes; and purifying his own people who received him, whilſt the wicked, who rejected him, are caſt away as droſs: and like fullers ſoap, which cleanſes the garment from ſpots, ſo ſhall he cleanſe his people from their ſins.

Some ſhall be happy partakers of his grace. On them he ſhall ſit as a refiner and purifier of ſilver; by the various methods he uſes, he will purge away the droſs of guilt and corruption from their ſouls; ſitting by, to ſee every means of grace made effectual, and every providence ſanctified; never putting them in any furnace of affliction or temptation, but he himſelf regulates the fire, and takes care they ſhall be in it no longer, nor feel it fiercer, than he will enable them to bear, and ſhall ultimately be for their good. And he ſhall purify the ſons of Levi; not merely thoſe Jews who were of that family, or the apoſtles and miniſters of the goſpel; but all his people, who are conſecrated to be prieſts unto God, and, by the imputation of his blood and righteouſneſs, are prepared to ſtand before God without ſpot or blemiſh: and purge them as gold and ſilver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteouſneſs, even themſelves a living ſacrifice, and the well-pleaſing oblation of prayer and praiſe, and all their works and labours of love, accepted now in Jeſus Chriſt. Then ſhall the offering of Judah and Jeruſalem be pleaſant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years; like the offering of Abel, the ſacrifice of Abraham, or the burnt-offering of Aaron, which the heavenly fire devoured. Juſtified by the blood and righteouſneſs, and ſanctified by the Spirit of Jeſus, all the ſervices of his people ſhall be a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour.

To ſome for judgment he will come into the world, a ſavour of death unto them, as of life unto others. Their characters are declared: they are ſorcerers, who uſed enchantments and divination; adulterers, wallowing in the luſts of uncleanneſs; falſe ſwearers, who profaned God's name, and called him to witneſs to a lie; oppreſſors of the hireling, defrauding him of his wages; of the widow and fatherleſs, taking advantage of their helpleſsneſs to plunder and devour them; and turn aſide the ſtranger from his right, becauſe ignorant of the law, or through the partiality of the judges: and, worſt of all, they fear not me, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, nor obey his goſpel. For all which things Chriſt threatens to be a ſwift witneſs againſt them, and will bring their ſins to light, however ſecretly committed, and execute juſt judgment in conſequence upon them, and that quickly; as he did, ſhortly after his appearing in the fleſh, in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and as he will do in the great day of perdition of all the ungodly.

4. He ratifies the immutable purpoſes of his word. I am the Lord, Jehovah, ſelf-exiſtent, ſelf-ſufficient, able to ſave or deſtroy to the uttermoſt. I change not; his decrees of wrath againſt the impenitent will never alter to eternity, and his promiſes of mercy to his people never fail: therefore ye ſons of Jacob are not conſumed; as he had hitherto kept them as a people, in virtue of the covenant of peculiarity which ſubſiſted notwithſtanding their provocations, much more ſhall the ſpiritual ſons of Jacob, in conſequence of the everlaſting covenant of grace, be preſerved; and every child of God, through the unchangeable love of God, be kept from periſhing eternally: not one of them ſhall be loſt.

7. ¶ Even [o] from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them: [p] return unto me, and I will return unto you, ſaith the LORD of hoſts: but [q] ye ſaid, Wherein ſhall we return? 8. ¶ Will a man rob † God? yet ye have robbed me, but ye ſay, Wherein have we robbed thee? [r] In tithes and offerings. 9. Ye are curſed with a curſe: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. 10. [s] Bring ye all the tithes into [t] the ſtore-houſe, that there may be meat in mine houſe, and prove me now herewith, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, if I will not open you [t] the windows of heaven, and [u] pour you out a bleſſing, [x] that there ſhall not be room enough to receive it. 11. And I will rebuke the devourer for your ſakes, and he ſhall not deſtroy the fruits of your ground; neither ſhall your vine caſt her fruits before the time in the field, ſaith the LORD of hoſts. 12. And all nations ſhall call [y] you bleſſed: for ye ſhall be a delightſome land, ſaith the LORD of hoſts.

v. 7—12. We have here,

1. The charge drawn up againſt the Jewiſh people, of long-continued iniquities. From the days of their fathers the apoſtacy began; they had forſaken God's ordinances, and had not kept them; yet he, patient and gracious, invited them to return, with the kindeſt aſſurances of forgiveneſs and acceptance. Return unto me, and I will return unto you; but they, inſtead of obeying, in the pride and ſtubbornneſs of their hearts replied, Wherein ſhall we return? as if they had done nothing amiſs, and needed no repentance; or were diſpleaſed at the gracious invitation, becauſe it implied a rebuke. God therefore lays their crimes to their conſcience: Will a man rob God? or the gods; even a heathen would not act thus towards his idols: or the judges; none could think with impunity thus to treat a magiſtrate; how daring the attempt then, and how inſolent the provocation, to rob God of his honour, glory, and ſervice, as they had done; yet ye have robbed me. Note, Robbers of God are the worſt of robbers. All they perſiſt in maintaining their innocence, and impudently challenge him to prove the accuſation: Wherein have we robbed thee? The proof is evident; in tithes and offerings: they robbed God's altar of his due, and his miniſters of their maintainance; making no conſcience of defrauding them of their appointed portion, or giving them the worſt, when the beſt ſhould have been brought, as if the blind and lame were good enough for an offering. This was the ſin of the whole nation, and the univerſality of the crime was an aggravation of it; therefore ye are curſed with a curſe; with barrenneſs, want, and locuſts which devoured their labours. So little is got by robbing God; for they who think they ſhall grow the richer by their fraudulent dealings with God's prieſts, will find the curſe of God, like a canker-worm, devouring their ſubſtance.

2. They are warned to amend their ways. And the gracious invitation ſtill abides the ſame; Return unto me, and I will return unto you. And they would find themſelves abundant gainers by rendering to him his due; Bring ye all the tithes into the ſtore-houſe; all, conſcientiouſly ſcrupulous that nothing in quantity or quality be kept back: that there may be meat in my houſe; for God's altar ſhould be ſerved before our own tables, and the ſupport of his worſhip and ſervice ſhould be dearer to us, than any ſecular concerns more immediately our own; and ſuch honeſty will be found the beſt policy, as it will procure God's bleſſing. And prove me now herewith, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, if they ſhould not find abundantly their advantage in ſo doing. They who dare truſt God, will be convinced by experience, that their dues paid to the altar, or their charity to the poor, ſhall never impoveriſh but enrich them. Prove me, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, which had been ſhut up, and ſend the needful refreſhing rains, and pour you out a bleſſing; ſuch abundant fruitfulneſs, and plenty of all good things; ſo that ye ſhall not be ſufficient; there ſhall be more than there are hands to reap and gather, barns to fill, or veſſels to receive: and I will rebuke the devourer for your ſake; the locuſt and caterpillar ſhall no more deſtroy the fruit of your ground; neither ſhall the vine, through drought, blaſting, or hurricanes, caſt her fruits before the time in the field. And all nations, who before reproached them with their want and poverty, ſhall call you bleſſed, beholding the evident care and kindneſs of God towards them; for ye ſhall be a delightſome land, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, where plenty reigns, and over which God continually watches with his peculiar love and favour; and theſe indeed make the truly delightſome land.

13. ¶ [z] Your words have been [a] ſtout againſt me, ſaith the LORD: yet ye ſay, What have we ſpoken ſo much againſt thee? 14. Ye have ſaid, It is vain to ſerve God: and what profit is it, that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked † mournfully before the LORD of hoſts? 15. ‡ And now [b] we call the proud happy: ‖ yea, [c] they that work wickedneſs are § ſet up; yea, [d] they that tempt God, are even delivered.
16. ¶ Then they that feared the LORD, [e] ſpake often one to another, and [f] the LORD hearkned, and heard it, and [g] a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the LORD, and that thought upon his name. 17. And [h] they ſhall be mine, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, in that day when I make up [i] my † jewels, and [k] I will ſpare them as a man ſpareth his own ſon that ſerveth him. 18. Then ſhall ye ‡ return, [l] and diſcern between the righteous and the wicked; between him that ſerveth God, and him that ſerveth him not.

v. 13—18. The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good. He obſerves the characters of men, and they will be puniſhed or rewarded accordingly.

1. He obſerved among the Jews ſome who, with daring inſolence, arraigned the diſpenſations of his providence and grace, and revolted from his worſhip and ordinances. Your words have been ſtout againſt me, ſaith the Lord: yet ye ſay, what have we ſpoken ſo much againſt thee? as if they had been clear from blame; or if an inadvertent word had dropped from them, it was not a matter that deſerved ſuch ſharp admonition. So ready are ſinners to extenuate their faults; and becauſe they have no ſenſe of the evil of ſin themſelves, they think God ſevere in his rebukes, yet ſurely they had provoked him moſt highly. Ye have ſaid, it is vain to ſerve God, ſince there is nothing to be got by his ſervice, but the wicked often fare better than the righteous; and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, exact in the obſervation of his worſhip and ceremonies, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hoſts, in the habit of penitents. Perhaps reference is here had to the Sadducees, who denied a future ſtate, and the Phariſees, who, though rigidly ſcrupulous in the form of godlineſs, did it merely for worldly ends, and looked upon it as a burdenſome taſk. But their evil report will be confuted by the experience of every gracious ſoul, who will find God's ways both pleaſant and profitable, and count God's ſervice perfect freedom, and its own reward. And now we call the proud happy; they judged of happineſs by outward wealth and ſplendor, and ſince they that work wickedneſs are ſet up; yea, they that tempt God are delivered, for ſuch they beheld who proſpered in iniquity; and though their preſumptuous ſins ſeemed to cry for vengeance, no evil came upon them; therefore they were ready to conclude, that there was neither a providence here, nor a judgment to come, and that thoſe were the happieſt who gratified every deſire of the fleſh and of the mind. And theſe were the hard ſpeeches God heard, which he will confute and confound when the wrath, which purſues the moſt proſperous ſinner, ſhall quickly overtake him.

2. He heard with pleaſure the gracious converſation of a remnant who feared and ſerved him. We have,

[1.] Their character. (1.) They feared the Lord, reverenced his authority, ſubmitted to his providential will without murmuring, were jealous of offending, and perſevered with conſtancy in his holy worſhip and ways. (2.) They thought upon his name; remembered him, his word, his promiſes, and meditated thereon; ſupporting their faith in theſe trying days, with the conſideration of his adorable perfections, maintaining ſtill their communion with him. (3.) They ſpoke often one to another; the more iniquity abounded, the more they ſtirred each other up to love and to good works; whilſt others ſpake ſo much againſt God, they made bold profeſſion of his religion, and encouraged each other with zeal to appear in his cauſe; when their neighbours had renounced all religious worſhip and converſation, they aſſembled to talk of God's goodneſs, and to unite in prayer and praiſe at a throne of grace. May we, who live in theſe ungodly days, be enabled to go and do likewiſe.

[2.] The honour God put upon them. (1.) The Lord hearkened and heard it, was preſent in their private aſſemblies; and where two or three met together for theſe gracious purpoſes, he was in the midſt of them, teſtifying his approbation of their conduct, by the comfort, ſtrength, and encouragement he beſtowed upon them. (2.) A book of remembrance was written before him; he entered every gracious word into the records of eternity; they were indelible from his all-comprehenſive mind, and treaſured up for their comfort unto the great day, when they ſhall come into remembrance, and be recompenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt. (3.) They ſhall be mine, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, in that day when I make up my jewels, delivered from the flames of Jeruſalem, in which the others fell; or in general this is ſpoken of all God's ſaints, who are jewels dear and precious to him, glittering with divine graces, and intended to deck the crown of the eternal King; they are mine, ſaith God; he hath a peculiar property in his people, and regards them as a man doth his own things, with eſpecial affection. The day referred to, is that of the appearing of the great God and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall ſeparate between the precious and the vile; and when the wicked are made as the dung, the righteous ſhall ſhine forth as the ſun in the kingdom of their father: he will make them up, collecting them together into his glorious treaſury in heaven, and there ſhall they be ever with the Lord. (4.) I will ſpare them, as a man ſpareth his own ſon that ſerveth him; they ſhall continually experience from God a father's love: ſince they ſhew themſelves in ſpirit and temper his dutiful children, he will overlook their infirmities, will forgive their offences; tenderneſs ſhall ſoften all his rebukes, whilſt every feeble effort to pleaſe him, though but like the liſpings of a child, ſhall be accepted, and they ſhall be owned as the bleſſed children of their father at the laſt day. (5.) He will put ſuch a diſtinguiſhing difference between them and others, that all ſhall in time and eternity take knowledge of them, and own they are the bleſſed of the Lord. Then ſhall ye, who have ſpoken ſo ſtoutly againſt the Lord, and the unprofitableneſs of his ſervice, return, or be converted; ſhall change your ſentiments and language, and ſhall diſcern by the ſequel, the difference God makes between the righteous and the wicked, between him that ſerveth God, and him that ſerveth him not, and this was evident at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, out of which the people of God had eſcaped before the ſiege, and ſhall be abundantly manifeſt in the judgment-day. The real characters of men are now difficult to be diſcerned; the veil of hypocriſy, our prejudices, and the weakneſs of our underſtandings, make us often miſtake, and count them gracious whom God will diſown, and thoſe reprobate whom he hath choſen, but every man's true ſtate will then appear: the righteous in Chriſt Jeſus, through his blood and ſpirit, who have loved and ſerved him, will then be without ſpot before the throne of God, and go with him into eternal glory; whilſt the wicked, who lived in impenitence or hypocriſy, ſhall be ſeen and abhorred of all, and go away into the everlaſting fire prepared for the devil and his angels. Reader, Judge nothing before the time concerning the characters of others, but judge thyſelf, that thou mayeſt not be judged of the Lord.

CHAP. IV.

We have here the proper inſtructions given us (very proper to cloſe the canon of the Old Teſtament with) 1. Concerning the ſtate of recompence and retribution that is before us; the miſery of the wicked, and the happineſs of the righteous in that ſtate, ver. 1, 2, 3. 2. A call to be ready for it, by attention to the calls and teachings of God's word and miniſters, ver. 4—6.

do wickedly ſhall be [b] ſtubble, and the day that cometh ſhall burn them up, ſaith the LORD of hoſts, that it ſhall [c] leave them neither root nor branch. 2. ¶ But

v. 1—3. The coming of Chriſt here ſpoken of for the deſtruction of Jeruſalem and the wicked Jews, is the type and figure of his appearing at the laſt for the perdition of the ungodly; and the day of their final judgment, will be the day of the ſaints final recompenſe.

1. The Lord Jeſus will be a conſuming fire to the wicked. Behold, with ſurprize and terror, the day cometh, the evil day, which the tranſgreſſor put far away, that ſhall burn as an oven, when the wrath of God ſhall be revealed, and the fire be kindled around the devoted city; and all the proud, the ſcribes and Phariſees who rejected the Lord Jeſus; and all that do wickedly, the apoſtate Jewiſh people, ſhall be as ſtubble to the devouring flames; and the day that cometh ſhall burn them up, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, that it ſhall leave them neither root nor branch; the whole nation being deſtroyed, and the city and temple burnt and raſed to their foundations.

Thus in the great day of the wrath of the Lamb, he ſhall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on the proud, the ſelf-righteous and unhumbled ſinner, who truſted for ſalvation on his own doings and duties, and on all that do wickedly, the careleſs and profane, who know not God and obey not his goſpel, they ſhall be veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction, and fuel for the flames, and caſt together into the everlaſting burnings of hell, where their worm never dies, and their fire is not quenched.

2. He will be a reviving ſun to his people. Unto you that fear my name, ſhall the ſun of righteouſneſs ariſe with healing in his wings; he led his people out of Jeruſalem to Pella, when it was ready to be deſtroyed; and more generally on all his people he thus ariſes, when firſt he calls them out of darkneſs into his marvellous light; he is their ſun, the fountain of all ſpiritual light and life; by his bright beams they are quickened, bring forth fruit abundantly, rejoice before him, and walk in the light of truth, which leads to the manſions of glory. He is their ſun of righteouſneſs, ſhining without ſpot himſelf, the author of everlaſting righteouſneſs to his people, and the powerful and effectual agent, who by his mighty working transforms them into his own image of righteouſneſs and true holineſs: in his wings, his rays of light and grace, there is healing, our ſpiritual diſeaſes are cured, the native darkneſs of the mind removed, and our ſin-ſick ſouls reſtored to health and ſtrength, by the genial influences of his reviving beams. And in the reſurrection morn with brighter glories ſhall our ſun appear, and ſhine for ever upon his redeemed people.

3. In conſequence of this, ye ſhall go forth, either out of Jeruſalem to Pella, where the Chriſtians found a place of refuge; or rather, ye ſhall go forth to walk in the light of the Lord, rejoicing in his ſalvation, ſteadily advancing in the path of grace and glory, and running with delight the way of God's commandments; and grow up as calves of the ſtall, fat and well liking; ſo repleniſhed ſhall they be with the influences of God's ſpirit, and fed with the bread of life, ſtrengthening and increaſing with the increaſe of God. And ye ſhall tread down the wicked; for they ſhall be as aſhes under the ſoles of your feet, in the day that I ſhall do this, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; the wicked Jews, who perſecuted them, ſhall now be burnt with their cities, and trod into the duſt. Thus when the conqueſts of the Redeemer ſhall be compleated, and death itſelf deſtroyed, then ſhall the wicked be brought low, and every foe that troubled God's ſaints be trodden under foot, whilſt the triumphs of the redeemed will be everlaſting; and when the ſmoak of the ſinner's torment aſcends, they will cry, Hallelujah.

4. ¶ Remember ye [i] the law of Moſes my ſervant, which I commanded unto him [k] in Horeb for all Iſrael, with [l] the ſtatutes and judgments. 5. ¶ Behold, I will ſend you [m] Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the LORD. 6. v. 4—6. The canon of the Old Teſtament here receives a ſolemn cloſe. The Jewiſh people are to expect no more prophets till the great forerunner of the Meſſiah appears; and therefore,

1. They muſt keep ſteadfaſt to the law and the teſtimony, and be guided only by God's paſt revealed will. Remember ye the law of my ſervant Moſes, which I commanded unto him in Horeb, with the ſtatutes and judgments, moral and ceremonial; all which would have a direct tendency to lead them to Chriſt; for which purpoſe the law was their ſchoolmaſter, and which muſt now be their only rule, in contradiſtinction to the corrupt gloſſes which their teachers ſhortly after began to put upon it. Note, The word of God alone, excluſive of all traditions and human expoſitions, muſt be our rule; the labours of others may aſſiſt our enquiries after truth, but after all, we muſt call no man maſter; one is our maſter, even Chriſt, and he hath promiſed we ſhall be taught of him; and by prayer and meditation on his word, humbly deſiring to know his mind, he will lead us into all truth.

2. They muſt live in the conſtant expectation of the Meſſiah, and his forerunner John the Baptiſt. Behold, I will ſend you Elijah the prophet, one in the ſpirit and power of Elijah, Luke i. 17. one in zeal, courage to rebuke ſin, piety and auſterity of manners reſembling him, Mat. xi. 14. before the coming of the great and terrible day of the Lord, when, for the rejection of the true Meſſiah, wrath to the uttermoſt ſhould be poured out upon their land, and their city and temple utterly deſtroyed, Acts ii. 20. He ſhall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, or of the fathers with the children; both one and the other by his preaching ſhall be turned to Chriſt, and directed to the Lamb of God, which is come to take away the ſin of the world, leaſt I come and ſmite the earth with a curſe, which would be the certain conſequence of their rejecting the Lord's Chriſt, and viſibly remains upon the Jewiſh people to this day.

PREFACE.

THE ſum and ſubſtance of all the ſcriptures is Jeſus Chriſt. Him we have ſeen as the great object of faith and hope propoſed in the Old Teſtament, and the great ſubject of all the foregoing prophecies. In the New we behold him in the fulneſs of time appearing, accompliſhing all the things written concerning himſelf; putting a period to the former ſhadowy and typical diſpenſation, and eſtabliſhing that church which is to endure to the end of time.

Between theſe inſpired writings certain books are often inſerted in our Bibles, called Apocryphal, or hidden; books not only deſtitute of divine authority, but of any authority; and which with holy indignation a gracious ſpirit grieves to behold intruded between the ſacred volumes of God's word, and ſtamped with a kind of Reverence by their ſituation there, though ſome of them are evidently infamous forgeries. Not one of them but contains evident falſhoods; and many of the ſtories are as abſurd, ridiculous, falſe, and fabulous, as any of the moſt lying Romances, or heathen mythologies. It is to be lamented, as one of the things our pious reformers left unfiniſhed, that theſe unhallowed books ſhould ſtill remain in our Kalendar, as firſt leſſons for near two months of the year; among which, not to mention the ridiculouſly abſurd and lying ſtories of Bel and the Dragon, or Suſannah and the Elders, even in the beſt of them, the book of Wiſdom, and the Eccleſiaſticus, beſides a multitude of palpable falſhoods, there are advanced many wicked and falſe doctrines, which a Chriſtian cannot but regard with abhorrence; and which to hear read in the houſe of God, ſounds ſtill more ſhocking. As in the book of Wiſdom, chap. iii. 13—18. where the marriage-bed is condemned as ſinful, and baſtards excluded from ſalvation. Chap. vii. 25. the Divine Logos is ſpoken of as a vapour. Chap. viii. 20. The tranſmigration of ſouls into good or bad bodies, according to their deſerts, is intimated, with other follies and falſities, too many to be recapitulated. And in the book of Eccleſiaſticus, the Divine Logos is ſaid to be created, according to the Arian hereſy, chap. xxiv. 9. Honouring parents, and giving alms, are ſaid to make atonement for ſin, chap. iii. 3—30. And chap. xii. 4, 5. the writer diſſuades from helping ſinners, or charitably relieving the ungodly; doctrines diametrically oppoſite to the moſt glorious truths of God's word. Beſides a number of other miſtakes and untruths, which juſtly ſhould expunge them from a place between the two ſacred volumes, and conſign them at leaſt to the ſhelf, among other legends of antiquity, or the ethics of heatheniſm. Nor need any miniſter of our church count himſelf at all bound to the uſe of them, becauſe they ſtand in the Kalendar; nor ſhould there be any objection to the Liturgy in general, ſince by the preface to the Homilies we are enjoined to conſider the firſt leſſons to be read, and to change them for any other out of the New Teſtament, which we ſhall judge more to edification, with a commendation on ſuch diligence.

The book now before us, called the New Teſtament, contains,

1. The four Goſpels, in which we have an account of the appearing of the Meſſiah's harbinger John the Baptiſt, with the promiſe of which the Old Teſtament cloſed. And ſhortly after Chriſt himſelf is manifeſted in the fleſh; the hiſtory of whoſe life, from his miraculous conception to his death upon the croſs, is contained in theſe four volumes: a multitude of his miracles are recorded; the ſermons he preached; the doctrines he maintained; the perſecutions he endured; and the fulfilment of all the prophecies concerning his incarnation, deſcent, the place of his nativity, the nature of his office, &c. Finally, after ſeeing the Saviour dying upon a croſs and laid in his grave, we are told of his glorious reſurrection, confirmed by inconteſtible evidence, and his aſcenſion to the right hand of God, whereby he compleated the glorious work he had undertaken, and obtained eternal redemption for us.

2. The Acts of the Apoſtles. The book opens with an account of the aſcenſion of our Lord, and the qualifications he ſhortly after beſtowed on the apoſtles, by the gift of the Holy Ghoſt on the day of Pentecoſt, to fulfil the commiſſion he had before given them to preach the goſpel to every creature: in conſequence of which we are informed they went forth ſpreading the goſpel, working miracles, ſuffering a variety of perſecutions, yet ſeeing the ſucceſs of their labours in every place; forming churches not only in Judea, but more abundantly in the Gentile world, the wall of partition being now broken down: and eſpecially we have an account of the labours of Paul, the great apoſtle of the Gentiles, witneſſing to ſmall and great the glorious truths he once perſecuted, and now as zealouſly eſpouſed, even to priſon and to death.

3. The Epistles; occasioned many of them by disputes which early arose in the Christian church, and thereby occasioned the great and distinguishing doctrines of Christianity to be more distinctly, explicitly, and fully committed to writing; and the various duties thence depending, personal or relative, to God or man, to be urged upon the faithful from right principles, and from those strongest motives which the truths of Christianity furnished. Such good hath accrued to us from the unhappy divisions which we lament whilst we read some of the epistles.

4. The Revelation of St. John; which closes the canon of Scripture, and is prophetical of those great events which should happen in the world, and particularly as they respect the church of Christ to the end of time; wherein are many things dark indeed and hard to be understood, the fulfilment of which will be the surest key to the events predicted: and, till then, our search after the meaning of them should be attended with humble diffidence and reverential awe, praying that God would accomplish the number of his elect and hasten his kingdom, when all that is now mysterious will be unfolded.

OR, A
PRACTICAL COMMENT
Upon the GOSPEL according to St. MATTHEW.

WE have now before us, 1. The New Teſtament of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, ſo this ſecond part of the Holy Bible is intitled; The New Covenant, ſo it might as well be rendered; the word ſignifies both: But when it is (as here) ſpoken of as Chriſt's act and deed, it is moſt properly rendered a Teſtament, for he is the Teſtator, and it becomes of force by his death, Heb. iv. 16, 17. nor is there, as in covenants, a previous treaty between the parties; but what is granted, is owing to the will, the free-will, the good-will of the Teſtator Jeſus Chriſt. This is called a New Teſtament, to diſtinguiſh it from that which was given by Moſes, and was now antiquated, and to ſignify that it ſhould be always new, and ſhould never wax old and grow out of date.

2. We have before us the four goſpels: Goſpel ſignifies good news or glad tidings; and this hiſtory of Chriſt's coming into the world to ſave ſinners, is without doubt the beſt news that ever came from heaven to earth; the angel gave it this title, Luke ii. 10. Εὐαγγελίζομαι ὑμῖν, I bring you good tidings; I bring the goſpel to you. And the prophet foretold it, Iſa. lii. 7.——lxi. 1. where it is ſaid, that in the days of the Meſſiah good tidings ſhould be preached. Goſpel is an old Saxon word; it is God's ſpell or word. The whole New Teſtament is the goſpel: St. Paul calls it his goſpel, becauſe he was one of the preachers of it. O that we may each of us make it ours, by our cordial acceptance of it, and ſubjection to it! But the four books which contain the hiſtory of the Redeemer, we commonly call the four goſpels, and the inſpired penmen of them the Evangeliſts; not excluſively, for all the preachers of the goſpel are Evangeliſts, but by way of Eminence.

3. We have before us the Goſpel according to St. Matthew. The penman was by birth a Jew, by calling a publican, till Chriſt commanded his attendance, and then he left the receipt of cuſtom to follow him, and was one of thoſe that accompanied him all the time that the Lord Jeſus went in and out, beginning from the baptiſm of John, unto the day that he was taken up, Acts i. 21, 22. and was therefore a competent witneſs of what he has here recorded: He is ſaid to have written this hiſtory about eight years after Chriſt's aſcenſion. Many of the ancients ſay he wrote it in the Hebrew or Syriac language, but the tradition is ſufficiently diſproved by Dr. Whitby; doubtleſs it was written in Greek, as the other parts of the New Teſtament were, not in that language which was peculiar to the Jews, whoſe church and ſtate were near a period, but that which was common to the world, and in which the knowledge of Chriſt would be moſt effectually tranſmitted to the nations of the earth; yet it is probable there might be an edition of it in Hebrew, publiſhed by St. Matthew himſelf, at the ſame time that he wrote it in Greek; the former for the Jews, the latter for the Gentiles, when he left Judea to go and preach among the Gentiles. Let us bleſs God that we have it, and have it in a language we underſtand.

CHAP. I.

This Evangeliſt begins with the account of Chriſt's parentage and birth, his anceſtors from whom he deſcended, and the manner of his entry into the world, to make it appear that he was indeed the Meſſiah promiſed; for it was foretold that he ſhould be the ſon of David, and ſhould be born of a virgin; and that he was ſo is here plainly ſhewn; for here is, 1. His pedigree from Abraham, in forty-two generations, three fourteens, ver. 1—17. 2. An account of the circumſtances of his birth, ſo far as was requiſite to ſhew that he was born of a virgin, ver. 18—25.

1. THE book of [a] the generation of Jeſus Chriſt, the ſon of David, the ſon of Abraham. 2. [b] Abraham begat Iſaac, and [c] Iſaac begat Jacob, and [d] Jacob begat Judas and his brethren. 3. And [e] Judas begat Pharez and Zara of Thamar, and [f] Pharez begat Eſrom, and Eſrom begat Aram. 4. And Aram begat Aminadab, and Aminadab begat Naaſſon, and Naaſſon begat Salmon. 5. And Salmon begat Booz of Rachab, and Booz begat Obed of Ruth, and Obed begat Jeſſe. 6. And Jeſſe begat David the king, and [g] David the king begat Solomon of her that had been the wife of Urias. 7. And Solomon begat Roboam, and Roboam begat Abia, and Abia begat Aſa. 8. And Aſa begat Joſaphat, and Joſaphat begat Joram, and [h] Joram begat Ozias. 9. And Ozias begat Joatham, and Joatham begat Achaz, and Achaz begat Ezekias. 10. And Ezekias begat Manaſſes, and Manaſſes begat Amon, and Amon begat Joſias. 11. And [i] Joſias begat Jeconias and his brethren, about the time they were carried away to Babylon. 12. And after they were brought to Babylon, Jechonias begat Salathiel, and [k] Salathiel begat Zorobabel. 13. And Zorobabel begat Abiud, and Abiud begat Eliakim, and Eliakim begat Azor. 14. And Azor begat Sadoc, and Sadoc begat Achim, and Achim begat Eliud. 15. And Eliud begat Eleazar, and Eleazar begat Matthan, and Matthan begat Jacob. 16. And Jacob begat Joſeph the huſband of Mary, of whom was born Jeſus, who is called Chriſt. 17. So all the generations from Abraham to David, are fourteen generations: and from David until the carrying away into Babylon, are fourteen generations: and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Chriſt, are fourteen generations.

v. 1—7. As the Old Teſtament opened with the generation of the heaven and the earth, the New begins with the generation of Him who, in the fulneſs of time, became incarnate for man's redemption from the curſe he had brought upon himſelf, and under which the whole creation groaned. We have here his genealogy from authentic records, to prove the accompliſhment of the prophecies which went before concerning him, as ſprung, according to the fleſh, from David and Abraham, Gen. xii. 3. 2 Sam. vii. 12. for which purpoſe theſe genealogical tables are produced, abundantly ſufficient for the conviction of thoſe in that day, that Jeſus was deſcended from theſe patriarchs, whatever cavils have ſince been raiſed, or difficulties ſtarted againſt them.

In this genealogy we may obſerve, (1.) That the line of deſcent is not always through the firſt-born, but in many, as Abraham, Jacob, Judah, David, &c. from the younger ſons. (2.) That of the four women mentioned, we have two Gentiles and two adultereſſes, who would ſeem to add no honour to their deſcendants; but herein we have an intimation, that Chriſt's ſalvation was not deſigned to be confined to the Jewiſh people, but to be extended to the Gentiles alſo; and that the moſt guilty need not deſpair, when they ſee that our Lord, in taking the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, humbles himſelf to derive his deſcent from ſuch as theſe. (3.) In the genealogy there are ſeveral perſons paſſed over, for what reaſon, it is difficult, and of little import to reſolve; and the lineal deſcendant, tho' at the diſtance of three generations, is ſaid to be the ſon of his remote anceſtor, as in the caſe of Ozias, v. 8. and ſome ſuppoſe of Jeſſe alſo. (4.) The generations are divided into three fourteens, not that there were no more perſons really in the deſcent, but that the evangeliſt thought fit to mention no more. In the firſt, we ſee the family of David riſing to the throne; in the ſecond, a race of kings deſcend from him; in the laſt, the royal family declines even to a poor carpenter: ſo fading is this world's greatneſs. Yet then, when to human view all proſpect of the kingdom's being reſtored to David's houſe ſeemed deſperate, Jeſus aroſe to ſit on his father's throne, Luke i. 32. when God promiſes, we never need deſpair. (5.) Jeſus is called Chriſt, ver. 16. or Meſſiah, the anointed One, uniting in his perſon the threefold offices, to which men were anointed under the law, of prophet, prieſt, and king; and all his followers are called Chriſtians, an honourable title, and moſt applicable to thoſe who have indeed received an unction from the holy One, and are conſecrated to God as kings and prieſts, to reign at laſt with their exalted head.

18. ¶ Now [l] the birth of Jeſus Chriſt was on this wiſe: † When as his mother Mary was eſpouſed to Joſeph, before they came together, [m] ſhe was found with child of the holy Ghoſt. 19. Then Joſeph her huſband being a juſt man, and not willing to [n] make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily. 20. But while he thought on theſe things, behold, the angel of the LORD appeared unto him in a dream, ſaying, Joſeph, thou ſon of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is ‡ conceived in her is of the holy Ghoſt. 21. And ſhe ſhall bring forth a ſon, and thou ſhalt call his name [o] Jeſus: for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins. 22. (Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken of the LORD by the prophet, ſaying, 23. [p] Behold, a virgin ſhall be with child, and ſhall bring forth a ſon, and they ſhall call his name Emmanuel, which, being interpreted, is, God with us.) 24. Then Joſeph being raiſed from ſleep, did as the angel of the LORD had bidden him, and took unto him his wife: 25. And he knew her not, till ſhe had brought forth her firſt-born ſon; and he called his name Jeſus.

v. 18—25. The account of the birth of Jeſus follows his genealogy. And we have here,

1. His miraculous conception, v. 18. His mother Mary had been betrothed to Joſeph, but before the marriage was conſummated ſhe was found with child, through the wondrous operation of the Holy Ghoſt, who formed Chriſt's human nature, that it might be pure from every ſpot of that corruption that naturally deſcends with his being to every ſon of Adam; and that he might thus be a Lamb without blemiſh, fit for God's altar.

2. Joſeph's prudent reſolve, v. 19. Probably Mary herſelf communicated to him the circumſtances of her caſe; and though a thouſand ſuggeſtions might riſe up to queſtion her veracity, and to take her to his bed in ſuch a ſituation he could not think of, being a juſt man; yet was he unwilling withal to make her a public example, and have her puniſhed with death as an adultereſs: her artleſs ſtory and unaffected ſimplicity, though ſtrange the relation, might well have cauſed him to heſitate; and where the ſhadow of a doubt remained, a juſt man will ever lean to the ſide of mercy and charity; therefore he reſolved to put her away privily, as little as poſſible to wound her character, whilſt duty bids him preſerve his own. Note, (1.) Tho' apparently the greateſt injuries may be done us, it is wiſe to ſuppreſs raſh anger, and deliberate before we puniſh. (2.) In very dark caſes, where any circumſtances appear that will admit of a favourable interpretation, charity, which thinketh no evil, will gladly entertain them.

3. The Lord relieves Joſeph from his perplexity: while he deliberates what was fit to be done for God's glory and his own peace, in Mary's caſe, the angel of the Lord in a dream directs him how to act. For when we are in doubt, yet in ſimplicity deſire to know and follow God's will, we ſhall be directed, if not by an angel or a dream, yet by ſome word of God, or intimation of providence. Joſeph is now diverted from his purpoſe, and bid, without heſitation, take to him his wife, ſince her conception is not the fruit of adultery, but of the Holy Ghoſt; and the angel calls him Joſeph, thou ſon of David, to lead his thoughts from this extraordinary circumſtance to the Meſſiah who ſhould deſcend from him; aſſuring him withal, that this child now conceived is deſigned to be the very perſon, as the name given him imports; he ſhall be called Jeſus, or the Saviour; this being the great end of his appearing, to ſave his people from their ſins, from the puniſhment and the power of them. Note, They to whom Jeſus is a Saviour, are hereby diſtinguiſhed; they are ſaved not only from guilt, but from corruption; every one who nameth the name of Chriſt, muſt depart from iniquity, or they are none of his; yet from him alone it cometh that they are enabled ſo to do.

4. The accompliſhment of the ſcriptures herein is obſerved by the Evangeliſt. The prophecy of Iſaiah, chap. vii. 14. had foretold, a virgin ſhould conceive, and bring forth a ſon, and his name be called Immanuel, which was now fulfilled; Mary being that virgin, and God himſelf become incarnate in her womb: and thus uniting in his own perſon the two natures, the divine and human, Jeſus was enabled to execute the office of a Saviour, having a body to offer for the ſins of men, and infinite value to enhance the ſacrifice, ariſing from the dignity of his perſon, by which means God became reconciled to us, and we who were far off, were brought nigh unto God. How myſterious this union! Let us wonder, love and adore!

5. Joſeph no ſooner awaked, than he obeyed the heavenly viſion, which carried undoubted evidence to his mind of its original, and publickly celebrated his marriage, though he knew not Mary as a wife; at leaſt not till after the birth of Jeſus: whether afterwards he did or no, is not ſaid, and immaterial for us to know; this holy abſtinence of Joſeph was ſufficient to ſhew, the child Jeſus was the virgin's ſon, and in obedience to the angel's command, he called his name Jeſus. Note, (1.) When God commands, we muſt obey without heſitation. (2.) Since Jeſus is now come into the world, we are called upon to accept of his ſalvation; for if we neglect or deſpiſe it, how ſhall we eſcape?

CHAP. II.

In this chapter we have the hiſtory of our Saviour's infancy, where we find, 1. The wiſe men's ſollicitous enquiry after Chriſt, ver. 1—8. 2. Their devout attendance on him, when they found out where he was, ver. 9—12. 3. Chriſt's flight into Egypt to avoid the cruelty of Herod, ver. 13—15. 4. The barbarous murder of the infants of Bethlehem, ver. 16—18. 5. Chriſt's return out of Egypt into the land of Iſrael again, ver. 19—23.

The fourth year before the common account called Anno Domini. 1. NOW when [a] Jeſus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king, behold
[b] there came wiſe-men [c] from the eaſt to Jeruſalem, 2.
Saying, Where is he that is born king of the Jews?

and ſcribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Chriſt ſhould be born. 5. And they ſaid unto him, In Bethlehem of Judea: for thus it is written by e Mic. v. 2. John vii. 42. the prophet; 6. And [e] thou Bethlehem in the land of Judah, art not the leaſt among the princes of Judah:
† Gr. Feed. Iſa. xl. 11. for out of thee ſhall come a Governor that ſhall † rule my people Iſrael. 7. Then Herod, when he had privily called the wiſe-men, enquired of them diligently what time the ſtar appeared. 8. And he ſent them to Bethlehem, and ſaid, Go and ſearch diligently for the young child, and when you have found him, bring me
f Pſ. xii. 2. Ver. 16. word again, [f] that I may come and worſhip him alſo.

v. 1—8. Though the birth of Jeſus, the King of kings, was uſhered into the world with none of thoſe rejoicings that uſually attend the nativity of the princes of the earth, we have ſome inſtances of very diſtinguiſhed notice paid to the infant Saviour.

1. Wiſe men came from the eaſt, led by the obſervance of an extraordinary ſtar which appeared in the heavens; who they were, and from whence they came, we are not clearly told; the moſt approved opinion ſeems to be that they were of the Perſian Magi, among whom ſome tradition ſeems to have obtained of a great prince at that time about to come into the world, which might ariſe from Baalam's prophecy, or from their acquaintance with the Jewiſh ſcriptures; which, during the captivity, were probably brought among them: and this expectation, Tacitus obſerves, was ſpread through the eaſt. As theſe Magi were much converſant in aſtronomy, the uncommon luminous phænomenon, a meteor, or ſtar, which they obſerved over Judea, might have led them thither, concluding this was the ſignal of his appearing, as they might be aſſured alſo by a divine impulſe on their minds. They were Gentiles, it is certain, and this was a happy preſage of their future converſion; and their wiſdom moſt eminently appeared in coming to him, the knowledge of whom alone could make them wiſe unto ſalvation. The higheſt attainments in ſcience without this wiſdom, are no better than ſplendid ignorance.

2. They directed their journey to Jeruſalem the capital, naturally concluding there to meet with all needful information. Herod at that time reigned in Judea, an Edomite, ſet up by the Romans, under whoſe power the Jews were, the ſceptre being now departed from Shiloh; and to him it ſhould ſeem they applied themſelves, enquiring after the child who was born King of the Jews, concerning which they ſpeak with greateſt confidence; and having ſeen his ſtar in the eaſt, the intimation of his birth, were come to worſhip him; either to pay him their civil homage, or to offer divine adoration. Note, (1.) They who know the value of Chriſt's favour, will ſtick at no pains in following him whitherſoever he calls them. (2.) Jeſus is truly the object worthy of our adoration, even in his loweſt humiliation; the Babe in the manger is ſtill the mighty God, the everlaſting Father, the Prince of peace.

3. This enquiry of the wiſe men exceedingly affected Herod. He could be no ſtranger to the prophecies concerning the Meſſiah, and the time of the accompliſhment of them was confeſſedly now at hand. He was troubled therefore leaſt his own throne ſhould be ſhaken, and all the people who heard the ſtory, ſeem alike diſturbed, fearing the tumults which they might ſuppoſe would be the conſequence of a ſtruggle for the crown, as they had in general no notion of the Meſſiah as a ſpiritual Saviour, but as a mighty prince and conqueror. Note, Worldly hearts are ever afraid, leaſt the ſpreading of the kingdom of Jeſus ſhould claſh with their intereſts.

4. To give them a reſolution of the queſtion, and perhaps to gain particular information himſelf, for purpoſes his mind already harboured, he called a council of the chief prieſts, thoſe moſt diſtinguiſhed for ſtation and abilities, and the ſcribes learned in the law, and moſt converſant with the prophecies, that he might have their concurring ſentiments concerning the place where the Chriſt, the Meſſiah ſhould be born. And thus, by divine providence, this wicked king, who conſulted them with the vileſt deſign, is made the inſtrument of obtaining a diſtinguiſhed ſuffrage, even from the wiſeſt of the Jewiſh nation, to the place of the Meſſiah's birth, and where the babe Jeſus actually was born.

5. They are unanimous in their opinion, for the prophet Micah hath expreſsly determined the place to be Bethlehem of Judea, chap. v. 2. and they cite the prophecy, in ſenſe the ſame with the original, though with ſome variation in the expreſſion. Thence the ruler and governor of his Iſrael ſhould ariſe, and who is and ever will be the Lord of the redeemed, reigning in their hearts, and bringing them into ſubjection to his bleſſed ſelf.

6. Herod hereupon diſmiſſes the wiſe men in ſearch of this child, after examining them in private with greateſt accuracy concerning the time when the ſtar appeared, and having concerted in his own mind the bloody project of cutting off him, whom he eyed already with jealouſy as the rival of his throne; and therefore he ſtrictly charges them, after having made diligent ſearch at Bethlehem, to return, and acquaint him with the place of his abode; hypocritically pretending a deſire to pay his worſhip to the young child, born, and deſtined of God to ſuch diſtinguiſhed honour. So often hath the maſk of religion concealed the fouleſt deſigns.

None of his courtiers were ſent with theſe ſtrangers; perhaps he was afraid to awaken the ſuſpicion of the parents of Jeſus, his ambition and cruelty being fully known; or ſo God, in his over-ruling providence, ordered it, who taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs, and can divert the enemies of his people from uſing the moſt obvious means which they ſeem to have in their power to diſtreſs or deſtroy them.

9. ¶ When they had heard the king, they departed, and lo, the ſtar which they ſaw in the eaſt, went before them, till it came and ſtood over where the young child was. 10. [g] When they ſaw the ſtar, they rejoiced with g Pſ. cv. 3. exceeding great joy. 11. ¶ And when they were come into the houſe, they ſaw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worſhipped him: and when they had opened their treaſures, [h] they preſented unto h Pſ. lxxii. 10. Iſa. lx. 6.

And being warned of God [i] in a dream, that they ſhould i Chap. i. 20.
not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way.

v. 9—12. With attention and reſpect the wiſe men received their directions, and departed in ſearch of the king of the Jews. And,

1. We find them happily conducted to the ſpot where he is. The ſtar which they had ſeen at Chriſt's birth, afterwards diſappeared, at leaſt, if as ſome ſuggeſt, it led them to the borders of Judea, it then left them, but now returned, hanging low in the ſky, and moving on before them till it ſtood over the houſe where Jeſus was: for before this, it ſeems, his parents had changed the place of his birth in a ſtable, for a more commodious abode. The return of the ſtar, as it promiſed them a happy iſſue of their journey, rejoiced them exceedingly; and under its guidance being led to the houſe, they entered without farther enquiry: and finding the child with his virgin mother, they immediately proſtrated themſelves before him, worſhipping him as their God, or honouring him as their king. And according to the eaſtern cuſtom, of making preſents to their monarchs when they make their addreſſes to them, they opened their treaſures, and preſented him gold, frankincenſe, and myrrh, Iſa. lx. 6. and thus alſo providentially ſupplied Joſeph and Mary with a ſufficiency for the long journey they were quickly after called to undertake. Note, (1.) When we are found in the way of duty, uſing the means God hath given us, we ſhall not be left without a guide. (2.) The word of God, and the miniſtry of it, is now this ſtar to lead us to Jeſus, and bleſſed and happy are they who follow its direction. (3.) When for a while we have been left in the darkneſs of affliction, temptation, or deſertion, with double joy we behold the re-appearing of the day-ſtar to our benighted ſouls, and rejoice with exceeding great joy. (4.) Jeſus is the object of our adorations, to him every knee muſt bow. (5.) The Lord by ſtrange and unexpected ways often ſupplies the wants of his people; they who truſt him, will aſſuredly own that he hath never failed them in time of need.

2. To prevent their return to Jeruſalem according to Herod's deſire, God, by a dream, which carried its own evidence that it came from him, probably the very day or night after their arrival at Bethlehem, warned them not to go back to Herod, and accordingly they immediately departed into their own country another way. So eaſily can God blaſt the malicious deſigns of the ungodly.

13. And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the LORD appeared to Joſeph in a dream, ſaying, Ariſe, and take the young child, and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee [k] Rev. xii. 4. word: for [k] Herod will ſeek the young child to deſtroy him. 14. When he aroſe, he took the young child [l] Mat. ii. 23. and his mother by night, and [l] departed into Egypt:
15. And was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken of the LORD by [m] Hoſ. xi. 1. the prophet, ſaying, [m] Out of Egypt have I called my ſon.

v. 13—15. No ſooner were the wiſe men departed, than God, who knew the cruel intentions of Herod, takes care of the ſafety of the child Jeſus.

1. The Lord in a dream appriſes Joſeph of the danger to which the young child was expoſed, and bids him, without delay, ſecure the babe with his mother, in Egypt, from the fury of this bloody king, and expect further directions there. Immediately, that very night he aroſe and fled with his family to this appointed place of refuge, and there continued till the death of Herod, which ſoon followed the maſſacre of the infants. Note, (1.) The place where God's people ſuffered the bittereſt perſecution, affords an aſylum for his ſon: ſo eaſily can he, who hath in his hands the hearts of all men, make our once inveterate enemies our firmeſt friends. (2.) God's commands the faithful heart obeys without heſitation or delay: having committed our all to him, we muſt be ſafe under his guidance.

2. Particular notice is taken of the fulfilling of the ſcripture herein; out of Egypt have I called my ſon, Hoſ. xi. 1. which whatever reference it hath to Iſrael as a people, had now its moſt direct accompliſhment in the flight of Jeſus thither, and his return from thence.

16. ¶ Then Herod when he ſaw that he was mocked of the wiſe-men, was exceeding wroth, and ſent forth [n] Chap. ii. 34. and [n] ſlew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coaſts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wiſe-men. 17. Then was fulfilled that which was [o] Jer. xxxi. 15. ſpoken by Jeremy the prophet, ſaying, 18. [o] In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation and weeping, and great mourning, Rachael weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, becauſe they are not.

v. 16—18. We are told here, as we might have expected, from the character of this wicked prince,

1. The fury he was in at being diſappointed of the wiſe-men. He waited from day to day, in expectation of receiving intelligence from them, but hearing at laſt they were gone home another way, his jealouſy was more inflamed againſt his ſuppoſed rival, and his wrath more exaſperated.

2. The politic, but inhuman contrivance he formed to rid himſelf of his fears. He ſlew all the male children under two years of age, in all Bethlehem, and the territory belonging to it; being ſatisfied, from the information he had received of the wiſe men, that the infant king could not exceed that age, and therefore muſt periſh in this general maſſacre. An inſtance of barbarity, which, though moſt agreeable to the character of that ſavage monarch, who had with his own hand ſlain his own children, we cannot read without horror; ſo that Auguſtus might well ſay, it was better to be Herod's ſwine, than his ſon. The firſt crown of martyrdom for Jeſus was won by theſe infant ſufferers, and the honour to which they are advanced, infinitely repays the torments they endured.

3. The fulfillment of the ſcripture herein is again obſerved, and to this event, no doubt, the prophet had immediate regard, Jer. xxxi. 15. For though we ſee it fulfilled in a meaſure, when the ſword of the Chaldeans, and the captivity of the Jews which enſued, awakened Rachel, as it were, from her grave, which was near Bethlehem, to lament her children deſtroyed, or led to Babylon; yet, in a peculiarly ſtriking manner may this tender mother's griefs be now ſaid to overflow, when ſo many of her daughters raved with inconſolable anguiſh for their infants torn from their boſom, and writhing on the ſpear of inhuman murderers. Note, Though God forbids us not with acuteſt anguiſh to bewail the ravages death makes in our families, inconſolable grief is ſinful. Chriſtians muſt never ſorrow as if they had no hope, or as if their comforts were all bound up in a dying worm.

19. ¶ But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joſeph in Egypt, 20. Saying, Ariſe, and take the young child, and his mother, and go into the land of Iſrael: [p] for they are [p] Exod. iv. 19. dead which ſought the young child's life. 21. And he aroſe, and took the young child and his mother, and came into the land of Iſrael. 22. But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea, in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither: [q] notwith- [q] Pſ. xlvi. 1. ſtanding being warned of God in a dream, he turned aſide into the parts of Galilee: 23. And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophets, [r] He ſhall be [r] Judg. xiii. 5. Iſa. xi. 1. called a Nazarene.

v. 19—23. The ſojourning of our Lord in Egypt was but ſhort. Quickly after the maſſacre of the infants, Herod was ſtruck with a mortal diſeaſe, loathſome and incurable, that made him a ſpectacle to others, a torment to himſelf. So ſoon can God humble proud tyrants, and make them feel that wrath they would not fear. Hereupon,

1. The Lord ſent his angel, who informed Joſeph in a dream, of Herod's death, and bids him ariſe, ſince he may now ſafely return to the land of Iſrael. They who are driven far from the ordinances of God, and his people, wiſh to be no longer abſent from them than neceſſity obliges them.

2. Joſeph is all obedience: chearful readineſs in following God's direction, being the ſure effect of real devotedneſs to his will. He returns with the child and his mother to the land of Iſrael; but hearing that Archelaus, a ſon of Herod's, and an inheritor of his brutal temper reigned in Judea, he was juſtly afraid of ſettling under his juriſdiction; and in this emergence again the Lord ſignifies his pleaſure to him by his angel, and points him out a place of ſafety, in the obſcure retreat of Nazareth, a little town in Galilee, then under the government of Antipas, another of Herod's children, but a man of a milder temper than his brother. Note, (1.) They who are willing to follow the path of duty, if they knew it, ſhall be directed aright. (2.) No danger muſt deter us when we have God's call to go, but we muſt not willingly ruſh into temptation. (3.) God will find a quiet reſting-place for his people ſometimes under the ſun, but aſſuredly above it.

3. This was done alſo, that the ſcripture might be fulfilled, which ſaid, He ſhall be called a Nazarene; either this refers to Iſa. xi. 1. where Chriſt is called a branch, netzer, out of the root of Jeſſe, the city Nazareth deriving its name from this word: or to Judg. xiii. 5. Samſon being the type of the great Nazarite and Saviour Jeſus. Or rather in general, the propheccies which foretold his mean appearance, and the contempt and reproach he ſhould be expoſed to, were thus fulfilled; Nazareth being a deſpicable place, and his very coming from thence was urged by his enemies as an argument againſt his miſſion, can any good thing come out of ſo mean and contemptible a place as Nazareth? Note, They who are followers of Jeſus of Nazareth, muſt not be aſhamed of his reproach, nor of any opprobrious names with which his enemies and theirs may ſeek to render them odious or deſpicable. The diſciple is then but as his Lord.

v. 1—6. Prophecy under the Old Teſtament cloſed with the promiſe of the coming of Elijah, that is, of one in his ſpirit and temper; and here we find that prophecy accompliſhed in John the Baptiſt, ſo called from the ordinance of baptiſm he adminiſtred to his diſciples; who appeared in thoſe days, not immediately after the events related in the preceding chapter, but at about twenty-ſeven or twenty-eight years diſtance, during which time we never but once hear any thing of our bleſſed Lord, who lived in obſcurity, and not improbably maintained himſelf by manual labour. We have,

1. The place where John opened his miniſtry, in the wilderneſs of Judea; not a place literally uninhabited, but not ſo populous as the other parts of the country. See Joſh. xv. 61, 62.

2. The doctrine he preached: Repentance; a change of mind and principles, and of manners and practice, in both which reſpects the Jewiſh people were exceedingly corrupt: and this he urges on that evangelical conſideration, that the kingdom of heaven is at hand; the kingdom of the Meſſiah, the goſpel diſpenſation, which affords the ſtrongeſt engagements to draw the minds of ſinners to return to God, from the views of the riches of his grace therein revealed. Note, (1.) It is a ſenſe of God's pardoning love revealed in the goſpel, that alone can work the effectual repentance unto ſalvation never to be repented of. (2.) The kingdom of Jeſus is the kingdom of heaven; for all who are now partakers of his grace, are heirs of his glory, and ſure to reign with him for ever. (3.) All the members of Chriſt's kingdom are real penitents, whoſe minds and hearts are changed by grace, and their lives renewed in holineſs.

3. Herein John fulfilled the prophecy delivered concerning him, Iſa. xl. 3, 4. The voice of one crying, loud as the ox bellows, intimating the fervour and vehemence with which John preached, Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make his paths ſtraight. As the harbinger, or herald, he goes before to clear the way for the King of Glory, preaching that repentance which was ſo peculiarly needful at a time when the traditions of men had made God's word of no effect, and the corruption of the general practice was the natural effect of their corrupt principles; and pointing them from their ſinful courſes to him who was the way, the truth, and the life, by whom alone they could be ſaved. Note, (1.) The ways of ſin are crooked ways, that lead down to death and hell. (2.) Nothing can ſave us from them, but repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

4. His garb and diet were auſtere, as his word was ſtartling. He ſeemed an uncouth courtier to prepare the way of the eternal King. A rough garment, girt with a leathern girdle, was his cloathing, as being the promiſed Elias, See 2 Kings i. 8. and his meat was plain and abſtemious, ſuch as the wilderneſs afforded, locuſts and wild honey. Note, They who preach mortification and repentance to others, ſhould themſelves ſhow a becoming indifference to this world, and the gratifications of it.

5. A numerous auditory attended his miniſtry, ſtruck by the ſingularity of his appearance and manners, and, above all, by the power of the word he preached. Multitudes from Jeruſalem, Judea, and the country beyond Jordan, reſorted to him, a general expectation of the Meſſiah being now raiſed through the land; and ſo far were many affected with his diſcourſes, that they made profeſſion of repentance, confeſſed their ſins, and were baptized in Jordan. But among a multitude of profeſſors, the ſequel ſhewed there were few real penitents. Uncommon zeal and ſtriking delivery will often collect an audience, and excite curioſity; but divine grace alone can effect converſion.

It hath been a much-diſputed point, reſpecting the manner of adminiſtring the ordinance of baptiſm, whether by immerſion or ſprinkling; and where the form is reſted upon, inſtead of the power of godlineſs, there is room open for abundant debate. I muſt confeſs, for my own part, I ſee no reaſon to ſuppoſe ſuch immenſe multitudes were all dipped in Jordan, nor how it would be practicable to provide dipping garments for them. nor does the word βαπτιζω (baptizo) convey the ſame meaning as βαπτω (bapto), but rather ſeems to intimate ſprinkling or pouring water upon them; and the baptiſm of the Holy Ghoſt, which this baptiſm of John's prefigured, would lead us ſtrongly to that meaning of the word. But whilſt we ſhould avoid all rigid cenſures on thoſe who differ from us in theſe ceremonials, and ſee that in whatever manner baptiſm be adminiſtered, we do not reſt upon the ordinance, it is an eſſential concern, that our ſouls be really partakers of the thing ſignified; even ſprinkled with the blood of Jeſus, and ſaved by the waſhing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt.

7. ¶ But when he ſaw many of the Phariſees and Sadducees come to his baptiſm, he ſaid unto them, [i] O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from [k] the wrath to come? 8. Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance. 9. And think not to ſay within yourſelves, [l] We have Abraham to our father: for I ſay unto you, that God is able of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children unto Abraham. 10. And now alſo the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore [m] every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and caſt into the fire. 11. [n] I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but he that cometh after me, is mightier than I, whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to bear: [o] he ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire. 12. [p] Whoſe fan is in his hand, and he will throughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner: but [q] he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

v. 7—12. The Phariſees and Sadducees were men of very different characters; the one pretended uncommon ſanctity, and were rigid obſervers of the rituals of religion, deriving their name from that ſeparation of themſelves from other men in which they gloried. The Sadducees, on the other hand, ſo denominated from their maſter Sadok, were the very reverſe; avowedly infidel in their principles, and, it is to be feared, as licentious in their practice. Yet many of both theſe ſects, either ſtruck with John's preaching, or more probably to gain the higher veneration with the people, who were ſtrongly engaged in John's favour as a prophet ſent from God, applied to him for baptiſm; and to them he here addreſſes his diſcourſe.

1. He opens with a moſt ſevere reproof, and mortifying appellation. O generation of vipers, ſpecious, yet venomous as a ſerpent, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? either from their temporal calamities which were approaching, and their repentance might have averted; or from the eternal ruin they had provoked by their pride, hypocriſy, infidelity, and wickedneſs. Note, (1.) To flee from the wrath to come, is every ſinner's great concern; but none will take the warning, till they ſee and feel the imminence of their danger. (2.) Miniſters muſt deal plainly and freely with men's conſciences; nor muſt the ſelf-righteous formaliſt be addreſſed with leſs ſeverity than the abandoned ſinner.

2. He admoniſhes them of their duty. Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance; without which all the water in the river would never profit them any thing; for all who are baptized unto repentance muſt ſee, that in all humility and lowlineſs of mind, in all patience and perſeverance in well-doing, in all holy converſation and godlineſs, they prove the truth of the grace which is in them; elſe ſhall the baptized ſinner be as the heathen man and the publican.

3. He cautions them againſt truſting on their external privileges, on which he knew they depended for acceptance before God. Becauſe they were Abraham's children they flattered themſelves with ſafety, and thought repentance in their caſe unneceſſary: but John would undeceive them; and pointing probably to thoſe ſtones which Joſhua ſet up in Jordan, Joſh. iv. 20. aſſured them God could from theſe raiſe up children to Abraham, and needed not his deſcendants after the fleſh to compoſe his church. Note, (1.) Many flatter themſelves, that their being members of the viſible church, and having partaken of baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper, will ſtand them in ſtead in the day of God, who will find themſelves wofully diſappointed. (2.) Miniſters muſt lay open thoſe refuges of lies to which the ſelf-righteous and the ſinner betake themſelves, and rouſe thoſe to a ſenſe of their danger, who rock themſelves aſleep in vain imaginations. (3) The nearer we are related to great and good men, ſo far from being a protection to us, it will but aggravate our guilt if we degenerate from their piety.

4. He gives them fair warning. The time was ſhort ere judgment would begin at the houſe of God: the ax was now laid to the root of the tree, by the preaching of the goſpel; and their laſt moment of probation expiring. If they rejected the counſel of God, and refuſed to repent and amend their ways, then they were marked for ruin, as trees that bear no fruit, fit only for fuel. The temporal judgments of God ſhall conſume them with their city, or, worſe, the eternal wrath of God ſhall overwhelm them in hell. Note, The day of grace is a precious ſeaſon not to be trifled with; our eternity of happineſs or miſery depends on our neglect or improvement of it.

5. He directs them to that glorious perſonage whoſe forerunner he was, acknowledging his preeminence in all things. He could indeed call them to repentance, and adminiſter baptiſm to thoſe who made profeſſion of it; but a greater than himſelf muſt give the grace to repent, concerning whom he owns he was not worthy to perform the meaneſt offices to him, even to carry his ſhoes after him: ſo lowly are the ſaints of God in their own eyes. He ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire; either at the day of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 3. or his influences, like fire, ſhould purify, warm, and enliven their ſouls. Or, as ſome ſuggeſt, this baptiſm may refer to the judgments he would pour out on the impenitent, when having, like the huſbandman, ſeparated the wheat, his people, from the chaff of hypocrites and unfaithful profeſſors, he would burn up the latter with unquenchable fire. Note, (1.) The operations of God's Spirit in the believer's heart, like fire, illuminate his underſtanding, conſume his vile affections, and raiſe him, as the flame mounts upwards, to high and heavenly things. (2.) The church is Chriſt's floor; in it there is a mixt multitude of good and bad, faithful and hypocrites, as the chaff and wheat lying together: but the day is near when the ſeparation ſhall be made; ſometimes even here by the divine word and providences;

aſſuredly at Chriſt's appearing, when the eternal ſtate of men ſhall be determined. The redeemed then ſhall be gathered as the wheat into God's garner in heaven, ſeparated from all chaff for ever, and not a grain loſt; and the impenitent and reprobate be conſigned to the everlaſting burnings.

13. [r] Then cometh Jeſus [s] from Galilee to Jordan unto John to be baptized of him. 14. But John forbad him, ſaying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comeſt thou to me? 15. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto him, Suffer it to be ſo now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteouſneſs. Then he ſuffered him. 16. And Jeſus, when he was baptized, went up ſtraightway out of the water: and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he ſaw [t] the Spirit of God deſcending like a dove, and lighting upon him. 17. And [u] lo, a voice from heaven, ſaying, [x] This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed.

v. 13—17. Chriſt, who had hitherto lived in obſcurity, began now to enter upon his glorious work, and, in order thereto, comes to John to be baptized, whoſe preaching had raiſed men's expectations concerning the glorious perſon of whom he ſpake. Not that Chriſt needed this baptiſm, but he would ſhew his approbation of it, as well as receive that public teſtimony that John on this occaſion was appointed to bear to him.

1. John, who knew Jeſus by divine revelation, John i. 33. appears unwilling to admit his maſter to the ordinance of baptiſm which he adminiſtred. He who had no ſin, could ſurely need no repentance. Beſides, counting himſelf unworthy of pouring water upon him, from whom himſelf needed the greater baptiſm of the Spirit, he would humbly have excuſed himſelf from the office. I have need to be baptized of thee, and comeſt thou to me? Note, (1.) The moſt holy ſouls are ever the moſt humble. (2.) Chriſt's condeſcenſions are ſo amazing, that our faith ſometimes is ready to ſtagger at the view of them. (3.) The greateſt ſaints and prophets have need of the baptiſm of Jeſus; both of the ſprinkling of his blood to cleanſe their conſciences, and of the influences of his Spirit to purify their hearts; and they are always moſt ſenſible of their wants. (4.) They who preach repentance to others, had need be deeply concerned to be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt themſelves, leſt, after having been the means of ſaving others, they themſelves ſhould be caſt away.

2. The Lord over-rules John's objection. In his preſent ſtate of humiliation it became him to ſubmit to this among other divine inſtitutions, that he might in all things be a pattern of righteouſneſs, and therefore John muſt for the preſent comply. Nor does he any longer heſitate, but admitted him to baptiſm accordingly, fully ſatisfied in the will and wiſdom of his Lord. Note, (1.) It is becoming to countenance and encourage every good work; and thoſe who may be higher in wiſdom and grace than their teachers, are bound nevertheleſs to attend their miniſtry, and ſet an example to others. (2.) Chriſt fulfilled all righteouſneſs, ceremonial as well as moral, and by his obedience is become the end of the law for righteouſneſs to every one that believeth. (3.) There are often reaſons for the divine procedure, concerning which we muſt be content to be ignorant. Thou knoweſt not now, but thou ſhalt know hereafter.

3. God is pleaſed to bear a ſignal atteſtation to the glory of the Redeemer on this occaſion. Immediately as he went up from the river's brink, or from the water, where he had been baptized, the heavens were opened, a chaſm being made in the firmament, as if the everlaſting doors were wide unfolded, and John, as well as Jeſus, beheld the viſible deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon him, in a hovering dove-like motion, and it reſted upon or over his head. He being conſtituted the great prophet of his people, as the man Chriſt Jeſus, had the Spirit without meaſure beſtowed upon him, to enable him for the diſcharge of his office; and in him, as the head of his church, all fulneſs dwells, that he may from thence communicate both gifts and graces to his members according to their wants. And beſides the viſible appearance here deſcribed, an audible voice was heard from the excellent Glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. God's Son, not by creation as angels, or by adoption as the ſaints, but by a filiation peculiar to himſelf, being ſelf-exiſtent and eternal as the Father, yet ſtanding in this relation towards him. Beloved, becauſe the expreſs image of his perſon; and being now become incarnate for our redemption, according to the eternal counſels, therefore God the Father delighted in him, expreſſing his entire ſatisfaction in his undertaking: in whom I am well pleaſed; which he never could ſay of any of the ſons of men beſide, all having ſinned and come ſhort of the glory of God. Jeſus alone is the one glorious character on which God can look with approbation, whoſe righteouſneſs is perfect, and for whoſe ſake it is, as having made the atonement, that any of the ſons of men can find acceptance before God. Becauſe he is well pleaſed with Jeſus, he hath now opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers in him; and whoſoever cometh to God by him ſhall be in no wiſe caſt out. Thus, whilſt every other character, conſidered in itſelf, from the firſt man to the laſt, muſt be God's abhorrence, ſince altogether born in ſin, we may notwithſtanding be ſure of acceptance in this beloved, and ſhall be regarded as complete in him, when we by faith receive him as God hath ſet him forth to us, as our wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption; our all in all.

CHAP. IV.

When Jeſus entered upon his miniſtry, John is ſcarce heard of again, as the ſtars diſappear when the ſun ariſes. We have in this chapter, 1. The temptation Chriſt underwent, the triple aſſault the tempter made upon him, and the repulſe he gave to each aſſault, ver. 1—11. 2. The teaching work he undertook, the places he preached in, ver. 12—16. and the ſubject he preached on, ver. 17. 3. His calling of diſciples, Peter and Andrew, James and John, ver. 18—22. 4. His curing of diſeaſes, ver. 23, 24. and the great reſort of people to him, both to be taught and to be healed.

1. THEN was [a] Jeſus led up of [b] the Spirit into the wilderneſs, [c] to be tempted of the devil. 2. And when he had [d] faſted forty days and forty nights, he was afterwards an hungred. 3. And when the tempter came to him, he ſaid, If thou be the Son of God, command that theſe ſtones be made bread. 4. But he anſwered and ſaid, It is written, [e] Man ſhall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. 5. Then the devil taketh him up into [f] the holy city, and ſetteth him on a pinnacle of the temple, 6. And ſaith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, caſt thyſelf down: for it is written, [g] He ſhall give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they ſhall bear thee up, leſt at any time thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone. 7. Jeſus ſaid unto him, [h] It is written again, [i] Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God. 8. Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and ſheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them: 9. And ſaith unto him, All theſe things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worſhip me. 10. Then ſaith Jeſus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, [k] Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve: 11. [l] Then the devil leaveth him, and behold, [m] angels came and miniſtred unto him.

v. 1—11. Jeſus being now prepared for the battle, enters the liſts againſt the great enemy of ſouls, whoſe kingdom he came to deſtroy. We have,

1. The time of this conflict. Then, immediately after he had received the atteſtation of God to his Sonſhip, and the fulneſs of the Spirit for the exerciſe of his office as Mediator. Note, (1.) Before God calls us into temptation, he will furniſh us with ſpiritual ſtrength. (2.) Great manifeſtations are often the prelude to our ſevereſt conflicts. (3.) The confidence of our adoption of God will be the moſt effectual ſhield to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked one.

2. The place. In the wilderneſs; far from the abode of men, amidſt lonely waſtes, where only the ſavages of the foreſt roamed, to give the enemy every advantage againſt him, and therein more glorioſly to diſplay his own power and all-ſufficiency. The firſt man fell in a paradiſe of delights; the ſecond man ſtood unmoved againſt every blaſt of temptation, firm as the rocks of the wilderneſs, his preſent dreary dwelling.

3. The preparatives to the combat. He was led up of the Spirit, by a divine impulſe on his mind, into the higher, more mountainous, and uninhabited part of the country; and this with deſign to meet the tempter, and defeat all his wiles. And hereunto he condeſcended, (1.) That feeling what ſore temptations mean, he might be a compaſſionate high-prieſt, having been tempted in all points as we are, only without ſin. (2.) To encourage us to truſt him in every time of need. He who defeated that enemy once himſelf, can by the ſame ſtrength make us more than conquerors. Forty days, like Moſes in the mount, he continued there alone, and without ſuſtenance; at laſt he felt all thoſe acute cravings of hunger which, as man, he was ſubject to in common with us, and which gave the enemy another advantage againſt him, and rendered the Redeemer's triumphs more illuſtrious. The firſt repreſentative of mankind, when wallowing in plenty, was tempted by one forbidden tree; the laſt covenant head of his people, though famiſhing for want, is deaf to every ſollicitation of the wicked one.

4. The temptations themſelves; a threefold cord, and yet broken with eaſe. The deſign of them was to ſhake Chriſt's confidence in God, and lead him to ſome diſhonourable ſtep, which, had it been poſſible, muſt have utterly unqualified him for the work of redemption.

(1.) In the firſt temptation the devil ſought to lead him to a diſtruſt of God's providential care and goodneſs; and, in order thereto, the tempter came to him. He had by his ſecret ſuggeſtions, during the forty days before, ſought to diſturb the mind of Jeſus, but in vain; now therefore he aſſumes a viſible form; not ſuch a fearful figure as our early miſguided apprehenſions ſuggeſt, and our deluſive prints hold him forth, but ſome pleaſing human ſhape, or perhaps transformed into an angel of light. The tempter well knew the circumſtances of our Lord, and directs his aſſault where the weakeſt ſide appeared: he hoped the cravings of hunger might lead him to ſome undue means of relief. Thus vigilant and crafty is the wily adverſary to ſuit his temptation to our ſituation and condition; and particularly in want and diſtreſs, to ſuggeſt ſome ſinful expedient to extricate ourſelves from our troubles, without waiting God's leiſure, or conſulting his will. He often ſays, Better ſteal than ſtarve; though God ſays, 'Tis better die than ſin. He prefaces his temptation with a ſly inſinuation; If thou be the Son of God, as if he doubted the fact, though ſo lately the voice from heaven had affirmed it; and he deſired to ſhake the faith of Jeſus, ſuggeſting, that if this really were the caſe, it was inconceivable that God would leave ſuch a one to ſtarve in the wilderneſs. Or, ſeeing thou art the Son of God; he admits the fact, and wiſhes to ſee a preſent exertion of his divine power in a miracle ſo neceſſary for his own ſupport; command that theſe ſtones be made bread. Note, (1.) The great battery of the devil is raiſed againſt our faith; for if the foundation of our confidence be ſhaken, the ſuperſtructure muſt needs totter. He is ever ſtriking at this to make the children of God doubt their adoption; and, in order thereto, he urges againſt them ſometimes their outward diſtreſſes, ſometimes their inward weakneſs and infirmities, as if both the one and the other were inconſiſtent with the relation they claim. (2.) If once the enemy can engage us to entertain hard thoughts of God, then he is ſure to prevail.

Chriſt repels the aſſaults of the wicked one with the ſhield of faith, and the ſword of the ſpirit, which is the word of God, and therein teaches us how to ward off the like temptations. He anſwered and ſaid, It is written, Man ſhall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. The Lord hath other ways of ſupporting men's bodies than by bread merely; and therefore it was not ſo abſolutely neceſſary for his ſuſtenance, but that he could be ſupported without it; nor would he at Satan's inſtigation do that which might look like diſtruſt of his Father's care, doubt of his word, or ſuſpicion of his relation to him. Note, (1.) The written word is the only rule of our faith and practice: if Chriſt himſelf adhered to that alone, let no pretences of the Spirit's ſuperior teaching lead us off from this ſure guide. (2.) God's time is the beſt time, and he that believeth will not make haſte; will take no raſh ſtep for his own relief under his trials, but patiently expect the ſalvation of God.

(2.) The firſt attack being repelled, a ſecond is prepared: ſince he cannot lead the Saviour to diſtruſt or deſpair, he will try to puff him up with preſumption. So unwearied is the tempter, and often changing his wiles, according to our circumſtances, from one extreme to the other.

He taketh him up, by divine permiſſion, with the conſent of Jeſus, who ſuffered the devil to have ſuch power over his body, and to carry him, into the holy city, Jeruſalem, ſo called from the peculiar privileges it enjoyed of God's worſhip and ordinances, and ſet him upon a pinnacle or wing of the temple; one of the battlements probably, which was of an immenſe height. And ſince Jeſus had expreſſed ſuch confidence in his Father, and unſhaken dependance on his word, he grounds thereon his temptation: If thou be the Son of God, caſt thyſelf down, and give an inconteſtible proof of it to the prieſts and people worſhipping below, who will no doubt receive thee as the Meſſiah, when thus coming as if immediately from heaven into the temple: nor will there be any danger in the experiment, ſince it is written, and therein thou art fully ſatisfied, He ſhall give his angels, &c. The application of which words to Chriſt was right; but a part of the text is artfully ſuppreſſed, in all thy ways; for out of the way of duty we may never hope for protection. And it is miſapplied, being deſigned not to tempt men to ruſh into temptation, preſuming upon the divine care; but to engage the faithful to truſt God in time of trial, aſſured of divine ſupport. From all which we may obſerve, (1.) That one grand engine of the tempter is, to make our heads giddy by ſetting us up on high. The pinnacle of the temple is a dangerous exaltation. Thoſe who are eminent in ſtation, fortune, or reputation; advanced to dignities in church or ſtate; or diſtinguiſhed with abilities, gifts, graces, or even ſucceſs in their miniſtry; need to tremble for themſelves, and the higher they ſtand, to cleave the faſter to Jeſus their temple, leſt their exaltation prove their deſtruction. (2.) Though the devil can tempt, he cannot compel. Sin is our own act; and without our conſent the moſt dire temptations faſten not the leaſt evil on our conſciences. Should we be tempted to the greateſt crimes, to ſelf-murder, or blaſphemy, the Son of God was himſelf thus tempted, yet without ſin. (3.) Scriptures may be ſuggeſted by the enemy to the minds of God's people, much to their diſtreſs and diſcouragement on the one hand, or, on the other, to lull their conſciences in fatal ſecurity; therefore we muſt ſearch the ſcriptures diligently, that we may know what is God's mind therein, and be kept from thoſe dangerous errors and deluſions, which often the ſcriptures are vouched to patronize. (4.) We muſt never ſeparate the means from the end, nor expect out of God's way the protection of his providence and grace. Though Jeſus is a Saviour to the uttermoſt, we may not ſin that grace may abound; and predeſtination to life eternal neceſſarily includes the diligent improvement of all the means needful to make our election ſure.

The ſame word of truth ſupplies our Lord with a full confutation of Satan's ſophiſtry; for in the ſcriptures there is an anſwer ready for every caſe; and we can be in no circumſtance or temptation, but that word will afford us direction, ſtrength, and comfort. It is written again, Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God. The tempter had ſaid, It is written; but the ſcripture cannot contradict itſelf, and therefore to know the mind of God, we muſt compare ſpiritual things with ſpiritual, and not mutilate the word of truth, nor apply it contrary to the intention of the Spirit. To truſt God is duty; to tempt him is ſinful. Chriſt needed no confirmation of what he was already aſſured; nor was he called unneceſſarily to make an experiment of God's power in ſuch a miraculous preſervation.

(3.) Once more, though baffled, the enemy returns to the charge; and ſummoning up all his force in one blow, by the moſt glaring diſplay of this world's glory tempts our Lord to the horrid crime of idolatry. The foreſt of our temptations is ſometimes reſerved for the laſt, that God's power and grace may be more glorioſly diſplayed, and the devil's malice moſt bitterly diſappointed.

Again the devil taketh him up, probably tranſported him thro' the air, into an exceeding high mountain, that the fictitious ſcene he was about to diſplay might appear real; and there he ſhewed him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them. Whatever grandeur, wealth, pleaſure, reigned in them, were ſet before him in the moſt enlivened colours, to catch his fancy, and engage his admiration: and all theſe he proffers to beſtow on him, on one condition, which thouſands, without any ſuch reward, were daily doing; if thou wilt fall down and worſhip me. A propoſal ſo horrid, as would not bear a thought, and is rejected with deteſtation: Get thee hence, Satan; ſuch inſolence provoked the Saviour's righteous indignation, and he drives the tempter from his preſence, unable to endure ſuch a daring attempt upon the majeſty of Jehovah, the only object of worſhip; for it is written, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve. Note, (1.) The minds of God's greateſt ſaints may be ſometimes harraſſed with the moſt blaſphemous ſuggeſtions, and they ſhould not count this as if ſome ſtrange thing happened unto them. (2.) The glory of the world is the grand ſnare the enemy lays for men's ſouls; and it looks very deſirable to the eye of ſenſe; but faith ſees through the deluſion, beholds vanity ſtamped on every thing beneath the ſun, and ſcorns all this which Satan offers as dung and loſs, compared with the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt, and the glories of his grace. (3.) Some temptations come under the guiſe of plauſibility and harmleſſneſs, and require recollection before we can diſcover the craft of the devil; others bring the brand of hell in their forehead, and would bear men down merely with the weight of the preſent advantage thence accruing: theſe muſt not be parlyed with a moment, but rejected with abhorrence. (4.) God is alone the object of worſhip; and whatever elſe be made the idol of our adoration, whether the horrid forms of monſters in a pagod, or the images of ſaints, and virgins, and crucifixes in a popiſh chapel, it is no better than falling down to the devil.

5. Satan, now vanquiſhed and unable to reſiſt the commanding word of Jeſus, quits the field. He found him more than man, invulnerable in every part, and feels himſelf a vanquiſhed foe. Thus ſhall the ſons of God through this great Captain of their ſalvation tread Satan under their feet; enabled to wreſtle with ſpiritual wickedneſſes, and to prevail againſt the powers of darkneſs. Though hard the conflict, the victory is ſure to all who ſtand faſt, ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.

6. The angels, the attendant ſervants of Jeſus, now viſibly appeared, and miniſtred unto him. They had beheld, as ſpectators, the conflict and triumphs of the Lord, and now congratulate his victory, and ſupply him with thoſe needful refreſhments which his exhauſted body craved. Note, (1.) Chriſt alone obtained the victory for us; his own arm hath brought ſalvation unto him. (2.) Angels miniſter to the heirs of ſalvation; we need not fear therefore what devils can do againſt us. (3.) Though our relief be for a while delayed, it ſhall aſſuredly come at laſt. Truſt in the Lord therefore, and verily thou ſhalt be fed. (4.) Our Maſter was himſelf tempted, that he might feel for us, and ſupply us with all needful ſupports, when we are in like manner ſore thruſt at that we ſhould fall.

12. ¶ [m] Now when Jeſus had heard that John was caſt into priſon, he departed into Galilee. 13. And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum which is upon the ſea-coaſt, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim: 14. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the prophet, ſaying, 15. [n] The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the ſea beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles: 16. The people which ſat in darkneſs ſaw great light: and to them which ſat in the region and ſhadow of death, light is ſprung up. 17. ¶ From that time Jeſus began to preach, and to ſay, [o] Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

v. 12—17. Chriſt now, having entered upon his miniſtry, began to publiſh the glad tidings of that ſalvation he came to procure. Many events are recorded which intervened between his temptations on the mount and his abode at Capernaum: theſe we ſhall meet with in the other evangeliſts. Matthew haſtens forward to the time when John was caſt into priſon; on which occaſion Jeſus departed from Nazareth to Galilee, and fixed his abode at Capernaum, a city in the tribe of Nephthali, bordering on Zebulon, ſituate on the ſea of Tiberias, called elſewhere the lake of Genneſareth. The men of Nazareth had rejected him, Luke iv. 29. and therefore God juſtly leaves them to themſelves, and ſends his Son and his goſpel to a place that will more chearfully welcome them.

1. Eſpecial notice is here taken of the fulfilment of the Scripture in this removal of our Lord; as Iſaias had before of old propheſied, that the people in theſe regions of Zebulon and Nephthali, called Galilee of the Gentiles from the intermixture of a multitude of ſtrangers of other nations among the Jews; which ſat in darkneſs, in ſpiritual darkneſs and ignorance; ſaw a great light, Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs ariſing with healing in his wings, and bringing life and light and liberty to thoſe who ſat in the region and ſhadow of death, dead in treſpaſſes and ſins till quickened by the effectual power of this Saviour's grace, and enlightened by the glorious goſpel he preached. Note, (1.) They who are deſtitute of the knowledge of Chriſt are in darkneſs reſpecting all the things that make for their everlaſting peace, and near the borders of eternal death. (2.) Chriſt is to the ſoul what the ſun is to the world; yea more; for he is not only the author of light, but gives the faculty of viſion alſo, without which the light would ſhine in darkneſs, and the darkneſs never comprehend it. (3.) The way in which ſpiritual light is diffuſed is by the preaching of the goſpel; where this is not truly miniſtred, darkneſs muſt needs reign uncontrouled.

2. We are told what was the ſubject of his miniſtry from the time he began to open his commiſſion; Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand; the ſame words and the ſame ſubject on which John his harbinger had preached before: for in the great eſſential doctrines all faithful miniſters of the goſpel perfectly agree. Jeſus preached repentance, not only as what we muſt do, but what he would give, without which in vain were every call to repent.

18. ¶ And [p] Jeſus walking by the ſea of Galilee, ſaw two brethren, Simon, called Peter, and Andrew his brother, caſting a net into the ſea: (for they were fiſhers.) 19. And he ſaith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fiſhers of men. 20. And [q] they ſtraightway left their nets and followed him. 21. And [r] going from thence, he ſaw other two brethren, James the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ſhip with Zebedee their father, mending their nets: and he called them. 22. And they immediately [s] left the ſhip and their father, and followed him.

v. 18—22. Chriſt being now about to erect his kingdom in the world, he is pleaſed to make choice of certain perſons to be the conſtant attendants of his miniſtry and ſpectators of his miracles, that they might afterwards go forth to tell of the things they had heard and ſeen, and ſpread the goſpel of their maſter to the ends of the earth.

1. The perſons he made choice of were ſuch as to human view were very unfit inſtruments for the work; but the more evident would it be that the power was of God, and not of them, when afterwards they appeared ſo mighty in word and deed. They were by occupation fiſhermen, whom Jeſus, as he walked by the ſea-ſhore, ſaw employed in their honeſt and laborious vocation: the firſt two were caſting a net into the ſea, brethren by blood as well as buſineſs, their names Simon and Andrew, men unlettered, unknown, and unnoticed; the next two were of the like employment, and with their father Zebedee mending their nets. Note, (1.) Not only to the poor was the goſpel preached by our Lord, but from them the great pillars of the church were taken: let them therefore never be deſpiſed. (2.) It is happy in a family when brethren in blood are brethren in the Lord, and heirs together of the grace of life. (3.) Induſtry is highly commendable, and Jeſus wills that all his ſervants ſhould be found well employed: idleneſs is the ſure characteriſtic of Satan's ſervice.

2. They had it ſeems before, ſee John i. 37. become acquainted with Chriſt, but now they are called to conſtant attendance upon him, Follow me; and, by an image taken from their preſent employment, he lets them know the more honourable ſervice for which he deſigned them, I will make you fiſhers of men, the inſtruments of gathering ſouls by the goſpel into his church. And what he calls them to he will qualify them for: in following him they ſhall learn a wiſdom which the ſchools can never teach them. Note, (1.) Unleſs miniſters have a divine call, as well as a human ordination, they will run without being ſent, and can expect no bleſſing in their work. (2.) None can truly preach Chriſt who have not firſt faithfully followed him. (3.) If in our ordinary vocations diligence is neceſſary, how much more needful is it that fiſhers of men ſhould be indefatigable and laborious, when the gain of immortal ſouls will ſo amply repay their toil.

3. Theſe diſciples immediately obeyed the call, quitting their employment, and leaving their deareſt relatives, to devote and attach themſelves entirely to their divine Lord and Maſter; ſuch power had his conſtraining word, and ſo readily and chearfully did they follow him. Note, (1.) When Chriſt effectually calls a ſinner, ſuch power accompanies his word as draws the heart by irreſiſtible bonds of love unto his bleſſed Self. (2.) There are ſeaſons when, for the ſake of Chriſt, we muſt be ready to part with all. (3.) Thoſe who are employed in the miniſtry have eſpecial need to detach themſelves from worldly concerns, that they may give themſelves wholly up to their awful truſt and charge.

23. ¶ And Jeſus went about all Galilee, [t] teaching in their ſynagogues, and preaching the goſpel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of ſickneſs and all manner of diſeaſe among the people. 24. And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all ſick people that were taken with divers diſeaſes and torments, and thoſe which were poſſeſſed with devils, and thoſe which were lunatic, and thoſe that had the palſy; and he healed them. 25. And [u] there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jeruſalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan.

[t] Chap. ix. 35.
[u] Mark iii. 7.

v. 23—25. We have here,

1. Chriſt's labours as a preacher. All Galilee heard his teaching; he appeared publicly in their ſynagogues, and publiſhed the goſpel of the kingdom, the glad tidings of ſalvation, exhorting his hearers to that repentance and newneſs of life which became thoſe who had received the grace of God in truth.

2. His cures as a phyſician, wrought in confirmation of his doctrine. He did good to men's bodies as well as ſouls, and by a word healed all manner of ſickneſs and diſeaſes among the people, however violent, inveterate, or of long ſtanding: the incurables of other phyſicians went from him reſtored to perfect health and ſoundneſs. Nor did he merely relieve the moſt tormenting diſorders of the body, but the more deplorable ones of the mind; the lunatic recovered the perfect exerciſe of his reaſon, and the poſſeſſed, whoſe bodies by divine permiſſion Satan's legions had ſeized and miſerably harraſſed, were ſet free, and the foul fiends ejected. No painful operations, no tedious courſe of medicine almoſt as bad as the malady, were employed: a word, a touch, compleated the cure; and all was freely done, without money and without price. The moſt wretched, the pooreſt, never applied in vain. No marvel that his fame ſpread through the adjacent coaſts of Syria, and that multitudes of patients ſought this great phyſician's help. His cures beſpoke his character, and vouched for his miſſion; they were innumerable, public, immediate, perfect, ſuch as none could diſpute or gainſay, his very enemies being judges. And they repreſent the more noble cures of men's ſouls by divine grace from all the diſeaſes of ſin, wherein we ſee the Saviour's power ſtill diſplayed.

3. His popularity ariſing from both. An immenſe auditory, from all the parts, near and diſtant, aſſembled, curious to hear, or deſirous to be healed, or convinced by his preaching and miracles, or enviouſly waiting for an opportunity to deſtroy him. Note, (1.) The preachers of the goſpel will generally be popular; their meſſage engages the attention of an auditory. (2.) Multitudes hear the goſpel, but few receive it to the ſaving of their ſouls.

CHAP. V.

This chapter, with the two following, contains our Saviour's ſermon on the mount, the deſign of which ſeems to be not only to reſcue the law from the corrupt gloſſes of the elders, but, by opening its ſpirituality, to ſhew the neceſſity of a better righteouſneſs than our own, in order to our acceptance with God. After the preparatory circum-

circumſtances, ver. 1, 2. He ſhews, 1. Wherein true bleſſedneſs conſiſts, ver. 3—12. 2. Preſcribes the ſtanding rules of his diſciples duty, ver. 13—20. 3. Gives the true expoſition of God's law, in oppoſition to the corrupt gloſſes of the Scribes and Phariſees, ver. 21—48.

1. AND ſeeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was ſet, his diſciples came unto him. 2. And [a] he opened his mouth, and taught them, ſaying,

v. 1, 2. Among the multitudes who followed him, many profeſſed themſelves his diſciples. For their ſakes therefore eſpecially, as well as for the improvement of all who attended him, he took the preſent opportunity to lay open to them at large the doctrines of truth. For the convenience of being heard, he went up to a mountain, where, ſurrounded by his diſciples, and ſeated amidſt the attentive throng, He opened his mouth, and taught them; whilſt they hung upon his lips, and in ſilence, with their eyes fixed on him, drank in the ſacred truths he uttered. Note, It is enlivening and encouraging to the miniſters of the goſpel to behold a numerous and attentive auditory; and that is ſacred fire, which not the deſire of being popular, but the hope of being extenſively uſeful, kindles in their heart, and gives energy and warmth to their diſcourſe.

v. 3—12. To be happy is the univerſal deſire; but, whilſt all purſue this as their aim, few, very few, attain the accompliſhment of their wiſhes: and the reaſon is evident: they miſtake both wherein man's true happineſs conſiſts, and the means which lead to it; conſequently are ever bewildered in a fruitleſs ſearch, and tormented with continual diſappointment. To divert us from our wrong purſuits, to inform us what is our true good, and to direct us to the attainment of real bleſſedneſs, is the gracious deſign of our adored Lord. Yet to many the doctrines he advances will appear paradoxical and ſtrange; tho', bleſſed be his name, every enlightened and converted ſoul will own, that, however ſtrange they ſeem to others, they are found by his happy experience to be indeed the true ſayings of God.

In eight characters Chriſt ſhews wherein true bleſſedneſs conſiſts, and pronounces on each, Bleſſed are ye: at preſent they are the truly happy ſouls on earth, and their reward awaiteth them eternally in heaven. O may this bleſſedneſs be mine!

Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Wherein then doth this poverty of ſpirit conſiſt? I anſwer, (1.) In a deep and humbling ſenſe of our own ſpiritual wants and wretchedneſs, which brings off the ſinner from every dependance upon his own goodneſs for acceptance with God, and his own abilities to walk and pleaſe him, to a conſtant renunciation of himſelf, to a repoſe of his confidence on the blood and righteouſneſs of Jeſus alone as his title to God's regard, and on the grace of Jeſus for all ſufficiency to think or act aright. (2.) In an entire reſignation of ourſelves to God, and contentment with our lot; ſitting looſe to the world and all the things of it; in poverty chearful, our minds conformed to our condition; in proſperity humble, condeſcending, kind, and ſympathizing with the neceſſitous. (3.) In low thoughts of ourſelves, our abilities, attainments, and poſſeſſions of whatever kind; in honour preferring others to ourſelves, the laſt and leaſt in our own opinion; and ſeeing much, very much, to humble us in the view of our miſimprovement of thoſe bleſſings which God hath beſtowed on us, and in which he hath made us to differ from others. Now ſuch as theſe are bleſſed in the preſent ſatisfaction ariſing from the exerciſe of ſuch a ſpirit and temper, and in a happy freedom from the murmurs, repinings, diſcontent, and mortifications, which make the proud and diſcontented perpetually uneaſy. They are bleſſed with the experience of God's love and favour, who looks with delight and approbation on him that is poor and of a contrite ſpirit; and, as the ſummit of all felicity, theirs is the kingdom of heaven; the riches of the kingdom of grace below, and all the unſearchable riches of Chriſt and glory above, are their aſſured and eternal portion.

The ſecond beatitude.

Bleſſed are they that mourn. We are apt to count mourners miſerable, and to judge of happineſs by the ſmiles of the countenance; but Chriſt teaches us a different leſſon. Not that all who mourn are bleſſed: there is the mourning of diſcontent, the ſorrow of the world that worketh death, the inconſolable tears of thoſe who lament like Micah after their idols, and the melancholy of deſpair; theſe bring a curſe and torment inſtead of a bleſſing. The mourning here commended is, (1.) A penitential mourning over ſin, in the views of our baſe ingratitude; a mourning after God, under darkneſs and deſertion; a mourning over the diſhonour brought upon him by the impieties of the wicked and the unfaithfulneſs of his people; a mourning over the diſtreſſes of the miſerable, and eſpecially a mourning over loſt ſouls, which makes our tears like thoſe of Jeſus flow, whilſt we are pouring forth before God our fervent prayers on their behalf. Theſe are bleſſed: the tears ſhed for ſin have a ſweetneſs unutterable; a ſacred pleaſure mingles with them, to which all the noiſy mirth of fools, excluſive of the heavineſs which ſucceeds, is not to be compared; and they are the ſeed of eternal joy, for they ſhall be comforted, here below, in a ſenſe of God's love ſhed abroad in their hearts, in the conſolations ariſing from a ſenſe of pardoning love, in the ſacred delight of beholding ſinners turned from the evil of their ways; and hereafter in the eternal fruition of God, and the inconceivable bleſſedneſs thence ariſing, when every tear ſhall be wiped from our eyes, and we ſhall drink of pure, unſullied, and eternal pleaſures as out of a river.

The third beatitude.

Bleſſed are the meek. Reſpecting God, ſubmiſſive to his word and providences; never replying againſt the one, or murmuring againſt the other: reſpecting man, mild, inoffenſive, eaſy to be intreated, unmoved with provocation, forbearing and forgiving, reſenting no injuries, actuated by no private revenge, in patience and peace poſſeſſing their ſouls; yet not mean-ſpirited, cowardly, and tame, through fear of man; but, whilſt in their own cauſe gentle as the lamb, in the cauſe of God and truth bold as lions; zealous to maintain the rights of others, whilſt they recede from their own; and ſteady patrons of the injured and the abſent. They are bleſſed; they are, like their Lord, happy in themſelves, beloved of all who know the value of ſuch a ſpirit, and dear in the ſight of God. They ſhall inherit the earth, ſhall have as much of this preſent world as is for their good; but above all, and what ſeems here chiefly intended, they ſhall have a part in that better new earth wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs, and be counted inheritors among the ſaints in light.

The fourth beatitude.

Bleſſed are thoſe who hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs. The righteouſneſs here ſpoken of as the object of deſire is, (1.) The imputed righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, which the guilty ſinner, who feels his ſpiritual nakedneſs, eagerly longs for, as the famiſhed cries for food, or the parched throat craves the cooling draught, aſſured without it he muſt periſh. (2.) The implanted righteouſneſs which the Spirit of Jeſus communicates: and for this the poor and helpleſs ſinner hungers more than for his daily bread; inaſmuch as the life and health of his ſoul are infinitely preferable to the life and health of his body. Theſe are bleſſed ſouls; for every ſuch deſire is in a meaſure the proof of our poſſeſſing the righteouſneſs after which we pant; and they ſhall be filled out of the fulneſs of Jeſus, who hath enough of both to ſupply all their wants, to make them completely righteous in himſelf here, and to fill them with joy and peace in believing; and hereafter to perfect them in holineſs, and bring them to happineſs eternal.

Bleſſed are the merciful. This is the moſt amiable character of God, and herein his people reſemble him. (1.) Mercy is their temper, they have a heart that can be touched with human wretchedneſs; and though they may not have it always in their power to relieve, they are ever tenderly compaſſionate towards the diſtreſſes of the miſerable. (2.) Mercy is their practice: ſo far as their power extends they are ready to ſhew mercy; yea, they take delight therein, and count this work its own reward. They are merciful to men's ſouls; pitying and inſtructing the ignorant, warning the unruly, comforting the feeble mind, helping the weak, and labouring to ſnatch the wicked as brands from the burning. They are merciful to men's bodies; relieving the neceſſities of the poor, the friendleſs, and the deſtitute; they are eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, phyſicians to the ſick, ſupports to the aged and infirm; ready to aſſiſt with their advice, their purſe, or influence, according to the various diſtreſſes of thoſe who apply to them: yea, diligent to diſcover thoſe objects of modeſt worth and neglected indigence that are aſhamed or backward to apply for relief. They are merciful even to the brute beaſts: not only their ſervants and labourers are never vexed with unreaſonable burdens; their very cattle ſhare their clemency, and own the kind and tender maſter. This is bleſſedneſs. They who are thus like God in ſpirit, will taſte ſomething of divine felicity; and of all the joys beneath the ſun none will be found comparable with the exalted pleaſure of doing good. And they ſhall obtain mercy: ſuch merciful ones plead no merit: the more they are enabled to do, the leſs opinion they entertain of their deſerts, as every advance in grace brings proportionably greater light, and therewith greater humility. They caſt themſelves therefore wholly on the mercy of God in Jeſus Chriſt, and they ſhall find mercy of the Lord in the great day; and more they need not wiſh for, ſince his mercy includes eternal life and glory.

The ſixth beatitude.

Bleſſed are the pure in heart; who by faith are cleanſed from all allowed hypocriſy, covetouſneſs, pride, and ſenſuality; jealous to keep themſelves unſpotted from the world; maintaining undefiled religion; in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity walking with God; and deſiring, as the ſummit of their happineſs, to be perfect as their Father which is in heaven is perfect. They are bleſſed in the preſent paths of pleaſantneſs and peace in which they go, and they ſhall ſee God as the conſummation of all felicity; be with him where he is; be like him as he is; and from the light of his countenance, and the conſtant effuſions of his love, drink in bleſſedneſs unutterable and eternal.

The ſeventh beatitude.

Bleſſed are the peace-makers; men of peace themſelves, and deſirous to cultivate the like diſpoſition among others; following it with all men as far as is conſiſtent with truth and purity; averſe to all diſputes and angry contentions; ſoftening the ſpirits of the exaſperated; and kindly interpoſing, though ſometimes at the expence of much ill-will, to repair the breaches, and heal the diviſions, which the fiery and ſelf-willed ſpirits of others have occaſioned: the firſt to forgive, the laſt to be offended; and where others prepare themſelves for battle, ſtill ready, though injured, to ſeek reconciliation. Such men ſhall be bleſſed in their deed: they ſhall be accounted faithful ſubjects of the Prince of peace, and be called the children of God, who is the God of peace; and if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt, appointed to reign with him in glory everlaſting.

Bleſſed are they that are perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake. All who follow Chriſt muſt expect his croſs; and every godly man, as long as a child of wickedneſs is in the world, muſt ſuffer perſecution of one kind or other: where power is with oppreſſors, there it will reach to fines, impriſonment, and even death itſelf; where milder governments give protection from groſſer injuries, there the lower methods of reviling, calumny, falſehood, inſult, ridicule, and vile miſrepreſentations, will be the lot of Chriſt's diſciples. Various pretexts indeed are commonly uſed to give a ſpecious colouring to this conduct in lands profeſſing godlineſs, as if it was not righteouſneſs men perſecuted, but what they are pleaſed to call enthuſiaſm, or to ſtamp with ſome other opprobrious name: but, whatever occaſional offences may have been given, the ground and root of the malignity ſhewn againſt the people of God is their profeſſion of the doctrines of the divine righteouſneſs, which the proud and wiſe men muſt ever ſcoff at; and the practice of experimental godlineſs, which is equally reproving and offenſive to the formal and profane: on which accounts therefore, now and ever, the few faithful muſt expect to follow Jeſus bearing his reproach. But, however they are regarded among men, they are pronounced bleſſed by the author of all bleſſing, and theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Nor need any now marvel at theſe things among us, when, among God's profeſſing people of old, the prophets were ſo perſecuted before us, Jeremiah, Iſaiah, Elijah, &c. and therefore we are commanded to rejoice and be exceeding glad to be numbered among ſuch worthies, and expect that great reward in glory which God hath promiſed to thoſe who, by patient continuance in well doing, ſeek with them glory, honour, and immortality.

13. Ye are the ſalt of the earth: [t] but if the ſalt have loſt his ſavour, wherewith ſhall it be ſalted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be caſt out, and to be trodden under foot of men. 14. [u] Ye are the light of the world. A city that is ſet on a hill cannot be hid. 15. [x] Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a buſhel: but on a candleſtick, and it giveth light unto all that are in the houſe. 16. Let your light ſo ſhine before men, [y] that they may ſee your good words, and [z] glorify your Father which is in heaven.

v. 13—16. Theſe words are directed to the diſciples in general, and to the apoſtles and miniſters of Chriſt in particular, and their character is ſet forth under two ſimilitudes.

1. As the ſalt of the earth. Their lives and converſations muſt be exemplary; not only free from taint themſelves, that is, from the allowed practice of ſin, but endeavouring to preſerve others from the putrefaction of it; ſeaſoning the earth with the doctrines of the goſpel, diffuſing the ſavour of the knowledge of Chriſt in every place, and thus becoming bleſſings to mankind. But, ſhould they depart from the truth, diſgrace their character, degenerate into lukewarmneſs and indifference, or apoſtatize to erroneous principles and licentious practices, their ſtate, if not utterly deſperate, is ſeldom ever retrieved; like ſtars they fall to riſe no more: though their profeſſion may continue, their ſavour is loſt, they become inſipid and taſteleſs, and are doomed to be caſt out and trodden under foot of men as worthleſs and contemptible, expelled from the communion of the ſaints below, and everlaſtingly excluded from the aſſembly of the bleſſed above.

2. As the light of the world, to ſpread the bright truths of ſalvation among benighted mortals, and point out to them the path which leads to eternal day; eſpecially to lead ſinners to Chriſt the light of life: and in ſo doing they would be diſtinguiſhed as a city ſet on a hill, and needed peculiar circumſpection whilſt ſo many eyes would be fixed upon them. Every miniſter, every chriſtian, ſtands on an eminence; more is expected from them than from others, and many watch for their halting: as candles are lighted not to be covered, but to be ſet on a candleſtick, and give light to all in the houſe, ſo were they endued with gifts and graces to illuminate the church of Chriſt, and diffuſe the goſpel word around, neither through fear or ſhame concealing ought of the whole counſel of God; and in their lives, as well as lips, muſt their light ſhine, in every work of faith and labour of love which may be profitable to men's bodies or ſouls; that, whilſt others are ſtirred up to holy emulation thereby, abundant praiſe alſo may redound to God, who is then eminently glorified when his people bring forth much fruit.

17. ¶ Think not that I am come to deſtroy the law or the prophets: [a] I am not come to deſtroy, but to fulfil. 18. For verily I ſay unto you, [b] Till heaven and earth paſs, one jot or one tittle ſhall in no wiſe paſs from the law, till all be fulfilled. 19. [c] Whoſoever therefore ſhall break one of theſe leaſt commandments, and ſhall teach men ſo, he ſhall be called the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven: but whoſoever ſhall do and teach them, the ſame ſhall be called great in the kingdom of heaven. 20. For I ſay unto you, That except your righteouſneſs ſhall exceed [d] the righteouſneſs of the ſcribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no caſe enter into the kingdom of heaven.

v. 17—20. As the former verſes ſeemed particularly addreſſed to his diſciples, our Lord here more generally directs his diſcourſe to the multitude.

1. He obviates the prejudices he knew many would entertain, and confutes the objections his enemies would make, as if he was about to abrogate the law, and introduce a new ſyſtem, when in fact he only meant to reſcue the oracles of God from the corrupt gloſſes the falſe teachers had put on them.

[1.] He is not come to deſtroy the law and the prophets, as ſome of them might think, but to fulfil them. To fulfil the moral law, by his own perfect obedience; the ceremonial, by anſwering in his own perſon, and oblation of himſelf, all the types and figures; the prophets, by accompliſhing all their predictions; yea, and ſo far from looſening the obligations to obedience, he came, in perfect correſpondence with God's miniſters before him, to enforce them, and to vindicate the everlaſting rule of moral righteouſneſs from the miſtakes and adulterations of the Scribes and Phariſees, to explain its ſpirituality and extent, and from right principles to urge the practice of true holineſs.

[2.] He aſſerts the perpetuity and eternal obligation of the moral law: whilſt heaven and earth endures, not a tittle ſhall paſs from it unaccompliſhed, nor the leaſt of its commands ever be aboliſhed. It is the tranſcript of God's holineſs; he can require nothing leſs; the leaſt failure is eternally mortal; and though we are relieved by the blood and righteouſneſs of our divine Subſtitute from the condemning power of the law, our duty ſtill remains the ſame, and we are as much as ever bound to regard this as the one unerring rule of obedience. Whoever therefore dares avowedly to tranſgreſs the leaſt command, and teach others to do ſo, by his example or his preaching, as if it might be done with impunity, which was the caſe with many of the rabbi's of that day, he ſhall be rejected of God as leaſt eſteemed and worthleſs, and have no part in the kingdom of heaven; whilſt they who, by the purity of their doctrine and the exemplarineſs of their conduct, enforce the neceſſity of obedience to every command, accounting none too trivial to be obſerved, they ſhall be eſteemed and honoured of God as faithful here, and exalted to eternal glory hereafter. Note, (1.) The leaſt ſin hath eternal death for its wages. (2.) They who extenuate the evil of ſin, and promiſe tranſgreſſors impunity, will be reckoned with as the moſt daring rebels againſt God's government.

2. He profeſſes it his purpoſe to enforce a righteouſneſs beyond that of their moſt admired characters the Scribes and Phariſees, who were thought even to go to works of ſupererogation; and yet, what perhaps they would hear with aſtoniſhment, he aſſures his hearers their righteouſneſs muſt exceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, or they may never hope to enter the kingdom of heaven. The moſt extenſive phariſaical righteouſneſs of doctrinal orthodoxy, ſcrupulous exactneſs in the forms of religion, abſtinence from groſſer vices, accompanied with whatever alms, or faſtings, or prayers, comes infinitely ſhort of the ſpirituality of God's law; a perfect righteouſneſs is required, which can alone be found in the adored Jeſus, and that everlaſting righteouſneſs he was ordained to bring in, which faith embraces, and working by love, its genuine fruit, enables the redeemed to act on principles a Phariſee never knew; it purifies the heart, engages the ſoul to an univerſal delight in the law of God after the inward man, and begets the deſire of unreſerved obedience thereunto. And though in many things we all offend, yet are our perſons and ſervices then acceptable to God in Jeſus Chriſt, whilſt all the duties of the formal and ſelf-righteous, when ſtrained to the higheſt pitch, are only a greater abomination in the ſight of God.

But I ſay unto you, that [g] whoſoever is angry with his brother without a cauſe, ſhall be in danger of the judgment: and whoſoever ſhall ſay to his brother, ‡ Raca, ſhall be in danger of the council: but whoſoever ſhall ſay, Thou fool, ſhall be in danger of hell-fire. 23. Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee; 24. [h] Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, firſt be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. 25. [i] Agree with thine adverſary quickly, [k] whilſt thou art in the way with him, leſt at any time the adverſary deliver thee to [l] the judge, and the judge deliver thee to [m] the officer, and thou be caſt into priſon. 26. Verily I ſay unto thee, Thou ſhalt by no means come out thence, till thou haſt paid the uttermoſt farthing.

v. 21—26. Our Lord here gives a ſpiritual expoſition of part of the moral law, and very different from that of their phariſaical teachers.

1. He begins with the ſixth commandment. Ye have heard, out of the law read in the ſynagogue every ſabbath-day, that it was ſaid by them of old time, by the ancients, the elders who expounded the law, or to the ancients their forefathers, thou ſhalt not kill; and, confining the command merely to the act of murder, they taught, that only ſuch as had been thus capitally criminal were liable to the ſword of juſtice either of God or man, excluding all inferior deeds of the like tendency from being accounted breaches of the law. But Chriſt teaches them far otherwiſe: I ſay unto you, and he ſpeaks as having authority, that not only you are forbidden to murder yourſelves, or any other perſon, directly or indirectly, but whoſoever entertains raſh and cauſeleſs anger, or harbours a malicious wiſh or deſign againſt any man, though it never be executed, is liable to God's judgment, and criminal at his bar, as a murderer in his heart. If the evil within break forth into opprobrious or contemptuous language, ſuch as, Thou empty fellow, it deſerves the cognizance of the Sanhedrim; but if it proceeds yet farther, to bitter reviling and raſh cenſures, to ſay, Thou fool, Thou vile reprobate, ſuch a breach of the law ſhall be puniſhed with hell-fire. This ſhould (1.) awaken in our minds a deep ſenſe of our guilt and ſin, and humble us before God in the review of our paſt tranſgreſſions; well may we cry, on the rehearſal of this law, Lord have mercy upon us. (2.) It ſhould make us more watchful over our hearts, to ſuppreſs the riſings of anger on trivial provocations, the inadvertencies or miſtakes of others, or our own groundleſs ſurmiſes; yea, though the provocation be great, and the cauſe of anger juſt, we muſt ſee that it be not exceſſive, vehement, hurtful, or abiding. Our lips ſhould be under the like reſtraint, that nothing haſty, perverſe, ſpiteful, contemptible, reproachful, inſolent, abuſive, or malignant, proceed out of our mouth. The right government of the tongue is the ſure proof of grace in the heart.

2. He recommends the exerciſe of that chriſtian love and peace which is the fulfilling of the law; and if offences come, as they will in this corrupted ſtate, we ſhould be ever ready to confeſs our faults, aſk pardon, make reſtitution, and ſeek reconciliation; and this

[1.] Becauſe till then we can offer to God no acceptable ſervice; for all our worſhip and duties without charity are nothing worth. If therefore we have done an injury to any man, ſuch as the breaches of the commandment above remarked, before we preſume to offer our gifts at God's altar, our praiſes, prayers, or whatever religious ſervices we propoſe, we muſt reflect wherein and how much we have offended, and ſeek immediate reconciliation; ſince hatred and uncharitableneſs would make our beſt works an abomination, and love is better than all burnt-offering. Should our brother continue inexorable, and refuſe all the ſubmiſſions we were ready to make, we may not then be reſtrained from drawing near to God, and may humbly expect that forgiveneſs from him which we cannot obtain from man.

[2.] Becauſe, till this is done, the wrath of God abideth on us. For as it would be highly prudent for the debtor to ſeek to accomodate matters with his creditor before a ſuit commences, leſt he ſhould be ſummoned before the civil magiſtrate, and, the proof being clear, he ſhould be conſigned to the officer and caſt into priſon, without the poſſibility of deliverance, much more ſhould the guilty ſinner ſollicitouſly deſire reconciliation with God and man, leſt, dying in hatred and uncharitableneſs, his iniquities ſhould witneſs againſt him at God's bar, and he ſhould periſh everlaſtingly. God is every ſinner's adverſary: our eternity depends on being at peace with him; therefore we need be anxious about it: the moment of time which is hurrying by is the ſpace allotted us to agree with him; therefore every delay is highly dangerous: if we die in unpardoned ſin, we have nothing to expect but a fearful judgment, where we are ſure to be caſt; the officers of vengeance are ready to execute the ſentence, and the priſon of hell is prepared to receive the condemned ſoul, where in everlaſting burnings the guilty muſt be for ever paying, yet be never able to diſcharge the debt they owe to inexorable juſtice.

27. ¶ Ye have heard that it was ſaid by them of old time, [n] Thou ſhalt not commit adultery. 28. But I ſay unto you, That [o] whoſoever looketh on a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. 29. And [p] if thy right eye offend thee, [q] pluck it out, and caſt it from thee; for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members ſhould periſh, and not that thy whole body ſhould be caſt into hell. 30. And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and caſt it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members ſhould periſh, and not that thy whole body ſhould be caſt into hell. 31. It hath been ſaid, [r] Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement. 32. But I ſay unto you, That [s] whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, ſaving for the cauſe of fornication, cauſeth her to commit adultery: and whoſoever ſhall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery.

v. 27—32. The ſeventh commandment is here expounded by the ſame infallible interpreter: and well may we ſay, in the view of the ſpirituality of the law, Thy commandment is exceeding broad. The commandment delivered to the ancients at mount Sinai ſaid, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery; and the phariſaical expoſitors had confined the breach of it literally to this groſſeſt act of lewdneſs, excluding all the lower degrees of impurity, in thought, word, or deed: but Chriſt gives a very different extent to the command, to confound their proud claims who dared to boaſt they were no adulterers, Luke xviii. 11.

1. Every unchaſte deſire in the heart is adultery in the ſight of God. The eye, the hand, the feet, the tongue, that by amorous glances, wanton dalliance, or impure diſcourſe, tend to kindle the unhallowed fire of luſt, or blow it up into a flame, and every contrivance to gratify this impurity of heart, though it be never brought to effect, involve the conſcience in the ſame horrid guilt.

2. We are commanded therefore to cut off the right hand and pluck out the right eye, which would lead us to offend; not literally indeed to maim or mutilate our bodies, though that, if commanded, ſhould be readily complied with rather than commit ſin; but figuratively it ſignifies, however near and dear to us the ſin may be, by long habit become incorporated as it were with our very frame, and hard to part with as theſe moſt uſeful members of our bodies; yet muſt it be torn away and caſt from us with abhorrence. The heart muſt be kept with all diligence; no lewd vain thoughts harboured, eſpecially when alone, ſolitude being often a great temptation to impurity. The eyes muſt be reſtrained from gazing on a tempting object, and kept as under a covenant from looking on a maid: yea, every object which would awaken evil deſire muſt be ſhunned, laſcivious repreſentations on the ſtage, impure pictures, books of amours, lewd plays, &c. not to forget curious, expenſive, and indecent dreſs, that expoſes the perſon with a deſign to catch the wandering eye, and at once declares the ſpirit of the temptreſs, whilſt it is a net to enſnare unſtable ſouls. The hand, the foot, that can convey the ſilent innuendo, muſt be reſtrained from every motion of evil, ſince he that toucheth her ſhall not be innocent. The tongue muſt be rather plucked out than utter corrupt communication, or be ſuffered, by diſcourſe groſly impure, or more dangerouſly and wittily laſcivious, in ſly inſinuations and double meanings, to breathe poiſon into the ears of the unwary. As the grand means to reſtrain theſe evils, every approach to them muſt be guarded by daily abſtinence and ſelf-denial, making no proviſion for the fleſh to fulfil the luſts thereof.

3. A powerful argument is uſed to enforce this. Raging appetite will not be conquered by any thing ſhort of the terrors of the Lord. The damnation of hell is the wages of uncleanneſs, and they who burn with impure deſires muſt lie down in everlaſting burnings, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched; and dearly do men purchaſe carnal delights at this price of eternal miſery. The ſentence is repeated, becauſe men are very unwilling to believe what ſounds ſo terrible in their ears; but the decree is fixed and immutable: thoſe who refuſe to fear it now muſt feel it for ever. Better therefore, far better, is it to ſuffer the preſent crucifixion of vile affections, than indulge them at the penalty of never-ending torments.

4. All divorce is unlawful, except in the caſe of adultery. The Jews indeed, for the hardneſs of their hearts, were permitted to put away their wives by a public inſtrument before witneſſes; but this was contrary to the original inſtitution of marriage, and therefore our Lord utterly condemns all ſeparation, except in caſe of a breach of the matrimonial bond: and ſhould the perſon divorced marry again, ſhe would commit adultery, as well as he who ſhould take her to wife, and the crimes of both would alſo lie at the door of him who put her away; for they who lead others into ſin ſhall be chargeable with all the guilt they bring upon them.

33. ¶ Again ye have heard that it hath been ſaid by them of old time, [t] Thou ſhalt not forſwear thyſelf, but ſhalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths. 34. But I ſay unto you, [u] Swear not at all; neither by heaven, [x] for it is God's throne: 35. Nor by the earth, for it is his footſtool: neither by Jeruſalem, [y] for it is the city of the great King. 36. Neither ſhalt thou ſwear by thy head, becauſe thou canſt not make one hair white or black. 37. But [z] let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatſoever is more than theſe, cometh of evil.

v. 33—37. The third commandment forbad perjury, and enjoined the performance of the vows which were made unto the Lord, or to men under the ſanction of an oath in his name: and hereunto the ſcribes reſtricted the commandment, accounting oaths in common allowable, if true; reckoning it no ſin to ſwear by the creatures, and that ſuch oaths laid them under no obligation to fulfil them: but Chriſt would give them a better expoſition.

I ſay unto you, Swear not at all. Not that every oath is unlawful, ſince in matters of controverſy, before a judge, an oath for confirmation is an end of all ſtrife; and on ſolemn occaſions ſuch appeals to God are high acts of religious worſhip, ſee 2 Cor. i. 23. but all raſh ſwearing, on trivial occaſions, in common diſcourſe, is forbidden, with all unneceſſary multiplication of oaths, under which this land groans. God's ſacred name muſt never be taken in the lips thoughtleſsly, irreverently, wantonly; nor may we uſe any creature to ſwear by, neither heaven nor earth, nor the temple, nor our heads, our lives, our ſouls, much leſs the idols of heatheniſm, ſuch as Jupiter, or the like, this being equally criminal as to ſwear by the name of God himſelf. Therefore our communication muſt be, Yea, yea, Nay, nay, ſimply affirming or denying, without oath or imprecation: for whatſoever is more than theſe cometh of evil, or from the evil one the devil, or from the fountain of evil in the corrupted heart. Where more than ſimple affirmation or denial is thought to be neceſſary, there is implied a ſuſpicion of veracity, which every raſh oath for confirmation will ſerve but to increaſe; for they who make no conſcience of an oath cannot be ſuppoſed to make conſcience of a lie.

38. ¶ Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid, [a] An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. 39. But I ſay unto you, [b] that ye reſiſt not evil: but whoſoever ſhall ſmite thee on thy right cheek, [c] turn to him the other alſo. 40. And if any man will ſue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloke alſo. 41. And whoſoever ſhall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. 42. Give to him that aſketh of thee, and [d] from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away.

v. 38—42. The law of retaliation, Exod. xxi. 24. which permitted the magiſtrate to execute a puniſhment of the ſame kind as the injury, or, as ſome ſuppoſe, to fix a mulct upon the offender equivalent to the harm done, had been grievouſly abuſed to extortion, and pleaded in vindication of private revenge. Chriſt therefore teaches his diſciples of what ſpirit they ſhould be. Magiſtracy is God's inſtitution, and the puniſhment of men's crimes righteous and juſt; but all private revenge is forbidden. It is true indeed that ſelf-preſervation, the care of our families, the honour of God, and the good of ſociety, may often make the redreſs of injuries not only lawful, but neceſſary; but in innumerable inſtances our duty is meekly and ſilently to bear and forbear.

1. If a man ſtrike us on the right cheek, or otherwiſe injure our perſon, or treat us with indignity, we may not render evil for evil, and by a return of the blow inflame the quarrel, but put up with it, or, if it be needful, put the caſe into the hand of the civil magiſtrate: and though our patience may be counted puſillanimity, and our forbearing may expoſe us to freſh inſults, as if in fact we turned the other cheek, yet it is infinitely better, for conſcience ſake towards God, thus to ſuffer, than to maintain our character or gratify our revenge by a challenge or a fray, which muſt provoke his wrath and end in our perdition.

2. In caſes of injury to our property, whether by litigious, malicious, and falſe proſecutions, or in private diſputes, though our coat were taken from us, it were better for peace ſake to give our inner garment too, than fly to the law for redreſs: for, if the matter of injury be ſmall, which we may ſuſtain without hurting our families, it is not only the moſt pious, but moſt prudent alſo, to ſit down with the firſt loſs, ſince the expences of the ſuit often exceed the value of what we may recover.

3. If we are compelled by force to accompany a perſon a mile, rather than ſtruggle or contend it is better to go two. And thus in all other caſes of affronts and injuries the like rule holds. Hard taſks indeed for fleſh and blood! but let it be remembered, Fleſh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.

4. We muſt not only revenge no injuries, but do every kindneſs in our power to our neighbour; ready to relieve the wants of every real object of charity which preſents itſelf to us, according to our abilities, and freely lending, without intereſt, to the induſtrious, but neceſſitous: a ſmall ſum to help ſuch a one in his trade, without any real loſs to ourſelves, may be of vaſt ſervice to him. And in the manner alſo of exerciſing our bounty we never ſhould appear reluctant; frowning, or giving as if it was extorted from us; but be happy to have it in our power to relieve the wants of our poor petitioners.

43. ¶ Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid, [e] Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour, and [f] hate thine enemy: 44. But I ſay unto you, [g] Love your enemies, [h] bleſs them that curſe you, [i] do good to them that hate you, and [k] pray for them which deſpitefully uſe you, and perſecute you: 45. [l] That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven; for he maketh his ſun to riſe on the evil and on the good, and ſendeth rain on the juſt and on the unjuſt. 46. For [m] if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the ſame? 47. And if ye ſalute your brethren only, what do you more than others? do not even the publicans ſo? 48. [n] Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

v. 43—48. The whole law being fulfilled in one word, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf, this is here inſiſted upon, and who that neighbour is, declared.

The Jewiſh expoſitors had vilely corrupted this divine precept by the addition they had made to it, Thou ſhalt hate thine enemy. And, as they confined their neighbour to thoſe merely of their own religion and nation, they interpreted this as a command to hate all mankind beſide, in direct oppoſition to the letter of God's law, Exod. xxiii. 4, 5. Deut. xxiii. 7. But Chriſt teaches us very differently.

1. He recommends univerſal charity: I ſay unto you, Love your enemies. We cannot place confidence or take complacence in them or their evil ways; but we muſt bear all good-will towards them, remark with ſatisfaction whatever is commendable in them, and ſincerely deſire their preſent and eternal happineſs, returning their curſes with bleſſings, ſhewing every act of kindneſs to their bodies and ſouls who expreſs the bittereſt enmity againſt us, and, if they will ſuffer us to do no more, at leaſt praying for thoſe who deſpitefully uſe and perſecute us: ſuch being the treatment the true diſciples of Jeſus may expect, and ſuch the gracious returns they are bound to make. And this is the diſtinguiſhing ſpirit of Chriſtianity, and what nothing but the grace of Jeſus can produce.

2. He enforces his command with theſe ſtrong arguments:

[1.] In ſo doing we ſhall reſemble our Father which is in heaven, and prove our adoption of him, who, in the diſtribution of his providential mercies, cauſes his ſun to riſe and his rain to fall indiſcriminately upon the evil and the good. Note, (1.) Our commoneſt though moſt unnoticed bleſſings are thoſe for which we are moſt deeply indebted to God. (2.) No man's ſtate is to be known by any outward gifts of Providence; the juſt and unjuſt ſhare them alike. (3.) If God thus ſets us the example, we muſt diligently copy it.

[2.] We muſt ſhew the diſtinguiſhing ſpirit of our profeſſion, and adorn it. If we only loved them who love us, or paid civility and reſpect to our brethren alone, what thanks would be due, where the obligation was reciprocal, and where even publicans would rival us. We muſt do more than others, if we profeſs more; not confining our regards to our neareſt friends or relations, to thoſe of our own party or nation, but opening our hearts wide as the world, and doing good to all, even to the evil and unthankful.

[3.] Our eye muſt be fixed not on the attainments of others, but on that perfection which is in our Father, and to be perfect like him ſhould be our holy ambition; not that we ſhall be able abſolutely to attain thereunto, but after this we muſt reach, and take up with nothing ſhort of it. And as this muſt be our ſtudy, labour, and prayer in general, ſo particularly in this love towards our enemies ſhould we deſire to reſemble him, which is a temper truly divine and Godlike.

Chriſt having in the former chapter armed his diſciples againſt the corrupt doctrines and opinions of the Scribes and Phariſees, next rebukes the corrupt practices of which they were notoriouſly guilty, hypocriſy and worldly-mindedneſs; ſins which, of all others, the profeſſors of religion need to guard againſt, as moſt eaſily beſetting thoſe who have eſcaped the groſſer pollutions that are in the world, through luſt. We are here cautioned, 1. Againſt hypocriſy, we muſt not be as the hypocrites are, nor do as the hypocrites do. [1.] In giving of alms, ver. 1—4. [2.] In prayer, ver. 5—8. We are here taught what to pray for, and how to pray, ver. 9—13. And to forgive, ver. 14, 15. [3.] In faſting, ver. 16—18. 2. Againſt worldly-mindedneſs. (1.) In our choice, which is the deſtroying ſin of hypocrites, ver. 19—24. (2.) In our cares, which is the diſquieting ſin of many gracious ſouls, ver. 25—34.

1. TAKE heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be ſeen of them: otherwiſe ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven. 2. Therefore [a] when thou doſt thine alms, do not ſound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do, in the ſynagogues, and in the ſtreets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I ſay unto you, they have their reward. 3. But when thou doſt alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth: 4. That thine alms may be in ſecret: and thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, [b] himſelf ſhall reward thee openly.

v. 1—4. Having before reſcued the law from the falſe expoſitions of the Phariſees, our Lord here ſhews the true religion of the heart, as expreſſed in the three great duties of alms, prayer, and faſting, in which theſe deluded teachers gloried, but erred exceedingly in the performance of them.

1. Our Lord cautions us againſt all oſtentatious ſhew in beſtowing our alms. Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be ſeen of them: hypocriſy is a ſubtle ſin, and where we are leaſt apprehenſive of danger, is ever ready to inſinuate itſelf; yet the fear of being wrong, muſt not keep us from doing right. Alms-giving is every chriſtian's bounden duty; and though not to be truſted upon as our righteouſneſs before God, nor done to engage the applauſe of men, muſt nevertheleſs, according to our ability, be practiſed for God's glory, and the aſſiſtance of our brethren: and God, who is not unrighteous, will remember and reward the works of faith and labours of love.

2. He deſcribes the methods the hypocrites uſed to proclaim their own goodneſs, and ſollicit the eſtimation of others. They ſound a trumpet, either literally to gather the poor to their doors, or they gave their alms in the moſt public manner, on purpoſe that they might be ſeen and admired.

3. They had the reward they ſought, and all they had to expect; the ignorant bleſſed their liberality, and praiſed their charity. Note, The hypocrite's portion is all in hand, and hereafter he hath nothing to hope for.

4. Chriſt gives direction concerning the proper way of doing our alms. Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth; the expreſſion is proverbial, and intimates the ſecreſy we ſhould uſe; never deſignedly letting others know our alm's-deeds, nor deſirous they ſhould be acquainted with them. And with regard to ourſelves, we ſhould forget them, and never dwell upon them even in our thoughts, to flatter our own vain-glory and ſelf-conceit.

5. Such good deeds as theſe flowing from faith, which worketh by love, ſhall not fail of their reward; ſecret as they are, He that ſeeth in ſecret will record them; and when we have forgotten them, and would be aſhamed to hear them mentioned, he will remember and recompence them openly, before men and angels, at the reſurrection of the juſt.

5. And when thou prayeſt, thou ſhalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray ſtanding in the ſynagogues, and in the corners of the ſtreets, that they may be ſeen of men. Verily, I ſay unto you, they have their reward. 6. But thou, when thou prayeſt, [c] enter into thy cloſet, and when thou haſt ſhut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in ſecret, and thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, ſhall reward thee openly. 7. But when ye pray, [d] uſe not vain repetitions, [e] as the heathen do: for they think that they ſhall be heard for their much ſpeaking. 8. Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye aſk him.

v. 5—8. Prayer next comes to be conſidered. It were an open declaration of impiety, irreligion, and atheiſm, to live without ſome acknowledgment of God's goodneſs, and profeſſion of dependance on his care: at leaſt, none who bear the name of Chriſtian can be ſuppoſed to live without prayer, any more than the body can live without breath. We have here two grand directions concerning this moſt neceſſary duty.

1. That it be not performed hypocritically, to be ſeen of men. The Phariſees choſe the ſynagogues and the corners of the ſtreet for the places of their devotions, that men's eyes might be upon them; ſtanding up, that they might be more conſpicuous; and loving the work, merely for the ſake of the reward they propoſed to themſelves; which they received, and a miſerable reward it was, to be applauded of poor mortals like themſelves, when they were abhorred of the great and holy God. Our Lord teaches his diſciples to pray in a different manner; public places are unfit for private prayer. We muſt retire therefore from the obſervation of men as much as may be; not only to avoid oſtentation, but in order to be alone with God, removed from all interruption that would diſtract our thoughts; and out of the hearing of others, that we may freely ſpeak before our Father which is in ſecret; to whom alone it ſhould be our deſire to approve ourſelves; comparatively indifferent what men may think or ſay of us, if he regards us with paternal love, and expecting from him the anſwer of our petitions, which he promiſes to beſtow. For he who ſeeth in ſecret, though inviſible to us, is yet preſent with us, and acquainted with our inmoſt ſoul, and will reward us openly; anſwering our requeſts in preſent bleſſings, owning us at the great day of his appearing and glory, and beſtowing the promiſed eternal reward, a reward not indeed of debt, but of grace.

2. That we uſe not vain repetitions, as the heathens do, who think that they ſhall be heard for their much ſpeaking; not that repetitions, or much ſpeaking in prayer are condemned; ſeeing the ſame petitions may be often reiterated, and ſpeak thus the deepeſt ſenſibility of our wants, and the greateſt importunity of deſire, Mat. xxvi. 44. Dan. xix. 18. Pſ. cxxxvi. as alſo when our wants are many and great on particular occaſions, and our ſpirit at liberty, we are never reſtrained from pouring out all our requeſts into the boſom of our compaſſionate God and Father, Luke vi. 12. The practice cenſured is, (1.) The vain babblings of thoſe who pray by rote, like papiſts, as they tell their beads, repeating ſo many Ave Maria's, or Pater Noſter's; and conſtantly, without life or ſpirituality, going over the ſame dull round of words, like a packhorſe with his bells, pleaſed with the tinkling of his own unmeaning muſic. (2.) The much ſpeaking, which ariſes from an affectation of prolixity, eſpecially in ſocial prayer, where inſtead of ſpeaking to God, men love to hear the ſound of their own voices, and want others to admire their gifts, their fluency, their fervency, and zeal, making a vaſt parade of words, adoration, thankſgiving, requeſts, interceſſions, &c. like Baal's prieſts, from morning unto noon, crying, O Baal, hear us: ſuch lip-labour is not only loſt labour, but worſe, an abomination unto the Lord, and to be avoided by all his ſpiritual worſhippers. For our Father, which is in heaven, knoweth what things we have need of before we aſk him, therefore does not want to be particularly informed, as if he were ignorant; nor is to be prevailed upon merely by our cries. But as our Father, he expects to be called upon, and is ever ready to hear and anſwer us; omniſcient, he knows our neceſſities; and all-ſufficient, he will relieve them, even when we through our blindneſs know not what to aſk, or through our ignorance aſk amiſs; yea, ſometimes cannot aſk at all, overwhelmed with diſtreſs, and ſpeaking only in tears and groans, which cannot be uttered, Rom. viii. 27.

9. After this manner therefore pray ye: [f] Our Father [g] which art in heaven, [h] Hallowed be thy name. 10. [i] Thy kingdom come. [k] Thy will be done in earth [l] as it is in heaven. 11. [m] Give us this day our daily bread. 12. And forgive us our debts, [n] as we forgive our debtors. 13. And [o] lead us not into temptation, but [p] deliver us from evil: [q] for thine is the kingdom, and [r] the power, and [s] the glory, for ever. Amen. 14. For [t] if ye forgive men their treſpaſſes, your heavenly Father will alſo forgive you. 15. But [u] if ye forgive not men their treſpaſſes, neither will your Father forgive your treſpaſſes.

v. 9—15. Having condemned the prayers of formality and pride, our Lord here ſuggeſts both matter and words for our uſe.

The prayer before us may be conſidered both as a form, and as a directory. It is conciſe, yet comprehenſive, containing our chief wants in a few words; not that we are always bound to the uſe of it, or ſhould regard it as more ſacred than other prayers of the ſcripture; but being in frequent uſe, we need be well acquainted with its meaning, that when we repeat it, we may pray with the ſpirit, and with the underſtanding alſo.

We have,

1. The preface. Our Father which art in heaven. The great object of prayer is God alone; the encouraging motives to approach him are, that he is our Father, our reconciled God and Father in Chriſt Jeſus, from whoſe paternal heart we may expect the tendereſt compaſſions and moſt gracious attention; and as he is in heaven, adored by ſaints and angels, who knows our neceſſities better than we can expreſs them, and hath all power to ſupply them exceeding abundantly above all that we can aſk or think; ſo that we may come to him in faith, nothing doubting. As our common Father alſo, we are taught the ſpirit of love and charity, which ſhould breathe in all our prayers, and profeſs ourſelves hereby one of thoſe many brethren whom, through Chriſt Jeſus, he is bringing to glory; and for whom, as they for us, we are mutual advocates.

2. The petitions. They are ſix in number; the firſt three more immediately relate to God's glory, the laſt to our own wants.

[1.] Hallowed be thy Name. The name of God comprehends his being, perfections, and all the manifeſtations he hath made of himſelf in his works and word. That it may be hallowed, or ſanctified, ſignifies our aſcription of praiſe to him, according to his excellent greatneſs; and our deſire, that he may be ever more and more exalted: that we ourſelves, and all others, may believe in him, love him, fear and ſerve him as we ought to do, and in our lips and lives ſhew forth his glory; and that ſince all good is from him, all may be aſcribed to him.

[2.] Thy kingdom come. The kingdom of the Meſſiah ſeems principally here intended, which was now ready to appear; and being once ſet up in the world, we are required to pray for its enlargement and final conſummation. As a kingdom of grace, we beg it may be erected in our own hearts more and more, till every thought be brought into the obedience of Chriſt, that it may diffuſe its benign influence far and wide; and the light of the goſpel-word, and the power of the goſpel-grace cover the earth as the waters cover the ſea; that God may thus accompliſh the number of his elect, and haſten that eternal kingdom of glory, when all his ſaints collected round his throne ſhall, to eternity, adore him, enjoy his favour, and be made for ever happy in his ſervice.

[3.] Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven; God is glorified, and his kingdom comes when his will is made ours; his preceptive will obeyed, his providential will acquieſced in: thus we pray, that without diſpute, we may receive the revelation he hath given us, believe in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, receive him as our king, and approve ourſelves obedient ſubjects to his government in all things; never murmuring againſt his commands as ſevere, or his prohibitions as grievous, but counting his will to be always holy, juſt, and good. We pray for reſignation to all his afflictive diſpenſations, contentment in every ſtation, ſubmiſſion under every burden, and a heart to bleſs him, not only when he gives, but when he takes away: in ſhort, that we may be as the clay in the hands of the potter, to be, act, and ſuffer, according to the good pleaſure of his will; and this chearfully, univerſally, continually, as the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect and the ſpotleſs angels fulfil his will in heaven. Note, (1.) It is mockery of God to pray that his will may be done, and daily live in allowed oppoſition to it. (2.) None may hope to ſerve God in heaven, who have not on earth made his glory their end, his word their rule, his will their delight.

[4.] Give us this day our daily bread; either for our ſouls, the bread of life, that we may be ſtrengthened in the inner man, and increaſe with the increaſe of God; or for our bodies, the food which is convenient for us; not delicacies, but neceſſaries; not ſuch as pampered appetite craves, but what uſed with temperance and ſobriety may beſt fit us for the work of our ſtation, and God's ſervice. We aſk our own bread, not what we have a right to, for all is God's gift, but what is honeſtly come by, neither the bread of idleneſs nor deceit; we are taught to aſk daily for it, as acknowledging our dependance upon God for all we have and enjoy; and for this day only, not excluding a provident care, but as mindful of our jeopardy every hour, as dead to carking ſollicitude and perplexing ſuggeſtions about futurity, and content to truſt him for the morrow, in the uſe of the ſame means we employ to day. And this we beg for others as well as ourſelves, that they and we may praiſe God together, who filleth our hearts with food and gladneſs. Thus all repining, envy, and diſcontent, will be excluded; content with our allotted portion, we ſhall wiſh for nothing more.

[5.] And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. Our debts are our ſins: having failed in the debt of duty, we become liable to the debt of puniſhment. Theſe ſins are innumerable, great, and aggravated; and we have nothing to pay, unable to make the leaſt ſatisfaction for them to divine juſtice: they are daily increaſing, and if God deals with us according to our deſerts, we are undone for ever. Therefore we cry, forgive, which intimates the deep and humble ſenſe we have of our miſerable and inſolvent ſtate, and our hope in the mercy of God, through Jeſus Chriſt, for pardon. However numberleſs, great, and aggravated our ſins may be, they are not beyond the blood of atonement, and God's boundleſs grace: he can pardon even beyond all that we can aſk. A plea alſo is put into our mouths, not as meritorious, but as an argument founded on God's promiſe, v. 14. and an encouragement to our own ſouls to hope in his mercy, as we forgive our debtors; for if we do ſo, how much more ſhall the Father of mercies forgive us? Whilſt on the other hand, we may not dare to hope, or pray for pardon, if we can retain allowed malice againſt one creature upon earth, and do not from the heart forgive our brother his treſpaſſes. Though the offences or injuries done us may have been never ſo great, we are called upon to pardon them fully, freely, without reſerve or upbraiding: yea, to forget them as though they had never been; and how reaſonable the injunction, when none can ever have offended us, as we have provoked God; ſince he therefore for Chriſt's ſake hath forgiven us, ſo ought we to forgive one another. To pray this petition with rancour, reſentment, or ill-will abiding on the heart, would be to imprecate a curſe upon our ſouls, inſtead of obtaining a bleſſing.

[6.] Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; conſcious of our own weakneſs, we beg to be kept from the power of temptation, or to be ſupported under our trials that we may not fall. Not that God can be tempted with evil, or tempteth any man; but if he with-holds his grace, our own corrupted hearts naturally ruſh into the ſnare, and our adverſary, the devil, is ever going about ſeeking whom he may devour; from his power, that wicked one, the author of all evil, we pray to be delivered; ſo that if aſſaulted, we may not be overcome by him: and from all the evil with which we are compaſſed on every ſide, from the evil world with all its ſnares, from evil men with all their wiles, or violence; from our own evil hearts with all their traitor luſts; from the evil of ſin and puniſhment, in time or in eternity.

3. The doxology, and concluſion. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen. Which may be conſidered as a ſolemn aſcription of praiſe to God; as an act of faith in his power and grace; and a plea to enforce our petitions in which God's own glory is ſo greatly concerned. All praiſe and honour are in the higheſt to be aſcribed to him, whilſt after all we muſt own he is far exalted above all bleſſing and praiſe. His power is able to ſupply all our wants, we may therefore confidently truſt him; ſince his is the kingdom, we may expect protection, and his own glory engages him to grant the requeſts which his word and ſpirit teach us to aſk. We may therefore well add our warm Amen, earneſt that our requeſts may be anſwered, and God therein glorified, in faith reſting aſſured that it will be ſo, and therefore riſing from our knees rejoicing in hope of the glory of God.

16. ¶ Moreover, [x] when ye faſt, be not as the hypocrites of a ſad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to faſt. Verily, I ſay unto you, they have their reward. 17. But thou when thou faſteſt, anoint thy head, and waſh thy face: 18. That thou appear not unto men to faſt, but unto thy Father which is in ſecret: and thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, ſhall reward thee openly.

v. 16—18. Having given directions for alms-giving and prayer, our Lord proceeds to faſting; a needful, though much neglected duty. This fleſh needs the curb of conſtant mortification, and our ſins call for ſuch humiliation. We are here,

1. Cautioned againſt the hypocritical ſhew of the Phariſees. They made a vaſt parade of mortification, outwardly disfiguring their faces, and putting on an affected rueful countenance; pretending that deep contrition of ſoul which they never felt, that men might admire the auſterity of their lives, and reverence them for their extraordinary ſanctity, and ſo far they had their reward. They were highly eſteemed among men, but how poor a conſideration this; when, for their hypocriſy, they were an abomination in the ſight of God. Note, Many who have denied the cravings of the body, have fallen victims to the pride of their heart.

2. We are directed how to faſt. As the humiliation is before God, we muſt ſtudiouſly avoid all external ſhew; appear in dreſs and countenance as on other days; alike dead to men's applauſe or cenſures; deſiring only God's acceptance and regard in Chriſt Jeſus, which in this way we are ſure to find, and our Father which ſeeth in ſecret ſhall reward us openly.

19. ¶ [y] Lay not up for yourſelves treaſures upon earth, where moth and ruſt doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and ſteal. 20. But [z] lay up for yourſelves treaſures in heaven, where neither moth nor ruſt doth corrupt, corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor ſteal. 21. For where your treaſure is, there will your heart be alſo. 22. [a] The light of the body is the eye:

[y] Prov. xxiii. 4. Luke xii. 33, &c. 1 Tim. vi. 9, 17. Heb. xiii. 5.

[z] Ecclus xxix. 11. 1 Tim. vi. 19.

if therefore thine eye be ſingle, thy whole body ſhall be full of light. 23. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body ſhall be full of darkneſs. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkneſs, how great is that darkneſs!
24. ¶ [b] No man can ſerve two maſters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or elſe he will hold to the one, and deſpiſe the other. [c] Ye cannot ſerve God and mammon.

[b] Luke xvi. 13.

[c] Jam. iv. 4. 1 John ii. 15.

v. 19—24. No ſin is ſo beſetting and dangerous to the profeſſors of religion as worldly-mindedneſs, and where it prevails, there is no ſurer proof of the hypocriſy of the heart. Againſt this, therefore, our Lord eſpecially warns his diſciples.

1. He cautions them againſt laying up their treaſures upon earth. Nothing under the ſun ſhould be regarded by us as our portion, nor ought we, with increaſing eagerneſs, to be ſtill graſping at more, and continually adding to our ſtores; we muſt neither take up our reſt in theſe things, nor depend upon them as a ſubſtantial and abiding good, for a thouſand accidents may deprive us of all. The moth may corrupt our garments, the ruſt, blaſting, mildew, or vermin deſtroy our corn, and thieves rob us of that gold and ſilver we treaſured up with ſo much care. It were folly therefore to count theſe our treaſures.

2. He tells us how we may ſecure a better, and a more enduring ſubſtance. Lay up for yourſelves treaſures in heaven: in the way of God's grace ſeek to ſecure the riches of his glory; eſpecially by a right employment of this world's wealth, make to yourſelves friends of the mammon of unrighteouſneſs; ſend your wealth before you in works of charity, and then you will find it again with abundant intereſt laid up in that ſure place, where it will be expoſed neither to corruption nor violence.

3. He enforces his advice by that weighty argument, that where your treaſure is, there will your heart be alſo; if it be on earth, our minds will be earthly, ſenſual; if in heaven, our hearts will be drawn up to high and heavenly things; for as the needle follows the magnet, ſo do our affections purſue what we count our treaſure: where this is, thither are our deſires drawn out; our hopes and fears, joys and ſorrows, are all influenced hereby. When God is made our portion, then on him will our ſouls be fixed.

4. According to a man's ſpirit and temper, ſo will his conduct be. The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be ſingle, which was a common and well-known phraſe for a liberal temper, then thy whole body will be full of light, the actions will all correſpond with the principle, and the whole converſation will abound with good to the glory of God; but if thine eye be evil, if a ſordid temper governs thee, thy whole body will be full of darkneſs, all the faculties will be enſlaved by it; the whole conduct influenced by it, to uſe mean, avaricious, and baſe ways to gratify ſuch a ſpirit. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkneſs, how great is that darkneſs! if covetouſneſs extinguiſh every generous and noble ſentiment in the ſoul, what a train of vile and unbecoming deeds will follow, whilſt every conſideration is abſorbed in that one of gain, greedily ſought by any means, lawful or unlawful; and the conſequence muſt needs be, that ſuch a one will ſink into eternal darkneſs and miſery. Such ſeems to be the ſenſe of the words, which moſt exactly correſponds with the context. Some by the eye underſtand the practical judgment; according as that is endued with juſt diſcernment, or is erroneous and corrupt, ſo will the correſponding practice be good or evil; and this particularly will appear in the preference given to heavenly or earthly treaſures.

5. We muſt make our choice which world we will have, and which maſter we will ſerve, the commands of both being incompatible. There is no dividing the heart, God will have all or none; but the hypocrite wants to ſecure both worlds together, and to ſerve God juſt ſo far as conſiſts with his intereſt and convenience; but no man can ſerve two maſters, whoſe commands are contradictory, and never were two maſters more oppoſite than God and mammon. God demands the heart, enjoins contentment, honeſty, charity, deadneſs to this world; and bids his ſervants forego their eaſe, their gain, their honour, their eſteem among men, to ſeek in the firſt place his kingdom and righteouſneſs. Mammon commends the glittering ſtores of this vain world; bids his ſervants eat, drink, and be merry; purſue their worldly intereſts, honours, and eſteem; mind chiefly themſelves; live for themſelves, ſpend on themſelves; and by every means ſecure wealth, as the principal thing, and man's chief good. Thus oppoſite are theſe maſters; the ſervice of the one muſt be attended with abhorrence of the other; we are called upon to make our choice, and let us remember eternity depends upon it.

25. ¶ Therefore I ſay unto you, [d] Take no thought for your life, what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye ſhall put on: Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?
26. Behold the fowls of the air: for they ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns, [e] yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? 27. Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his ſtature? 28. And why take ye thought for raiment? Conſider the lillies of the field how they grow; they toil not, neither do they ſpin.
29. And yet I ſay unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of theſe. 30.
Wherefore if God ſo clothe the graſs of the field, which to day is, and to morrow is caſt into the oven, ſhall he not much more clothe you, [f] O ye of little faith? 31.
Therefore take no thought, ſaying, What ſhall we eat?
or what ſhall we drink? or wherewithal ſhall we be clothed? 32. (For after all theſe things do the Gentiles ſeek) for [g] your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all theſe things. 33. But [h] ſeek ye firſt the kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you. 34. [i] Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow ſhall take thought for the things of itſelf: ſufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

v. 25—34. Many think themſelves far removed from covetouſneſs, whoſe hearts, notwithſtanding, are overcharged with the cares of this life; and though not ſordidly avaricious, evidently ſhew their affections more ſet on things on earth, than the things in heaven. We have therefore,

1. An admonition againſt all inordinate anxiety about a worldly proviſion. Take no thought, &c. There is a thoughtfulneſs and care needful and commendable, Prov. xxvii. 23. Our families cannot be otherwiſe provided for, nor the duties of our ſtation diſcharged; but the caution here given, is levelled againſt tormenting ſollicitude, and unbelieving diſtruſt of God's providence, which is as diſhonourable to him, as diſtreſſing to ourſelves. Our life is in his hands, and whilſt we are employing the appointed means in dependance upon his bleſſing, we muſt with ſatisfaction caſt our care upon him, to give us ſickneſs or health, comforts or croſſes, want or abundance, as he pleaſes; and when we do ſo, we have his promiſe to aſſure us we ſhall have juſt that which is good for us.

2. Chriſt enforces his admonition by ſeveral conſiderations, which, if we ſeriouſly thought upon, would ever furniſh us with abundant arguments to ſilence all diſquieting carefulneſs.

[1.] If God gives the greater bleſſings, will he withhold the leſs? Is not the life more than meat, avd the body than raiment? If God hath freely given us theſe without our thought or care, and hitherto hath preſerved them amidſt innumerable dangers, can it be ſuppoſed he will ſuffer us to periſh for lack of food or raiment?

[2.] Behold the fowls of the air, numerous and voracious as they are; without any care of theirs, by the Divine Providence, a daily proviſion is made for them, though they ſow not, nor reap, nor gather into barns. And if God thus provides for them, are ye not much better than they? more excellent in nature, and therefore much more the objects of his care: can the heirs of heaven be famiſhed, when the fowls of heaven are fed?

[3.] Unprofitable, as well as unneceſſary, are all our anxious cares. Which of you, by taking thought, can add one cubit unto his ſtature, or age? Will our ſollicitude add to our height, or will our thoughtfulneſs lengthen our lives a year, a month, a day, an hour, beyond the boundary decreed? How vain and fooliſh then to diſquiet ourſelves about other things equally out of our power? We are called upon here to make a virtue of neceſſity, and ſubmit quietly to the determinations of providence.

[4.] To ſilence our carefulneſs about raiment, Chriſt points to the flowers which were probably near him, and made the application more beautifully ſtriking. Conſider the lilies of the field, that grow without care or culture, without toil or labour; yet even Solomon on his throne, adorned with richeſt robes, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of theſe. Wherefore, if God ſo clothe the graſs of the field, which is ſo worthleſs, fading, and tranſitory, which to-day is in ſuch beauty, and to-morrow is caſt into the oven to burn, ſhall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? Note, (1.) All our anxiety about worldly things ariſes from unbelief. (2.) It is the height of folly and vanity to be proud of fine cloaths, when every flower of the field muſt far outſhine us. (3.) Every object around us, if our minds be rightly diſpoſed, will afford us arguments for faith, and quiet dependance on God's care.

[5.] Such anxiety is heatheniſh, and utterly unbecoming thoſe who have the light of revelation. Gentiles indeed, who have no knowledge of a particular providence, may be concerned after theſe things, and imagine they muſt get them merely by their own care and labour; but it is a ſhame for Chriſtians, who are better taught, not to ſhew the excellence of their principles by the nobler practice of deadneſs to the world and confidence in God.

[6.] Our heavenly Father knoweth we have need of all theſe things, and therefore we may confidently expect the ſupply of every want. He hath a father's bowels to feel for us; we have a ſure intereſt in him; he knows our wants; and, be they never ſo many or great, he can abundantly relieve them. His care for us makes our carefulneſs for ourſelves needleſs.

3. Chriſt directs us to the proper object of our cares: Seek ye firſt the kingdom of God and his righteouſneſs. Religion is our great buſineſs: to be a living member of Chriſt's church is infinitely more our concern than how our bodies ſhall be fed; and his righteouſneſs, which is our title to the kingdom, is the robe we ſhould be more ſollicitous to put on than any other raiment: and with this divine righteouſneſs internal purity muſt be ſought with diligence, in the uſe of every means of grace, and in the firſt place counting all dung and loſs, compared with the great concerns of our ſouls and the eternal world, which ſhould in a meaſure ſwallow up all other conſiderations. Indeed the trifles of time will ſit light upon thoſe who have the glories of eternity in view. Beſides, this is the way to ſecure all the reſt of our wants; for he who is able abundantly to ſupply them is pleaſed to aſſure us, that then all theſe things ſhall be added unto us; they ſhall be thrown in as over and above all the ſpiritual bleſſings. Oh that we were but wiſe to know our true intereſts! we ſhould find by experience nothing was ever loſt by faith unfeigned, and diligent caring for the ſoul.

4. As the concluſion of the matter, we are, without ſollicitude about futurity, to caſt our care upon God, who will care for us. Take no thought for the morrow; which doth not forbid prudent foreſight, or enjoin an abſolute diſregard about our buſineſs or our families, but all perplexing anxiety, all diſquieting fears about what may never happen; or, if it doth, may give us no ſuch trouble as we apprehend; and all unbelieving diſtruſt of God. Our buſineſs is to mind preſent duty, and leave events to God: Tomorrow ſhall take thought for the things of itſelf: it is folly to be diſquieted about what may never come to paſs. Who knows whether to-morrow belongs to time or to eternity? And if it returns, He, who ſupplied our wants to-day, will ſupply our wants to-morrow. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof: we need not anticipate our troubles, or torment ourſelves with imaginary ills: each day has ſufficient, without borrowing to-morrow's burden to increaſe the load; and which not all our previous cares and fears will make the lighter. It is God's curſe on the wicked world, that they are ſelf-tormentors; whilſt they who live by faith may always rejoice in hope.

CHAP. VII.

This chapter continues and concludes Chriſt's ſermon on the mount. We have, 1. Some rules concerning cenſure and reproof, ver. 1—6. 2. Encouragements given us to pray to God for what we need, ver. 7—11. 3. The neceſſity of ſtrictneſs in converſation urged upon us, ver. 13, 14. 4. A caution given us to take heed of falſe prophets, ver. 13—20. 5. The concluſion of the ſermon, ver. 21—27. 6. The impreſſion which Chriſt's doctrine made upon his hearers, ver. 28, 29.

1. [a] Judge not, that ye be not judged. 2. For with what judgment ye judge, ye ſhall be judged: And [b] with what meaſure you mete, it ſhall be meaſured to you again. 3. And [c] why beholdeſt thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but conſidereſt not the beam that is in thine own eye? 4. Or how wilt thou ſay to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and behold, a beam is in thine own eye? 5. Thou hypocrite, firſt caſt out the beam out of thine own eye, and then ſhalt thou ſee clearly to caſt out the mote out of thy brother's eye. 6. ¶ [d] Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither caſt ye your pearls before ſwine, leſt they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rent you.

v. 1—6. The proud and ſelf-righteous are ever moſt cenſorious. Againſt ſuch is this reproof levelled.

1. Our Lord forbids all raſh judgment, unreaſonable jealouſies, evil ſurmiſing, and rigid cenſures. Judge not, uncharitably, unmercifully, under a ſpirit of revenge or prejudice; decide not concerning a man's ſpiritual ſtate from ſome ſingle act or circumſtance, nor pretend to know his heart, much leſs to determine concerning his everlaſting ſtate: to his own maſter he ſtandeth or falleth. This precept doth not forbid the judgment of the civil magiſtrate, nor our forming concluſions of others ſtate as well as our own, agreably to the word of God; for, though our own judgment may be fallible, his muſt be according to truth.

The prohibition is enforced by a weighty reaſon: Judge not, that ye be not judged. Our charity and mercifulneſs to others will be the means of ſecuring the like favourable judgment to ourſelves; whilſt a ſpirit of cenſorioufneſs will provoke the reſentment and ill-will of others, and be returned generally in as liberal abuſe: beſide, what is infinitely more to be feared, God will give judgment without mercy to thoſe who ſhewed no mercy, and with rigour of ſevereſt juſtice will call thoſe to his bar who dared uſurp his throne, and ſit as ſelf-authoriſed judges of their brethren.

2. He gives us ſome rules about reproof; not forbidding the kind jealouſy of love, but condemning the magiſterial rebukes of ſelf-ſufficient pride. Before we look at others faults, we ſhould well conſider if there be not greater in ourſelves. For how unreaſonable and unjuſt would it be with malignant eye to mark, aggravate, and with ſeverity condemn, the infirmities and follies of others, the mote which is in their eye; whilſt we extenuate, excuſe, or juſtify, what is far more culpable, the beam which is in our own? or with what face of hardened effrontery can we dare ſet up for reformers of them, whilſt greater evils, unredreſſed, lie at our own door? This is the groſſeſt hypocriſy, and ſuch pretended zeal againſt ſin but a greater abomination in God's ſight, who trieth the heart. Before we preſume to correct others, we ſhould therefore reform the evils in ourſelves; leſt they ſhould retort, Phyſician heal thyſelf, and our admonition, though juſt in itſelf, be rejected with contempt.

3. Chriſt forbids not only uncharitable cenſures and magiſterial rebukes, but imprudent and unſeaſonable reproofs. Give not that which is holy to dogs, neither caſt ye your pearls before ſwine. Where men diſcover their profaneneſs and impiety; profeſſedly infidel, or avowed enemies to the truths of God; who deſpiſe inſtruction, and are but more exaſperated by admonition; there it would be folly, and abuſe of things ſacred, to perſiſt in rebuking them, and we can only expect inſult and harm to ourſelves, without any profit to them or glory to God: but, whilſt prudence is enjoined, we muſt take care not to make our caution an excuſe for our cowardice; not to think men ſwine till we have found them ſo; nor be afraid of any conſequences, when duty calls us, even in the face of perſecutors, to bear a faithful teſtimony to the truths of God.

7. ¶ [e] Aſk, and it ſhall be given you: ſeek, and ye ſhall find: knock, and it ſhall be opened unto you. 8. For [f] every one that aſketh, receiveth: and he that ſeeketh, findeth: and to him that knocketh, it ſhall be opened. 9. Or what man is there of you, whom if his ſon aſk bread, will he give him a ſtone? 10. Or if he aſh a fiſh, will he give him a ſerpent? 11. If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more ſhall your Father, which is in heaven, give good things to them that aſk him?

v. 7—11. Prayer is the means appointed of God to obtain of him the ſupply of every want, ſpiritual and temporal; and therefore,

1. The command given is, Aſk, ſeek, knock; implying the fervour, diligence, conſtancy, and importunity, which muſt be uſed, if we would obtain the relief of our neceſſities; and a deep and humbling ſenſe of our wants, and faith in God's promiſes, will engage us ſo to do; without which there can be no availing prayer.

2. A gracious promiſe is annexed. They who thus pray ſhall ſurely ſpeed: God will hear and anſwer them according to their various wants. Every petitioner, without reſpect of perſons, that thus in faith draws near unto God, receives an anſwer of peace, finds acceptance and favour with him, hath the door of mercy opened, and is welcome to enter and freely take out of God's fulneſs whatever bleſſing he needs. Note, They who refuſe or neglect to aſk, deſerve to want. The prayerleſs ſoul will be left inexcuſable.

3. As an engagement to pray with aſſurance of being heard, our Lord enforces his command by an argument drawn from the compaſſions of our earthly parents. Evil as we are by nature, ſcarce one can be found ſo unnatural as to be deaf to the cries of his own fleſh and blood, much leſs inhumanly to give his children things noxious, inſtead of the food they crave. If then, in ſuch corrupted creatures as we are, ſuch compaſſions and regard are found towards our offspring, much more will the Father of mercies graciouſly hear and grant the petitions of his dear children who wait upon him: his love, his power, are infinitely greater than ours; and therefore they ſhall want no manner of thing that is good. Their own requeſts perhaps may be ſometimes improper, unneceſſary, unreaſonable; and theſe prayers he will beſt anſwer by kind denials; whilſt all that his wiſdom and goodneſs ſees fit ſhall be given them, in ſuch manner and meaſure as ſhall be moſt for their benefit and his own glory.

12. ¶ Therefore all things [g] whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them: [h] for this is the law and the prophets. 13. [i] Enter ye in at the ſtrait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to deſtruction, and many there be which go in thereat: 14. Becauſe ſtrait is the gate, and and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

v. 12—14. We have here,

1. The concluſion and ſum of the foregoing commands; the golden rule, univerſally applicable in all caſes. To do unto our neighbours as, according to reaſon and religion, we might expect they ſhould do for us, if our ſituations were reverſed: to do them no injury; to give them every aſſiſtance in our power; to deal with them in uprightneſs and integrity, without making the leaſt advantage of their ignorance or neceſſities. And this doctrine both the law and the prophets inculcate; and in this one word the commands of both, reſpecting our duty towards our neighbour, are ſummed up. The rule is ſhort, and eaſy to be remembered; but how wide and difficult the practice!

2. Chriſt urges us to all diligence in ſecuring eternal life, and points out the only way thereto: Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate. The gate is Chriſt, his blood and righteouſneſs: it is ſtrait, as it admits none of the trappings of pride and ſelf-righteouſneſs, and calls us to part from all our moſt beloved ſins, to deny ourſelves, take up our croſs, and follow Chriſt. And as this will require much labour, prayer, and ſelf-denial, Chriſt urges the neceſſity of ſtriving to enter in:

[1.] Becauſe of the ruin and danger which attend the ways of ſin, in which the multitude walks unconcerned; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to deſtruction. There no reſtraint withholds the unbridled appetite; there pleaſure, riches, honour, ſpread their lure; there all may find the gratification of their darling paſſion, or are engaged ſo to hope by that wily tempter, who welcomes all with faireſt promiſes of joy and happineſs; and many there be which go in thereat, naturally diſpoſed to follow the bent of their fallen minds, and walking every one in his own way. To ſwim therefore againſt the ſtream of inbred corruption, and the tide of cuſtom too, is difficult: but let us remember that the end is deſtruction; that theſe paths lead down to hell; that, whether they be thoſe of careleſſneſs and neglect about the ſoul, open immorality, or ſelf-righteous hypocriſy, all tend to eternal miſery, and meet in the place of torment.

2. Becauſe ſtrait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. There we muſt ſtoop low, our pride be mortified, all ſelf-dependance be renounced; there the reſtraints of God's law hedge up the way, and leave us the narrow path of holineſs only to walk in; there our very nature muſt be changed, our inveterate evil habits ſubdued, our corruptions mortified; there we muſt expect to meet with many trials, afflictions, and temptations, from inbred evil and outward enemies; there every inch muſt be won with perpetual war againſt ſin, earth, and hell; and every ſtep muſt be taken with watchful care, ſince dangers and ſnares are at the right hand and at the left: no marvel then there be few that find it, comparatively few at leaſt; a remnant, a little flock, according to the election of grace. When therefore the difficulties are ſo great, the diligence ſhould be proportionable; and ſince there are but few ſaved, we ſhould ſtrive to be of that number; and the iſſue will repay our pains: eternal life will infinitely more than compenſate for all the ſtruggles of the way.

15. ¶ [k] Beware of falſe prophets, [l] which come to you in ſheep's clothing, but [m] inwardly they are ravening wolves. 16. [n] Ye ſhall know them by their fruits: [o] Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thiſtles? 17. Even ſo [p] every good tree bringeth forth good fruit: but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. 18. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit: neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. 19. [q] Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down, and caſt into the fire. 20. Wherefore by their fruits ye ſhall know them.

v. 15—20. Falſe Chriſts and falſe prophets would ſhortly ariſe; and falſe teachers were already abundantly numerous. Againſt theſe the Lord therefore cautions his diſciples, and ſets down marks whereby they may be diſtinguiſhed.

1. Our Lord deſcribes them as wolves in ſheep's clothing; ſuch as the Phariſees and Scribes were, who with exterior marks of ſanctity, and auſterity in their manners and garb, were inwardly full of enmity againſt the doctrines of grace and true holineſs, and in their ſpirit hypocritical, proud, and covetous. And probably our Lord hath reſpect to the falſe apoſtles, the judaizing teachers, and all that ſhould ever afterwards appear in his church, preaching the abominable doctrines of man's ſelf-ſufficiency, free-will to good, juſtification by works, and the like; grievous wolves, Acts xx. 29. whom gain, not godlineſs, Rom. xvi. 18. hath drawn into the miniſtry. Beware of them.

2. He lays down the rule by which we muſt prove all who pretend a miſſion from him. Ye ſhall know them by their fruits, juſt as eaſily as a tree is known. They who are evil can no more preach the truth, and live it too, than a thorn can bear grapes. And, on the other hand, where the ſoul is right with God, there the fruits of truth and holineſs naturally and neceſſarily are produced. Two ways the prophet may be known:

[1.] By his life. Is his conduct exemplary; ſelf-denying, humble, meek, zealous; doth the love of God and of men's ſouls appear to influence and actuate him in all his works and ways; at leaſt in the general temper of his mind, and tendency of his converſation, is this manifeſted? theſe are good fruits of a good tree. But is he worldly-minded, proud, ſenſual, indolent, more willing to fleece than to feed the flock; rigid in exacting the wages, but unwilling to be employed in the work of the miniſtry; encouraging inſtead of reproving ſinners by his example; conforming to the ways of a wicked world, inſtead of being transformed in the ſpirit of his mind? theſe are evident proofs of the falſehood of ſuch a prophet's pretenſions.

[2.] By his doctrine; which ſeems chiefly intended here: for a falſe prophet may with the veil of hypocriſy cover his iniquities ſo as to appear righteous unto men. But are his doctrines according to truth, and drawn from the ſacred fountain? doth he preach the dignity or the deſperate wickedneſs of the human nature? the freedom of man's will, or his utter impotence to every good thought, deſire, or work? doth he declare the damnable nature of ſin, the utter guilt of every man by nature and practice, and the wrath of God revealed from heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs; or encourage the falſe hopes of ſinners by ſmooth prophecies, and ſoften the harſh terms of hell and damnation, that he may not offend the ear with ſuch inharmonious ſounds? doth he exalt the divine Redeemer, his perſon, his offices, his blood, his righteouſneſs; or ſlightly paſs over theſe glorious ſubjects, for dry ethics, and lectures on morality? doth he enforce religion as an experimental thing, as the work of God's Spirit in the heart, purifying the inner man; or doth he dwell on mere external forms and duties, as ſilent about divine agency as if he knew not whether there were any Holy Ghoſt? doth he offend ſinners by the freedom of his rebukes, and the formal and ſelf-righteous by his ſcrutinizing detection of their hypocriſy; or doth he ſtudy to pleaſe men, and, like the falſe prophets of old, ſecure the good word of the deluded and miſguided world? by theſe and the like fruits ſhall they be known. Try therefore the ſpirits, whether they be of God; for many falſe prophets are gone out into the world, 1 John iv. 1.

3. He declares the terrible end of theſe wolves in ſheep's clothing. As the barren tree is only fit fuel for the flames, ſo are theſe marked for ruin; the ax of death ſhall ſhortly be laid to their root, and ruin eternal be their portion. Beware therefore of falſe prophets; leſt, deluded by them, you partake of their plagues.

21. ¶ Not every one that ſaith unto me, [r] Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doth the will of my Father which is in heaven. 22. Many will ſay to me in that day, Lord, Lord, [s] have we not propheſied in thy name? and in thy name have caſt out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? 23. And then will I profeſs unto them, [t] I never knew you: [u] depart from me, ye that work iniquity. 24. Therefore [x] whoſoever heareth theſe ſayings of mine, and doth them, I will liken him unto a wiſe man, which built his houſe upon [y] a rock: 25. And the rain deſcended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that houſe: and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock. 26. And every one that heareth theſe ſayings of mine, and doth them not, ſhall be likened unto a fooliſh man, which built his houſe upon the ſand: 27. And the rain deſcended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that houſe: and it fell, and great was the fall of it. 28. And it came to paſs, when Jeſus had ended theſe ſayings, [z] the people were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine. 29. For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the ſcribes.

v. 21—29. We have here the concluſion of this awakening diſcourſe, and the deep impreſſion it made on the hearers.

1. Our Lord ſhews that no profeſſion of religion, deſtitute of the power of godlineſs, will ſtand a man in any ſtead at a judgment-day.

(1.) It is not ſaying, but doing, muſt prove our calling and election of God. Not every one that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord, in boaſting profeſſion and noiſy devotion, ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven, be enrolled as living members of his church, or be admitted inheritors of his glory; but he that doth the will of my Father which is in heaven, who truly believes on him whom God hath ſent, takes him for his Lord and Maſter, not merely in word and tongue, but in deed and in truth; obedient to his commands, following him in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, deſirous to do his will on earth as he hopes ſhortly to do his will in heaven. Reader, is this character thine?

[2.] Many in the day of Chriſt will appear to have deluded themſelves with falſe hopes, whoſe pleas will then be fearfully ſilenced. Many will ſay to me in that great day of judgment, Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy name. Many of thoſe who may have filled the higheſt ſtations of the church on earth, have been to appearance the moſt zealous preachers, or public profeſſors in it; yet proved no better than Balaam or Caiaphas: yea, and in thy name have caſt out devils, as Judas, and many others no doubt; and in thy name done many wonderful works? even working the moſt aſtoniſhing miracles: and yet Chriſt declares, Then will I profeſs unto them, I never knew you, never called or owned you for my ſervants; depart from me, all ye that work iniquity. Notwithſtanding all your pleas, your hearts have been falſe and faithleſs, and your profeſſions utterly unſound; and therefore your portion muſt be to depart accurſed with the Devil and his angels. Learn hence theſe awful truths: (1.) That a man may be a profeſſor, a miniſter, yea diſtinguiſhed with gifts and ſucceſsful in his labours, and yet be finally caſt away; may be the inſtrument of ſaving others, and periſh himſelf; may caſt out devils from the hearts of others, and harbour them in his own. (2.) Names may paſs upon men, but God ſearcheth the heart. There are ſecret ſins to be found in many, under the cloke of moſt glaring profeſſion; and they ſhall receive greater damnation. (3.) In the day of judgment, terrible will be the diſappointment of thoſe, who all their lives long were working, as they thought, for life, were eſteemed as patterns of piety, and cried up as the excellent of the earth, and yet will be found not only to have deceived others, but to have deluded themſelves, falling from the height of ſelf-righteous hopes into the depths of endleſs deſpair, and from the gates of heaven driven into the belly of hell. Let every man prove well his own work, and judge himſelf, that he may be found ſincere and without offence at the day of Chriſt.

2. He enforces the truths he had delivered by an appoſite parable of a wiſe and fooliſh builder, deſcribing the different foundations they laid, and the different iſſue of their labours.

[1.] The wiſe builder, his labours, and ſucceſs, are deſcribed. 1. His character is given; He heareth theſe ſayings of mine, and doth them. Herein is ſeen the mind that hath wiſdom. He receives the truth in the love of it, obeys the precepts, is influenced by the goſpel as a living principle of action, and ſeeks conformity in heart and life to his divine Lord and Maſter. 2. He builds upon a rock, on Jeſus Chriſt, the only ſure and ſafe foundation, depending on his blood and righteouſneſs alone for pardon and acceptance: and under the teachings of his word and Spirit, and the ſupports of his grace, the glorious ſuperſtructure riſes of righteouſneſs and true holineſs. As he builds for eternity, he is zealous in labouring to make his calling and election ſure, and in every good word and work ſeeks to approve himſelf to the great maſter. 3. His work ſtands againſt every ſtorm. He may expect and will meet with many a ſevere blaſt: the rain of temptation, the floods of corruption within, the overflowings of ungodlineſs without, the wind of perſecution, all may unite their fury againſt him, to move him from his ſtedfaſtneſs, to ſhake his confidence in Chriſt, to diſcourage or ſeduce him from the good ways of the Lord; but in vain: the gates of hell can never prevail againſt the weakeſt believer. He ſhall be made to ſtand in the day of evil; in the hour of death he ſhall be ſupported; his work ſhall ſtand the fiery trial, and in the day of judgment he ſhall be approved and rewarded by the Lord of life and glory.

[2.] The fooliſh builder, and his ſad end, are ſet forth for our warning. 1. His character is, that He heareth theſe ſayings of Chriſt, and doth them not. He makes profeſſion of religion, and attends upon the ordinances, but goes no farther; the doctrines of the goſpel have no deep effect upon his heart, nor an univerſal and abiding influence on his conduct. 2. He builds upon the ſand, leaving Chriſt, to reſt upon ſomething in himſelf, and looking for acceptance, in whole or in part, on account of ſome external things wherein he differs from others, whether moral duties, alms, honeſty, and the like, or on the form of godlineſs, baptiſm, prayers, frequenting the houſe and table of the Lord, &c. or if he hath a ſpeculative knowledge of the truth, and knows the vanity of theſe things, he reſts on that knowledge, without any experimental poſſeſſion of the bleſſings of the goſpel, and then it profiteth him nothing; or, if his notions are yet more ſpiritualized, he makes his inward feelings, or ſuppoſed gifts and graces, his confidence, depending upon what he calls the Chriſt within, which is but a more refined ſelf-righteouſneſs, and a more ſubtle deluſion: and therefore, when the time of trial comes, his houſe will fall, and cruſh him under its ruins. If perſecution ariſes for the word's ſake, ſuch are quickly offended; in times of affliction and trouble their hopes cannot ſupport and comfort them; and in death they utterly fail; at leaſt, if the hypocrite's hopes ſtand out to the laſt, they die with him; deſtruction and deſpair from that moment ſeize him, and too late he diſcovers the fatal miſtake, when it is irremediable, and his eternal ſtate is determined.

3. Great was the impreſſion made by this diſcourſe of our Lord on his audience: they were as men thunderſtruck; aſtoniſhed with the uncommon power, weight, and energy, which attended his preaching. They admired the dignity with which he ſpake, addreſſing them in his own name as one inveſted with authority: and his ſentiments were new, as well as weighty; utterly unlike the flat and ſpiritleſs comments of the ſcribes, who ſervilely adhered to the traditions and deciſions of their rabbi's. And yet, alas! the impreſſion ſoon wore off from many, from the moſt of them. So eaſy, ſo common, is it to hear with admiration the eloquent or powerful preachers of the goſpel, to feel a tranſient glow, and notwithſtanding to continue in ignorance, unbelief, under the power of ſin, and periſh everlaſtingly.

In this chapter we have, 1. Chriſt's cleanſing of a leper, ver. 1—4. 2. His curing a palſy and fever, ver. 5—18. 3. His communing with two that had a mind to follow him, ver. 19—22. 4. His controling of the tempeſt, ver. 23—27. 5. His caſting out devils, ver. 28—34.

1. WHEN he was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him. 2. [a] And behold, there came [b] a leper, and worſhipped him, ſaying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean. 3. And Jeſus put forth his hand and touched him, ſaying, I will, be thou clean. And immediately his leproſy was cleanſed. 4. And Jeſus ſaith unto him, [c] See thou tell no man, but go thy way, ſhew thyſelf to the prieſt, and offer the gift [d] that Moſes commanded, for a teſtimony unto them.

v. 1—4. Struck with the power of his word, the multitude who had heard Chriſt preach, followed him when he came down from the mount; and lo! a freſh occaſion offers to raiſe their admiration, and confirm their faith in him as a teacher ſent from God; for they who follow on to know the Lord, ſhall ſee freſh manifeſtations of his power, grace, and glory, every ſtep they advance. We have,

1. A miſerable leper's addreſs to our Lord. The leproſy was eſteemed by the Jews a diſeaſe immediately ſent from God, incurable by human art, (2 Kings v. 7.) ſo defiling, as to exclude the unhappy object not only from the ſanctuary, but, for the moſt part, from human converſe and ſociety; a lively figure of the fallen ſinner, covered with guilt, full of corruption, excluded from God's preſence, cut off from the communion of the ſaints, incurable by any human means, himſelf unclean, and communicating defilement to all around him. Yet, deplorable as the caſe appears, bleſſed be God, it is not deſperate; there is balm in Gilead, and a phyſician there. Behold, there came a leper, who had himſelf perhaps heard our Lord preach, or drawn by the fame of his wondrous works, and worſhipped him; either with deepeſt reſpect as a prophet, or endued with the knowledge of his divine character, and paying him due adoration; ſaying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean. He doubted not his power and all-ſufficiency, and therefore caſt himſelf on his mercy for a cure. And herein he is the emblem of the awakened ſinner, brought to a ſight of his native miſery. (1.) He caſts himſelf down at the feet of Jeſus in prayer, laying his guilty and polluted ſoul before him. (2.) He looks up to him as able to ſave to the uttermoſt; nor dares diſtruſt that his blood and righteouſneſs can juſtify the moſt guilty, and his grace renew the vileſt heart: but often he heſitates in the view of his own unworthineſs, and fears whether the Lord will have reſpect to one ſo utterly unworthy. (3.) However, as he ſees no hope any where elſe, he preſents his deſperate caſe, aſſured he muſt periſh, unleſs the Lord hath reſpect to him. But none ever yet periſhed at the feet of Jeſus: for,

2. Jeſus put forth his hand and touched him, ſaying, I will, be thou clean: and immediately his leproſy was cleanſed. Such power accompanied his word and touch, as inſtantly effected the cure. And with like words of grace doth Jeſus ſpeak to every poor ſinner who applies to him. His anſwer is ever, I will; as ready as able to pardon and ſave the miſerable and the deſperate who come to him: be thou clean; thy guilt is cancelled, thy ſoul is delivered from the bondage of corruption; my blood, my grace are ſufficient for thee, and freely extended to thee: and by faith his word is realized to the ſoul; the ſcales drop off, guilt no more terrifies the conſcience, nor hath corruption any longer dominion over the heart.

3. Our Lord charges him not to divulge the means of his cure, but to go immediately to the prieſts, obtain their acknowledgment of his being healed, and offer the ſacrifices preſcribed. And this he did for the man's ſake, leſt out of envy the prieſts ſhould refuſe to pronounce him clean; and that his offering might be a teſtimony of the fact to all, when it ſhould be more publicly known how the cure was wrought; as well as to cut off occaſion from thoſe who deſired to repreſent our Lord as a breaker of Moſes's laws, and thereby to prejudice the people againſt him. Note, Every ſoul cleanſed by grace will not fail to offer the grateful ſacrifice not only of his lips, but of his heart, to God; and will ſeek to approve himſelf, to his Redeemer's glory, a living teſtimony of his power and grace.

5. ¶ [e] And when Jeſus was entred into Capernaum, there came unto him a centurion, beſeeching him, 6. And ſaying, Lord, my ſervant lieth at home ſick of the palſy, grievouſly tormented. 7. And Jeſus ſaid, I will come and heal him. 8. The centurion anſwered and ſaid, Lord, [f] I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt come under my roof: but [g] ſpeak the word only, and my ſervant ſhall be healed. 9. For I am a man under authority, having ſoldiers under me: and I ſay to this man, Go, and he goeth: and to another, Come, and he cometh: and to my ſervant, Do this, and he doth it. 10. When Jeſus heard it, he marvelled, and ſaid to them that followed, Verily I ſay unto you, I have not found ſo great faith, no not in Iſrael. 11. And I ſay unto you, that [h] many ſhall come from the eaſt and weſt, and ſhall ſit down with Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. 12. But [i] the children of the kingdom ſhall be caſt out [k] into outer darkneſs: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. 13. And Jeſus ſaid unto the centurion, Go thy way, and [l] as thou haſt believed, ſo be it done unto thee. And his ſervant was healed in the ſelf-ſame hour.

v. 5—13. Capernaum was the place where our Lord had fixed his abode, and whither he returned after his journey thro' Galilee; and there we are told,

1. The application made to him by a Roman centurion, the captain of a troop conſiſting of an hundred men. A ſoldier, from whom religion is leaſt expected; but there are ſome faithful in all profeſſions: a man of rank, few of whom were numbered among the followers of Jeſus: not many ſuch are called; bleſſed be God, it is not ſaid, not any: a Gentile too, and for a Gentile; for Chriſt came a light to lighten the Gentiles, as well as to be the glory of his people Iſrael. After ſending meſſengers to beg the help of Jeſus, (Luke vii. 2.) he came himſelf, a humble ſupplicant on the behalf of his ſick ſervant, afflicted with the palſy, and grievouſly tormented, commending his miſerable caſe to the compaſſions of Jeſus. And herein he ſhewed, (1.) His high reſpect for the Lord Jeſus, and his dependance upon him. (2.) His great humanity towards his ſick ſervant; not turning him out of doors becauſe unable to work, but tenderly taking care of him, and ſeeking every means for his relief: a noble example; and which ſhould alſo be an encouragement to ſervants to diſcharge their ſtation with fidelity and honeſty, as this will naturally endear them to their maſters, ſee Luke vii. 2.

2. The anſwer Chriſt gave to his requeſt: I will come and heal him. Though a poor ſervant, diſeaſed, a Gentile alſo, Jeſus is no reſpecter of perſons; and his miniſters herein muſt reſemble him, ready on the firſt application to viſit the meaneſt of their flock.

3. The deep humility and diſtinguiſhed faith expreſſed by the centurion. Lord, I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt come under my roof; ſo lowly were the thoughts he entertained of himſelf, ſo high his eſtimation of the dignity of the Redeemer. A gracious ſoul ever acknowledges himſelf thus leſs than the leaſt of all God's mercies. Nor does he think Chriſt's preſence neceſſary; ſo full was his confidence in the power of Jeſus, that he is aſſured a ſingle word will be ſufficient to effect the cure, the moſt inveterate diſeaſe being entirely under the command of Jeſus, and coming and going at his bidding: for if he, who was but an inferior officer, met with with ſuch ready obedience from his ſoldiers and ſervants, much more would a word from him, who had no ſuperior, be obeyed. Learn hence, (1.) The character of a good ſervant; he obeys his maſter without anſwering again or heſitating. (2.) The nature of diſeaſes; they are Chriſt's ſervants; they come and go only as he orders, and execute that commiſſion he gives them. (3.) The duty of every Chriſtian; to be obedient in all things, to do what Jeſus pleaſes to command, and chearfully to ſuffer what he ordains.

4. The high approbation of the centurion expreſſed by our Lord on this occaſion. When Jeſus heard it he marvelled; not that he was ſurprized as with an unexpected thing, ſince this faith was his own gift; but he expreſſed himſelf as admiring what was ſo excellent and uncommon, that it might be more remarked by others; ſaying to his followers, Verily, I ſay unto you, I have not found ſo great faith, no not in Iſrael; none of that generation had given ſuch proofs of faith as this Gentile. Note, The attainments of thoſe who have enjoyed leſs means than others will condemn the unprofitableneſs, and riſe up in judgment againſt the ſlothfulneſs and careleſſneſs of ſuch as, bleſſed with every advantage for their ſouls, have abuſed or neglected them.

5. Chriſt takes occaſion from hence to foretel the calling of the Gentiles, and rejection of the Jews for their unbelief. Tho' the Jews, prejudiced to their nation, could not bear the thoughts that the heathen ſhould ſhare in the common ſalvation, our Lord aſſures them, that from all lands multitudes ſhould be gathered unto him, and admitted to the ſame privileges, and have a place in the ſame kingdom as the moſt diſtinguiſhed patriarchs: whilſt, to their greater aſtoniſhment, they who boaſted themſelves as, excluſive of all others, the children of the kingdom, will, ſo far from having any part or lot in it, be caſt into outer darkneſs, as gueſts excluded from the bridal feaſt, and thruſt out, where ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth; the expreſſive ſigns of moſt poignant anguiſh, which will eſpecially be the caſe with damned ſouls in the place of torment. Note, (1.) We ſhall ſee many in the kingdom of heaven, whom we leaſt expected to find there; and multitudes caſt out, of whom we had the moſt confident expectations. (2.) It will profit a man nothing at the day of judgment to have been a profeſſed member of Chriſt's kingdom, and a nominal child of God, if he is not poſſeſſed of the ſpirit of adoption, and hath not approved his fidelity as a loyal ſubject. (3.) The torments of hell ſhould be often remembred, to quicken us with greater diligence in fleeing from the wrath to come.

6. The ſervant is cured. Jeſus ſaid unto the centurion, Go thy way, and as thou haſt believed, ſo be it done unto thee. With a double grace the favour is conferred; his faith approved, whilſt his requeſt is granted; for inſtantly the cure was wrought; his ſervant was healed in the ſelf-ſame hour. He that ſaid, Let there be light, and there was light, need but ſay, and it is done, in every other caſe. What confidence then ſhould we repoſe in this almighty Saviour, and never in our deepeſt afflictions diſtruſt his power or love!

14. ¶ And [m] when Jeſus was come into Peter's houſe, he ſaw his wife's mother laid, and ſick of a fever. 15. And he touched her hand, and the fever left her: and ſhe aroſe, and miniſtred unto them. 16. [n] When the even was come, they brought unto him many that were poſſeſſed with devils: and he caſt out the ſpirits with his word, and healed all that were ſick: 17. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the prophet, ſaying, [o] Himſelf took our infirmities, and bare our ſickneſſes.

v. 14—17. The great Phyſician is continually manifeſting his healing power. We have,

1. Another cure wrought by him on Peter's wife's mother, who lay ill of a fever in Peter's houſe. He was married we find, in oppoſition to the popiſh celibacy. His care of his aged relations beſpoke his gracious ſpirit. Jeſus, who will never fail to repay the entertainment given him in our houſes, or in our hearts, by a touch rebuked the diſorder, and inſtantly every ſymptom vaniſhed, and her ſtrength was perfectly reſtored; ſo that ſhe was able to wait upon him and the gueſts, as an evidence of her cure, and a teſtimony of her gratitude. Note, They whom Chriſt heals, are bound to employ the ſtrength and health he gives in his bleſſed ſervice.

2. At even, it being a ſabbath-day, (See Mark i. 21.) and their days being reckoned from one ſun-ſetting to the other, the people thronged the door with their ſick, and thoſe poſſeſſed of devils, Satan being at that time permitted to exerciſe uncommon dominion over men's bodies, that the power of Jeſus might more eminently appear. But whatever the diſeaſes were, or however ſtrong the poſſeſſion of theſe unclean ſpirits, one word of Jeſus effectually drove them out, and healed every diſeaſe.

3. The fulfilment of the ſcripture herein is obſerved; for the prophecy, Iſa. liii. 4. not only includes Chriſt's ſuffering the puniſhment due to our ſins, 1 Pet. ii. 24. but alſo his ſympathizing tenderneſs towards us under the diſeaſes that are the fruits of ſin, and his gracious power exerted to deliver us from them.

18. ¶. Now when Jeſus ſaw great multitudes about him, he gave commandment to depart unto the other ſide. 19. And [p] a certain ſcribe came, and ſaid unto him, Maſter, I will follow thee whitherſoever thou goeſt. 20. And Jeſus ſaith unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have neſts; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head. 21. And [q] another of his diſciples ſaid unto him, Lord, [r] ſuffer me firſt to go and bury my father. 22. But Jeſus ſaid unto him, Follow me, and [r] let the dead bury their dead.

v. 18—22. Great multitudes being ſome time after (ſee Mark iv. 35.) collected together, more from curioſity or ſecular views, it is probable, than deſirous of his divine inſtructions, our Lord commanded his diſciples to remove to the other ſide of the lake, to avoid the croud, to enjoy ſome needful retirement, to prove their obedience, or to ſpread the goſpel in other places, whither thoſe who were hearty in his cauſe would follow him, and the reſt give it up. Hereupon we are informed of a converſation which paſſed with two perſons who ſeemed deſirous to join him.

1. One of them was a ſcribe, who ſeemed to expreſs great forwardneſs, zeal, and reſolution to follow Chriſt where-ever he went; but his warmth ſoon cooled, when he underſtood that he muſt expect none of thoſe worldly advantages with which he flattered himſelf from being an apoſtle of Jeſus; ſince, inſtead of earthly grandeur and the conveniences of life, the Meſſiah, the Son of man, was more deſtitute even than the birds or foxes, and had not a place of his own to repoſe his weary head, or refreſh himſelf with the ſleep he now wanted after his toils. Note, (1.) Sudden ſtarts of zeal, and haſty reſolutions, are far from being the beſt evidences of faithful adherence to Chriſt. (2.) Many are willing to follow Chriſt if they can get by him, who quickly cool in their ardour, when their worldly intereſt, character, or eaſe, muſt be denied for his ſake. (3.) The poverty of the Lord Jeſus, and his wants, ſhould teach us in every ſtate therewith to be content.

2. Another man, who had profeſſed himſelf a diſciple, and might be perhaps an appointed evangeliſt, wanted at this time to be excuſed from attending his maſter. His plea was plauſible: his father was either aged and ſick, and he deſired to ſtay with him till he ſhould have diſcharged the laſt offices to him; or rather he was now dead, and wiſhed to wait upon him to his grave before he went with Jeſus; but Chriſt will not admit the excuſe; he muſt leave all, and come; there were enough dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, who might take care of the corpſe and the funeral, whilſt a more urgent and nobler employment called for his ſervice, even to follow Jeſus and preach the goſpel. Note, (1.) Worldly engagements, even about neceſſary things in our families, are apt to prove a great hindrance to our following Chriſt. (2.) They who want an excuſe for declining duty will eaſily find it. (3.) There are times when God's ſervice may demand our attendance, and engage us to leave father, mother, houſe, and all; and he is not worthy of Chriſt who can ſet any thing in competition with him.

23. ¶ And [t] when he was entred into a ſhip, his diſciples followed him. 24. And behold, [u] there aroſe a great tempeſt in the ſea, inſomuch that the ſhip was covered with the waves: but he was aſleep. 25. And his diſciples came to him, and awoke him, ſaying, Lord, ſave us: we periſh. 26. And he ſaith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he aroſe and [x] rebuked the winds and the ſea, and there was a great calm. 27. But the men marvelled, ſaying, What manner of man is this, that [y] even the winds and the ſea obey him!

v. 23—27. Chriſt having iſſued his orders to croſs the lake, his choſen diſciples immediately obeyed and launched forth; for no dangers or difficulties will deter thoſe from following Jeſus, who know the bleſſedneſs of his ſervice. Since their maſter was with them, they counted, no doubt, they were perfectly ſafe; but for the trial of their faith, and the manifeſtation of his glory, we find them plunged into the greateſt danger and diſtreſs.

1. No ſooner were they got to ſea, than a violent hurricane overtook them. The waves like mountains rolled, broke over them with dreadful roar; and their boat, filled almoſt with water, was ready inſtantly to founder in the deep: whilſt Jeſus, as if unconcerned and unacquainted with the danger, wearied with his labours, ſweetly ſlept. Note, (1.) They who follow Chriſt will meet with many a ſtorm. (2.) Chriſt often ſeems to diſregard his people when their dangers ſeem moſt imminent. (3.) The temptations permitted to overtake the faithful are deſigned not to harm them, but to exerciſe, ſtrengthen, and brighten their graces.

2. With deep diſtreſs the affrighted diſciples ran to their Lord, and with their cries awoke him, ſaying, Lord, ſave us, we periſh; their caſe was deſperate if he did not immediately interpoſe. Note, (1.) Awakened conſciences feel their perilous condition, and ſee their inevitable deſtruction, without divine grace and help. (2.) Prayer will be then fervent and importunate, when the deep ſenſibility of danger raiſes the cry. (3.) They who come to Jeſus muſt exerciſe faith in his ſufficiency to ſave, though utterly deſpairing of help in themſelves. (4.) Even doubts and fears will ſometimes mingle with the prayer of faith.

3. Jeſus with calmneſs and majeſtic dignity aroſe, rebukes their fears, then bids the ſtorm be ſtill, and ſuddenly the foaming billows ſubſide, the winds are huſhed, the troubled waters now are ſmooth, and not a breath of air dimples the poliſhed ſurface. Note, (1.) In the ſtormy ſeaſons of temptation, many a fear diſtreſſes the faithful heart. (2.) Thoſe may have true faith who have but little faith. (3.) The weakneſs of our faith, and the prevalence of our fears deſerve rebuke, as they reflect diſhonour upon the faithfulneſs, power, and grace of Jeſus: wherefore are ye fearful? (4.) Though the ſtorm of temptation be never ſo violent, no ſinner that cleaves to Jeſus ſhall ever periſh. (5.) Where the diſtreſs of the ſoul hath been peculiarly deep, and the trials uncommonly ſevere, there uſually the ſtrongeſt conſolations, and the moſt delightful ſenſations follow, of joy and peace in believing.

4. The effect produced by the miracle was the aſtoniſhment of the mariners, or diſciples who were in the ſhip, or of both. Never was ſuch an amazing change known before; and this naturally leads them to expreſs their admiration of this wonderful perſon, whom even winds and waves obeyed. Note, They who have experienced the power of a Saviour's grace, in circumſtances where every proſpect ſeemed covered with darkneſs and deſpair, cannot but wonder and adore.

28. ¶ [z] And when he was come to the other ſide, into the country of the Gergeſenes, there met him two poſſeſſed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, ſo that no man might paſs by that way. 29. And behold, they cried out, ſaying, What have we to do with thee, Jeſus thou Son of God? art thou come hither to torment us [a] before the time? 30. And there was a good way off from them an herd of many ſwine feeding. 31. So the devils beſought him, ſaying, If thou caſt us out, ſuffer us to go away into the herd of ſwine. 32. And he ſaid unto them, Go. And when they were come out, they went into the herd of ſwine: and behold, the whole herd of ſwine ran violently down a ſteep place into the ſea, and periſhed in the waters. 33. And they that kept them fled, and went their ways into the city, and told every thing, and what was befallen to the poſſeſſed of the devils. 34. And behold, the whole city came out to meet Jeſus; and when they ſaw him, [b] they beſought him that he would depart out of their coaſts.

v. 28—34. Continued miracles of mercy mark every ſtep of the divine Redeemer.

The country of the Gergeſenes, here mentioned, bordered on the ſide of the lake which they had croſſed; and they were no ſooner arrived, than a freſh occaſion offers to diſplay the power and grace of Jeſus.

1. Two miſerable objects met him, poſſeſſed of devils, coming out of the tombs, the place where they took up their reſidence; driven thither by the wicked ſpirits who actuated them, to make their abode the more dreary and diſmal; or to confirm the notion of ſpirits haunting theſe melancholy places; or by ſolitude to increaſe their forocity, and render them more miſchievous; for they were exceeding fierce, ſo that no man durſt paſs that way for fear of them. Note, When anger, malice, and revenge dwell in the boſom, there Satan's power reigns, and men then turn worſe than ſavages to their kind.

2. The devils addreſs the Lord, as trembling at his preſence, and fearful of being diſpoſſeſſed. What have we to do with thee, Jeſus, thou Son of God? They well knew his power and godhead, and their hopeleſs ſtate: he never came to be a Saviour unto them, but their deſtroyer; and all their deſire is, that he would let them alone, at leaſt in the heathen world, if he drove them from Judea, and not come thither to torment them before the time. Torment eternal they expected; they were perſuaded he would be their terrible judge, and they aſk only a momentary reſpite before the laſt and dreadful day, when their miſery will be complete. Note, (1.) The devils know and tremble. (2.) They who ſay to Jeſus and his ſervants, What have we to do with thee? depart from us; and reject the counſel of God againſt their own ſouls, muſt periſh with fiends of darkneſs.

3. Being unable to keep poſſeſſion of the bodies of men, they deſire to enter into a herd of ſwine that fed there; for even over theſe they could have no power without divine permiſſion; and this they beſought, either from their innate pleaſure in miſchief, or rather from a crafty deſign to make Chriſt an unwelcome gueſt in that country; and Jeſus, from whom none of their wiles could be hid, permitted it; perhaps becauſe theſe ſwine belonged to the Jews, who kept them for food in defiance of God's laws, or for covetouſneſs, to make merchandize of them; and he would thus puniſh their owners. Or he deſigned hereby to manifeſt his own divine power, to prove the reality of the miracle, and confound the Sadducean doctrine, which denied the exiſtence of ſpirits good or evil. No ſooner had theſe fiends obtained their requeſt, than they flew as to their prey, and all the herd of ſwine madly ruſhed down a precipice into the ſea, and were choaked, to the great terror of thoſe that kept them, who fled, and filled the city and country with the report. And ſo grieved were they at their loſs, and affrighted with the apprehenſions of greater judgments, that, inſtead of adoring him for the miracle he had wrought on the two poſſeſſed perſons, or welcoming him to their country, they beſought him to depart, like many other worldlings, who love their ſwine better than their ſouls. We may obſerve here, (1.) The reſtraint laid upon theſe ſpirits of wickedneſs: they cannot touch a ſwine without permiſſion; and however malignant and fierce the devil is, Jeſus holds his chain, and in all his temptations ſaith, Hitherto mayſt thou go, and no farther. (2.) Where Satan rules in the children of diſobedience, he fails not to drive them into many fooliſh and hurtful luſts, which neceſſarily drown both body and ſoul in perdition. (3.) By nothing doth the god of this world hold firmer poſſeſſion of men's hearts againſt Chriſt, than by ſuggeſting the loſſes and croſſes to which his ſervice may expoſe them, and bewitching them with the love of gain in preference to the love of God.

CHAP. IX.

We have in this chapter remarkable inſtances of the power and pity of the Lord Jeſus, ſufficient to convince us that he is both able to ſave to the uttermoſt all that come to God by him, and as willing as he is able. His power and pity appear here in the good offices he did, 1. To the bodies of people, in curing the palſy, ver. 2—8. Raiſing to life the ruler's daughter, and healing the bloody Iſſue, ver. 18—26. Giving ſight to two blind men, ver. 27—31. Caſting the devil out of one poſſeſſed, ver. 32—34. and healing all manner of ſickneſs, ver. 35. 2. To the ſouls of people. In forgiving ſins, ver. 2. Calling Matthew, and converſing freely with publicans and ſinners, ver. 9—13. Conſidering the frame of his diſciples, with reference to the duty of faſting, ver. 14—17. Preaching the goſpel, and in compaſſion to the multitude providing preachers for them, ver. 35—38.

1. AND he entred into a ſhip, and paſſed over, and came into [a] his own city. 2. [b] And behold, they brought to him a man ſick of the palſy, lying on a bed: [c] And Jeſus ſeeing their faith, ſaid unto the ſick of the palſy, Son, be of good cheer, [d] thy ſins be forgiven thee. 3. And behold, certain of the ſcribes ſaid within themſelves, This man blaſphemeth. 4. And [e] Jeſus knowing their thoughts, ſaid, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? 5. For whether is eaſier to ſay, Thy ſins be forgiven thee? or to ſay, Ariſe and walk? 6. But that ye may know that [f] the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive ſins (then ſaith he to the ſick of the palſy) Ariſe, take up thy bed, and go unto thine houſe. 7. And he aroſe, and departed to his houſe. 8. But when the multitude ſaw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given ſuch power unto men.

v. 1—8. Jeſus will not abide where he is an unwelcome gueſt; but wo to thoſe who bid him depart, for nothing but wrath and miſery are left behind him. Leaving the country of the Gergeſenes, he returned to Capernaum, the uſual place of his reſidence, where we find him curing a poor paralytic; for his work was ever to be doing good.

1. His friends brought him to Jeſus, unable himſelf to ſtand or walk: they had compaſſion for their brother, and counted no pains too great to obtain his cure, and they were perſuaded the Lord both could and would relieve him from his miſery. Note, Thoſe of our dear friends and relatives, who are themſelves benumbed in ſpirit as with the palſy, and cannot come to Chriſt, we muſt carry in the arms of prayer and love, and ſpread their caſe before him: perhaps in ſo doing we may ſave a ſoul from death.

2. Chriſt kindly received them: ſeeing their faith, either of thoſe who brought him, or of the ſick man alſo, and to revive the heart of the poor afflicted patient, more diſtreſſed probably by his ſins than his ſufferings, Jeſus ſaith, Son, be of good cheer, thy ſins be forgiven thee. Note, (1.) Sin is the bittereſt of all our burdens; the ſting of ſickneſs and death itſelf is taken out when our iniquity is pardoned. (2.) They who come to Chriſt are called upon to be of good cheer; no poor beggar ever went from his door with a denial. (3.) God ſometimes ſeverely afflicts his deareſt children; they muſt not queſtion their adoption becauſe of their ſufferings, but ſhould rather conclude, that God then dealeth with them as ſons, Heb. xii. 5.

3. The Scribes, who were the doctors of the law, and expounded it to the people, highly offended with what Jeſus had ſaid, though they did not ſpeak their ſentiments, yet in their hearts regarded him as a blaſphemer, for preſuming by his own authority to forgive ſins, which is the prerogative of God alone, and contains a ſtrong argument for his divinity, in which light theſe men evidently regarded his declaration. Note, Many among us are like theſe ſcribes; though they will not ſay it is blaſphemy in Jeſus to pardon our ſins, they are ready to brand thoſe as blaſphemers, who ſay they have the pardon Jeſus pronounces.

4. To give them a proof of his divinity, and confute their vain imaginations, Jeſus lets them know he perceived their thoughts. Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? cenſuring him as a blaſphemer; For whether is eaſier to ſay, Thy ſins be forgiven thee? or to ſay, Ariſe and walk? He that by his own power could effect the one, evidently proved he had a right to pronounce the other. Note, Our hearts are naked and open before the Lord; and he obſerves and is diſpleaſed at every evil thought which riſes or lodges there.

5. He demonſtrates the power he had to forgive ſin, by removing that diſeaſe which was the puniſhment of it, and bids the paralytic ariſe before them all; and, as a proof of his health and ſtrength being perfectly reſtored, to take up that bed, on which as a cripple he lay, and go unto his houſe. And lo! to the aſtoniſhment of the multitude, who glorified God for ſo great a miracle, and to the confuſion of theſe murmurers, the man inſtantly aroſe, took up his bed, and departed, cured of every infirmity. Note, (1.) Though we have no ſtrength of ourſelves to help ourſelves, when Jeſus ſpeaks to the paralytic ſoul, power accompanies his word, and enables us for that which he commands. (2.) The mercies ſhown to others demand our praiſes; and for every good gift beſtowed on the ſons of men, God is to be glorified.

9. ¶ And as Jeſus paſſed forth from thence, [g] he ſaw a man, named Matthew, ſitting at the receipt of cuſtom: And he ſaith unto him, Follow me. And he aroſe and followed him. 10. ¶ And it came to paſs, as Jeſus ſat at meat in the houſe, behold, many publicans and ſinners came and ſat down with him and his diſciples. 11. And when the Phariſees ſaw it, they ſaid unto his diſciples, [h] Why eateth your Maſter with publicans and ſinners? 12. But when Jeſus heard that, he ſaid unto them, They that be whole need not a phyſician, but they that are ſick. 13. But go ye, and learn what that meaneth, [i] I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice: For I am not come to call the righteous, [k] but ſinners to repentance.

v. 9—13. The publicans were thoſe who farmed or collected the cuſtoms impoſed by the Romans, and were not only therefore odious to the Jews, who abhorred this mark of ſervitude, but were alſo for the moſt part men of infamous conduct, who enriched themſelves by exaction, being ſure of having the government on their ſide. Hence publicans and ſinners are ſo often uſed to include the moſt guilty and abandoned characters; yet ſuch as theſe Jeſus came to ſave, and out of them was pleaſed to chuſe one of his moſt eminent diſciples, an Apoſtle and Evangeliſt, the penman of this goſpel. We have,

1. His call. His name is Matthew, the gift of God, which ſome ſuppoſe was given him by our Lord on this occaſion, when before he was known by that of Levi, as the other evangeliſts call him, though it was common for the ſame perſon to have two names. He was ſitting at the receipt of cuſtom, in the office where it was to be paid, and perhaps little thought of following Chriſt: but the Lord is often ſtrangely found of them who ſought him not, and prevents us with the bleſſings of his grace, that to his glory it may be for ever acknowledged he hath choſen us, not we him. One word effectually wrought upon the publican's heart: he ſaid, Follow me; and immediately he aroſe and followed him. Power accompanies the word of Jeſus, when he calls a ſoul unto himſelf, which bears down all objections; and out of the moſt enſnaring engagements of this world ſome are made monuments of grace, for nothing is too hard for God.

2. Having taſted the grace of Jeſus himſelf, he is ſollicitous his brethren by profeſſion ſhould be acquainted with him alſo; and for this purpoſe made a feaſt for Jeſus and his diſciples, to which many publicans and ſinners were invited: nor did the Lord diſdain their company, but gladly ſat down with them. Note, (1.) They who have truly experienced the Redeemer's grace, from that moment begin to labour, that all who are near and dear to them may partake of their bleſſing. (2.) Where the heart is open to Chriſt, there all who are his diſciples will be welcome for his ſake.

3. The Phariſees with malignant eye marked the condeſcenſions of Jeſus, and wanted to caſt a reflection upon his character, and prejudice his diſciples againſt him. Why eateth your Maſter with publicans and ſinners? Theſe proud and ſelf-righteous creatures thought it infamous to be ſeen in ſuch company, and would inſinuate, that our Lord was like the men with whom he had ſat down to meat. Note, (1.) The ſelf righteous formaliſts are ever the moſt rigid cenſurers of others conduct. (2.) The nobleſt acts of charity are liable to the baſeſt miſrepreſentations.

4. Chriſt vindicates himſelf from their inſinuations. He overheard their whiſpers; or his diſciples, weak themſelves, carried the queſtion to him, that they might be furniſhed with an anſwer; for to him in all our difficulties we muſt have recourſe; and he gives them an abundant vindication of his conduct. They that be whole need not a phyſician, but they that are ſick. He came into the world as the great phyſician of ſin-ſick ſouls; ſinners are his unhappy patients, who groan under their ſpiritual maladies, incurable but for his healing grace: and they who feel their miſeries and fly to him, he is ever ready to relieve; but the wilfully ignorant, and the ſelf-righteous, who know nothing of their deep corruption, guilt, and ſinfulneſs, and conceit themſelves whole; theſe, as they experience no want of him, and will not come to him that they may have life, are left to periſh in their blindneſs and their pride. But go ye, ſaith he, and learn what that meaneth, Hoſ. vi. 6. I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice; that is, in a comparative ſenſe, acts of kindneſs and charity to men's bodies or ſouls are much more acceptable to God, than all the formalities of ritual devotion; and therefore Chriſt intimates, that his converſing with ſinners for their good, was, according to the word of truth, far more pleaſing to God, than their ſcrupulous adherence to the tradition of the elders. For I am not come to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance; this being the very end of his miſſion, he was fully juſtified in receiving them into his company, that he might acquaint them with his ſalvation. Had man been righteous, he never had needed a Redeemer; and they who fancy they are ſuch, have nothing to do with him who came only to ſeek and ſave that which is loſt. The Saviour's errand is to ſinners, the vileſt of ſinners, to invite them to return to God, with promiſes of pardon purchaſed by his blood, and to call them in virtue thereof to repent and turn from all their abominations. And to this a ſenſe of his love engages them, and for this his grace enables them; whilſt they who vainly conceit that they are righteous, and need no repentance, are left to periſh in their own deceivings.

14. ¶ Then came to him the diſciples of John, ſaying, [l] Why do [m] we and the Phariſees faſt often, but thy diſciples faſt not? 15. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Can [n] the children of the bride-chamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them? But the day will come, when [o] the bridegroom ſhall be taken from them, and [p] then ſhall they faſt. 16. No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment: For that which is put in to fill it up, taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worſe. 17. Neither do men put new wine into old bottles: Elſe the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles periſh: But they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preſerved.

v. 14—17. Our Lord was ever beſet by inſidious foes, yet his wiſdom enabled him to confute and confound all their malicious deſigns. We have here,

1. The queſtion addreſſed to Jeſus by ſome of John's diſciples. Why do we and the diſciples of the Phariſees faſt often, but thy diſciples faſt not? and herein they would inſinuate, that they were not ſo strict and holy in their religious profeſſion as they ought to be. It appears from Luke v. 33. that they were ſet on by the Phariſees, who joined them; for deſigning and wicked men ſtudy how to ſet good men at variance, and are happy if they can ſuggeſt any cauſe of diſcord between them. They ſeem to take a pride in proclaiming the frequency of their own faſts, and to look down upon the diſciples of Jeſus as far their inferiors in this reſpect; and this leaven of ſelf-complacence effectually deſtroyed what otherwiſe might be laudable in their practice. Note, (1.) In the externals of devotion and mortification, formal profeſſors often go farther than true converts: being under a ſpirit of boudage, they reſt upon their auſterities, which in fact are not of any value in the ſight of God, but are to the ſatisfying of the fleſh, Col. ii. 23. (2.) They who boaſt of their own good works, evidently ſhew their religion is vain.

2. Chriſt vindicates his diſciples by an appeal to themſelves. Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them? On ſuch ſeaſons of feſtivity faſting would be unſeaſonable. Chriſt was this heavenly bridegroom, as John had called him, John iii. 29. he came now openly to eſpouſe his church, whom he had loved from eternity. His diſciples were the children of the bride-chamber, who, whilſt their Lord was with them, could not but rejoice; but the time would come, when the bridegroom ſhould be taken from them, and then ſhall they faſt: beſides, at preſent they were but young diſciples, and therefore to be inured by degrees to harder ſervices. As improper would it be to lay upon them at preſent theſe auſterities, as to put a piece of new cloth on an old garment, which would ſoon make a worſe hole than that which it covered; or new wine, which ferments moſt, into old bottles, which, being made of leather or ſkins, would by long uſe grow weak, and be liable to burſt; but new wine muſt be put into new bottles, and then both are preſerved. There muſt be a proper conſideration had of the perſons and their meaſure of grace: children and babes in Chriſt muſt not be ſet upon the ſervices which require peculiar intenſeneſs of mind, or the ſevereſt acts of ſelf-denial, but gently led, as Jacob's cattle, Gen. xxxiii. 13. leſt by being over-driven they ſhould be deſtroyed.

18. ¶ [q] While he ſpake theſe things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler, and worſhipped him, ſaying, My daughter is even now dead: but come and lay thy hand upon her, and [r] ſhe ſhall live. 19. And Jeſus aroſe and followed him, and ſo did his diſciples. 20. ¶ (And behold a woman which was diſeaſed with [s] an iſſue of blood twelve years, came behind him, and touched the hem of his garment. 21. For ſhe ſaid within herſelf, If I may but touch his garment, I ſhall be whole. 22. But Jeſus turned him about, and when he ſaw her, he ſaid, Daughter, be of good comfort, [t] thy faith hath made thee whole. And the woman was made whole from that hour.) 23. And when Jeſus came into the ruler's houſe, and ſaw [u] the minſtrels, and the people making a noiſe, 24. He ſaid unto them, [x] Give place, for the maid is not dead, but ſleepeth. And they laughed him to ſcorn. 25. But when the people were put forth, he went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid aroſe. 26. And the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.

v. 18—26. While Jeſus was vindicating the conduct of his diſciples from the cavils of thoſe who found fault with them, an agreeable avocation calls him from this unpleaſing work of diſputation.

1. A ruler of the ſynagogue, a man of rank and importance, applies to Jeſus on the behalf of his daughter, who was either now in the very agony of death, as the other evangeliſts ſay, or by this time, as he concludes, actually dead. He therefore with deepeſt humility begs him to come to his houſe, and lay his hand upon her, perſuaded that Jeſus could eaſily reſtore her, deſperate as the caſe appeared. Though few, very few, in his ſtation reſpected Chriſt, he was one of thoſe ſingularly favoured, to whom it was given to believe on his name. Note, (1.) Chriſt has diſciples of every rank; and though in general to the poor the goſpel is preached, yet ſome, though not many, mighty and noble are called. (2.) The breaches in our family ſhould drive us to the Lord; if not to reſtore the dead to life, at leaſt to ſanctify the providence as a means of quickening our own ſouls.

2. Chriſt immediately complies with his requeſt; for he is more willing to give, than we to aſk, and none ſeek him in vain; and his diſciples followed him, deſirous to behold a freſh inſtance of the divine power of their Lord.

3. In the way he heals a poor woman afflicted with a diſeaſe of long ſtanding, that weakened her in body, rendered her ceremonially unclean, and impoveriſhed her in ſeeking a cure, without obtaining any relief from the phyſicians. As her diſorder was of ſuch a nature that ſhe might be aſhamed to mention it, and by the law ſhould have kept her from mingling in ſociety with others, ſhe came behind our Lord, and touched the hem of his garment, perſuaded that there was ſuch a plenitude of healing virtue in Jeſus, that if ſhe but touched his garment ſhe ſhould certainly be cured. Nor was ſhe diſappointed of her hope; ſhe immediately felt herſelf perfectly well, but muſt not ſteal off unnoticed. Though others obſerved her not, Jeſus, who had brought her thither, knew what was done, and for his own glory and her comfort addreſſes her with kind encouragement, ſaying, Daughter, be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole. Note, (1.) The poor ſinner who comes to Chriſt, aſhamed, confounded, and diſtreſſed, ſhall be ſent from him rejoicing. (2.) They who honour Chriſt by believing in his name, he will honour, approving and rewarding the faith which he beſtows.

4. He is pleaſed to raiſe from the dead the ruler's daughter. At his arrival he found the houſe filled with mourners and minſtrels, as was uſual on thoſe occaſions, with melancholy notes of woe, exciting greater grief and wailing; but he bad them ceaſe their lamentations, and leave the room, ſince they would find the damſel not as they ſuppoſed dead and paſt hope, but as one aſleep, whom he would ſoon awake; though they aſſured him ſhe was dead, and ſuppoſing the caſe deſperate, treated what he ſaid with utter contempt. But he quickly convinced them of their folly and wickedneſs herein; for having ordered them to be put out of the houſe, or room, as unworthy to be ſpectators of his miracles who thus derided him, in the preſence of the father and mother, and three of his diſciples, he went in, took her by the hand, and at his word ſhe inſtantly aroſe, alive and well as if ſhe had indeed awaked from a refreſhing ſleep. Note, (1.) Death is but a longer night, and ſleep its leſſer myſteries. They who die in the Lord, are ſaid to ſleep in Jeſus; for though dead to us, they live to him, and only wait for the reſurrection morn to wake up to eternal life and day, when ſleep and death ſhall be no more. (2.) When our dear relatives go before us to their bed of duſt, though nature cannot but feel the pangs of parting, we ſorrow not as thoſe who have no hope. If they fall aſleep in Chriſt, we ſhall wake up together ſhortly never to part again. (3.) Many ſcoff at Chriſt's words, and becauſe they cannot comprehend them, brand them as fooliſhneſs, though they will be found the true ſayings of God. (4.) He that by a touch, a word, raiſed the dead body, doth thus by his word and ſpirit raiſe our ſouls from the death of ſin unto the life of righteouſneſs. We are wholly paſſive, nor can perform the leaſt act of ſpiritual life, till he hath firſt quickened us.

5. The fame of this amazing miracle ſoon ſpread throughout that land, the certainty of the fact being put beyond doubt by the multitude of thoſe who had been fully convinced of the damſel's death.

27. ¶ And when Jeſus departed thence, two blind men followed him, crying and ſaying, Thou ſon of David, have mercy on us. 28. And when he was come into the houſe, the blind men came to him: and Jeſus ſaith unto them, believe ye that I am able to do this? They ſaid unto him, Yea, Lord. 29. Then touched he their eyes, ſaying, According to your faith be it unto you. 30. And their eyes were opened, and Jeſus ſtraitly charged them, ſaying, [y] See that no man know it. 31. [z] But they, when they were departed, ſpread abroad his fame in all that country. 32. ¶ [a] As they went out, behold, they brought to him a dumb man poſſeſſed with a devil. 33. And when the devil was caſt out, the dumb ſpake: and the multitudes marvelled, ſaying, It was never ſo ſeen in Iſrael. 34. But the Phariſees ſaid, [b] He caſteth out the devils through the prince of the devils.

v. 27—34. Miracle upon miracle confirmed our Lord's divine miſſion, and left thoſe inexcuſable who, in the face of ſuch evidence, rejected him.

1. We find him, immediately after raiſing Jairus's daughter, giving ſight to two blind men.

[1.] They followed him with importunate cries, hearing of his fame, and hoping for a cure. He who gave life to the dead, could ſurely give ſight to the blind. Their addreſs ſhewed their perſuaſion, that Jeſus was the true Meſſiah, the promiſed Son of David, and all their prayers centered in one point, have mercy on us. All the ſinner needs is comprehended in this one word, and all he can hope for, or aſk, is free, umerited grace. Being in the ſame diſtreſs, they joined their mutual ſupplications; fellow-ſufferers ſhould be joint petitioners: and though their requeſt was not, as uſual, immediately granted, they did not deſiſt; but with perſevering earneſtneſs followed him through the ſtreet, and then into the houſe. If the Lord Jeſus for a while ſeem to diſregard our prayers, it muſt not be interpreted a denial of our requeſts, but as deſigned to quicken our importunity, and to make the mercy ſought more valued by us. We ſhall aſſuredly ſucceed, if we faint not.

[2.] In anſwer to the queſtion of our Lord, they make a noble confeſſion of their faith. Jeſus aſked them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? to open your eyes, and by my own divine power to cure your blindneſs, they ſaid unto him, yea, Lord, we are fully perſuaded of it. Note, (1.) They who have true faith, never deſiſt till they have obtained the bleſſing. (2.) In all our trials, the full and fixed perſuaſion of Chriſt's power to ſave us out of them, muſt be as an anchor to our ſouls amidſt the ſtorm. (3.) Chriſt requires open profeſſion of our faith, that we may give him the glory due unto his name.

[3.] Hereupon he grants their requeſt. He touched their eyes, ſaying, According to your faith be it unto you. And their eyes were opened. He knew their ſincerity, and he deſigned to expreſs his approbation of their faith in conferring the cure. Whoever ſtill comes to him with their wants, will find the ſame language from Jeſus; according to our faith, the bleſſings of the goſpel become poſſeſſed by us. Whatever we want, faith may ever draw it out of his fulneſs; and whenever we fail of ſtrength or comfort, we may be aſſured it is owing to our unbelief.

[4.] He ſtrictly charges them to conceal the miracle he had wrought for them. Either he ſhunned all appearance of ſeeking popular applauſe, or he knew the more his fame ſpread, the more his enemies would be exaſperated: or perhaps he did it to prevent the Jews, or his own diſciples, too much diſpoſed to expect in their Meſſiah a temporal prince, from crowding around him; or attempting, by inſurrections, to ſet him on the throne of Iſrael.

[5.] They, notwithſtanding, ſpread abroad his fame; ſo full of gratitude, they could not conceal the favour; and though their diſobedience was not commendable, their motive no doubt pleaded their excuſe. Well meant zeal, though ſometimes imprudently exerted, ſhould not meet a harſh cenſure.

2. He cures a dumb man poſſeſſed of a devil. His friends brought him to Jeſus as a truly pitiable object, juſt as the blind men, who were healed, went out; for Chriſt's door was open to all the miſerable, and he was never weary in doing good. The favour is no ſooner aſked than granted; the devil is diſpoſſeſſed, and the dumb man ſpeaks freely as ever. Note, They who live in the neglect of prayer and praiſe and godly converſation, are under the poſſeſſion of this ſpirit of dumbneſs; but when the grace of Jeſus touches the heart, the tongue of the dumb will inſtantly ſing, ſpeaking his praiſes, and telling what great things God hath done for his ſoul.

3. Theſe miracles had a very different effect on the ſpectators. The multitudes marvelled, and owned, to the glory of Jeſus, that never had ſuch miracles been ſeen before in Iſrael; ſo many, ſo immediate, and performed with ſuch divine authority. But the malignant Phariſees, determined to find fault, though unable to deny the facts, imputed theſe miracles to diabolical agency, as if Chriſt was in league with the devil. They who are bent againſt conviction, will always have ſomething to object; and the more they are preſſed with the evidence of the truth, the more enraged, inveterate, and blaſphemous is their abuſe.

35. And [c] Jeſus went about all the cities and villages, [d] teaching in their ſynagogues and preaching the goſpel of the kingdom, and healing every ſickneſs, and every diſeaſe among the people. 36. ¶ [e] But when he ſaw the multitudes, he was moved with compaſſion on them, becauſe they fainted, and were † ſcattered abroad, [f] as ſheep having no ſhepherd. 37. Then ſaith he unto his diſciples, [g] The harveſt truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few. 38. [h] Pray ye therefore, [i] the Lord of the harveſt, that he will ſend forth labourers into his harveſt.

v. 35—38. Chriſt did not long fix his abode at one place. We have an account,

1. Of his journies, preaching, and cures, through all the cities and villages of Galilee. He taught publickly in the ſynagogues the doctrines of the goſpel; and the nature, bleſſings, and privileges of that kingdom he came to erect; and in confirmation of his miſſion in every place performed the moſt miraculous cures on the bodies of all the diſeaſed who applied to him, as his word was deſigned to heal the greater maladies of their ſouls.

2. Of the compaſſion he expreſſed towards the multitudes who followed him. It grieved him to ſee the darkneſs, ignorance and careleſſneſs which every where appeared; they fainted, periſhing through lack of knowledge; inſtead of the bread of life and truth, fed with the miſerable huſks of Pharaſaical traditions, and miſlead in the moſt eſſential truths of God's word, through the adulterations with which their ſcribes had corrupted it; and they were ſcattered abroad, as ſheep without a ſhepherd, expoſed to the great deſtroyer of ſouls, and deſtitute of every faithful guide to bring them to the fold of God: they who ſhould have directed them aright, contributed to increaſe their errors, or by total negligence abandoned them to ruin. Our Lord therefore ſtirs up his diſciples to pray, that ſince the harveſt is ſo plenteous, and multitudes of immortal ſouls willing to hear the good word of God, and ſo few to labour for their converſion, to gather them into God's church; the great Lord of the harveſt would ſend forth labourers qualified for their work, and bleſs them with ſucceſs. Note, (1.) They who know the value of their own ſouls, cannot but feel with Jeſus, the tendereſt compaſſion for thoſe who live in ignorance, error and ſin, and pity them the more becauſe they appear ſo inſenſible, and to have no pity on themſelves. (2.) The neglect of miniſters is an awful judgment upon the people, and muſt be attended with aggravated guilt and ruin on their own ſouls. (3.) When multitudes appear attentive, and willing to hear the goſpel, it is a grief to ſee them deprived of the means, and a double obligation is laid on the few faithful to exert themſelves. (4.) The grievous neglect of men's ſouls we ſee ſhould excite our fervent prayers to God, that he would revive his work in the midſt of the years, and ſend forth faithful ſhepherds to feed and guide his flock. (5.) Chriſt muſt appoint his own ſervants; he is the Lord of the harveſt; none can call or qualify for the office but himſelf, and whom he ſends he will ſupport and bleſs; their labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord. They who ſee no gracious fruits of their miniſtry, may juſtly conclude the Lord of the harveſt never ſent them. (6.) All Chriſt's ſervants are labourers, there are no loiterers who are of his appointing. Diligence, fidelity, and zeal mark their miniſtrations.

CHAP. X.

In anſwer to the prayers enjoined in the former chapter for faithful labourers, we have, 1. The general commiſſion that was given them, ver. 1. 2. The names of the perſons to whom this commiſſion was given, ver. 2—4. 3. The inſtructions that were given them, which are very full and particular, (1.) Concerning the ſervices they were to do, ver. 5—15. (2.) Concerning the ſufferings they were to undergo; with the counſel given, and ſupport promiſed to them, ver. 16—42. And theſe things, though primarily intended for direction to the apoſtles then, are of uſe to all Chriſt's miniſters, with whom he is, and will be always to the end of the world.

a Mark iii. 13. Luke vi. 13.

1. AND [a] when he had called unto him his twelve diſciples, he gave them power againſt unclean ſpirits, to caſt them out, and to heal all manner of ſickneſs, and all manner of diſeaſe. 2. Now the Names of the twelve apoſtles are theſe; The firſt, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother, James the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother, 3. Philip and Bartholomew, Thomas, and Matthew the publican, James the ſon of Alpheus, and Lebbeus, whoſe ſurname was Thaddeus, 4. Simon the Canaanite, and Judas Iſcariot, who alſo betrayed him.

v. 1—4. Thoſe whom our Lord intended to be his miniſters and ambaſſadors, he had before called to be his attendants, that they might learn from his divine inſtructions the truths they muſt preach to others, and imitate his bright example which they beheld. None can poſſibly be fit for the miniſtry, or be called of God to take that office upon them, who have not firſt been taught of Chriſt by communion with him, and acquaintance with his word, the bleſſed truths they are to declare to others, and been furniſhed with gifts as well as graces for that arduous employment. It is the ſcandal of any church, and muſt be the ruin of the people's ſouls, when ſuch are ſent forth as miniſters who are themſelves ignorant, careleſs, and unacquainted with the glorious truths of God, and merely take up the miniſtry as a maintenance, and they who ſend them ſhall ſhare their guilt.

1. Chriſt called them unto him in private, from the reſt of the diſciples, and with their commiſſion to preach his goſpel, inveſted them with authority over the unclean ſpirits and diſeaſes of every kind, that by their miracles they might confirm their miſſion. Note, (1.) A particular call is needful for the miniſtry, beſides the general one to be Chriſt's diſciple; and we muſt ſee this clear, before we preſume to run. (2.) The great deſign of the goſpel-miniſtry is to oppoſe and deſtroy Satan's power over the hearts of men. Though bodily poſſeſſions may be leſs frequent, his empire over men's ſouls is ſtill mighty, and nothing but the power of the goſpel can effectually caſt out the unclean ſpirit from the fallen heart. (3.) In the grace of Jeſus there is a cure for every ſickneſs; none of our ſpiritual maladies are ſo inveterate, but there is in his word medicine that can heal the ſickneſs.

2. The number and names of the apoſtles are recorded. They were twelve in number, according to the tribes of Iſrael, to whom they were ſent. They are mentioned in pairs, being ſent forth by two and two, as mutual helps to each other, and ſome of them were brethren in blood, as well as apoſtleſhip; and happy it is where relations are thus, by grace, doubly united. Peter is placed firſt, not as inveſted with ſuperior power over his fellow-labourers, but as among thoſe who were firſt called, and appeared ever moſt zealous in the cauſe. Matthew, the writer of this goſpel, humbly ſets Thomas before himſelf, though the other evangeliſts place him after Matthew; and he adds his former occupation, the publican, as a foil to ſet off the diſtinguiſhed grace of Jeſus to him, and to keep him lowly in his own eyes, remembering from whence he was taken. Simon, another of the ſame name with Peter, is diſtinguiſhed from him, by being called the Canaanite, either from his city, Cana of Galilee, or, as the name ſignifies, he was of the zealots, Luke vi. 15. a ſect among the Jews, who in imitation of Phinehas, out of pretended zeal for God's glory, executed vengeance on offenders, without any proceſs before the magiſtrates. Judas the traitor is the laſt. The pureſt ſocieties will have ſome ſuch among them; he is called Iſcariot, concerning which there are many conjectures; the moſt probable ſeems to be, that it was given him from the place of his nativity, and to diſtinguiſh him from the other Judas or Jude, the brother of James.

5. [b] Theſe twelve Jeſus ſent forth, and commanded them, ſaying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not. 6. But go rather to [c] the loſt ſheep [d] of the houſe of Iſrael. 7. And as ye go, preach, ſaying, [e] The kingdom of heaven is at hand. 8. Heal the ſick, cleanſe the lepers, raiſe the dead, caſt out devils: freely ye have received, [f] freely give. 9. Provide neither gold nor ſilver, nor braſs, in your purſes: 10. Nor ſcrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither ſhoes, nor yet ſtaves: (for [g] the workman is worthy of his meat.) 11. And into whatſoever city or town ye ſhall enter, enquire who in it is worthy, and there abide till ye go thence. 12. And when ye come into an houſe, ſalute it. 13. And [h] if the houſe be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, [i] let your peace return to you. 14. And whoſoever ſhall not receive you, nor hear your words: when ye depart out of that houſe, or city, [k] ſhake off the duſt of your feet. 15. Verily I ſay unto you, [l] It ſhall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city.

v. 5—15. Chriſt having given the apoſtles their commiſſion, directs them how to diſcharge it aright.

1. Their miniſtry muſt be confined to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael alone, and therefore they are forbidden to viſit any city of the Gentiles or Samaritans. The covenant of peculiarity was not yet diſſolved, and for the father's ſake the Jews were beloved. It was needful therefore that to them the Goſpel ſhould firſt be preached; that the elect of God among them might be gathered in, and the reſt left inexcuſable in their infidelity.

2. The ſubject of their preaching muſt be the ſame that John at firſt, and Jeſus himſelf had inculcated, that the kingdom of heaven was at hand, and therefore urging all men to repent and turn to God, as became the true members of the Meſſiah's kingdom. Note, (1.) Truth is uniform. Novel doctrines carry their own confutation along with them. (2.) The nearneſs of Chriſt's coming in his kingdom ſhould quicken our diligence to prepare to meet him.

3. They are directed to work miracles in confirmation of their miſſion, and to engage the readier attention to their doctrine: in the name of Jeſus they ſhall be enabled to heal the ſick, cleanſe the lepers, raiſe even the dead, and caſt out devils from the poſſeſſed; evidences theſe of divine power, which none who were not wilfully obſtinate, could withſtand; and for theſe acts of benevolence to men's bodies or ſouls, they muſt neither deſire nor receive the leaſt reward, ſhewing their diſintereſted zeal and charity, and giving as freely as they had received. Note, Nothing more evidently characteriſes the faithful miniſters of Chriſt, than their diſintereſted labours, not ſeeking gain for themſelves, but the good of mankind.

4. They need not be at all ſollicitous about a proviſion in their journey; nor ſhould they take either money in their purſe, or meat in their ſcrip, or change of garments, or any other than the cloaths they had on, the ſandals on their feet, and the ſtaff in their hands: he who employed them in their work, will take care they ſhall not want. Though they may not deſire to enrich themſelves by their labours, they juſtly deſerved their maintenance. Note, Though miniſters muſt not ſeek filthy lucre, they have a right to a ſubſiſtence; and they who preach the goſpel ſhall live by the goſpel.

5. As they were going into places where they were utterly unknown, their firſt enquiry muſt be who was worthy in the place, not of the goſpel or the grace of God, but who was moſt noted for hoſpitality, and the entertainment of ſtrangers, and abide in their houſe during their ſtay, if they found a welcome. In which caſe, entering with kindeſt wiſhes of every temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal bleſſing, they ſhould ſalute the maſter and his houſhold; and if they received a courteous and hearty entertainment, then all the bleſſings they wiſhed for ſhould deſcend upon that houſe: but if their ſalute was returned with coldneſs or incivility, then their good wiſhes ſhould not be loſt; but inſtead of deſcending on that family, ſhould return with bleſſings upon their own ſouls. But wo to that houſe or city that ſhould, by their unkind behaviour, compel them to depart! They are commanded to ſhake off the duſt of the feet againſt them, either as teſtifying their abhorrence of their wickedneſs in thruſting the goſpel from them, or as a teſtimony againſt them in the day of judgment; at which awful ſeaſon even Sodom and Gomorrah would not meet with ſo heavy a doom, as theſe who rejected the counſel of God againſt their own ſouls. Note, (1.) Though in the ſight of God all are upon a level, and can plead no deſert before him, yet reſpecting men ſome have more worthy characters, and are of a more generous ſpirit than others. (2.) Religion is never a plea for rudeneſs or moroſity: to be courteous is a goſpel-duty. (3.) No good wiſhes are ever loſt; the prayers offered for the evil and unthankful will bring a bleſſing to us, if they procure none for them. (4.) Nothing is loſt by being employed in God's ſervice, and the ſupport of the goſpel; no money laid out in any way will bring richer returns than this. (5.) They who reject God's miniſters reject him, whoſe ambaſſadors they are; ſo he will interpret it, and avenge their quarrel. (4.) When any place or people ſlight the goſpel, juſtly doth God take it from them. (7.) There is a day of judgment at hand, when among the various degrees of puniſhment which will be inflicted on ſinners, none will endure ſo heavy vengeance as thoſe againſt whom the duſt of a ſlighted and rejected goſpel ſhall riſe up for a teſtimony.

But beware of men, for [p] they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will [q] ſcourge you in their ſynagogues. 18. And [y] the brother ſhall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child: and the children ſhall riſe up againſt their parents, and cauſe them to be put to death. 22. And ye ſhall be hated of all men for my names ſake: [z] but he that endureth to the end, ſhall be ſaved. 23. But [a] when they perſecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I ſay unto you, Ye ſhall not have gone over the cities of Iſrael, [b] till the Son of man be come. 24. But [k] whoſoever ſhall deny me before men, him will I alſo deny before my Father which is in heaven. 34. [l] Think not that I am come to ſend peace on earth: I came not to ſend peace, but a ſword. 35. For I am come to ſet a man at variance [m] againſt his father, and the daughter againſt her mother, and the daughter-in-law againſt her mother-in-law. 36. And [n] a man's foes ſhall be they of his own houſhold. 37. And [p] he that taketh not his croſs, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. 39. [q] He that findeth his life ſhall loſe it: and he that loſeth his life for my ſake, ſhall find it. 40. ¶ [r] He that receiveth you, receiveth me; and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that ſent me. 41. [s] He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet, ſhall receive a prophet's reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, ſhall receive a righteous man's reward. 42. And [t] whoſoever ſhall give to drink unto one of theſe little ones, a cup of cold water only in the name of a diſciple, verily I ſay unto you, he ſhall in no wiſe loſe his reward.

v. 16—42. As they were now beginning the work of their miniſtry, our Lord informs them of the troubles and perſecutions to which they will be hereafter expoſed in the exerciſe of their office; that when they came, they might not think ſome ſtrange thing had happened unto them as they might otherwiſe do, if their heads were filled with the hopes of a temporal kingdom. And that they may not be at a loſs in theſe ſeaſons of trial, they have here gracious encouragements to ſupport them, and directions for their conduct in ſuch emergencies.

1. They muſt expect to meet with many difficulties and much ſuffering. They were harmleſs and defenceleſs as ſheep, and were going forth into a world where they would be worried by wicked men, fierce and ſavage as wolves: for Chriſt's name ſake, and for their fidelity to him, they would be hated; the natural heart being full of enmity againſt God and his image, and this being at the root of all perſecution, with whatever ſpecious pretences the wicked ſeek to cloak their animoſity. They would be arreſted as criminals, and brought to the bar; the arm of juſtice which ſhould be ſtretched forth to protect the innocent, having in all ages, through falſe miſrepreſentations and partial judges, been made the means of the moſt cruel oppreſſions of God's people. They would be expoſed to ſuffer in their perſons, even unto death, ſo far will the inveterate malice of their enemies go; not content with ſcourging them, and putting them to ſhame, v. 17. they will perſecute ſome even unto blood, and with all the ignominy of a public execution take away their lives. To give a pretext for ſuch cruelties, they will be branded with every opprobrious name, ver. 25. and their characters be blackened, as if they were very fiends of hell. This being the art of perſecutors in every age to miſrepreſent the people of God, and dreſs them up in the moſt odious colours, the more eaſily to deſtroy them. So far, therefore, from that outward peace and proſperity which the Jews fancied would attend the Meſſiah's kingdom, they muſt look for the ſword of perſecution, and a ſtate of conſtant variance and warfare with the world which lieth in wickedneſs, v. 34, 35. That goſpel of peace, which in itſelf breathes ſuch charity and good-will to men, through the perverſeneſs of the natural heart, would give occaſion to the moſt implacable feuds; difference of religion being the ground of the moſt cruel perſecutions. Now theſe things they are warned of, that they may count the coſt, and knowing the conſequences, their choice may be deliberate and fixed. Theſe trials alſo would be the more ſevere, conſidering the perſons from whom they would come, from men, ver. 17. even thoſe of their own nation; from the very perſons to whom they preached, and for whoſe ſouls they laboured. From all men, men of all ranks and degrees, and from the world in general which lieth in wickedneſs; few of whom would receive their teſtimony, and the reſt would be not only hardened, but exaſperated againſt them. From the great men, the kings and governors of the earth, who would employ their power in oppreſſing and oppoſing them, for the goſpel ſeldom meets with friends among the great. Yea, from thoſe who made a ſhew of religion, even in the ſynagogues they would find the moſt inveterate foes, v. 17. who would even count God honoured in the puniſhment they inflicted on them, and place their bittereſt malice to the ſcore of zeal for his glory: and ſuch perſecutors on principle are the worſt of perſecutors. And finally, what would be of all others the moſt irkſome to be born, from their neareſt and deareſt relations the moſt unnatural enmity may be expected. The neareſt ties of blood ſhall be diſſolved, even brothers ſhall loſe all fraternal affection; yea, parents turn unnatural to their own offspring, and children forget all duty and regard, v. 21. Even daughters ſhall riſe up againſt their mothers, and the daughter-in-law, who before lived peaceably with her mother-in-law, will now entertain the deadlieſt animoſity; inflamed with blind zeal and bigotry, as if from the moment their deareſt relatives embraced the goſpel of Jeſus, no affection or reſpect was henceforward due to them, no meaſures to be kept with them, but that with implacable enmity they muſt be perſecuted, accuſed, or murdered; ſo that a man's bittereſt foes ſhall be thoſe of his own houſhold, and this hath been grievouſly verified by the experience of paſt ages; and more or leſs, as our good converſation in Chriſt exhibits the ſtronger contraſt to the ways of a world which lieth in wickedneſs, will be the caſe to the end of time.

2. Chriſt gives them counſel and encouragement how to bear up under theſe heavy trials. His counſel is,

(1.) Be wiſe as ſerpents. When we have crafty enemies to deal with, we are bound to uſe every prudential means for our own preſervation, and as far as may be to counteract their miſchievous deſigns, nor unneceſſarily expoſe ourſelves to danger.

(2.) Be harmleſs as doves; give no needleſs provocation; ſhew no rancour or ill will in return for any injuries; manifeſt that genuine ſimplicity and harmleſſneſs of conduct, which may cut off occaſion from thoſe who deſire occaſion; and then the ſubtlety of the ſerpent is laudable, when thus joined with the innocence of the dove.

(3.) Beware of men. Be cautious whom you truſt, and with whom you are connected. In this falſe and wicked world, we muſt not haſtily believe every word, or be open to every plauſible profeſſor: prudent reſerve often keeps us from fruitleſs repentance.

(4.) When they perſecute you in one city, flee into another. In caſes where life is in danger, or virulent oppoſition prevents all opportunity of exerciſing our miniſtry, then to flee is duty, provided no unlawful means are uſed to eſcape; and that we follow the leadings of providence, not deſerting our poſt through fear, but maintaining our zeal and integrity unſhaken.

(5.) Fear not them who can kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoul, this mortal life is the utmoſt to which their rage can extend; but rather fear him which is able to deſtroy both ſoul and body in hell. The ſoul is the valuable part of man, the body is but duſt; and however great the terrors of perſecutors may be, the terrors of the Lord are greater; the everlaſting burnings of hell, the wrath of the eternal God, and the ſufferings both of ſoul and body in torment, without meaſure and without end, muſt be remembered as an antidote againſt the fear of man, when he comes armed with every inſtrument of torture, racks, gibbets, fire or ſword. How much better is it bravely to endure a momentary pang, and in an inſtant be gone beyond all the malice of perſecutors, than by baſe compliance provoke God, from whoſe hands none can deliver us, and whoſe wrath will be for ever wrath to come?

(6.) What I tell you in darkneſs, that ſpeak ye in light. Let nothing intimidate you from a bold and open profeſſion and miniſtration of the goſpel; and what ye hear in the ear, of my ſecrets communicated to you as your friend, or maſter, this being the cuſtom of the Jewiſh doctors to whiſper in their diſciples ears, that preach ye upon the houſe tops, which being low and flat roofed, a perſon might be heard in the ſtreets from them diſtinctly;

ſtinctly; and this intimates, that in the moſt public places of concourſe, they muſt deliver their meſſage without fear or ſhame. Chriſt's goſpel ſeeks no covert, nor muſt his miniſters conceal any thing from their hearers of the whole counſel of God.

The encouragement propoſed to them boldly to endure hardneſs as good ſoldiers of Jeſus Chriſt, is great as the dangers they had to grapple with were intimidating.

1. Verily I ſay unto you, ye ſhall not have gone over, or finiſhed, the cities of Iſrael, till the Son of man be come. Before they could have finiſhed their teſtimony, they would ſee the kingdom of heaven, which they preached, come with power; when, after the reſurrection and aſcenſion of Jeſus, and the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, they ſhould be endued with greater powers, and ſee the moſt wonderful effects of their miniſtry, the proſpect of which ſhould quicken them in their preſent labours.

2. They need not be under any concern about what they ſhould ſay when brought before their ſuperiors, and accuſed by their enemies, for it ſhall be given you in the ſame hour what ye ſhall ſpeak; being under a divine guidance they ſhould never be at a loſs, but ſhould be enabled to vindicate the truth with the moſt powerful arguments, and to deliver themſelves with greateſt propriety, to the aſtoniſhment of their adverſaries; endued with wiſdom and power more than human, which the moſt ſubtle of their foes ſhall not be able either to gainſay or reſiſt; for it is not ye that ſpeak, but the ſpirit of your father which ſpeaketh in, or by, you; and when on emergencies we are ſuddenly called forth to ſpeak for Chriſt, if his glory be our ſingle aim, we ſhall ſtill find the ſame teaching and ſtrength, and may comfortably truſt him for aſſiſtance.

3. Their very ſufferings ſhould tend to propagate the goſpel they preached, and be for a teſtimony againſt Jews and Gentiles, before whoſe tribunal, when brought as criminals, they would have a more public opportunity of bearing witneſs to the glorious truths of God; and if they ſealed them with their blood, as martyrs, this would be a ſtronger confirmation of the truth of their miſſion, and leave thoſe who rejected their teſtimony inexcuſable.

4. He that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaved. Theſe light afflictions are but for a moment, their end is near, death at the worſt ſhall put a period to them, a little patience and perſeverance will make them more than conquerors, and the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory will infinitely overpay all the ſufferings of this preſent time.

5. They could never be treated worſe than their maſter had been before them. Whatever perſecution or reproach they might endure, He, who was ſo greatly their ſuperior, had ſuffered the ſame. They had called him Beelzebub, a devil, the prince of the devils, and treated him with every imaginable ignominy; and this contradiction of ſinners he patiently endured. Having therefore ſo glorious an example before them, they might well be content to bear his reproach, and count it their honour to be made like their Lord and Maſter. Who of us ſhould ſtart at ſhame, inſult, or ſuffering, when we look to Jeſus, and ſee what he endured?

6. There is nothing covered that ſhall not be revealed, nor hid that ſhall not be known. However their enemies might ſeek to ſuppreſs the word of truth, it ſhould blaze forth in ſpite of all oppoſition; and their characters, though blackened by the moſt malignant calumnies, ſhould quickly be vindicated, their innocence proved, their integrity vindicated either in this world, or at fartheſt at that great day, when every man's work ſhall be tried of what ſort it is, and they be declared faithful, and exalted to glory in the ſight of men and angels. Little need we then regard the revilings of men, when our judgment is with our God, and he ſhall ſoon bring forth our righteouſneſs as the light.

7. They ſhall be under the peculiar care of providence, and therefore might comfortably and confidently truſt, and not be afraid. If a ſparrow falls not to the ground, poor and worthleſs as it is, without the cognizance, and only according to the will of the eternal God, whoſe providence extends to the very leaſt and loweſt creatures he hath made; and who hath left nothing to chance or contingency, but hath enrolled in his eternal decrees every event the moſt minute, as well as the moſt important, which cannot but come to paſs according to the counſel of his will: nay, if the very hairs of their head are numbered, and not one of them can fall unknown or unnoticed, how little need they fear death or danger; their enemies, however inveterate, can have no power over them, except it be given them from above; and they may be aſſured the leaſt evil cannot reach them without the divine permiſſion. They are of more value than many ſparrows, and therefore not only as men, but as diſciples dear to Jeſus, may expect his peculiar care and protection. Note, True faith in God's providence will ſilence all our fears, and ſhew them as fruitleſs as they are ſinful, ſince the counſel of the Lord that ſhall ſtand.

8. According as they are faithful, they will be owned or rejected by Jeſus, at the great day of his appearing and glory. Whoſoever therefore ſhall confeſs me before men, him will I confeſs alſo before my Father which is in heaven. Whatever reproach or danger a bold and open profeſſion of Jeſus may expoſe us to, it will redound to our diſtinguiſhed honour in the day of Chriſt, when the great Judge and Lord of all ſhall teſtify his approbation of our conduct before men and angels, and preſent us before the throne of God, as proved and found faithful, and who ſhall therefore be advanced to glory, honour, and immortality. But whoſoever ſhall deny me before men, him will I alſo deny before my Father which is in heaven; whoever through coward fear, or ſhame, ſtarts back in the day of trial, and hides or denies his profeſſion before men, he ſhall be diſowned by me in the great day, rejected with abhorrence, and expoſed to everlaſting ſhame and contempt for ſuch baſe apoſtacy. Every motive, therefore, of fear or hope, urges us to be faithful.

9. Whatever their loſſes may be for Chriſt, they ſhall be abundantly gainers in the end. It is true they may be called upon to part with every thing near and dear to them, and muſt love the Lord Jeſus and his ſervice above all beſides, ready to ſacrifice every thing for him when it ſtands in competition with his glory. Neither father, mother, ſon, or daughter, muſt rival him in our hearts; nay, our very lives muſt not be dear unto us, when for his ſake called to lay them down. Whatever croſs the Lord Jeſus calls us to endure, whatever commands he is pleaſed to lay upon us, we are not worthy of a name among his diſciples, unleſs we chearfully take it up, and obediently follow him: and indeed in ſo doing, we moſt effectually conſult our own advantage and ſafety. For he that findeth his life, preſerving it at the expence of ſome baſe compliance, or unfaithful conduct, ſhall loſe it; all the comforts of it ſhall be embittered to him here, and he ſhall periſh eternally; ſo that in the iſſue he ſhall ſee his folly great as his ſin: whilſt he that loſeth his life for my ſake, ready to lay it down when called for, rather than take one ſtep out of the path of duty, he ſhall find it at the reſurrection of the juſt, with moſt ample compenſation for all his loſſes, in the eternal bleſſedneſs of body and ſoul with God in glory.

Laſtly, Though they would find many enemies, they would meet alſo with faithful friends; whom, for their kindneſs to his diſciples, he would abundantly reward. He would regard every inſtance of reſpect and affection ſhewn to them as done to himſelf, and God the Father will aſſuredly repay it. Whoever therefore received their word, or the word of thoſe who ſhould ſucceed them, and ſhewed kindneſs to their perſons as the miniſters and prophets of the Lord, he ſhall receive a prophet's reward, bleſſed by his labours, and ſharing with him in the promiſe of eternal happineſs. And in like manner, he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, loving and kind to him, not for any worldly, perſonal, or private conſiderations, but purely on account of him whoſe image he bears, he ſhall receive a righteous man's reward, partaking with him that life and glory which is the gift of God in Jeſus Chriſt, the reward, not of debt, but of grace. Nay, the very leaſt and moſt inconſiderable favours ſhewn to the very meaneſt diſciple, if but a cup of cold water, ſhall be remembered and recompenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt. Conſiderations theſe, admirably ſuited to comfort them under all their trials and afflictions, and embolden them with fidelity to perſevere. And we are alike intereſted in theſe things, and ſhould be comforted and encouraged under all our troubles for the goſpel's ſake, with the ſame reviving expectations.

CHAP. XI.

In this chapter we have, 1. The unwearied diligence of our Lord in preaching the goſpel, ver. 1. 2. His diſcourſe with the diſciples of John concerning his being the Meſſiah, ver. 2—6. 3. The honourable teſtimony that Chriſt bore to John Baptiſt, ver. 7—15. 4. The ſad account he gives of that generation in general, and eſpecially of ſome particular places; with reference to the ſucceſs, both of John's miniſtry, and of his own, ver. 16—24. 5. His thankſgiving to his Father for the wiſe and gracious method he had taken in revealing the great myſteries of the goſpel, ver. 25, 26. 6. His gracious call and invitation to poor ſinners to come to him, and to be ruled and taught and ſaved by him, ver. 27—30.

1. AND it came to paſs, when Jeſus had made an end of commanding his twelve diſciples, he departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities. 2.
[a] Now when John had heard in the priſon the works of Chriſt, he ſent two of his diſciples, 3. And ſaid unto him, [b] Art thou he that ſhould come, or do we look for another? 4. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Go, and ſhew John again thoſe things which ye do hear and ſee: 5. [c] The blind receive their ſight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleanſed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed up, and [d] the poor have the goſpel preached to them. 6. And [e] bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be [f] offended in me.

v. 1—6. Having finiſhed his inſtructions to his diſciples whom he ſent forth, he did not devolve the work to them and ſit down idle himſelf, but departed thence to teach and preach in their cities; and in this bleſſed work the diſciples ſent from John found him employed. We are told,

1. Where John was; in priſon, for his fidelity in reproving Herod the king. Such reward may the zealous miniſters of God ſometimes expect to meet. But the fame of Jeſus reached him even there: and now, no doubt, with joy he heard of his labours and ſucceſs. If we are diſabled, it is ſtill a moſt reviving cordial to hear that the work of God proſpers.

2. The queſtion he put to Jeſus by the diſciples whom he ſent: Art thou he that ſhould come, or do we look for another? art thou the promiſed Meſſiah, or not? Some have ſuppoſed John was himſelf in doubt, and either diſcouraged by his long confinement, or, like the reſt of his countrymen, prepoſſeſſed with the notions of a temporal Meſſiah; though it ſeems much more reaſonable, from the teſtimony John had born to him, to ſuppoſe, that not for his own ſake he ſent this meſſage, but for the ſake of his diſciples, who though they had cleaved to John hitherto, yet, he being ſhortly to leave them and to be cut off, he introduces them to Jeſus, that they might receive from him the fulleſt conviction of his character, and henceforward commence his diſciples. Note, (1.) God will not leave his people deſtitute: if one able miniſter is removed, another is raiſed up. (2.) It is the duty of faithful miniſters to lead their hearers off from all attachment to men, even themſelves, and to direct them ſimply to Jeſus. (3.) Where the matters of our eternal ſalvation are concerned, it becomes us to be inquiſitive, and to ſee that our faith be built on ſure grounds.

3. The anſwer Chriſt returned to their enquiries. He refers them to the facts which they beheld, as the moſt ſatisfactory proof of his being that Meſſiah which ſhould come into the world. The blind receive their ſight, the lame walk, &c. full evidences theſe of a divine miſſion, and a clear fulfilment of the prophecies which went before concerning him, Iſa. xxxv. 6. lxi. 1. and the poor have the goſpel preached unto them; thoſe whom the Scribes and Phariſees deſpiſed, he received kindly, and acquainted them with the glad tidings of his grace, which many of them willingly received: or the poor preach the goſpel; mean and illiterate men are endued with great gifts and abilities to propagate the doctrines of the goſpel: and bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me; not prejudiced againſt him becauſe of his poverty, the meanneſs of his ſtation, and the deſpicable followers which attended him; but, looking above all theſe things, beholds in his works and words his divine character, and gives him the glory due unto his name. Note, (1.) Many treat the poor with contempt; but Chriſt hath taught us a different leſſon; of ſuch his church is chiefly compoſed, and this adds abundant honour to them. (2.) There are many things in Chriſt's character and goſpel which miniſter occaſion of offence to the proud and ſelf-righteous; but faith admires the condeſcenſions of Jeſus, and adores him for that at which others ſtumble and fall.

[g] Luke vii. 24. 7. ¶ [g] And as they departed, Jeſus began to ſay unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out [h] Eph. iv. 14. into the wilderneſs to ſee? [h] A reed ſhaken with the wind? 8. But what went ye out for to ſee? A man cloathed in ſoft raiment? Behold, they that wear ſoft clothing are in kings houſes. 9. But what went ye out for to ſee? A prophet? yea, I ſay unto you, and more than a prophet. 10. For this is he of whom it is writ-[i] Mal. iii. 1. Mark i. 2. ten, [i] Behold, I ſend my meſſenger before thy face, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee. 11. Verily
I ſay unto you, among them that are born of women, [k] Luke i. 15. [k] there hath not riſen a greater than John the Baptiſt:
notwithſtanding, he that is leaſt in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he. 12. And from the days of John [l] Chap. iii. 6. Luke xiii. 24. the Baptiſt, until now, [l] the kingdom of heaven ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. 13. For all the prophets and the law propheſied until John.
[m] Mal. iv. 5. Chap. xvii. 13. Luke i. 17. 14. And, if ye will receive it, [m] this is Elias which was for to come. 15. [n] He that hath ears to hear, let him [n] Chap. xiii. 9, 43. Mark iv. 9, 23. & vii. 16. Rev. ii. 7, 11, 17. 29. hear.

v. 7—15. When John's diſciples were gone, Jeſus took this opportunity of paying a high encomium on his character and miniſtry. He would not ſay it in their hearing, leſt it ſhould ſeem flattery; nor would have it reported to John, for he well knew how ill the beſt can bear even deſerved praiſe.

1. He addreſſes a queſtion to the multitude around him, many of whom had been John's hearers. What went ye out into the wilderneſs to ſee? A reed ſhaken with the wind? Was it mere curioſity; or did you ſuppoſe him a man unſteady and wavering? It was John's honour that he was uniform and ſteady in his preaching and labours: and an intimation is contained in this queſtion, that they who had gone ſo far to hear him ſhould well conſider what he had ſaid, and enquire what profit they got by their attendance. Note, Many go a great way to hear miniſters from curioſity, who ſoon forget all they hear, as a dream. But what went ye out for to ſee? A man clothed in ſoft raiment? No. His garb beſpoke his deadneſs to the world. He neither ſpoke nor dreſſed like a courtier. His reproofs were plain and rough as his appearance: the caſe of thoſe to whom he addreſſed himſelf required it. Behold they that wear ſoft cloathing, and live delicately, are in kings houſes; and he was utterly unlike thoſe: his manners auſtere, his conduct ſteady. Note, (1.) In the work of the miniſtry unſhaken reſolution is needful, which is alike unmoved by frowns or ſmiles. (2.) They who have heard and ſeen God's miniſters ſhould often enquire what they have gained thereby, or what end they purpoſed by their attendance. (3.) Our dreſs ſhould be according to our ſtation. It is no evil in thoſe who are in kings courts to put on ſoft cloathing; though it would be ſinful in others to imitate them in expenſive finery which they can neither afford, and which is unbecoming their ſituation or character in life.

2. He tells them plainly the diſtinguiſhed honour of this eminent teacher. But what went ye out for to ſee? a prophet? yea, I ſay unto you, and more than a prophet. In general all held John for a prophet, and yet they underſtood not that peculiar diſtinction he enjoyed above all who went before him.

[1.] He was the perſon foretold, Mal. iii. 1. as the forerunner of the Meſſiah, who ſhould more immediately prepare his way, and uſher him into the world. The other prophets ſaw him at a diſtance, and only ſpoke of him as to appear in the fulneſs of time. John beheld him face to face, and pointed him out as preſent: Behold the Lamb of God.

[2.] Among them that are born of women, there hath not riſen a greater than John the Baptiſt. Not only his miraculous birth, his being filled with the Holy Ghoſt from his mother's womb, his exemplary life, rendered him ſingular; but, above all, the clear revelation he had of the Meſſiah, his baptiſing him in Jordan, ſeeing the heavens opened and the Holy Ghoſt deſcending upon him, and the teſtimony he bore to him on that occaſion, theſe made John far ſuperior to all his predeceſſors. Nevertheleſs, he that is leaſt in the kingdom of God is greater than he; the leaſt of the miniſters and apoſtles of Chriſt, or the meaneſt believer in him, would in clearneſs of goſpel light, and knowledge of Jeſus, be able to ſee farther, and to ſpeak more diſtinctly, of his obedience, righteouſneſs, ſufferings, death, of his grace and glory, of the ſpiritual nature of his kingdom, than even the moſt eminent ſaints and prophets of old. Note, (1.) True greatneſs is not to be meaſured by outward ſplendor, but by the gifts and graces of God's Spirit, and the manifeſtations which Jeſus makes of himſelf to the ſoul. (2.) If we enjoy greater advantages than others, our condemnation will be the greater if we do not profit under them.

[3.] By John the goſpel of the kingdom began to be preached, and God owned his miniſtry with eminent ſucceſs; for from the days of John the Baptiſt until now, a ſpace of little more than two years, the kingdom of heaven ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force; the publicans and harlots, who by the Scribes and Phariſees would be reckoned intruders, convinced now of their guilt, and turned to the Lord, eagerly preſſed for a place in the Meſſiah's kingdom; and multitudes of others, awakened to a diſcovery of their ſin and danger, eagerly embraced the declarations of grace, and with a holy violence ſtrove to enter in at the ſtrait gate. Note, (1.) Where-ever divine grace hath quickened the ſoul, there ſalvation will be made the great concern, and eager diligence uſed to make our calling and election ſure. (2.) It is a diſtinguiſhed honour conferred on any miniſter of the goſpel, when God is pleaſed to make him eminently inſtrumental in calling ſinners to flee from the wrath to come. (3.) Sluggiſh and negligent triflers in religion may never hope for admiſſion into the kingdom of God.

[4.] In the miniſtry of John the Old-Teſtament diſpenſation cloſed, and the new began. For all the prophets and the law propheſied until John; in types and predictions they pointed to the future Meſſiah, all the ritual ſervice of the temple being deſigned to direct the worſhippers to him; and, viewed in this light, it appears truly glorious; but now he was come, in whom all theſe were to be fulfilled. And if ye will receive it, and can credit my aſſertion, this is Elias which was for to come; not Elijah perſonally, but he who was ſpoken of, Mal. iv. 5. and who came in the ſpirit and power of Elijah, like him in dreſs and manners, and imitating his zeal. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear; which intimates that theſe were things that deſerved attentively to be weighed, and, though dark and difficult to be believed, were truths of great importance. Note, (1.) The word of God muſt be examined with ſerious concern: it is not a ſlight and curſory peruſal which will be ſufficient to let us into the meaning; deep meditation, fervent prayer, and comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual, being neceſſary to a right underſtanding of the myſteries of grace. (2.) It is not hearing, but receiving the truth in the light and love of it, which can make us wiſe unto ſalvation.

16. ¶ But [o] whereunto ſhall I liken this generation? [o] Luke vii. 31.
It is like unto children ſitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows, 17. And ſaying, [p] We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced: we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented: 18. For [q] John came neither eating nor drinking, and they ſay, He hath a devil. 19. [r] The ſon of man came eating and drinking, and they ſay, Behold, a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and ſinners: but wiſdom is juſtified of her children. 20. ¶ [s] Then began he to [t] upbraid the cities wherein moſt of his mighty works were done, becauſe they repented not. 21. Wo unto thee Chorazin, wo unto thee Bethſaida: for if the mighty works which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago [u] in ſackcloth and aſhes. 22. But I ſay unto you, [x] It ſhall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment than for you. 23. And thou Capernaum, [y] which art exalted unto heaven, ſhalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. 24. But I ſay unto you, that [z] it ſhall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee.

v. 16—24. Having ſpoken of the excellence of John's miniſtry, he cannot but reflect upon the inexcuſable perverſeneſs and ſtubbornneſs of that generation, which had for the moſt part continued in their impenitence, notwithſtanding John's preaching, and in oppoſition to all the miracles and means of grace which they had enjoyed under his own miniſtry and that of his apoſtles. For which an awful reckoning remained.

1. He is at a loſs for a ſimilitude whereunto he ſhall liken the men of that generation, they acted ſo contradictorily and abſurdly; like ſullen and froward children, that, when their playfellows uſe every little art to engage them, mimicking a wedding or a funeral, and inviting them to dance with them, or in mournful reſponſes to anſwer them, moroſe and ill-natured they will join in neither. Such was the temper of the Scribes and Phariſees, with their diſciples, reſpecting the miniſtry of Chriſt and his forerunner. They uſed different means, but neither could prevail. John called to mourning, preaching repentance and humiliation, and in his own abſtemious and ſelf-denying conduct ſet them an example of mortification; and, ſo far from being affected thereby, they treated him as melancholy, and poſſeſſed by a devil. The Son of man, with the ſweeteſt muſick of goſpel grace, ſought to engage their minds, and by every kind word and deed endeavoured to inſinuate himſelf into their affections; free and open in his manners, affable to all, joining with them in partaking the innocent refreſhments of nature, and ready to converſe with the chief of ſinners for their good; and immediately they brand him as a glutton, a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and ſinners, an encourager and a partaker with them in their immoralities. But wiſdom is juſtified of her children. They who are by grace made acquainted with the truth, will approve all the means and methods which God is pleaſed to uſe, though others reject and deſpiſe them: or Chriſt, the wiſdom of God, will be acquitted of all theſe malicious accuſations of wicked men, by all who truly become the children of God, and are enlightened to know his true character. They will admire and adore him for what others revile and malign him. Note, (1.) There is nothing ſo abſurd or contradictory that the enemies of the goſpel will not ſay and do, in order to vent their malice againſt the miniſters and truths of God. (2.) God uſes every means with ſinners, declaring the terrors of his law and the comforts of his goſpel, ſending them, by turns, mercies and judgments, and all to work on their obdurate hearts, or to leave them inexcuſable in their impenitence. (3.) Different miniſters have different manners of addreſs, and are more particularly ſuited to the diſpoſitions and tempers of ſome than of others: ſome are ſtruck with a Boanerges, ſome melted under a Barnabas, a ſon of conſolation; ſome are affected with the more auſtere manners of a John, others engaged by the ſweetneſs and affability of Jeſus. Every one hath his gift, and all for the edification of the body of Chriſt. (4.) The moſt powerful and engaging miniſtrations are not always crowned with ſucceſs: but, when we have diſcharged our ſouls, and men refuſe to hear the voice of truth, of reaſon, of conſcience, neither drawn by the bonds of love, nor driven to God by all the terrors of wrath to come, then their blood is on their own heads; we are free. (5.) The greateſt, the beſt of men, yea he that was more than man, have been reviled as mad or libertines, as preaching doctrines of deſpair or licentiouſneſs. Let it not ſeem ſtrange if the ſame things be ſaid of us, and if what is our higheſt honour in God's ſight be made matter of ſevereſt reproach. He is near who will juſtify us. (6.) Though the goſpel and the miniſters of it in general be ſlighted and reviled of men, to ſome their word will be a ſavour of life, and they will juſtify God in all his ways, being themſelves living inſtances of the efficacy of the methods he hath taken to bring poor ſinners to himſelf.

2. As he had reproached the obſtinacy of that generation in general, he particularly upbraids the cities wherein moſt of his mighty works were done, becauſe they repented not; for to lead them thereunto was the great end of all his miracles and preaching; but it had been in vain: and how ſhall they eſcape who neglect ſo great a ſalvation? they muſt needs periſh who reject the only remedy that can cure them: and ſuch wilful obſtinacy muſt bring down greater damnation. Note, God is pleaſed to diſpenſe the means of grace, as well as the gifts of providence, ſovereignly. Why one place ſhould enjoy them, whilſt another, leſs guilty, is abandoned to darkneſs and ignorance, can only be reſolved into the divine pleaſure: Even ſo, Father, for ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight.

Two inſtances are particularly brought of cities who had enjoyed the greateſt means and mercies, and yet were more hardened than even the vileſt of the heathen.

1. Wo unto thee Chorazin, wo unto thee Bethſaida, places in Galilee peculiarly favoured with Chriſt's miracles and teaching, and yet the generality of the inhabitants perſiſted in their impenitence; though, had the like mighty works been done even in Tyre and Sidon, abandoned to wickedneſs as they were, it is to human appearance highly probable that, like Nineveh of old, they would have repented in ſackcloth and aſhes, and humbled themſelves to prevent the impending ruin. Therefore at the judgment-day their doom ſhall be more tolerable than that of thoſe cities which, by rejecting the goſpel, fall under the moſt aggravated guilt. Note, An awful day is near, when the eternal ſtates of all muſt be determined; when all the means of grace and mercies we have enjoyed muſt be accounted for; and none will receive ſo great damnation as thoſe who have abuſed them, and, in oppoſition to the cleareſt light of the goſpel, have perſiſted in the darkneſs of error and ſin.

2. Capernaum with peculiar emphaſis is threatned: Thou, moſt dignified by the reſidence of Jeſus, and diſtinguiſhed with ſingular advantages above all other cities, which art exalted to heaven in outward privileges, ſhalt be brought down to hell, falling the deeper into eternal miſery from the heights of abuſed mercy. Even Sodom's doom will be more tolerable than hers; for, if the like miracles and long-continued miniſtry of Jeſus had been vouchſafed to that city, it ſeems highly probable ten righteous at leaſt would have been found, and the threatned ruin averted: but, if Sodom was not ſpared with leſs guilt, Capernaum, with greater, muſt needs ſink under more aggravated ruin. Note, Many of this day ſeldom think of the ineſtimable talent committed to them in the oracles of God and the goſpel of his Son; but for theſe things a ſolemn account muſt ſoon be given, and wo to the ſinner whoſe profiting at that day ſhall not appear.

25. ¶ [a] At that time Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, becauſe [b] thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and [c] haſt revealed them unto babes. 26. Even ſo, Father, for ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight. 27. [d] All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son but the Father: [e] neither knoweth any man the Father, ſave the Son, and he to whomſoever the Son will reveal him. 28. ¶ Come unto me, all [f] ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt.
29. Take my yoke upon you, and [g] learn of me, for [h] I am meek and lowly in heart: and [i] ye ſhall find reſt unto your ſouls. 30. For [k] my yoke is eaſy, and my burden is light.

v. 25—30. Though in general the perverſeneſs of the many afforded the moſt melancholy proſpect of their deſtruction, yet did not the goſpel word return in vain. There was ſtill a remnant, according to the election of grace, who heard and believed.

1. Our bleſſed Lord here offers up his thanks to God the Father for the children he had given him, though few, and in the eyes of men deſpicable, poor, and illiterate, yet precious to Jeſus, and the travail of his ſoul.

[1.] He addreſſes God as His Father, in whoſe love he had the moſt aſſured intereſt, and as the Lord of heaven and earth, the ſovereign diſpoſer of all things, able to do whatever he pleaſed, according to the counſels of his own will. Note, Prayer is then a pleaſing ſervice, when we can call God Father, approach him with confidence, and, perſuaded of his all-ſufficiency to ſupply our wants, can quietly caſt our care upon him.

[2.] He adores his ſovereignty in being pleaſed to hide the glorious truths of goſpel-grace from the wiſe and prudent, and revealing them to ſuch as, comparatively ſpeaking, reſpecting natural abilities, learning and human accompliſhments, were vaſtly their inferiors; but if God is pleaſed to chuſe theſe babes, Jeſus acquieſces in his Father's holy will, approves of and delights in it. Note, (1.) It is a mortifying truth, and of hardeſt digeſtion to the proud heart of man, that thoſe whom the world admires as great, learned, and wiſe, the deepeſt ſcholars, the moſt profound ſtateſmen, the moſt reverend doctors, and acute metaphyſicians, phyſicians, are not merely on a level with the meaneſt clown, reſpecting the knowledge that maketh wiſe unto ſalvation, but for the moſt part farther removed from it, and, according to God's all-wiſe decrees, eternally excluded, given up to learned ignorance, and left to the ſpiritual blindneſs of their fallen hearts. (2.) Thoſe whom God chuſes for his people are uſually ſuch as man deſpiſes, poor in every ſenſe, in ſtation, abilities, human literature, and all that a fooliſh world admires. Some few indeed are found of the wiſe, mighty, and noble; but not many; enough to ſhew what God could do, if he pleaſed; while we are humbly to acquieſce in what he hath done. Yet this will ever be, as it was from the beginning, a ſtone of ſtumbling and rock of offence. Have any of the rulers and Phariſees believed? (3.) Whatever difference is made between one and another is purely owing to God's ſovereign will and pleaſure, and not to any thing foreſeen in them, or done, or to be done, by them; and therefore, in all God's diſpenſations of providence or grace, if a curious enquirer, or diſputer of this world, enquires into the reaſons why and wherefore God thus acts; we have but one to give, Even ſo, Father, for ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight. They who are diſſatisfied with this reaſon, muſt cloſe their Bibles, and expatiate in the boundleſs regions of ſcepticiſm and infidelity in ſearch of a better.

2. Chriſt invites thoſe babes, whom the Father hath given him, to come unto him, with kindeſt aſſurances both of his power and willingneſs to help and ſave them.

[1.] He declares the plenitude of power with which he is inveſted for the comfort of all who ſhould apply to him for refuge. All things are delivered unto me of my Father. As Mediator he hath received a delegated authority, diſtinct from that which he eſſentially poſſeſſes as God over all, bleſſed for ever. The work of reconciliation, and all the bleſſings of grace and glory, are lodged in his hands. And no man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father ſave the Son, and he to whomſoever the Son will reveal him. It is not the effort of man's ſkill and labour, but a divine revelation which alone can make known to us the true character of God, his triune exiſtence and perfections, together with the deſigns of his grace according to the tenor of the everlaſting covenant. And as there is a mutual conſciouſneſs between the divine Perſons in the undivided Godhead, He, who from eternity lay in the boſom of the Father, is alone able to make him known, and to communicate his eternal counſels to us, being inveſted with his mediatorial character for this very purpoſe. Note, (1.) There is no true knowledge of God, or intercourſe to be maintained with him, but in and by Jeſus Chriſt. (2.) To thoſe, whom Chriſt takes for his diſciples, he manifeſts himſelf as he doth not unto the world, John xiv. 22.

[2.] He declares his readineſs to receive every poor ſinner who comes to him weary and heavy laden, and invites them to lay down their burdens of ſin and ſorrow at his feet, that they may find reſt unto their ſouls. (1.) The perſons invited are all that labour and are heavy laden; thoſe who are convinced of their guilt and danger, feel the inſupportable burden of ſin, and are weary, not merely of the burdenſome rites of the ceremonial law, but of the bondage of corruption. And all, without diſtinction of nation, or difference in the meaſure of their guilt and ſinfulneſs, are invited. Jeſus rejects none becauſe of the depth of their miſeries, who do not themſelves reject his mercies. (2.) The invitation is, Come to me, willing to receive, and able to relieve, all the wants of the miſerable and the deſperate, who by faith caſt their care upon me, renouncing every other hope and dependance, placing their truſt on me alone as their Saviour to the uttermoſt, and taking me henceforward for their Lord and Maſter. (3.) The promiſe made to ſuch is, I will give you reſt, pardon and peace of conſcience to ſilence the accuſations of guilt, power againſt ſin to deliver you from the weariſome bondage of corruption, ſetting the ſoul at liberty from all terrifying fears, and enabling you on ſure foundations to expect a part in the eternal reſt which remaineth for the people of God. (4.) The dutiful returns for ſuch mercies are here preſcribed: Take my yoke upon you. We muſt receive Chriſt in all his offices; as the King to rule in and over us, as well as the Prophet to teach, and the Prieſt to atone for us. Obedience to his goſpel muſt follow faith in his promiſes; and he aſks nothing from us but that we ſhould copy his example and be like him, that we may be meet for the enjoyment of him: Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, tempers which muſt ever characteriſe the diſciples of Jeſus, in oppoſition to that pride, perverſeneſs, paſſion, and ſelf-will, which are natural to the fallen mind. He was meek under every provocation, patient towards the dulneſs of his ſcholars; lowly in heart, condeſcending to the meaneſt, and ſubmitting for our ſakes to every abaſement; and when we learn to be like him we ſhall find reſt to our ſouls; ſuch divine diſpoſitions will bring a preſent heaven to the ſoul, and enable us to enter into reſt here below, happy in communion with Jeſus, and ſtamped with his image. Nor may we think his yoke implies any thing grievous. No. His yoke is eaſy, and his burden light: his ſervice is perfect freedom. Even the afflictions, temptations, and difficulties we may meet, are to be counted all joy; ſince ſo powerful will be the aſſiſtance of his grace, ſo abundant his conſolations, and ſo bleſſed the iſſue, that we have reaſon continually to go on our way rejoicing, and to own to his eternal praiſe, and for the encouragement of others, that his ways are ways of pleaſantneſs, and all his paths are peace.

CHAP. XII.

In this chapter we have, 1. Chriſt's clearing of the law of the fourth commandment concerning the ſabbath-day, and vindicating it from ſome ſuperſtitious notions advanced by the Jewiſh teachers; ſhewing that works of neceſſity and mercy are to be done on that day, ver. 1—13. 2. The prudence, humility, and ſelf-denial of our Lord Jeſus in working his miracles, ver. 14—22. 3. Chriſt's anſwer to the blaſphemous cavils and calumnies of the Scribes and Phariſees, who imputed his caſting out devils to a compact with the devil, ver. 22—38. 4. Chriſt's reply to a tempting demand of the Scribes and Phariſees, challenging him to ſhew them a ſign from heaven, ver. 38—45. 5. Chriſt's judgment about his kindred and relations, ver. 46. ad finem.

1. [a] AT that time Jeſus went on the ſabbath-day through the corn, and his diſciples were an hungred, and [b] began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat. 2. But when the Phariſees ſaw it, they ſaid unto him, Behold, thy diſciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the ſabbath-day. 3. But he ſaid unto them, Have ye not read what David did when he was an hungred, and they that were with him, 4. [c] How he entred into the houſe of God, and did eat the ſhew-bread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, [d] but only for the prieſts? 5. Or have ye not read [e] in the law, how that on the ſabbath-days the prieſts in the temple profane the ſabbath, and are blameleſs? 6. But I ſay unto you, that in this place [f] is one greater than the temple. 7. But if ye had known what this meaneth, [g] I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltleſs. 8. For the Son of man is Lord even of the ſabbath-day. 9. [h] And when he was departed thence, he went into their ſynagogue. 10. ¶ And behold, there was a man which had his hand withered: and they aſked him, ſaying, [i] Is it lawful to heal on the ſabbath-days? that they might accuſe him. 11. And he ſaid unto them, What man ſhall there be among you that ſhall have one ſheep, and if it fall into a pit on the ſabbath-day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out? 12. How much then is a man better than a ſheep? wherefore it is lawful to do well on the ſabbath-days. 13. Then ſaith he to the man, [k] Stretch forth thine hand: and he ſtretched it forth; and it was reſtored whole, like as the other.

v. 1—13. Thoſe who are moſt corrupt in their morals, ſometimes think to atone for the defect, by their rigid zeal for the rituals of religion; as was the caſe of the Phariſees, who, whilſt they lowered the other commands to the mere letter, ſtretched the ſtrict obſervation of the ſabbatical reſt to an extreme that was never deſigned. Which falſe explication our Lord confutes, and ſhews that works of mercy and charity may be practiſed conſiſtent with the moſt religious obſervance of the ſabbath-day.

1. The occaſion given for this diſcourſe aroſe from the invidious reflections of the Phariſees on the diſciples of Jeſus for rubbing the ears of corn in their hand on the ſabbath-day, as they paſſed through the fields, and eating them, being hungry. This the Phariſees obſerved, and mentioned to Jeſus as a thing unlawful to be done on the ſabbath-day. The law had allowed the gathering ſuch ears of corn, Deut. xxiii. 25. but they regard the bodily labour of rubbing them in their hands as a tranſgreſſion of the reſt enjoined, according to the traditions of the elders. Note, (1.) Chriſt's diſciples were inured to want and coarſe fare: we muſt not count it hard, if God in his providence at any time brings us into the like ſtraits, and cauſes us to know what it is to be hungry. (2.) The moſt innocent actions are liable to the moſt perverſe interpretations from thoſe who wait for an opportunity to find fault.

2. Chriſt vindicates the practice of his diſciples by allowed precedents or unanſwerable arguments.

[1.] By allowed precedents.

(1.) In the caſe of David and his men; who, being preſſed with hunger, was, with the high-prieſt's conſent, permitted to eat the ſhew-bread, which none ordinarily might do but the prieſts alone. And if it was adjudged lawful to diſpenſe with a poſitive inſtitution of God to ſatisfy David's hunger, it ſurely could not be thought ſinful, in like circumſtances, to diſpenſe merely with the traditions of the elders. Note, Where life itſelf is in danger through hunger, neceſſity, if it does not juſtify, ſhould at leaſt be admitted as the excuſe for deviating from the ordinary rule of juſtice. See Prov. vi. 30.

(2.) In the caſe of the prieſts; who were obliged to do much ſervile work on the ſabbath-day, ſuch as ſlaying, ſkinning, and cutting up the beaſts for ſacrifice, &c. and yet none could conceive that a tranſgreſſion of the commandment; and how much leſs the merely rubbing out a few ears of corn in their hands for neceſſary food. But it might be objected they were not prieſts, and that the temple-ſervice had a particular diſpenſation; therefore,

[2.] He adds arguments to the examples he produced.

(1.) I ſay unto you, that in this place is one greater than the temple. And if the prieſts were blameleſs in their ſervice, much more were the diſciples of Jeſus allowed to ſatisfy their hunger when attending on their maſter, who was the Lord of the temple, in dignity and holineſs infinitely greater, having all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily, and from him alone that fabric derived all the ſanctity it poſſeſſed.

[2.] If ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice, Hoſ. vi. 6. ye would not have condemned the guiltleſs. They were ignorant of thoſe Scriptures they pretended to urge; for, if they had underſtood them, they would have obſerved, that the great commandment of charity was vaſtly ſuperior to mere ritual obſervances, and therefore would never have condemned the diſciples for thus ſatisfying the cravings of hunger on the ſabbath-day. Note, Ignorance of God's word is generally the cauſe of raſh cenſures on our brethren, and this is eſpecially culpable in thoſe who pretend to teach others.

[3.] The Son of man is Lord even of the ſabbath-day. He who enjoined the reſt, and preſcribed the rule on mount Sinai, muſt needs know what obedience himſelf required, and beſt interpret his own mind; and be fully authoriſed to make any alteration he ſhould think fit. Thus now, though the commandment of obſerving a ſeventh day ſtill is in force, he hath transferred it from the laſt to the firſt day of the week, called from him the Lord's day.

3. By the cure of a paralytic man in the ſynagogue on a ſabbath-day ſome time after, he took occaſion farther to vindicate works of mercy and charity as moſt lawful and acceptable to God on that day.

[1.] The perſon on whom the cure was wrought had a withered arm, ſo that he was diſabled from labour; yet, though unable to work, whilſt he could walk, he failed not to be at the place of worſhip. And in the way of duty we may hope for a bleſſing.

[2.] The Phariſees, ever on the watch, ſuſpecting Jeſus would cure him, queſtioned him concerning his thoughts of the lawfulneſs of healing on the ſabbath-day, which their doctors, except in caſes of extremity, had forbidden; and their deſign herein was to accuſe him, either to the Sanhedrim, if he acted contrary to their determinations, as a ſabbath-breaker; or to the people, if he declared it unlawful, and contradicted his own vindication of his diſciples.

[3.] Chriſt anſwers them by an appeal to their own conduct. If one of their ſheep fell into a pit, none ſcrupled to draw it out on the ſabbath-day: how much then was a man better than a ſheep, and his diſtreſſes rather to be relieved. No doubt therefore could be made but that it was lawful to do good on the ſabbath-day.

[4.] Without delay, and, for ought appears, without waiting for a requeſt from the poor patient, who might, ſeeing the temper of theſe men, be diſcouraged from making application, Jeſus bids him ſtretch out his hand, and power accompanied the command, He ſtretched it forth, and, to the aſtoniſhment of the beholders, it was reſtored whole as the other. Note, Like this withered arm are our ſouls, impotent of themſelves to every thing that is good; and yet the calls to believe and obey, notwithſtanding our inability for both, are neither abſurd nor unreaſonable; ſince Chriſt hath promiſed to accompany his word with the efficacy of his Spirit, and enable his choſen for that which he commands.

14. ¶ [l] Then the Phariſees went out, and held a council againſt him, how they might deſtroy him. 15. But when Jeſus knew it, [m] he withdrew himſelf from thence: and [n] great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all, 16. And [o] charged them that they ſhould not make him known: 17. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the prophet, ſaying, 18. [p] Behold, my ſervant whom I have choſen, my beloved [q] in whom my ſoul is well pleaſed: I will put my ſpirit upon him, and he ſhall ſhew judgment to the Gentiles. 19. He ſhall not ſtrive, nor cry, neither ſhall any man hear his voice in the ſtreets. 20. [r] A bruiſed reed ſhall he not break, and ſmoking flax ſhall he not quench, till he ſend forth judgment unto victory. 21. And in his name ſhall the Gentiles truſt.

v. 14—21. Exaſperated, inſtead of convinced by his preaching and miracles, we are told here,

1. The malicious deſigns of the Phariſees. They met in conſultation, determined ſome way or other to put an end to his obnoxious diſcourſes and his life together; for which this laſt pretended breach of the ſabbath might afford them a handle; cloaking with zeal for religion the blackeſt crimes of hell.

2. Chriſt hereupon choſe to retire, and avoid the danger he foreſaw, his hour not being yet come: but ſtill he was attended, even in his retirement, by multitudes, to whom he continued his accuſtomed mercies, healing all their infirmities; but charged them that they ſhould not make him known: not deſiring fame from his miracles, and now particularly willing to be concealed from the malice of his perſecutors. Note, God's approbation, not man's applauſe, is what we ſhould covet.

3. The fulfilment of the Scripture herein is obſerved, Iſa. xlii. 1—4. Behold, with wonder and aſtoniſhment, my ſervant; ſo low he humbled himſelf, who counted it no robbery to be equal with God; whom I have choſen; deſigned for the office of Mediator, and now qualified for the work of redemption; my beloved, in whom I am well pleaſed; from eternity the object of his complacence; and in his perſon, office, and character as the Meſſiah, God the Father delighted, and by repeated declarations from heaven expreſſed his approbation of his Son. I will put my ſpirit upon him, anointing him with the oil of gladneſs above his fellows, beſtowing ſuch a plenitude of gifts and graces upon him as may enable him glorioully to diſcharge and accompliſh his arduous undertaking; and he ſhall ſhew judgment to the Gentiles, preaching to them that goſpel wherein God's righteouſneſs is revealed, and his eternal determinations concerning ſinful men is made known: he ſhall not ſtrive, with noiſe and oſtentation ſetting up his kingdom; neither ſhall any man hear his voice in the ſtreets, contentious or clamorous againſt his oppoſers: a bruiſed reed ſhall he not break, the broken-hearted, weak, and trembling ſinner he will bind up and ſtrengthen; and ſmoking flax ſhall he not quench; thoſe who have but the beginnings of ſpiritual life, in whom the graces are feeble, and much darkneſs and infirmity remains, he will quicken, and blow the ſmoaking flax into a flame; till he ſends forth judgment unto victory, by the power of his goſpel diſpelling the darkneſs of error, delivering the ſoul from the bondage of corruption, and cauſing his grace to reign through righteouſneſs unto eternal life, perfecting in the hearts of his people the ſalvation he hath begun. And in his name ſhall the Gentiles truſt; the heathen nations ſhall become obedient to the faith, be incorporated with his choſen people, and place all their hopes of ſalvation on the blood and righteouſneſs alone of this divine Redeemer.

22. ¶ [s] Then was brought unto him one poſſeſſed with a devil, blind and dumb: and he healed him, inſomuch that the blind and dumb both ſpake and ſaw. 23. And all the people were amazed, and ſaid, [t] Is not this the Son of David? 24. But when the Phariſees heard it, they ſaid, [u] This fellow doth not caſt out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils. 25. And [x] Jeſus knew their thoughts, and ſaid unto them, Every kingdom divided againſt itſelf, is brought to deſolation: and every city or houſe divided againſt itſelf, ſhall not ſtand. 26. And if Satan caſt out Satan, he is divided againſt himſelf; how ſhall then his kingdom ſtand? 27. And if I by Beelzebub caſt out devils, by whom do your children caſt them out? therefore they ſhall be your judges. 28. But if I caſt out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you. 29. [y] Or elſe how can one enter into a ſtrong man's houſe, and ſpoil his goods, except he firſt bind the ſtrong man? and then he will ſpoil his houſe. 30. He that is not with me, is againſt me: and he that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth abroad. 31. ¶ Wherefore I ſay unto you, [z] All manner of ſin and blaſphemy ſhall be forgiven unto men: but [a] the blaſphemy againſt the holy Ghoſt ſhall not be forgiven unto men. 32. And [b] whoſoever ſpeaketh a word againſt the Son of man it ſhall be forgiven him: but whoſoever ſpeaketh againſt the holy Ghoſt, it ſhall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. 33. [c] Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or elſe make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt: for the tree is known by his fruit. 34. [d] O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, ſpeak good things? [e] for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. 35. A good man out of the good treaſure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treaſure bringeth forth evil things. 36. But I ſay unto you, that [f] every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give account thereof in the day of judgment. 37. For [g] by thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned.

22—37. Chriſt had before ſhewn his power over Satan's kingdom, diſpoſſeſſing him from the bodies as well as ſouls of many. We have here,

1. Another inſtance of his curing one poſſeſſed by a devil; a man blind and dumb through the power of this wicked ſpirit; The emblem of the ſinner, whoſe eyes the god of this world hath blinded, and whoſe lips are ſealed up from prayer and praiſe, and all converſation to the uſe of edifying. One word of Jeſus reſtored his loſt ſenſes; his ſight and ſpeech were perfectly recovered.

2. The people admired the aſtoniſhing efficacy of the word of Jeſus, and reaſonably concluded, Is not this the ſon of David? the promiſed Meſſiah? but the Phariſees, when they heard it, ſtung with envy, and obſtinately hardened againſt conviction, with blaſphemous cavil and abuſive inſult replied, This fellow doth not caſt out devils but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils. The fact they could not deny; but imputed the miracle to a compact with the devil. To ſuch miſerable ſhifts are they driven, who, determined in infidelity, refuſe to ſubmit to the evidence of truth.

3. Chriſt refutes ſo baſe an accuſation. He knew their malicious deſigns, and heard their words of blaſphemy, and therefore he at large vindicates himſelf. Their aſſertion was abſurd, and ſelf-contradictory. It is an allowed maxim, that every kingdom, city, or family, divided againſt itſelf, muſt haſten its own diſſolution: impoſſible therefore would it be for Satan to think of ſupporting his dominion by thoſe means which naturally muſt ſubvert it; the miracles of Chriſt being wrought in confirmation of thoſe doctrines of truth and holineſs which directly tend to deſtroy the works of the devil, v. 25, 26. Add to this, that among themſelves they admitted ſome exorciſts did caſt out devils by the power of God, Acts xix. 9. Mark ix. 38. Why then ſhould they not by parity of reaſon admit that his miracles evidenced a divine power? therefore theſe men ſhould riſe up in judgment and condemn them for this partiality and blaſphemy. It being then inconteſtibly apparent that Chriſt's miracles were effected by the Spirit of God, he urges this as a proof that the kingdom of God, of the Meſſiah promiſed to bruiſe the Serpent's head, was actually now come unto them: for, if this had not been the caſe, how could it be poſſible that he ſhould thus diſpoſſeſs the devil from the bodies and ſouls of men? This wicked ſpirit, as a ſtrong man armed, will keep faſt hold of his prey and guard his houſe. Nothing but a ſuperior power can bind his arms, and reſcue his priſoners from him; which Jeſus had done, and therefore proved that he received no aſſiſtance from him, but was his ſuperior and conqueror. Beſides, the very nature of their kingdoms being directly oppoſite, there can be no fellowſhip, yea there is implacable enmity, between them; and all who league with the one are regarded as rebels againſt the other: ſo that they who gather not to Chriſt as their ſhepherd, and liſt under his banners as their king, are ſcattered, expoſed to his wrath, and devoted to deſtruction. So far therefore from a confederacy between Chriſt and Satan, there is open war between them, and not even a neutrality permitted. Note, (1.) Diviſions are the ſureſt way to deſtruction in church and ſtate. (2.) The devil hath a potent kingdom erected in the world, and he will do his utmoſt to ſupport it: but Chriſt is come to deſtroy his dominion, and will finally prevail. (3.) They who are under the influence of prejudice will blame that very conduct in thoſe they diſlike, which they approve in thoſe they love. (4.) The deſtruction of Satan's power in the ſoul is the work of the Spirit of God; and whenever that is evidently ſeen, there the kingdom of God is aſſuredly come. (5.) Coldneſs and indifference in the cauſe of Chriſt will be regarded as enmity againſt him: we muſt be hearty in his ſervice, or we ſhall be dealt with as traitors.
